TO THE ILLUSTRIOUS,

ESME STUART,

DUKE OF RICHMOND.

Have ſometimes ſolitarily pleaſed my ſelf, with the peruſing and comparing of two places of Scripture.

Acts 22. 22.

The wicked Iews ſaid of S^t. Paul;

Away with ſuch a Fellow from the Earth, for it is not fit that he ſhould live.

Hebrews 11. 38.

S^t. Paul ſaid of the Godly Iews;

Of whom the world was not worthy.

Here I perceive Heaven and Hell; Mercy and Malice, Gods Spirit and mans Spite, reſolved on the Queſtion, that it is not fit that good men ſhould live long on Earth.

However, though the Building be the ſame, yet the Bottome is different; the ſame Concluſion being inferred from oppoſite, yea contrary Premiſſes. Wicked men think this world too good, God knows it too bad, for his Servants to live in. Henceforward I ſhall not wonder, that Good men die ſo ſoon, but that they live ſo long; ſeeing wicked men deſire their Room here on Earth, and God their Company in Heaven. No wonder then, if your Good Father was ſo ſoon tranſlated to Happineſſe, and his GRACE advanced into GLORY.

He was pleaſed to give me a Text ſome weeks before his Death, of the words of our Saviour to the Probationer Convert; Thou [a] art not far from the Kingdome of Heaven, that is, as the words there import, from the ſtate of Salvation. But before my Sermon could be, his life was, finiſhed, and he in the reall acception thereof, poſſeſſed of Heaven, and Happineſſe.

a Mark 12. 34.

Thus was I diſappointed (O that this were the greateſt Loſſe by the Death of ſo worthy Perſon!) of a Patron, to whom I intended the Dedication of this firſt part of my Hiſtory.

I after was entred on a Reſolution to dedicate it to his Memory; preſuming to defend the Innocency and Harmleſneſſe of ſuch a Dedication, by Precedents of unqueſtioned Antiquity. But I intended alſo to ſurround the Pages of the Dedication with black, not improper, proper, as to his relation, ſo expreſſive of the preſent ſad Condition of our diſtracted Church.

But ſeaſonably remembring how the Altar ED[a] (onely erected for Commemoration,) was miſinterpreted by the other Tribes for Superſtition; I conceived it beſt to cut off all occaſions of Cavill from captious perſons, and dedicate it to You his Son and Heir.

[a] Joshua 22. 11.

Let not your Grace be offended, that I make you a Patron at the ſecond hand: for though I confeſſe you are my Refuge, in relation to your deceaſed Father; you are my Choiſe, in reference to the ſurviving Nobility. God ſanctifie your tender yeares, with true Grace, that in time you may be a Comfort to your Mother, Credit to your Kindred, and Honour to your Nation.

THE CHURCH-HISTORY OF BRITAIN,

I. CENTURIE.

THat we may the more freely and fully pay the tribute of our thanks to Gods goodneſſe, for the Goſpel which we now enjoy, let us recount the ſad Condition of the Britans our Predeceſſours, before the Chriſtian Faith was preached unto them. At that time they were without Chriſt, being Aliens from the Common-wealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the Covenants of promiſe, having no hope, and without God in the World. They were foul Idolaters, who, from miſapplying that undeniable Truth of Gods being in every thing, made every thing to be their God, Trees, Rivers, Hills, and Mountains. They worſhipped Devils, whoſe Pictures remained in the dayes of [a] Gildas, within and without the decayed Walls of their Cities, drawn with deformed Faces, (no doubt, done to the Life, according to their Terrible Apparitions,) ſo that ſuch ugly Shapes did not woe, but fright people into Adoration of them. Wherefore if any find in Tully that the Britans in his time had no Pictures, underſtand him, they were not Artiſts in that Myſtery, (like the Greeks and Romans) they had not pieces of Proportion, being rather Dawbers then Drawers, Stainers then Painters, though called Picti, from their ſelf-diſcoloration.

The dolefull caſe of the Pagan Britans.

a Epiſt. de Excid. Brit.

2. Three paramount Idols they worſhipped above all the reſt, and aſcribed divine honour unto them:

Their Principall Idols.

1. Apollo, by them ſtyled Belinus the Great.
2. Andraſte, [b] or Andate, the Goddeſſe of Victorie.
3. Diana, Goddeſſe of the Game.

b Xiphil. Epi. in Nerone.

This laſt was moſt eſpecially reverenced, Britain being then all a Foreſt, where Hunting was not the Recreation but the Calling, and Veniſon, not the Dainties but the Diet of Common people. There is a place near S. Pauls in London, called in old Records DIANA'S CHAMBER, where, in the daies of K. [c] Edward the firſt, thouſands of the Heads of Oxen were digged up, whereat the Ignorant wondred, whileſt the Learned well underſtood them to be the proper Sacrifices to Diana, whoſe great Temple was built thereabout. This renders th their Conceit not altogether unlikely, who will have LONDON

c Camden. Britann. in Middleſex.

so called from LLAN-DIAN, which signifieth in British the Temple of DIANA. And surely Conjectures, if mannerly observing their Distance, and not impudently intruding themselves for Certainties, deserve, if not to be received, to be considered. Besides these specified, they had other Portenta Diabolica, [a] pene numero Ægyptiaca vincentia: as indeed they who erroneously conceive one God too little, will find two too many, and yet Millions not enough. As for those learned [b] Pens, which report that the Druides did instruct the Ancient Britans in the Knowledge and Worship of one onely God, may their Mistake herein be as freely forgiven them, as I hope and desire that the Charitable Reader will with his Pardon meet those unvoluntary Errours, which in this Work by me shall be committed.

b Druides unum esse Deum semper incolarunt. Camden and Br. Godwin.

3. Two sorts of People were most honoured amongst the Britans:

1. Druides, who were their { Philosophers / Divines / Lawyers. }
2. Bards, who were their { Prophets. / Poets. / Historians }

The office and employment of the Druides.

c Isai. 1. 29.

The former were so called from δρῦς, signifying generally a Tree, and properly an Oak, under which they used to perform their Rites and Ceremonies. An Idolatrie whereof the Jews themselves had been guilty, for which the Prophet threatneth them; [c] They shall be ashamed of the Oaks which they have desired. But the signall Oak which the Druides made choice of, was such a one, on which [d] Misletoe did grow; by which privie token, they conceived, God marked it out, as of soveraigne vertue, for his service. Under this Tree, on the sixth day of the Moon, (whereon they began their Year) they invocated their Idols, and offered two white Bulls, filleted in the horns, with many other Ceremonies. These Pagan Priests never wrote any thing, so to procure the greater Veneration to their Mysteries; men being bound to believe that it was some great Treasure, which was locked up in such great Secresie.

d Pliny Natur. Hist. lib. 6. cap. 44.

The powerfull practices of the Bards on the people.

4. The Bards were next the Druides in Regard, and played excellently to their Songs on their Harps; whereby they had great Operation on the Vulgar, surprising them into Civility unawares, they greedily swallowing whatsoever was sweetned with Musick. These also, to preserve their Ancestours from Corruption, embalmed their Memories in Rhiming Verses, which looked both backward, in their Relations, and forward, in their Predictions: so that their Confidence meeting with the Credulity of others, advanced their wild Conjectures to the Reputation of Propheſies. The Immortality of the Soul they did not flatly denie, but falsely believe, disguised under the opinion of Transanimation, conceiving that dying mens Souls afterward passed into other Bodies, either preferred to better, or condemned to worse, according to their former good or ill behaviour. This made them contemn Death, and alwayes maintain erected Resolutions, counting a valiant Death the best of Bargains, wherein they did not loose, but lay out their Lives to Advantage. Generally they were great Magicians; insomuch that [e] Plinie saith, that the very Persians, in some sort, might seem to have learn't their Magick from the Britans.

e Natur. Hist. lib. 30. cap. 1. f Tempore (ut scimus) summo Tiberii Cæsaris. inp Elst. de Ex. Brit.

The first preaching of the Gospell in Britain. Causes which hastened the conversion of Britain, before other kingdomes which lay nearer to Palestine.

5. So pittifull for the present, and more fearfull for the future was the condition of the Heathen Britans, when it pleased God with a strong hand, and stretched-out Arme, to reach the Gospel unto them, who were afarre off, both in locall and theologicall Distance. This was performed in the later end of the Reigne of Tiberius, some thirty seven years after Christ's Birth: as Polydor Virgil collecteth out of the testimony of [f] Gildas. 37

6. If it seem incredible to any, that this Island, furthest from the Sunne, should see Light with the first, whil'st many Countries on the Continent interposed, (nearer in Situation to Judea, the Fountain of the Gospell) sate, as yet, and many years after, in Darkneſſe, and in the Shadow of Death: Let such consider, First, That Britain being a by-Corner, out of the Road of the World, seemed seemed the safest Sanctuarie from Persecution, which might invite Preachers to come the sooner into it. Secondly, it facilitated the Entrance of the Gospell hither, that lately the Roman Conquest had in part civilized the South of this Island, by transporting of Colonies thither, and erecting of Cities there; so that, by the Intercourse of Traffick and Commerce with other Countries, Christianity had the more speedy and convenient Wastage over. Whereas on the other side, this set the Conversion of Germany so backward, because the in-land Parts thereof entertained no Trading with others; and (out of Defiance to the Romans) hugged their own Barbarisme, made lovely with Liberty, bolting out all Civility from themselves, as jealous that it would usher in Subjection. Lastly and chiefly, God in a more peculiar manner did alwayes favour the Islands, as under his immediate Protection. For as he daily walls them with his Providence, against the scaling of the swelling Surges, and constant Battery of the Tide: so he made a particular promise of his Gospell unto them, by the mouth of his [a] Prophet, I will send those that escape of them, to the Isles afarre off, that have not heard my Fame. To shew that neither height, nor depth, (no not of the Ocean it self) is able to separate any from the Love of God. And for the same purpose, Christ employed Fishermen for the first Preachers of the Gospell, as who, being acquainted with the Water, and mysteries of Sailing, would with the more delight undertake long Sea-voyages into Forreign Countries.

a Isa. 66. 19.

7. But now, who it was that first brought over the Gospell into Britain, is very uncertain. The Conversioner (understand Parsons the Iesuite) mainly [b] stickleth for the Apostle Peter to have first preached the Gospel here. Yea, when Protestants object against S. Peter's being at Rome, because S. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, omitteth to name or salute him; The Iesuite handsomely answers, That Peter was then probably from home, employed in Preaching in Britain, and other places. His Arguments to prove it are not so strong, but that they easily accept of Answers, as followeth.

S. Peter falsly reported to have preached in Britain.

b Parsons 3 Conversions, 1. part. 1. chap. pag. 19.

1. Arg. S. Peter preach't in Britain, because Gildas [c] speaking against his dissolute Country-men, taxeth them for usurping the Seat of Peter with their unclean feet.

c In Epist. de Excid. Brit.

Answ. Understand him, that they had abused the Profession of the Ministery: for it follows, they have sitten in the pestilent Chair of Iudas the Traitor. Whence it appears, both are meant mystically and metaphorically; parallel to the expressions of the Apostle Jude v. 11. They have gone in the way of Cain, &c.

2. Arg. [d] Simeon Metaphrastes saith so, that he staied some dayes in Britain, where having preached the Word, established Churches, ordained Bishops, Priests & Deacons, in the 12. year of Nero he returned to Rome

Answ. Metaphrastes is an Authour of no credit, as Baronius himself doth confesse.

e In aliis multis ibi ab ipso positis errare eum certum est. Ecc. Anal. in An. 44. num. 54.

3. Arg. Innocent the first reporteth that the first Churches in Italy, France, Spain, Africk, Sicily, and the Interjacent Islands, were founded by S. Peter.

f Epistola 1. ad Decentium.

Answ. Make the Map an Umpire, and the Epithet Interjacent will not reach Britain, intending only the Islands in the Mid-land Sea.

4. Arg. Gulielmus Eysingrenius saith so.

Answ. Though he hath a long Name, he is but a late Authour, setting forth his Book Anno 1606. Besides, he builds on the Authority of Metaphrastes, and so both fall together.

g Mason de Minist. Ang. lib. 2. cap. 2. pag. 65.

5. Arg. S. Peter himself in a Vision, in the dayes of King Edward the Confessour, reported that he had preached the Word in Britain.

Answ. To this Vision pretended of Peter, we oppose the certain words of S. Paul, 2 Tim. 1. 4. Neither give heed to Fables.

We have ſtayed the longer in confuting theſe Arguments, becauſe from Peters preaching here, Parſons would inferre an obligation of this Iſland to the See of Rome, which how ſtrongly he hath proved let the Reader judge. He that will give a Cap, and make a Legge in thanks for a Favour he never received, deſerveth rather to be blamed for want of Wit, then to be praiſed for ſtore of Manners. None therefore can juſtly tax us of Ingratitude, if we be loath to confeſſe an engagement to Rome more then is due. The rather becauſe Rome is of ſo tyrannicall a diſpoſition, that making her ſelf the Mother-Church, ſhe expects of her Daughters not only Dutifulneſſe, but Servility; and (not content to have them ask her Bleſſing, but alſo do her Drudgerie,) endeavoureth to make Slaves of all her Children.

Anno Dom. 37

8. Paſſing by Peter, proceed we to the reſt of the Apoſtles, whom ſeverall Authours alledge the firſt Planters of Religion in this Iſland.

St. Iames, St. Paul, St. Simon, & St. Ariſtobulus Preachers in Britain.

1 St.[a] Iames Son to Zebedee, and brother to Iohn. But if we conſult with the Scripture, we ſhall find that the Sword of Herod put an end to all his Travells before the Apoſtles their generall departure from Hieruſalem. Indeed this Iames is notoriouſly reported, (how truly, let them ſeek who are concerned,) to have been in Spain; and it is probable, ſome, miſtaking Hibernia for Hiberia, and then confounding Hibernia, a Britiſh Iſland, with our Britain, (as one Errour is very procreative of another) gave the beginning to Iames his Preaching here. 41 a Iſidorus de partibus utriuſque Teſtamenti. c. 72. Item Flavius Lucius Dexter in Chronico ad annum 41.

2 St. Paul is by others ſhipt over into our Iſland; amongſt whom, thus ſings[b] Venantius Fortunatus:

Tranſit & Oceanum, vel qua facit Inſula Portum?
Quaſque Britannus habet terras, quaſque ultima Thule.

b Lib. 3. de vita S. Martini.

But leſſe credit is to be given to Britannus, becauſe it goeth in companie with ultima Thule: Which being the noted expreſſion of Poets, for the utmoſt bound of the then-known-world, ſeems to ſavour more of Poeticall Hyperbole, then Hiſtoricall Truth, as a Phraſe at Randome, only to expreſſe farre forreign Countries.

47

3 Simon the Canaanite, ſurnamed Zelotes: and well did he brook his Name, the fervencie of whoſe Zeal carried him into ſo farre and cold a countrie, to propagate the Goſpell. Dorotheus makes him to be both martyred and buried in Britain. But this, ſaith[c] Baronius, receiveth no Countenance from any ancient Writers. What then, I pray, was Dorotheus himſelf, being Biſhop of Tyre under Diocletian, and Conſtantine the Great? If the Cardinall count him young, what grave Seniours will he call ancient?

4 [d] Ariſtobulus, though no Apoſtle, yet an Apoſtles Mate, counted one of the ſeventy Diſciples, is by[e] Grecian Writers made Biſhop of Britain. Strange! that forreign Authours ſhould ſee more in our Iſland, then our home-bred Hiſtorians, wholy ſilent thereof: and it much weakneth their Teſtimonie, becauſe they give evidence of things done at ſuch diſtance from them. But how eaſie is it for a Writer with one word of his Pen, to ſend an Apoſtle many Miles by Land and Leagues by Sea, into a Country, wherein otherwiſe he never ſet his Footing!

d Rom. 16. 10.

e Menæa Græcorum, Die decimo quinto Martii.

The Reſult of all is this: Churches are generally ambitious to entitle themſelves to Apoſtles, for their Founders; conceiving they ſhould otherwiſe be eſteemed but as of the Second Forme, and Younger Houſe, if they received the Faith from any inferiour Preacher. Wherefore as the Heathen, in ſearching after the originall of their Nations, never leave Soaring till they touch the Clouds, and fetch their Pedigree from ſome God: So Chriſtians think it nothing worth, except they relate the firſt Planting of Religion in their Countrie to ſome Apoſtle. Whereas indeed it matters not, if the Doctrine be the ſame, whether the Apoſtles preached it by themſelves, or by their Succeſſours. We ſee little Certainty can be extracted, who firſt brought the Goſpell hither, 'tis ſo long ſince, the Britiſh Church hath forgotten her own Infancy, who were her first God-fathers. We ſee the Light of the VVord ſhined here, but ſee not who kindled it. I will not ſay, as God, to prevent Idolatrie, cauſed the Body of [a] Moſes to be concealed; ſo, to cut off from Poſterity all occaſion of Superſtition, he ſuffered the Memories of our Primitive Planters to be buried in Obſcurity.

a Deut. 34. 6.

63 9. Now amongſt the Converts of the Natives of this Iſland, in this Age, to Chriſtianity, Claudia (ſurnamed Ruffina) is reputed a principall, wife to Pudens a Romane Senatour. And becauſe all this is too high a Step for our belief to climb at once; the Aſcent will be more eaſie, thus divided into Stairs, and half-paces.

Claudia (notwithſtanding Parſons exceptions) might be a British Chriſtian.

First, That Claudia was a Britan born, Martial affirms it in his Epigram:

[b] Claudia caeruleis cum ſit Ruffina Britannis
Edita, cur Latia pectora plebis habet?

b Lib. 11. Epig. 54.

Secondly, That this Claudia was wife to Pudens, the ſame [c] Poet averreth:

Claudia, Rufe, meo nubit peregrina Pudenti.
Macte eſto tadis, ô Hymenæe, tuis.

c Lib. 4. Epig. 13.

Thirdly, That there was a Pudens, and Claudia living at Rome, both Chriſtians, we have it from a more infallible Pen of [d] S. Paul himſelf,—Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren.

d 2 Tim. 4. 21.

Laſtly, That this Claudia mentioned by S^t. Paul, then living at Rome, was the ſame Claudia, a Britan born, mentioned by Martial, is the Opinion, and probable Conjecture of many Modern VVriters.

But Father Parſons will not admit hereof, becauſe willingly he would not allow any ſprinkling of Chriſtianity in this Iſland, but what was rained from Rome, when Eleutherius ſent to Chriſtian King Lucius; that ſo our ingagement to the Romiſh Church might be the more viſible, and conſpicuous. This of Claudia Ruffina is hudled up (ſaith [e] he) by our late Hereticall VVriters; (though [f] ſome as Catholick as himſelf in his own ſenſe, do entertain it:) and hereby we ſee that Hereticks are but ſleight Provers, and very deceitfull in all matters, as well Hiſtoricall, as Doctrinall.

f Pitſeus de Script. Brit. pag. 72. in zealous for it. Parſons objection to the contrary anſwered.

10. But be it known to him and others, that our Hiſtory is founded on the beſt humane Books we can get; but our Doctrine is grounded on what is beſt in it ſelf, the Divine Scriptures. The matter in hand is ſo ſleight a Controverſie, that it cannot bear a Demonſtration on either ſide: it will ſuffice, if by anſwering his Reaſons to the contrary, we clear it from all Impoſſibilitie, and Improbabilitie; that it is not hudled, but built up by Plummet and Line, with proportion to Time and Place.

1. Arg. There is a generall ſilence of all Antiquity in this matter.
Anſw. Negative Arguments from humane Writers, in ſuch Hiſtoricall differences, are of ſmall validity.

2. Arg. Martial, an Heathen, would hardly ſo much commend Claudia, if ſhe had been a Chriſtian.
Anſw. A wanton Poet, in his chaſt Intervalls, might praiſe that Goodneſs in another, which he would not practice in himſelf.

3. Arg. Claudia, ſpoken of by S^t. Paul, was in the time of Nero, and could not be known to Martial, who lived ſixty years after, in the reign of Trajan.
Anſw. Though Martial died a very old man in Trajan's days, yet he flouriſhed under Nero, very familiar with his friend and fellow-Poet Silius [g] Italicus, in whoſe Conſulſhip Nero died.

g Martial. lib. 7. Ep. 63.

4. Arg. That ſame Claudia (reported alſo the firſt Hoſteſs which entertained Peter and Paul) muſt be preſumed ancient in Martial his remembrance, and therefore unfit to be praiſed for her beauty.

Anno Dom. 63

Answ. Even in the Autumne of her Age, when she had enriched her Husband with three Children, her vigourous Beauty preserved by Temperance, might entitle her to the commendation of Matron-like Comelinesse.

5. Arg. The Children assigned in the Roman Calendar to Claudia the Christian, will not well agree to this British Claudia.

Answ. Little certainty can be extracted, and therefore nothing enforced to purpose, from the number and names of her Children, such is the difference of severall [a] Writers concerning them.

The issue of all is this. Claudia's story, as a British Christian, stands unremoved, for any force of these Objections, though one need not be much engaged herein: for whosoever is more then luke-warm, is too hote in a case of so small consequence. Yet we will not willingly leave an hoose of the British Honour behind, which may be brought on; the rather to save the longing of such, who delight on rath-ripe fruits: and Antiquaries much please themselves, to behold the probabilities of such early Converts of our Island. But now to return again to the prime Planters of Religion in Britain. As for all those formerly reckoned up, there is in Authours but a tinkling mention of them; and the sound of their Preaching, low and little, in comparison of those lowd Peales, which are rung of Ioseph of Arimathea his coming hither. Let the Reader with patience take the summe thereof, extracted out of severall Authours.

The coming of Ioseph of Arimathea into Britain.

11. The Jews, bearing an especiall spight to Philip (whether the Apostle, or Deacon, uncertain) Ioseph of Arimathea, Lazarus, Mary Magdalene, and Martha his sisters, with Marcella their servant, banished them out of Iudea, and put them into a Vessell without Sailes and Oares, with intent to drown them. Yet they, being tossed with tempests on the Mid-land Sea, at last safe-landed at Marseilles in France. A relation as ill accoutred with tacklings, as their Ship; and, which is unrigged in respect of time, and other circumstances; neither hath it the authority of any authentick Writer, for a Pilot to steer it: which notwithstanding, hath had the happinesse to arrive at the hearing of many, and belief of some few. Now, whilest * Philip continued preaching the Gospell in France, he sent Ioseph of Arimathea over into Britain, with Ioseph his son, and ten other Associates, to convert the Natives of that Island to Christianity. These coming into Britain, found such entertainment from Arviragus the King, that though he would not be dissuaded from his Idolatry by their preaching, yet he allowed them twelve Hides of ground (an Hide is as much as, being well manur'd, will maintain a familie; or, as others say, as much as one plow can handsomely manage) in a desolate Island, full of Fenns and Brambles, called the Ynis-Vvitrin, since by translation, Glassenbury. Here they built a small Church, and by direction from [b] Gabriel the Archangel, dedicated it to the Virgin Mary, encompassing it about with a Church-yard; in which Church, afterwards Ioseph was buried: and here these twelve lived many years, devoutly serving God, and converting many to the Christian Religion.

* Some hold Philip came not in this Ship, but was in France before.

12. Now, a little to examine this history, we shall find, first, that no Writer of credit can be produced, before the Conquest, who mentioneth Ioseph's coming hither; but since that time (to make recompence for former silence) it is resounded from every side. As for Bale his citations out of Melkinus Avalonius, and Gildas Albanus, seeing the Originals are not extant, they be as uncertain, as what Baronius hath transcribed out of an English [c] Manuscript in the Vatican. Yet, because the Norman Charters of Glassenbury refer to a succession of many ancient Charters, bestowed on that Church by several Saxon Kings, as the Saxon Charters relate to British Grants in intuition to Ioseph's being there: We dare not wholy deny the substance of the Story, though

The history full of dross when brought to the touch.

Anno Dom. 63 though the leaven of Monkery hath much ſwoln, and puff'd up the Circumſtance thereof. For, the mentioning of an incloſed Church-yard, overthrows the foundation of the Church; ſeeing Churches in that time got no ſuch Suburbs about them, as any Church-yards to attend them. The burying his body in the Church, was contrary to the practice of that Age; yea, dead mens Corpſes were brought no nearer then the Porch, ſome hundreds of years after. The Dedication of the place to the Virgin Mary, ſheweth the Story of later date, calculated for the elevation of Saint-worſhip. In a word, as this relation of Ioſeph is preſented unto us, it hath a young mans Brow, with an old mans Beard; I mean, novel Superſtitions, diſguiſed with pretended Antiquity.

64 13. In all this ſtory of Ioſeph's living at Glaſſenbury, there is no one paſſage reported therein beareth better proportion to time and place, then the Church which he is ſaid to erect; whoſe dimenſions, materials, and making, are thus preſented unto us. It had in length ſixty foot, [a] and twenty ſix in breadth; [b] made of rods, watled, or interwoven. Where at one view, we may behold the ſimplicity of Primitive Devotion, and the native faſhion of Britiſh Buildings in that Age, and ſome hundred years after. For we find that [c] Hoel Dha, King of Wales, made himſelf a Palace of Hurdle-work, called Tyguyn, or, the White Houſe; becauſe, for diſtinctions ſake (to difference it from, and advance it above other Houſes) the rods whereof it was made were unbark'd, having the rinde ſtripp'd off. Which was then counted gay and glorious; as white-limedhouſes exceed thoſe which are only rough-caſt. In this ſmall Oratory, Ioſeph, with his Companions, watched, prayed, faſted, preached, having high Meditations under a low Roof, and large Hearts betwixt narrow Walls. If credit may be given to theſe Authours, this Church, without competition, was ſenior to all Chriſtian Churches in the World. Let not then ſtately modern Churches diſdain to ſtoop with their higheſt Steeples, reverently doing homage to this poor Structure, as their firſt platform and precedent. And let their checquered Pavements no more diſdain this Oratories plaine Floor, then her thatch'd Covering doth envy their leaden Roofs. And although now it is meet that Church-buildings, as well as private houſes, partaking of the peace and proſperity of our Age, ſhould be both in their Coſt and Cunning encreaſed, (far be that pride and profaneneſs from any, to account nothing either too fair for Man, or too foul for God;) yet it will not be amiſs to deſire, that our Judgements may be ſo much the clearer in matters of Truth, and our Lives ſo much the purer in Converſation, by how much our Churches are more light, & our Buildings more beautifull then they were.

76 14. Some difference there is about the place of buriall of Ioſeph of Arimathea. Some aſſigning his Grave in the Church of Glaſſenbury, others in the South corner of the Church-yard, and others elſewhere. This we may be aſſured of, that he, who [d] reſigned his own Tombe to our Saviour, wanted not a Sepulchre for himſelf. And here we muſt not forget, how [e] more then a thouſand years after, one John Bloone of London, pretending an injunction from Heaven, to ſeek for the Body of Ioſeph of Arimathea, obtained a licence from King Edward the third, to dig at Glaſſenbury for the ſame, as by his [f] Patent doth appeare. It ſeems, his Commiſſion of Enquiry never originally iſſued out of the Court of Heaven; for God never ſends his ſervants on a ſleeveleſs Errand, but ſaith, Aſk, and ye ſhall have; ſeek, and ye ſhall find. Whereas this man ſought, and did never find, for ought we can hear of his inquiſition. And we may well believe, that had he found the Corpſe of Ioſeph, though Fame might have held her peace, yet Superſtition would not have been ſilent; but long before this time, ſhe had roared it even into the ears of deaf men. And truely he might have digg'd at Glaſſenbury to the Centre of the earth, & yet not met with what he ſought for, if Ioſeph were buried ten miles off (as a Ieſuite [g] will have it) at Montacute, or, in Hampden-Hill. Hereafter there is hope, that the Maſons, digging in the Quarries thereof, may light by chance on his Corpſe, which (if fond Papiſts might prize it) would prove more

The budding Haw-thorn nigh Glassenbury attributed a miracle to Ioseph's holiness.

15. Some ascribe to the sanctity of this Ioseph, the yearly budding of the Haw-thorn near Glassenbury, on Christmas day, no lesse then an annual Miracle. This, were it true, were an argument (as K. James did once pleasantly urge it) to prove our Old stile before the New (which prevents our Computation by ten dayes, and is used in the Church of Rome) yea, all Prognosticators might well calculate their Almanacks from this Haw-thorn. Others more warily affirm, that it doth not punctually and critically bud on Christmas day (such Miracles must be tenderly toucht, lest crusht by harsh handling, they vanish into smoke, like the Apples of Sodome) but on the dayes near, or about it. However, it is very strange, that this Haw-thorn should be the Harbenger, and (as it were) ride post to bring the first news of the Spring, holding alone (as it may seem) correspondency with the Trees of the Antipodes, whilest other Haw-thorns near unto it have nothing but winter upon them.

Different opinions of men concerning it.

16. It is true, by powring every night warm water on the root thereof, a Tree may be maturated artificially, to bud out in the midst of Winter; but it is not within suspicion, that any such cost is here expended. Some likewise affirm, that if an Haw-thorn be grafted upon an Holly, it is so adopted into the stock, that it will bud in Winter: but this doth not satisfie the accurateness of the time. Wherefore most men, pursued to render a reason hereof, take refuge at Occulta Qualitas, the most mannerly confession of Ignorance. And God sometimes puts forth such questions, and Riddles in nature, on purpose to pose the Pride of men conceited of their skill in such matters. But some are more uncharitable in this point, who, because they cannot find the reason hereof on Earth, do fetch it from Hell: not sticking to affirm, that the Devil, to dandle the infant faith of fond people, works these prety Feats, and petty Wonders, having farther intents to invite them to Superstition, and mould them to Saint-worship thereby.

The subject of the question taken away.

17. However, there is no necessity, that this should be imputed to the Holiness of Arimathean Ioseph. For there is (as it is credibly said) an Oake in New-Forest, nigh Lindhurst, in Hantshire, which is indued with the same quality, putting forth leaves about the same time, where the firmness of the Rinde thereof much encreaseth the wonder: and yet to my knowledge (for ought I could ever learn) none ever referred it to the miraculous influence of any Saint. But I loose pretious time, and remember a pleasant Story; How two Physitians, the one a Galenist, the other a Paracelsian, being at supper, fell into an hote dispute about the manner of Digestion; & whilest they began to ingage with earnestness in the controversie, a third man casually coming in, caried away the meat from them both. Thus whilest opposite parties discuss the cause of this Haw-thorns budding on Christmas day, some Souldiers have lately cut the Tree down, and Christmas day it self is forbidden to be observ'd; and so, I think, the question is determined.

The conclusion of this Century.

18. To conclude this Century. By all this it doth not appear that the first Preachers of the Gospel in Britain did so much as touch at Rome, much lesse, that they received any Command, or Commission thence, to convert Britain, which should lay an eternal obligation of Gratitude on this Island to the See of Rome. Insomuch that Parsons himself (as unwilling to confess, as unable to deny so apparent a truth) flies at last to this slight and slender Shift: [a] That albeit S. Joseph came not immediatly from Rome, yet he taught in England (in Britain he would say) the Roman faith, whereof S. Paul hath written to the Romans [b] themselves, that your Faith is spoken of through the whole World. Hereby the Iesuite hopes still to keep on foot the ingagement of this Island to Rome, for her first Conversion. But why should he call the Christian Religion the Roman faith, rather then the faith of Hierusalem, or, the faith of Antioch? seeing it issued from the former, and was received, & first named in the later City, before any spark of Christianity was kindled at Rome. But, what is the main, he may sooner prove the modern Italian tongue now spoken in Rome, to be the self-same in propriety & purity, with the Latine language in Tullie's time; then that the Religion profess'd in that City at this day, with all the Errours and Superstitions thereof, is the same in soundnesse of Doctrine, and sanctitie of Life, with that Faith, which by St. Paul in the Roman Church was then so highly commended.

105 1. DEsire of our Country's honour would now make us lay claim to Taurinus, Bishop of York, and reported Martyr. To strengthen our Title unto him, we could produce many [a] Writers affirming it, if Number made Weight in this case. But, being convinced in our judgement, that such as make him a Britan, ground their pretence on a leading Mistake, reading him Episcopum EBORACENSEM, instead of EBROICENSEM, Eureux (as I take it) in France; we will not enrich our Country by the Errours of any, or advantage her Honour by the Misprisions of others. Thus being conscientiously scrupulous, not to take or touch a thread which is none of our own, we may with more boldness, hereafter keep what is justly ours, and chalenge what is unjustly detained from us.

108 2. But the main matter, which almost engrosseth all the History of this Century, and, by scattered dates, is spread from the beginning to the end thereof, is the Conversion of Lucius, King of Britain, to Christianity. However, not to dissemble, I do adventure thereon with much averseness, seeming sadly to presage, that I shall neither satisfie others nor my self; such is the Varietie, yea Contrarietie of Writers about the time thereof. If the Trumpet (saith the Apostle) giveth an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the Battell? He will be at a loss to order and dispose this Story aright, who listeneth with greatest attention to the trumpet of Antiquity, sounding at the same time a March & Retreit; appointing Lucius to come into the world, by his Birth, when others design him, by Death, to goe out of the same. Behold, Reader, a view of their Differences presented unto thee; and it would puzzle Apollo himself to tune these jarring Instruments into a Consort.

Here is more then a Grand-Jury of Writers, which neither agree in their Verdicts with their Fore-man, nor one with another: there being betwixt the firſt & the laſt, Paulus Iovius & Iohn Harding, ninetie years diſtance in their Account. This, with other Arguments, is uſed, not onely to ſhake, but ſhatter the whole reputation of the Story. And we muſt endeavour to clear this Objection, before we go farther, which is ſhrewdly preſſed by many. For if the two Elders, which accuſed Suſanna, were condemned for Liars, being found in two Tales; the one laying the Scene of her Incontinency under a [a] Maſtick-tree, the other under an Holme-tree: why may not the Relation of Lucius be alſo condemned for a Fiction, ſeeing the Reporters there of more differ in Time, then the forenamed Elders in Place; ſeeing when and where are two circumſtances, both equally important, and concerning in Hiſtory, to the Truth of any action?

a Suſanna verſe 54. and 58.

The Hiſtory of K. Lucius not diſproved by the diſſenſion of Authors concerning the time thereof.

3. But we anſwere, That however Learned men differ in the Date, they agree in the Deed. They did ſet themſelves ſo to heed the Matter, as of moſt moment, being the Soul, and Subſtance of Hiſtory, that they were little curious (not to ſay very careleſs) in accurate noting of the Time: which being well obſerved, doth not onely add ſome luſtre, but much ſtrength to a relation. And indeed, all Computation in the Primitive time is very uncertain, there being then (and a good while after) an Anarchy, as I may terme it, in Authours their reckoning of years, becauſe men were not ſubject to any one ſoveraign Rule, in accounting the year of our Lord; but every one followed his own Arithmetick, to the great confuſion of Hiſtory, and prejudice of Truth. In which age, though all ſtart from the ſame place [our Saviour's Birth] yet running in ſeverall ways of account, they ſeldome meet together in their dating of any memorable Accident. Worthie therefore was his work, whoever he was, who firſt calculated the Computation we uſe at this day, and ſo ſet Chriſtendome a Copy, whereby to write the date of actions; which ſince being generally uſed, hath reduced Chronology to a greater Certainty.

Lucius might be a Britiſh King under the Roman Monarchy.

4. As for their Objection, That Lucius could not be a King in the South of Britain, becauſe it was then reduced to be a Province under the Roman Monarchy; It affects not any that underſtand, how it was the Roman [b] cuſtome, both to permit, and appoint Petie Kings in ſeveral Countries (as Antiochus in Aſia, Herod in Iudea, Diotaurus in Sicilie) who, under them, were inveſted with Regal Power, & Dignity. And this was conceived to conduce to the ſtate and amplitude of their Empire. Yea, the German Emperour at this day, Succeſſour to the Roman Monarchy, is ſtiled Rex Regum, as having many Princes, and particularly the King of Bohemia, Homagers under him. As for other inconſiſtents with truth, which depend, as Retainers, on this Relation of King Lucius, they prove not that this whole Story ſhould be refuſed, but refined. Which calleth aloud to the Diſcretion of the Reader, to fan the Chaffe from the Corne; and to his Induſtry, to rub the Ruſt from the Gold, which almoſt of neceſſity will cleave to matters of ſuch Antiquity. Thus conceiving that for the main we have aſſerted King Lucius, we come to relate his Hiſtory, as we finde it.

Lucius ſendeth to the Biſhop of Rome to be inſtructed in Chriſtianity.

5. He being much taken with the Miracles which he beheld truly done by pious Chriſtians, fell in admiration of, and love with their Religion; and ſent Elvanus and Meduinus, men of known Piety, and Learning in the Scriptures, to Eleutherius Biſhop of Rome, with a Letter, requeſting ſeveral things of him, but principally, that he might be inſtructed in the Chriſtian Faith. ſhining the brighter, becauſe ſet on the higheſt Candle-ſtick, the Imperial City. We are ſo far from grudging Rome the Happineſs ſhe once had, that we rather bemoan ſhe loſt it ſo ſoon, degenerating from her primitive Purity. The Letter which Lucius wrote is not extant at this day, and nothing thereof is to be ſeen, ſave onely by reflection, as it may be collected by the Anſwer returned by Eleutherius, which (ſuch an one as it is) it will not be amiſſe here to inſert.

This tranſlation of the letter of Eleutherius is tranſcribed out of Biſhop Godwin in his Catalogue of Biſhops. There is ſome variety between this, and that of Mr. Fox.

7. Now we have done our Threſhing, we muſt begin our Winnowing, to examine the Epiſtle. For the trade of counterfeiting the Letters of eminent men began very early in the Church. Some were tampering with it in the Apoſtles time; which occaſioned St. Paul's [b] Caution, That ye be not ſoon ſhaken in minde, or be troubled, neither by ſpirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us. Since, men (then but Apprentices) are now grown Maiſters in this Myſterie; wherefore it will be worth our examining, whether this Epiſtle be genuine or no. Say not, this doth betray a peeviſh, if not malicious diſpoſition, and argues a vexatious ſpirit in him, which will now call the title of this Letter in queſtion, which time out of minde hath been in the peaceable poſſeſſion of an authentick reputation, eſpecially ſeeing it ſoundeth in honorem Eccleſiæ Britannicæ; and, grant it a Tale, yet it is ſmoothly told to the credit of the Britiſh Church. But let ſuch know, that our Church is ſenſible of no Honour, but what reſulteth from truth; and if this Letter be falſe, the longer it hath been received, the more need there is of a ſpeedy and preſent Confutation, before it be ſo firmly rooted in mens belief, paſt power to remove it. See therefore the Arguments which ſhake the credit thereof.

A preparative for the examining the truth of this letter.

1. The date of this Letter differs in ſeveral Copies, and yet none of them light right on the time of Eleutherius, according to the Computation of the beſt-eſteemed Authours.

2. It relates to a former Letter of King Lucius, wherein he ſeemeth to requeſt of Eleutherius, both what he himſelf had before, and what the good Biſhop was unable to grant. For what need Lucius ſend for the Roman Laws, to which Britain was already ſubjected, and ruled by them? At this very time, wherein this Letter is pretended to be wrote, the Roman Laws were here in force; and therefore to ſend for them hither, was even actum agere, and to as much purpoſe, as to fetch water from Tiber to

Thames. Besides, Eleutherius of all men was most improper to have such a suit preferred to him: Holy man! he little medled with Secular matters, or was acquainted with the Emperours Laws; onely he knew how to suffer Martyrdome, in passive obedience to his cruel Edicts.

3. How high a Throne doth this Letter mount Lucius on, making him a Monarch? Who (though Rex Britannicus) was not Rex Britanniæ; (except by a large Synecdoche:) neither sole, nor supreme King here; but partial, and subordinate to the Romans.

4. The Scripture quoted is out of S^t. Hierom's Translation, which came more then an hundred years after. And the Age of Eleutherius could not understand the language of manu tenere, for to maintain, except it did ante-date some of our modern Lawyers to be their Interpreter.

In a word: we know that the [a] Gibeonites their mouldy Bread was baked in an Oven very near the Israelites, and this Letter had its original of a later [b] date; which not appearing any where in the World, till a thousand years after the death of Eleutherius; probably crept out of some Monks Cell, some four hundred years since, the true answer of Eleutherius being not extant for many years before.

8. But to proceed. Eleutherius, at the request of King Lucius, sent unto him [c] Faganus, and Derwianus, or Dunianus, two holy men, and grave Divines, to instruct him in the Christian Religion; by whom the said King Lucius (called by the Britans Lever-Maur, or the Great Light) was baptized, with many of his Subjects. For if when private [d] Persons were converted, Cornelius, Lydia, &c. their Housholds also were baptized with them; it is easily credible, that the example of a King embracing the Faith, drew many Followers of Court and Country; Soveraigns seldome wandring alone without their Retinue to attend them. But whereas some report that most, yea [e] all of the Natives of this Island then turned Christians, it is very improbable; and the weary Traveller may sooner climbe the steepest Mountains in Wales, then the judicious Reader believe all the hyperbolical reports in the British Chronicles hereof.

9. For Ieffery Monmouth tells us, that at this time there were in England twenty eight Cityes, each of them having a [f] Flamen, or Pagan Priest; and three of them, namely London, York, and Caer-lion in Wales, had Arch-Flamens, to which the rest were subjected: and Lucius placed Bishops in the room of the Flamens, and Arch-Bishops, Metropolitans in the places of Arch-Flamens. All which, saith he, solemnly received their Confirmation from the Pope. But herein our Authour seems not well acquainted with the propriety of the word Flamen, their Use, and Office amongst the Romans; who were not set severally, but many together in the same City. Nor were they subordinate one to another, but all to the Priests Colledge, and therein to the Pontifex Maximus. Besides, the British [g] Manuscript, which Monmouth is conceived to have translated, makes no mention of these Flamens. Lastly, these words Arch-Bishop and Metropolitan, are so far from being current in the days of King Lucius, that they were not coined till after-Ages. So that in plain English, his Flamens and Arch-Flamens, seeme Flamms and Arch-Flamms, even notorious Falshoods.

10. Great also is the mistake of [h] another British Historian, affirming, how in the days of King Lucius, this Island was divided into five Roman Provinces; namely, Britain the First, Britain the Second, Flavia, Maxima, and Valentia: and that each of these were then divided into twelve Bishopricks, sixtie in the whole: a goodly company, and more by halfe then ever this Land did behold. Whereas these Provinces were so named from Valens, Maximus, and Flavius Theodosius, Romane Emperors, many years after the death of Lucius. Thus, as the Damosell convinced S^t. Peter to be a Galilean, for, said she, [i] Thy speech agreeth thereunto: so this five-fold division of Britain, by the very Novelty of the 167 11. But it is generally agreed, that about this time, many Pagan Temples in Britain had their Property altered, and the self-same were converted into Christian Churches. Particularly, that dedicated to Diana in London, and another near it, formerly consecrated to Apollo, in the City now called Westminster. This was done, not out of Covetousnes, to save Charges in founding new Fabricks, but out of Christian Thrift; conceiving this Imitation, an Invitation, to make Heathens come over more chearfully to the Christian Faith; when beholding their Temples (whereof they had an high and holy opinion) not sacrilegiously demolished, but solemnly continued to a pious end, and rectified to the Service of the true God. But humane Policy seldome proves prosperous, when tampering with Divine Worship, especially when without, or against direction from Gods Word. This new Wine, put into old Vessels, did in after-Ages taste of the Caske; and in process of time, Christianity, keeping a [a] correspondency, and some proportion with Paganisme, got a smack of heathen Ceremonies. Surely they had better have built new Nests for the Holy Dove, and not have lodged it where Screech-owles, and unclean Birds had formerly been harboured. If the High-Priest amongst the Jews was forbidden to marry a Widow, or divorced woman, but that he should take a Virgin of his owne [b] people to wife: How unseemly was it, that God himself should have the reversion of Profaneness assign'd to his Service, and his Worship wedded to the Relict, yea (what was worse) Whorish Shrines, formerly abused with Idolatry?

Pagan Temples in Britain, converted to Christian Churches.

178 12. Some report, that at this time three thousand Philosopers of the University of Cambridge were converted, and baptized; that K. Lucius came thither, and bestowed many [c] Priviledges, and Immunities on the place; with much other improbable matter. For surely they do a real Wrong, under a pretended Courtesy, to that famous Academy, to force a Peruke of false gray haire upon it, whose reverend Wrincles already command respect of themselves. Yet Cambridge makes this use of these over-grown Charters of Pope Eleutherius, K. Lucius, K. Arthur, and the like, to send them out in the Front, as the Forlorn-hope, when she is to encounter with Oxford in point of Antiquity; and if the credit of such old Monuments be cut off (as what else can be expected?) yet she still keeps her maine Battel firme and entire, consisting of stronger Authorities, which follow after. Nor doth Cambridge care much to cast away such doubtfull Charters, provided her Sister likewise quit all Title to fabulous Antiquity (setting Drosse against Drosse) and waving Tales, trie both the truth of their Age, by the Register of unquestioned Authours, if this Difference betwixt them be conceived to deserve the deciding.

The bounty of K. Lucius to Cambridge.

13. Besides the Churches afore-mentioned, many others there were, whose building is ascribed to King Lucius: as namely, 179 1. S[t]. Peter's in Cornhill in London; to which Ciran, a great Courtier, lent his helping hand. It is said, for many years after, to have been the Seat of an [d] Arch-Bishoprick: one Thean first enjoyed that Dignity.

2. Ecclesia primæ sedis, or, the chief Cathedral Church in Gloucester.

180 3. A Church at Winchester, consecrated by Faganus and Duvianus, whereof one Devotus was made Abbot.

4. A [e] Church, and Colledge of Christian Philosophers at Bangor.

187 5. The Church dedicated to S[t]. Mary in Glassenbury, repaired and raised out of the Ruines by Faganus and Duvianus, where they lived with twelve Associates.

6. A [f] Chappel in honour of Christ in Dover Castle.

7. The Church of S[t]. Martin in Canterbury; understand it thus, that Church which in after-Ages was new named, and converted to the honour of that Saint.

Of all these, that at Winchester was K. Lucius his Darling, which he endowed with with large Revenues, giving it all the land twelve miles on every side of the City, fencing the Church about with a Church-yard, on which he bestowed Priviledges of a Sanctuary, and building a Dormitory, and Refectory for the Monks there; if the little History of [a] Winchester be to be believed, whose credit is very suspicious, because of the modern Language used therein. For as Country-Painters, when they are to draw some of the ancient Scripture-Patriarchs, use to make them with Bands, Cuffs, Hats, & Caps, al a mode to the Times wherein they themselves doe live: so it seemeth, the Authour of this History last cited (lacking learning to acquaint him with the Garbe, and Character of the Age of K. Lucius) doth pourtraict and describe the Bounty, and Church-buildings of that King, according to the Phrase, and Fashion of that model of Monkery in his own Age.

14. Some Dutch Writers report, that K. Lucius in his Old Age left his Kingdome, and went over into France, thence into Germany, as far as the Alpes; where he converted all [b] Rhetia, and the City of Aussburg in Suevia, by his Preaching, with the assistance of Emerita his Sister; it being no news, in Gods Harvest, to see Women with their Sickles a reaping. It is confessed that Converting of Souls is a work worthy a King; David's and Solomon's preaching hath silenced all Objections to the contrary. It is also acknowledged, that Kings used to renounce the World, and betake themselves to such pious Emploiment; though this Custome, frequent in after-Ages, was not so early a riser, as to be up so near the Primitive Times. It is therefore well observed by a Learned [c] man, that Lucius the German Preacher was a different person from the British King, who never departed our Island, but died therein. I have read, how a woman in the Lower Palatinate, being bigg with Twinns, had the fruit of her Wombe so strangely alter'd by a violent [d] Contusion casually befalling her, that she was delivered of one Monster with two Heads, which Nature had intended for two perfect Children. Thus the History of this Age being pregnant with a double Lucius at the same time, is by the carelesness of unadvised Authours so jumbled, and confounded together, that those which ought to have been parted, as distinct Persons, make up one monstrous one, without due proportion to Truth, yea, with the manifest prejudice thereof.

Anno Dom.

THE THIRD CENTURY.

To Mr. Simeon Bonnell, Merchant.

IT is proportionable to present a Century, short in Story, to One low in Stature, though deservedly high in the esteem of your Friend,

T. F.

201 1. OF all Centuryes this begins most sadly; at the entrance whereof we are accosted with the Funeralls of King Lucius, (the brightest Sun must set:) buried, as they say, in Gloecester. Different dates of his Death are assigned, but herein we have followed the [a] most judicious. Long after, the Monks of that Convent bestowed an Epitaph upon him, having in it nothing worthy of translating.

Lucius [b] in tenebris prius Idola qui coluisti,
Es merito celebris ex quo Baptisma subisti.

It seems the puddle-Poet did hope, that the jingling of his Rhyme would drown the sound of his false Quantity. Except any will say, that he affected to make the middle Syllable in Idola short, because in the days of King Lucius Idolatry was curb'd and contracted, whilest Christianity did dilate and extend it self.

The death, buriall, and Epitaph of King Lucius.

b John Bever in his Abbreviat. of the Brit. Chron.

2. But Christianity in Britain was not buried in the Grave of Lucius, but survived after his Death. Witness Gildas, whose words deserve to be made much of, as the clearest evidence of the constant continuing of Religion in this Island. Christ's Precepts (saith [c] he) though they were received but luke-warmly of the Inhabitants, yet they remained entirely with some, less sincerely with others, even untill the nine years of Persecution under Diocletian. Whose expression concerning the entertaining of Christianity here, though spoken indefinitely of the British Inhabitants, yet we are so far from understanding it universally of all this Island, or generally of the most, or eminently of the principal parts thereof, that, if any list to contend, that the main of Britain was stil Pagan, we will not oppose. A thing neither to be doubted of, nor wondered at, if the modern Complaints of many be true, that even in this Age, there are dark Corners in this Kingdome, where Profaneness lives quietly with invincible Ignorance. Yea, that the first Professours in Christianity were but luke-warm in Religion, will (without Oath made for the truth thereof) be easily believed by such, who have felt the temper of the English Laodiceans now a days. However, it appeares there were some honest Hearts, that still kept Christianity on foot in the Kingdome. So that since Religion first dwelt here, it never departed hence; like the Candle of the vertuous Wife, [d] It went not out by night: by the Night neither of Ignorance, nor of Security, nor of Persecution. The Island generally never was an Apostate, nor by Gods blessing, ever shall be.

d Prov. 31. 18.

3. To the Authority of Gildas, we will twist the Testimony of two Fathers, both flourishing in this Century, Tertullian and Origen; plainly proving Christianity in Britain in this Age; both of them being undoubtedly Orthodox, without

Two Fathers to be believ'd before two children.

(without mixture of Montaniſt, or Millenary) in hiſtorical matters. Hear the former. There are places of the [a] Britans, which were unacceſſible to the Romans, but yet ſubdued to Chriſt. Origen in like maner: [b] The power of God our Saviour is even with them which in Britain are divided from our world. Theſe ought to prevail in any rational belief, rather then the detracting reports of two modern men, Paradine and Dempſter, who affirm that after Lucius death, the Britiſh Nation returned to their Heathen Rites, and remained Infidels for full five hundred years after. Which [c] words, if caſually falling from them, may be paſſed by with pardon; if ignorantly uttered (from ſuch Pretenders to Learning) will be heard with wonder; if wilfully vented, muſt be taxed for a ſhameleſs and impudent Falſhood. Had Dempſter (the more poſitive of the two in this point) read as many Authours as he quoteth, and marked as much as he read, he muſt have confuted himſelf: yea, though he had obſtinately ſhut his Eies, ſo clear a Truth would have ſhined through his Eye-lids. It wil be no wilde Juſtice, or furious Revenge, but Equity, to make themſelves ſatisfaction, if the Britans declare Dempſter devoid of the faith of an Hiſtorian, who endeavoured to deprive their Anceſtours of the Chriſtian Faith for many yeares together; his Pen, to befriend the North, doing many bad offices to the South part of this Iſland.

Want of work no fault of the workman.

e Exod. 22. 12.

6. Gildas very modeſtly renders the reaſon, why ſo little is extant of the Bri- „ tiſh Hiſtory. Scripta patriæ, Scriptorumve monumenta, ſi quæ fuerint, aut igni- „ bus hoſtium exuſta, aut Civium exulum claſſe longius deportata, non comparent. „ The Monuments (ſaith he) of our Country, or Writers (if there were any) „ appear not, as either burnt by the fire of enemies, or tranſported farr off by „ our baniſhed countrymen.

Reaſon why ſo little left of this Age.

7. This is all I have to ſay of this Century; and muſt now confeſs my ſelf as unable to goe on, ſo aſhamed to break off; ſcarce having had, of a full Hundred Years, ſo many Words of ſolid Hiſtory. But, as I find little, ſo I will feign nothing; time being better ſpent in Silence, then in Lying. Nor do I doubt but clean Stomacks will be better ſatisfied with one drop of the Milk of Truth, then foul Feeders (who muſt have their Bellies ful) with a Trough of VVaſh, mingled with the water of Fabulous Inventions. If any hereafter ſhall light on more Hiſtory of theſe times, let them not condemn my Negligence, whileſt I ſhall admire their Happineſſe.

Concluſion of this Century.

303 I. DArk and tempeſtuous was the Morning of this Century, which afterward cleared up to be a fair Day. It began with great Affliction to Gods Saints. The Spirit ſaith to the Church of Smyrna, [a] Ye ſhall have Tribulation ten dayes. This is commonly underſtood of the Ten generall Perſecutions over all the Chriſtian world. But herein Divine Mercy magnified it ſelf towards this Iſland, that the laſt Oecumenicall was the firſt Provinciall Perſecution in Britain. God, though he made our Church his Darling, would not make it a Wanton; ſhe muſt taſte of the Rod with the reſt of her Siſters. The Fiery [b] Triall ſpoken of by the Apoſtle, now found out even thoſe which by water were divided from the reſt of the World. This tenth Perſecution as it was the laſt, ſo it was the greateſt of all, becauſe Satan the ſhorter his Reign, the ſharper his Rage; ſo that what his Fury lacks in the Length, it labours to gain in the Thickneſs thereof.

First perſecution in Britain under Diocletian.

a Revel. 2. 10.

b 1 Pet. 1. 12.

2. In this Perſecution, the firſt Britan which to Heaven led the Van of the noble Army of Martyrs, was Alban, a wealthy Inhabitant of Verolam-ceſtre, and a Citizen of Rome; for ſo Alexander [c] Neccham reports him.

Alban the Britiſh S^t. Stephen how a Citizen of Rome.

c In his Poem on Verulam.

Hic eſt Martyrii roſeo decoratus honore, Albanus, Cives, inclyta Roma, tuus.
Here Alban, Rome, thy Citizen renow'nd,
With roſy Grace of Martyrdome was crown'd.

None need ſtop, much leſſe ſtumble at this ſeeming Contradiction, eaſily reconciled by him that hath read S^t. Paul, in one place proclaiming himſelf an [d] Hebrew of the Hebrews, and [e] elſewhere pleading himſelf to be a Roman, becauſe born in Tarſus a City of Cilicia and Roman Colony; as Verolam-ceſtre was at this time enfranchiſed with many Immunities. Thus Alban was a Britan by Parentage, a Roman by Priviledge; naturally a Britan, naturallized a Roman: and, which was his greateſt Honour, he was alſo Citizen of that ſpiritual Hieruſalem, which is from above.

e Acts 22. 25.

3. His Converſion happened on this manner. Amphibalus, a Chriſtian Preacher of Caer-lion in Wales, was fain to fly from perſecution into the Eaſtern parts of this Iſland, and was entertained by Alban in his houſe in Verulam. Soon did the Sparks of this Gueſts Zeal catch hold on his Hoſt, and ininflamed him with love to the Christian Religion. Herein our Saviour made good his promise, [a] He that receiveth a Righteous man in the name of a Righteous man, shall receive a Righteous mans reward. And the Shot of Amphibalus his Entertainment was plentifully discharged, in Alban's sodain and sincere Conversion. Not long after a search being made for Amphibalus, Alban secretly and safely conveighed him away, & [b] exchanging Cloaths with him, offered himself for his Guest to the Pagan Officers, who at that instant were a sacrificing to their Devil-Gods; where not onely Alban, being required, refused to sacrifice, but also he reproved others for so doing, and thereupon was condemned to most cruell Torments. But he conquered their Cruelty with his Patience: and though they tortured their Brains to invent Tortures for him, he endured all with Chearfulnesse; till rather their Wearinesse then Pity made them desist. And here we must bewaile, that we want the true Story of this mans Martyrdome, which impudent Monks have mixed with so many improbable Tales, that it is a Torture to a discreet Eare to heare them. However, we will set them down as we find them; the rather, because we count it a thrifty way, first to glut the Readers belief with Popish Miracles, that so he may loath to look or listen after them in the sequele of the History.

The miraculous Martyrdom of Alban.

4. Alban being sentenced to be beheaded, much people flockt to the place of his Execution, which was on a Hill, called [c] Holm-hurst; to which they were to go over a River, where the narrow Passage admitted of very few a-breast. Alban being to follow after all the Multitude, and perceiving it would be very late, before he could come to act his Part, and counting every Delay half a Deniall, (who will blame one for longing to have a Crown?) by his Prayer obtained that the River, parting asunder, afforded free Passage for many together. The corrupted Copy of Gildas calls this River the [d] Thames. But if the Miracle were as farre from Truth, as Thames from Verulam (being 16 Miles distant) it would be very hard to bring them both together. The sight hereof so wrought with him who was appointed to be his Executioner, that he utterly refused the Imployment, desiring rather to Die with him, or for him, then to offer him any Violence. Yet soon was another substituted in his place: for some cruel Doeg will quickly be found to do that Office, which more Mercifull men decline.

c Understand it so called afterwards in the time of the Saxons.

d Thames is wanting in the Manuscript Gildas, in Cambridge Library.

A new spring of Water at Alban's summons appears in the top of a Hill.

5. Alban at the last being come to the Top of the Hill, was very dry, and desirous to drink. Wonder not that he being presently to tast of Joyes for evermore, should wish for fading Water. Sure he thirsted most for God's Glory, and did it only to catch hold of the handle of an occasion to work a Miracle, for the good of the Beholders. For presently by his Prayer, he summoned up a Spring, to come forth on the top of the Hill, to the amazement of all that saw it. Yet it moistened not his Executioners Heart with any Pity, who notwithstanding struck off the Head of this worthy Saint, and instantly his own Eyes fell out of his Head, so that he could not see the Vilany which he had done. Presently after, the former Convert-Executioner, who refused to put Alban to death, was put to death himself, baptized no doubt, though not with Water, in his own Blood. The Body of Alban was afterwards plainly buried: that Age knowing no other use of Saints Dust, then to commit it to the Dust, Earth to Earth; not acquainted with Adoration, and Circumgestation of Reliques; as ignorant of the Manner, how, as the Reason, why, to do it. But some hundred yeares after, King Offa disturb'd the sleeping Corps of this Saint, removing them to a more stately, though lesse quiet Bed, enshrining them, as (God willing) shall be related hereafter.

Amphibalus, Difference about his name.

6. Immediately followed the Martyrdom of Amphibalus, Alban's Guest, and Ghostly Father, though the Story of his Death be incumbred with much Obscurity. For first there is a Quære in his very Name: why called Amphibalus? and how came this compounded Greek word to wander into Wales? except any will say, That this mans British Name was by Authours in after-Ages so translated into Greek. Besides, the Name speaks rather the Vestment then the Wearer, signifying a Cloak wrapt or cast about, (Samuel was mark't by such a Mantle;) and it may be he got his name hence; as Robert Curt-hose, Sonne to William the Conquerour, had his Surname from going in such a Garment. And it is worth our observing, that this good man passeth nameless in all Authours, till about 400 yeares since; when Ieffery Monmouth was his Godfather, and [a] first calls him Amphibalus, for reasons concealed from us, and best known to himself.

a Usher de Brit. Eccl. Primord. p. 159.

7. But it matters not for Words, if the Matter were true, being thus reported. A thousand Inhabitants of Verulam went into Wales, to be further informed in the Faith, by the Preaching of Amphibalus; who were pursued by a Pagan Army of their fellow-Citizens, by whom they were overtaken, overcome, and murthered: save that one man only, (like Iob's Messenger) who escaped of them to report the Losse of the rest. And although every thing unlikely is not untrue, it was a huge Drag-net, and cunningly cast, that killed all the Fish in the River. Now these Pagan Verolamians brought Amphibalus back again; and being within ken of their City, in the Village called Redburn, three Miles from Verulam, they cruelly put him to death. For making an Incision in his Belly, they took out his Guts, and tying them to a Stake, whipt him round about it. All which he endured, as free from Impatience as his Persecuters from Compassion. Thus died Amphibalus; and a [b] Writer born and named from that Place reporteth, that in his dayes the two Knives which stabbed him were kept in the Church of Redburn. The heat and resplendent lustre of this Saints Suffering wrought as the Sun-beams, according to the Capacity of the matter it met with, in the Beholders, melting the Waxen Minds of some into Christianity, and obdurating the Hard Hearts of others with more madnesse against Religion.

b Thomas Redburn, who wrote 1480.

7. Tradition reports, that the Stake he was tied to afterwards turned to a Tree, extant at this very [c] day, and admired of many, as a great Piece of Wonder; though, (as most things of this nature) more in Report then Reality. That it hath Green Leaves in Winter mine Eyes can witnesse false; and as for its standing at a stay time out of mind, neither impaired, nor improved in Bignesse (which some count so strange) be it reported to Wood-men & Foresters, whether it be not ordinarie. I think the wood of the Tree is as miraculous, as the water of the VVell adjoining is medicinall; which fond people fetch so farre, and yet a credulous Drinker may make a Cordiall Drink thereof.

c I mean Anno 1643.

8. At the time of Amphibalus his Martyrdome, another [d] Thousand of the Verulam Citizens, being converted to Christ, were by command of the Iudges all killed in the same Place. A strange Execution, if true, seeing [e] John Rosse of VVarwick layes the Scene of this Tragedy farre off, and at another time, with many other Circumstances inconsistent with this Relation; Telling us how at Litchfield in Staffordshire this great multitude of People were long before slain by the Pagans, as they attended to the Preaching of Amphibalus. This relation is favoured by the name of Litchfield, which in the British tongue signifies a Golgotha, or place bestrewed with Skulls: In allusion whereto that Cities Armes are a Field surcharged with Dead Bodies. He needs almost a miraculous Faith, to be able to remove Mountains, yea to make the Sunne stand still, and sometimes to go back, who will undertake to accord the Contradictions in Time and Place, between the severall Relatours of this History.

The Martyrdom of another thousand Britans variously reported.

9. The Records of VVinchester make mention of a great Massacre, whereby at this time all their Monks were slain in their Church; whilest the Chronicle of VVestminster challengeth the same to be done in their Convent: and the History of Cambridge ascribeth it to the Christian Students of that University, killed by their British Persecuters. Whether this hapned in any or all of these Places, I will not determine: For he tells a Lye, though he tells a Truth, that peremptorily affirms that which he knows is but Uncertain. Mean time we see, that it is hard for men to ſuffer Martyrdom, and eaſie for their Poſterity to brag of their Anceſtours Sufferings; yea, who would not intitle themſelves to the Honour, when it is parted from the Pain? When Perſecution is a coming, every man poſteth it off, as the Philiſtins did the [a] Ark infected with the Plague, and no place will give it entertainment: But when the Storm is once over, then (as ſeven Cities contended for Homer's Birth in them) many Places will put in to claim a ſhare in the Credit thereof.

Severall Places pretend to, and contend for the same Martyrdome.

10. Beſides Amphibalus, ſuffered Aaron and Julius, two ſubſtantiall Citizens of Caer-leon; and then Socrates, and Stephanus, forgotten by our Britiſh Writers, but remembred by forreign Authours; and Augulius, Biſhop of London, then called Auguſta. Beſides theſe, we may eaſily believe many more went the ſame way; for ſuch Commanders in Chief do not fall without Common Souldiers about them. It was Superſtition in the Athenians, to build an Altar to the [b] UNKNOWN GOD; but it would be Piety in us, here to erect a Monument in memorial of theſe Unknown Martyrs, whoſe Names are loſt. The beſt is, God's Kalender is more compleat then man's beſt Martyrologies; and their Names are written in the Book of Life, who on Earth are wholly forgotten.

The imperfect Hiſtory of theſe times.

b Acts 17. 23.

11. One may juſtly wonder, that the firſt four hundred yeares of the Primitive Church in Britain, being ſo much obſervable, ſhould be ſo little obſerved, the Pens of Hiſtorians writing thereof, ſeeming ſtarved for matter in an Age ſo fruitfull of memorable Actions. But this was the main Reaſon thereof, that living in Perſecution, (that Age affording no Chriſtians Idle Spectators, which were not Actors on that Sad Theatre) they were not at leiſure to Doe, for Suffering. And as commonly thoſe can give the leaſt account of a Battel, who were moſt ingaged in it, (their Eyes the while being turned into Armes, their Seeing into Fighting:) So the Primitive Confeſſours were ſo taken up with what they endured, they had no vacation largely to relate their own or others Sufferings. Of ſuch Monuments as were tranſmitted to Poſterity, it is probable moſt were martyred by the Tyranny of the Pagans: nor was it to be expected, that thoſe who were cruel to kill the Authours, would be kind to preſerve their Books.

The Cauſe of the great Silence of the primitive times.

12. Afterwards it pleaſed God to put a Period to his Servants Sufferings, and the Fury of their Enemies. For when Diocletian and Maximian had layed down the Enſigns of Command, Conſtantius [c] Chlorus was choſen Emperour in theſe VVeſtern Provinces of France, Spain, and Britain; whoſe Carriage towards Chriſtians Euſebius thus deſcribeth: Τὸν ὑπ' αὐτὸν θεοσεβοῦς ἀβλαβεῖς φυλάξαι, that he preſerved ſuch Religious people as were under his Command, without any Hurt or Harm. So that under him the Church in theſe Parts had a Breathing-time from Perſecution. But I am affraid that that Learned [d] Pen goes a little too farre, who makes him Founder of a Biſhopriek at York, and ſtileth him an Emperour ſurpaſſing in all Vertue, and Chriſtian Piety: ſeeing the later will hardly be proved, that Conſtantius was a through-paced Chriſtian; except by our Saviours Argument, [e] He that is not againſt us is on our part. And Conſtantius did this Good to Chriſtianity, that he did it no Harm: and not only ſo, a Privative Benefactor to Piety, but poſitive thus far, that he permitted and preſerved thoſe, who would rebuild the decayed Chriſtian Churches. But the greateſt Benefaction which he beſtowed on Chriſtians was, that he was Father to Conſtantine. Thus as Phyſitians count all Sudden and Violent Alterations in mens Bodies dangerous, eſpecially when changing from Extremes to Extremes: So God in like manner adjudged it unſafe for his Servants preſently to be poſted out of Perſecution into Proſperity; and therefore he prepared them by Degrees, that they might be better able to manage their future Happineſſe, by ſending this Conſtantius, a Prince of a middle diſpoſition betwixt Pagan and Chriſtian, to rule ſome few yeares over them.

Now because this Assertion, that Constantine was a Britan by Birth, meets with Opposition, we will take some pains in clearing the Truth thereof.

14. Let none say, the Kernel will not be worth the Cracking, and so that Constantine were born, it matters not where he was born. For we may observe Gods Spirit to be very punctual, in registring the Birth-places of Famous men; [b] The Lord shall count, when he writeth up the People, that this man was born there. And as [c] David cursed Mount Gilboa, where Godly Ionathan got his Death: so by the same proportion, (though inverted) it follows, those Places are blest and happy, where Saints take their first good Handsel of Breath in this World. Besides, Constantine was not onely one of a Thousand, but of Myriads, yea of Millions; who first turned the Tide in the whole world, and not only quenched the Fire, but even over-turned the Furnace of Persecution, and enfranchised Christianity through the Roman Empire: and therefore no wonder if Britain be ambitious in having, and zealous in holding such a Worthy to be born in her.

Worth the Scrutiny to cleare Constantine a Britan by Birth.

15. An unanswerable Evidence to prove the point in Controversy, that Constantine the Great was a Britan, is fetch't from the [d] Panegyrist, (otherwise called Eumenius Rhetor) in his Oration made to Constantine himself; but making therein an Apostrophe to Britain; O fortunata, & nunc omnibus beatior terris Britannia, quæ Constantinum Cæsarem prima vidisti! O happy Britain, and blessed above all other Lands, which didst first behold Constantine Cæsar! Twist this Testimony with another Thread, spun of the same [e] Hand; Liberavit pater Constantius Britannias Servitute, tu etiam nobiles, illic oriendo, fecisti: Your Father Constantius did free the British Provinces from Slavery, and you have ennobled them, by taking thence your Originall. The same is affirmed by the Writer of the Life of S^t. Hellen, Mother to Constantine, written about the year of our Lord 940 in the English-Saxon Tongue: as also by VVilliam of Malmesbury, Henry Huntingdon, Iohn of Salisbury, and all other English Writers. And least any should object, that these writing the History of their own Country, are too light-fingered to catch any thing (right or wrong) sounding to the Honour thereof; many most learned forreign Historians, Pomponius Lætus, Polydor Virgil, Beatus Rhenanus, Franciscus Balduinus, Onuphrius Panvinius, Cæsar Baronius, Anthony Possevine, and others, concurre with them, acknowledging Hellen, Constantine's Mother, a Britan, and him born in Britain.

16. But whilest the aforesaid Authors in Prose, softly rock the Infancy of (yet little) Constantine the Great in Britain, and whilest others in Verse, (especially [f] Ioseph of EXETER, and [g] Alexander Neckam) sweetly sing Lullabies unto him; some Learned men are so rough and uncivil, as to over-turn his Cradle; yea, wholly deprive Britain of the Honour of his Nativity: Whose Arguments follow, with out Answers unto them.

Answers to the objections of the contrary Party.

1. Object. The Panegyrist speaking how Britain first saw Constantine Cæsar, [h] refers not to his ordinary Life, but Imperial Lustre. Britain beheld him not first a Child, but first saw him Cæsar; not fetching thence thence his natural being, but honourable Birth, first saluted Cæsar in Britain. Anno Dom. 307

Ans. Even [a] Lipsius (Britain's greatest Enemy in this point) confesseth, that though Constantine was first elected Emperour in Britain, yet he was first pronounced Cæsar in France, in the life and health of his Father; (Cæsar was a Title given to the Heir-apparent to the Empire:) and therefore the words in the Panegyrist, in their native Construction, relate to his natural Birth.

a Not. in Admiranda, lib. 4. cap. 12.

2. Object. Constantine Porphyrogenetes the Grecian Emperour, about 700 yeares since, in his Book of Government which he wrote to his Son, confesseth Constantine the Great to have been a FRANK by his Birth, whence learned Meursius collecteth him a French-man by his extraction.

Ans. It is notoriously known to all Learned men, that the Greeks in that middle-Age, (as the Turks at this very day) called all VVestern Europæans, FRANKS. Wherefore as he that calleth such a Fruit of the Earth Grain (a general name) denyeth not but it may be VVheat, a proper kind thereof; so the terming Constantine a Frank, doth not exclude him from being a Britan, yea strongly implieth the same, seeing no VVestern Country in Europe ever pretended unto his Birth.

3. Object. Bede, a grave and faithfull Authour, makes no mention of Constantine born in Britain, who (as [b] Lipsius marketh) would not have omitted a matter so much to the honour of his own Nation.

b In his Epistle to Mr. Camden. Non Beda ille antiquus & fidus? an gloriæ gentis suæ non favet?

Ans. By the leave of Lipsius, Constantine and Bede, though of the same Country, were of severall Nations. Bede being a Saxon, was little zealous to advance the British Honour: The History of which Church he rather toucheth then handleth; using it onely as a Porch, to passe through it to the Saxon History. And Saxons in general had little Skill to seek, and lesse Will to find out any Worthy thing in British Antiquities, because of the known Antipathy betwixt them.

4. Object. [c] Procopius maketh Drepanum, a haven in Bithynia (so called because there the Sea runnes crooked in forme of a Sicle) to be the place where Constantine had his τροφία, or first Nursing, very near to his Birth; & Nicephorus Gregoras makes him born in the same Country.

c In lib. 5. de ædificiis Iustiniani.

Ans. The former speaks not positively, but saith [φασι,] men say so, reporting a Popular Errour. The latter is a late VVriter, living under Andronicus junior Anno 1340, & therefore not to be believed before others more ancient.

5. Object. But Iulius Firmicus, contemporary with Constantine himself, an Authour above Exception, maketh this Constantine to be born at Naisus, (in printed Books Tharsus) a City of Dacia.

Ans. An excellent [d] Critick hath proved the Printed Copies of Firmicus to be corrupted, and justifieth it out of approved Manuscripts, that not Constantine the Great the Father, but Constantine the younger his Sonne was intended by Firmicus born in that Place.

d Camden in his letter to Lipsius, printed in Usher de Prim. Eccl. Brit. p. 188.

Thus we hope we have cleared the Point with ingenuous Readers, in such measure as is consistent with the Brevity of our History. So that of this Constantine (a kind of outward Saviour in the World, to deliver People from Persecution) we may say, with some allusion to the words of the [e] Prophet (but with a humble Reservation of the infinite Distance betwixt the Persons) AND THOU BRITAIN ART NOT THE MEANEST AMONGST THE KINGDOMS OF EUROPE, FOR OUT OF THEE DID COME A GOVERNOUR, WHICH DID RULE THE ISRAEL OF GOD, GI-

17. Now see what a Pinch [a] Verstegan (whose teeth are sharpned by the difference of Religion) gives Mr. Fox: What is it other then an Absurdity, for an English Authour to begin his Epistle (to an huge [b] Volume) with Constantine the great and mighty Emperour, the Sonne of Hellen, an ENGLISH woman, &c. Whereas (saith he) in truth St. Hellen, the Mother of Constantine, was no English, but a British Woman. And yet Fox his words are capable of a candid Construction, if by English Woman we understand (by a favourable Prolepsis,) one born in that Part of Britain, which since hath been inhabited by the English. Sure in the same Dialect St. Alban hath often been called the first Martyr of the English, by many Writers of good esteem. Yea the Breviary of [c] Sarum, allowed and confirmed no doubt by the Infallible Church of Rome, greets St. Alban with this Salute;

Ave, Proto-martyr Anglorum, Miles Regis Angelorum, O Albane, flos Martyrum.

Sure Hellen was as properly an English Woman, as Alban an English Man, being both British in the Rigid Letter of History; and yet may be interpreted English in the Equity thereof. Thus it is vain for any to write Books, if their words be not taken in a courteous Latitude; and if the Reader meets not his Authour with a Pardon of course for venial Mistakes, especially when his Pen slides in so slippery a Passage.

18. And now having asserted Constantine a Britan, we are ingaged afresh in a new Controversy, betwixt three Cities, with equall Zeal and Probability, challenging Constantine to be theirs by Birth; [d] London, [e] York, and [f] Colchester. We dare define nothing; not so much out of fear to displease (though he that shall gain one of these Cities his Friend, shall make the other two his Foes by his Verdict:) but chiefly because little Certainty can be pronounced in a matter so long since, and little evident. Let me refresh my self and the Reader, with relating and applying a pleasant Story. Once at the Burial of St. Teliau second Bishop of Landaffe, three Places did strive to have the Interring of his Body; Pen-allum, where his Ancestours were buried, Lanfolio-vaur, where he died, and Landaffe, his Episcopall See. Now after Prayer to God to appease this Contention, in the place where they had left him, there appeared suddenly three [g] Hearses, with three Bodies so like, as no man could discern the right: and so every one taking one, they were all well pleased. If by the like Miracle, as there three Corpses of Teliau encoffined, so here three Child-Constantines encradled might be represented, the Controversie betwixt these three Cityes were easily arbitrated, and all Parties fully satisfied. But seriously to the matter. That which gave Occasion to the Varieties of their Claims to Constantine's Birth, may probably be this, that he was Born in one place, Nursed in another, and perchance, being young, Bred in a third. Thus we see our Saviour, though born in Bethlehem, yet was accounted a Nazarite, of the City of Nazareth, where he was brought up: and this general Errour took so deep impression in the People, it could not be removed out of the Minds and Mouths of the Vulgar.

312 19. Constantine being now peaceably setled in the Imperial Throne, there followed a sudden and general Alteration in the World; Persecutors turning Patrons of Religion. O the Efficacy of a Godly Emperours Example, which did draw many to a conscientious love of Christianity, and did drive more to a civil conformity thereunto! The Gospel, formerly a Forester, now became a Citizen; and leaving the Woods, wherein it wandered, Hils and Holes, where it hid it self before, dwelt quietly in Populous Places. The stumps of ruined Churches lately destroyed by Diocletian, grew up into beautifull Buildings; Oratories were furnished with pious Ministers, and they provided of plentifull Maintenance, through the Liberality of Constantine. Peace and prosperity restored to the Church by Constantine.

what one relates, that about this time, when the Church began to be inriched with Meanes, there came a voice from Heaven (I dare boldly say, he that first wrote it never heard it, being a modern [a] Authour) saying, Now is Poison poured down into the Church: yet is there no danger of Death thereby, seeing lately so strong an Antidote hath been given against it. Nor do we meet with any particular Bounty, conferred by Constantine, or Hellen his Mother, on Britain, their native Country, otherwise then as it shared now in the general Happinesse of all Christendom. The Reason might be this; That her Devotion most moved Eastward towards Hierusalem, and he was principally employed farre off at Constantinople, whither he had removed the Seat of the Empire, for the more Conveniency in the middest of his Dominions. An Empire herein unhappy, that as it was too vast for one to manage it intirely, so it was too little for two to govern it jointly, as in after-Ages did appear. Anno Dom. 312

20. And now just ten years after the Death of S^t. Alban, a Stately Church was erected there and dedicated to his Memory; As also the History of Winchester reporteth, that then their Church first founded by King Lucius, and since destroyed, was built anew, and Monks (as they say) placed in it. But the most avouchable Evidence of Christianity flourishing in this Island in this Age, is produced from the

In this last Council it is remarkable, that whereas the Emperour ordered, that Provisions (and those very plentifull) of Diet should be bestowed on the Bishops there assembled, yet those of Aquitain, France, and [e] Britain preferred rather to live on their Proper Cost, then to be a Burden to the Publick Treasury. Onely three British Bishops, necessitated for want of Maintenance, received the Emperours Allowance: the Refusal of the former (having enough of their own) being an Act full of Praise, as the laters accepting a Salary to relieve their Want, a deed free from Censure. Collect we hence, 1. that there were many British Bishops in this Council, though their Names and Number are not particularly recorded. 2. That the generality of British Bishops had in this Age Plentifull Maintenance, who could subsist of themselves so farre off in a forrain Country: whereas lately in the Council of Trent, many Italian Bishops, though in a manner still at home, could not live without Publick Contribution. But there was good reason why the British were loath to accept the Emperours Allowance, (though otherwise it had been neither Manners nor Discretion for Prelats to refuse a Princes Profer,) because as [f] Daniel and the Children of the Capti-

Captivity preferred their Pulse before the Fare of King Nebuchadnezzar, for feare they should be defiled with his (though Princely, yet) Pagan Diet; so these 359 Bishops did justly suspect, that Constantius the Emperour being an Arrian, had a Design to bribe their Iudgements by their Palats, and by his Bounty to buy their Suffrages to favour his Opinions. In very deed this [a] Synod is justly taxed, not that it did bend, but was bowed to Arrianisme, and being over-born by the Emperour, did countenance his Poisonous Positions.

360 21. Hitherto the Church in Britain continued Sound and Orthodox, in no degree tainted with Arrianisme; which gave the Occasion to S^t. Hilary in his [b] Epistle to his Brethren, and fellow-Bishops of Germany and Britain, &c. though he himself was in Phrygia in Banishment, to solace his Soul with the consideration of the Purity and Soundnesse of Religion in their Countryes. But now (alas!) the Gangrene of that Heresy began to spread it self into this Island. So that what the [c] Iewes of Thessalonica said unjustly of S^t. Paul and his Followers, the Britans might too truly affirm of Arrius and his Adherents, Those that have turned the World upside-down are come hither also. Hear how sadly Gildas complaineth; Mansit namque haec Christi Capitis membrorum consonantia suavis, donec Arriana Perfidia atrox, ceu Anguis transmarina nobis evomens Venena, Fratres in unum habitantes exitiabiliter faceret sejungi, &c. So that the words of Athanasius, totus mundus Arrianizat, were true also of this peculiar or divided World of Britain. Naturalists dispute how Wolves had their first being in Britain; it being improbable that Merchants would bring any such noxious Vermin over in their Ships, and impossible that of themselves they should swim over the Sea (which hath prevailed so farre with some, as to conceive this, now an Island, originally annexed to the Continent:) but here the Quare may be propounded, how these Hereticks (mystical Wolves not [d] sparing the Flock) first entered into this Island. And indeed we meet neither with their Names, nor manner of Transportation hither; but only with the cursed Fruit of their Labours. And it is observable, that immediately after that this Kingdome was infected with Arrianisme, the Pagan [e] Picts and Scots out of the North made a general and desperate Invasion of it. It being just with God, when his Vine-yard beginneth to bring forth Wild-Grapes, then to let loose the Wild Boar, to take his full and free repast upon it.

379 22. In this wofull Condition, vain were the Complaints of the Oppressed Britans for Assistance, unto Gratian and Valentinian the Roman Emperours, who otherwayes employed, neglected to send them Succour. This gave occasion to Maximus, a [f] Spaniard by Birth, (though accounted born in this Island by our home-bred [g] Authors) to be chosen Emperour of the West of Europe, by a predominant Faction in his Army; who for a time valiantly resisted the Scots and Picts, which cruelly invaded and infested the South of Britain. For these Nations were invincible, whilest like two Armes of the same Body they assisted each other: But when the Picts (the Right Arme, being most strong and active) suffered themselves to be quietly bound up by the Peace concluded, the Scots, as their own [h] Authors confesse, were quickly conquered and dispersed. But Maximus, whose main Design was not to defend Britain from Enemies, but confirm himself in the Empire, sailed over with the Flower of the British Nation into France, where having conquered the Natives in Armorica, he bestowed the whole Country upon his Souldiers, from them named at this day Little Britain.

383 23. But Ireland will no wayes allow that Name unto it, pleading it self to be anciently called the Lesser Britain, in Authentick [i] Authors: and therefore this French Britain must be contented to beare that Name, with the Difference of the third Brother; except any will more properly say, that the French Britain is the Daughter of our Britain, which Infant when she asks her Mother Blessing, doth not jabber so strangely, but that she is perfectly understood by her Parent. Although one will hardly believe what is generally reported, namely that these French Britans were so ambitious to preserve their native Language, that marrying French Women, they cut out their Wives [a]Tongues, for feare they should infect their Childrens Speech, with a Mixture of French Words. Here the Britans lived, and though they had pawned their former Wives and Children at home, they had neither the Honesty nor Affection to return thither to redeem the Pledges left behind them. Strange, that they should so soon forget their Native Soil! But as the Load-stone, when it is rubb'd over with the Juice of Onions, forgetteth it's Property to draw Iron any longer; so though we allow an attractive Vertue in ones own Country, yet it looseth that alluring Quality, when the said place of ones Birth is steeped in a Sad & Sorrowful Condition, as the State of Britain stood at this present. 24. But not long after, Maximus marching towards Italy, was overcome and killed at Aquilegia. A Prince not unworthy of his Great Name, had he been lifted up to the Throne by a regular Election, and not tossed up to the same in a tumultuous manner. This makes S^t. [b]Ambrose, Gildas, and other Authors violently to inveigh against his Memory, notwithstanding his many most [c]honourable Archievements. This Difference we may observe betwixt Bastards and Usurpers: the former, if proving eminent, are much bemoaned, because merely Passive in the Blemish of their Birth; whilest Usurpers, though behaving themselves never so gallantly, never gain general good will, because actually evil in their Original; as it fared with Maximus, who by good Using, could never make Reparation for his bad Getting of the Empire. Surely Britain had cause to curse him, for draining it of her Men and Munition, so leaving it a Trunk of a Commonwealth, without Head or Hands, Wisedome or Valour, effectually to advise or execute any thing in it's own Defence; all whose Strength consisted in Multitudes of People, where Number was not so great a Benefit, as Disorder was a Burden: which encouraged the Picts, (the Truce expired) to harrasse all the Land with Fire and Sword. The larger Prosecution whereof we leave to the Chronicles of the State, onely touching it here by way of Excuse, for the Briefnesse and Barrennesse of our Ecclesiastical History; the Sadnesse of the Commonwealth being a just Plea for the Silence of the Church. 388

25. We conclude this Century, when we have told the Reader, that about this time the [d]Fathers tell us, how Pilgrimages of the Britans began to be frequent as farre as Ierusalem, there not onely to Visit Christs Sepulchre, but also to behold Simon Stilita a pious man, and Melania a devout Woman, both residing in Syria, and at this time eminent for Sanctity. Perchance Discontentment mingled with Devotion moved the Britans to so long a Journey, conceiving themselves, because of their present Troubles at home, more safe any where else then in their own Country. As for those Britans, who in this Age were zealous Asserters of the Purity of Religion against the Poison of Arrianisme, amongst them we find S^t. Keby a principal Champion, Son to Salomon Duke of Cornwall, Scholar to S^t. Hilary Bishop of Poictiers in France, with whom he lived 50 yeares, and by whom being made Bishop, he returned first to S^t. Davids, afterwards into Ireland, and at last fixed himself in the Isle of Anglesey. So pious a man, that he might seem to have communicated Sanctity to the Place, being a Promontory into the Sea called from him Holy-head, (but in Welsh Cuer-guiby:) as in the same Island, the memory of his Master is preserved in Hilary point: where both shall be remembred, as long as there be either Waves to assault the Shore, or Rocks to resist them. 390

THE FIFTH CENTURY.

To Thomas Bide of London Esquire.

AMongst your many good Qualities, I have particularly observed your judicious Delight in the Mathematicks. Seeing therefore this Century hath so much of the Surveyor therein, being employed in the exact Dividing of the English Shires betwixt the seven Saxon Kingdomes, the Proportions herein are by me submitted to your Censure and Approbation.

401 1. NOw the Arrian Heresy, by Gods Providence and good mens Diligence, was in some measure suppressed, when the unwearied Malice of Satan (who never leaveth off, though often changeth his wayes, to seduce Souls) brought in a worse (because more plausible) Heresy of Pelagianisme. For every man is born a Pelagian, naturally proud of his Power, and needeth little Art to teach him to think well of himself. This Pelagius was a Britan by Birth, (as we take no delight to confesse it, so we tell no Lye, to deny it;) as some say called [a] Morgan, that is in Welsh, near the Sea, (and well had it been for the Christian world, if he had been nearer the Sea, and served therein as the Ægyptians served the Hebrew Males:) being to the same sense called in Latine Pelagius. Let no Foreiner insult on the infelicity of our Land in bearing this Monster: But consider, first, if his excellent natural Parts, and eminent acquired Learning might be separated from his dangerous Doctrine, no Nation need be ashamed to acknowledge him. Secondly, Britain did but breed Pelagius, Pelagius himself bred his Heresy, and in forein Parts where he travelled; France, Syria, Ægypt, Rome it self, if not first invented, much improved his pestilent Opinions. Lastly, as our Island is to be pitied for breeding the Person, so she is to be praised for opposing the Errours of Pelagius. Thus the best Father cannot forbid the worst Sonne from being his Child, but may debarre him from being his Heire, affording no favour to countenance his Badnesse.

Pelagius a Britan by birth.

a Jacobus Usserius, de Brit. Ecc. Prim. p. 267. & Dominus Hen. Spelman in Conciliis, pag. 46.

2. It is memorable what [b] one relates, that the same day whereon Pelagius was born in Britain, S. Augustine was also born in Africk: Divine Providence so disposing it, that the Poison and the Antidote should be Twins in a manner, in respect of the same time. To passe from the Birth, to the Breeding of Pelagius; [c] John Cajus, who observes eight solemn Destructions of Cambridge before the Conquest, imputeth that which was the third, in order, to Pelagius; who being a Student there, and having his Doctrine opposed by the Orthodox Divines, cruelly caused the overthrow and desolation of all the University. But we hope it will be accounted no point of Pelagianisme, for us, thus farre to improve our Free-Will, as to refuse to give Credit hereunto, till better Authority be produced. And yet this sounds much to the Commendation of Cambridge, that, like a pure Crystall-Glass, it would preferre rather to flie a pieces, and be dissolved, then to endure Poison put into it; according to the a In his Poem of Cambridge.

More true it is that Pelagius was bred in the Monastery of Banchor (in that part of Flintshire, which, at this day, is a Separatist from the rest) where he lived with two thousand Monks, industrious in their Callings, whose Hands were the only Benefactors for their Bellies, Abbey-labourers, not Abbey-lubbers like their Successours in after-Ages, who living in Lazinesse, abused the Bounty of their Patrons to Riot and Excesse.

The principal Errors of Pelagius.

3. Infinite are the Deductions, and derived Consequences of Pelagius his Errours.

These are the maine.

1. That a man might be saved without Gods Grace, by his own Merits and Free-will.
2. That Infants were born without Original Sinne, and were as innocent as Adam, before his Fall.
3. That they were Baptized not to be freed from Sin, but thereby to be adopted into the Kingdome of God.
4. That Adam died not by reason of his Sinne, but by the condition of Nature; and that he should have died albeit he had not sinned.

Here to recount the learned Works of Fathers written, their pious Sermons preach't, passionate Epistles sent, private Conferences entertained, publick Disputations held, Provincial Synods summoned, General Councils called, wholesome Canons made to confute and condemn these Opinions, under the name of Pelagius, or his Scholar Celestius, would amount to a Volume fitter for a Porters back to beare, then a Scholars Braine to peruse. I decline the Employment, both as over-painfull, and nothing proper to our Idlenesse in hand, (fearing to cut my Fingers, if I put my Sickle into other mens Corn;) these things being transacted beyond the Seas, and not belonging to the British History. The rather, because it cannot be proved that Pelagius in person ever dispersed his Poison in this Island, but ranging abroad, (perchance because this False Prophet counted himself without honour in his own Country) had his Emissaries here, and principally [b] Agricola, the Sonne of Severian a Bishop.

b Beda lib. 1. cap. 17.

4. It is incredible, how speedily and generally the Infection spread by his preaching, advantaged, no doubt, by the Ignorance and Lazinesse of the British Bishops, in those dayes, none of the deepest Divines, or most learned Clerks, as having little care, and lesse comfort to study, living in a distracted State: and those that feel practical Discords, will have little joy to busy themselves with controversial Divinity. However, herein their Discretion is to be commended, that finding their own Forces too feeble to encounter so great a Foe, they craved the Assistance of Foreiners out of France, and sent for Germane, Bishop of Auxerre, and Lupus, Bishop of Troyes: not being of their envious and proud Disposition, who had rather suffer a Good Cause to fall, then to borrow Supporters to hold it up, lest thereby they disgrace themselves, confessing their own Insufficiency, and preferring the Abilitie of others. The two Bishops chearfully embraced the Employment, and undertok the Journey, no whit discouraged with the length of the Way, danger of the Sea, and badnesse of the Winter, seeing all Weather is fair to a willing mind, and Opportunity to doe good is the greatest Preferment which a humble heart doth desire. This Lupus was Brother to Vincentius [c] Lirinensis, [d] Husband to Pimeniola, the Sister of Hilary, Arch-Bishop of Arles; one of such Learning and Sanctity, that a grave Author of those times stileth him a Father of [e] Fathers, and Bishop of Bishops; yea another James of that Age. And yet in this Employment he was but a Second to GERMANE the Principal; and both of them, like PAUL and BARNABAS, jointly advanced the Designe. 420

5. Coming into Britain, with their constant Labours they confirmed the Orthodox, and reclaimed the Erroneous, preaching openly in Fields and [a] High-wayes. As the Kings Presence makes a Court, so their's did a Church, of any Place; their Congregation being bounded with no other Walles, then the Preacher's voice, and extending as farre as he could intelligibly be heard. As for their formall Disputation with the Pelagian Doctors, take it from the Pen of Bede, and Mouth of Stapleton translating him.

6. The Authours and head Professours of hereticall Errour, lay lurking all this while, and like the wicked Sprites, much spighted to see the People daily to fall from them. At length after long advisement used, they taketh upon them to try the matter by open Disputation; which being agreed upon, they come forth richly appointed, gorgiously apparaled, accompanied with a number of flattering favours, having [b] leisure to commit their Cause to open disputing, then to seem to the people, whom they had subverted, to have nothing to say in the defence thereof. Thether resorted a great Multitude of people, with their Wives and Children. The People was present both to see, and judge the matter: the Parties there were farre unleke of Condition. In the one side was the Faith, on the other was Presumption; on the one side Meeknesse, on the other Pride; on the one side Pelagius, on the other Christ. First of all the blessed Priest Germanus and Lupus gave their Adversaries leave to speak, which vainly occupied both the time and eares of the People with naked words. But after the Reverend Bishops poored out their flowing words, confirmed with Scriptures out of the Gospels and Apostles, they joyned with their own words, the words of God, and after they had said their own mind, they read other men's minds upon the same. Thus the Vanite of Heretieks is convicted, and Falshed is confuted, so that at every Objection they were forced in effect to confesse their Errour, not being able to Answere them. The People had much to do to keep their hands from them, yet shewed their Judgement by their Clamours.

Their disputation with the Pelagian Doctors.

[b] Not presuming to alter any of Stapleton's words, take it with all the Printers faults, done probably by an out-landish Presse.

7. A Conference every way admirable. First, In the Opponents, who came forth gallantly, as ante-dating the Conquest, and bringing the Spoils of their Victory with them. But gay Cloaths are no Armour for a Combate. Secondly, In the Defendents of the Truth, appealing to no unwritten Traditions, but to the Scriptures of the Gospels and Apostles: because the point of Grace controverted, appeared most plainly in the New Testament. Thirdly, In the Auditors, or, as they are called, the Iudges, Men, Women, and Children. Wonder not at this Feminine Auditory, seeing they were as capable of the Antidote as of the Poison: and no doubt the Pelagians had formerly (as other Hereticks) crept into houses to seduce silly [c] Women: and therefore now the Plaister must be as broad as the Sore. As for Children, we know who it was that said, [d] Suffer little Children to come unto me, and forbid them not, &c. But here, though called Children in Relation to their Parents, they might be in good Age and capacity of Understanding, or if they were little ones indeed, flocking out of fashion in a generall Concourse, to see these men speak Divine Mysteries, they could not hereafter, when grown old, date their Remembrance from a more remarkable Epoche. See we here that in these times, the Laity were so well acquainted with Gods Word, that they could competently judge, what was or was not spoken in Proportion thereunto. Lastly and chiefly, In the Successe of this Conference. For though generally such publick Disputations do make more Noise then take Effect, (because the obstinate maintainers of Errour come with their Tongues tipt with Clamorousnesse, as their Proselyte Auditours do with Eares stopt with Prejudice,) yet this meeting, by Gods Blessing, was marvellously powerfull to establish and convert the People. But here a main Difficulty is by Authours left wholy untouch't, namely in what Language this Conference was enter-entertained, and managed, that Germanus and Lupus, two French Bishops, and Foreiners, could both speak with Fluentnesse, and be understood with Facility. Perchance the ancient Gaules in France, whence these Bishops came, spake still (as they did anciently) one and the self-same Tongue with the Britans; differing rather in Dialect then Language: or, which is more probable, both France and Britain, remaining as yet Roman Provinces, spake a course, vulgar Latine, though invaded with a Mixture of many Base words, as Britain especially, now or near this time, was infested with forein Barbarous Nations. S. Albans the Place of the Conference.

8. This Conference was held at S^t. Albans, even where at this day a small Chappell is extant, to the honour of S^t. Germane: though [a] Hector Boethius assignes London the Place; adding moreover, that such obstinate Pelagians as would not be reclaimed, were, for their Contumacy, burnt by the Kings Officers. But it will be hard to find any Spark of Fire in Britain, or elsewhere, employed on Hereticks in this Age. We may observe that the aforesaid Hector Boethius, and Polydor Virgil (writing the Chronicles, the one of Scotland, the other of England, at the same time,) as they beare the Poeticall Names of two Sons of Priamus, so they take to themselves much liberty of Fancy and Fiction in their severall Histories.

Germanus marcheth against the Pagan Picts and Saxons.

9. Not long after, the Aid of Germanus and Lupus was implored, and employed an hundred miles off in another service, against the Pagan Picts and Saxons. Here we meet with the first mention of Saxons, being some straggling Voluntiers of that Nation, coming over to pillage here of their own accord, not many yeares before they were solemnly invited hither under Horsus and Hengistus, their Generalls. Germanus, after the Lent well spent, in the Fasting of their Bodies, and Feasting of their Souls (for the people had [b] daily Sermons,) and the solemnity of Easter Festivall duly celebrated, wherein he Christened Multitudes of Pagan Converts, in the River Alen, marched with an Army of them, whilst their Baptismall water was scarce wip'd from their Bodies, against the aforesaid Enemies, whom he found in the North-East of Wales. Here the Pious Bishop turning Politick Enginier, chose a place of Advantage, being a hollow Dale, surrounded with Hils, near the Village, called at this day by the English Pole, by the British Guincrue, in Flintshire, where the Field at this day retains the name of [c] Maes Garmon, or Germans Field; the more remarkable, because it hath escaped (as few of this Note and Nature) the exact Observation of Master Camden.

A Victory gotten not by shooting, but shouting

10. Here Germanus placed his men in Ambush, with Instructions, that at a Signall given, they should all shout Hallelujah three times with all their might; which was done accordingly. The Pagans were surprized with the Suddennesse and Loudnesse of such a Sound, much multiplied by the advantage of the Echo, whereby their Fear brought in a false List of their Enemies Number; and rather trusting their Eares then their Eyes, they reckoned their Foes by the increase of the Noise rebounded unto them; and then allowing two Hands for every Mouth, how vast was their Army! But besides the Concavity of the Vallies improving the Sound, God sent a Hollowesse into the Hearts of the Pagans: so that their Apprehensions added to their Eares, and Cowardice often resounded the same Shout in their Breasts, till beaten with the Reverberation thereof, without striking a Stroak, they confusedly ran away; and many were drowned for speed, in the River Alen, lately the Christians Font, now the Pagans Grave. Thus a bloudlesse Victory was gotten, without Sword drawn, consisting of no Fight, but a Fright and a Flight; and that Hallelujah, the Song of the [d] Saints after Conquest atchieved, was here the Fore-runner, and Procurer of Victory. So good a Grace, it is to be said both before and after a Battel. Gregory the Great (a grave Authour) in his [e] Comment upon Iob, makes mention of this

Victory,

Victory, occasioned on those words, Can any understand the noise of his Tabernacle?

430 11. Germanus now twice a Conquerour, of Pelagians and Pagans, prepares for his Return, after first he had caused the Tombe of S^t. Alban to be opened, and therein deposited the Reliques of many Saints, which he brought over with him, conceiving it fit (as he said) that their Corpses should sleep in the same Grave, whose Souls rested in the same Heaven. In lieu of what he left behind him, (Exchange is no Robbery,) he carried along with him some of S^t. Alban's Dust, wherein Spots of the Martyr's Bloud were as fair and fresh, as if shed but yesterday. But what most concerns S^t. Alban's Monks to stickle in, some report German to have carried the Body of Alban to Rome: whence some hundred yeares after, the Empresse to Otho the second brought it to [a] Colen, where, at this day, they maintain his uncorrupted Body to be enshrined: The Monks of Ely, in Cambridge-shire, pretending to the same; as also do those of Ottonium, or Osell, in Denmark. Thus, as Metius Suffetius the Roman was drawn alive by Horses four wayes: like Violence is offered to the Dead Body of Alban, pluck't to four severall places by importunate Competitours; only with this Difference, that the Former was mangled into Quarters, whereas here each place pretends to have him whole and intire, not abating one Hair of his [b] Beard. Nor know I how to reconcile them, except any of them dare say, though without shew of Probability, that as the River in Paradise went out of Eden, from whence it was parted and became into four [c] Heads; Alban in like manner, when dead, had the same Quality, of one to be multiplied into four Bodies.

12. Now after Germanus and Lupus were returned home into their native Country, Pelagianisme began to sprout again in Britain. An Accident not so strange to him that considers, how quickly an Errour much of kin thereunto grew up amongst the Galathians, presently on [d] Paul's departure. I marvel (said he) that you are so soon removed from him, that called you unto the Grace of Christ, unto another Gospell. S^t. Paul's marvelling may make us marvel the lesse, seeing that Wonder which hath a Precedent is not so great a Wonder. Here we may sadly behold the great Proneness of men to go astray, whose hearts by nature cold in Goodness, will burn no longer then they are blown. To suppresse this Heresie, Germanus is sollicited to make a second Voiage into Britain: which he did accordingly, accompanied with his Partner Severus, because Lupus his former Companion was otherwise employed. Hereupon a prime [e] Poet of his Age, makes this Apostrophe unto S^t. German:

449 Tuque O, cui toto discretos orbe Britannos
Bis penetrare datum, bis intima cernere magni
Monstra maris: ——————

O thou that twice pierc'd Britain, cut asunder
From the whole World, twice did'st survey the wonder
Of monstrous Seas: ——————

The same [f] Successe still followed, and this Conquerour, who formerly had broken and scattered the main Body of the Pelagians, now routed the Remnant, which began to ralley and make head again.

13. He also called a [g] Synod, wherein those damnable Doctrines were condemned: as also the [h] Incestuous Marriage of VORTIGER King of Britain: (a wicked Prince, in whom all the Dregs of his vicious Auncestors were settled,) who had took his own Daughter to Wife. And yet of this unlawfull Copulation, a pious Son, S^t. Faustus, was born: to shew that no Crosse-barre of Bastardy, though doubled with Incest, can bolt Grace out of that Heart, wherein God will have it to enter. Germanus having settled Britain in good Order, went back to his own Country, where presently upon his

In vain the Britans petition to the Roman Emperour for help against the Picts.

14. Mean time the South of this Island was in a wofull condition, caused by the daily Incursions of the Picts. As for the Picts Wall built to restrain them, it being a better Limit then Fortification, served rather to define then defend the Roman Empire: and useless is the strongest Wall of Stone, when it hath Stocks only upon it: such was the Sottish Lazinesse of the Britans to man it; a Nation at this time given over to all manner of Sin, insomuch as [a] Gildas their Country-man calls them Ætatis Atramentum, the Inke of the Age. And though God did daily correct them with Inroads of Pagans, yet like restife Horses, they went the worse for Beating. And now the Land being exhausted of the Flower of her Chivalry, (transported and disposed in Roman Garrisons, as farre as Judæa and [b] Ægypt it self) could not make good her ground against the Picts; and was fain to request first Theodosius the younger, then Valentinian the third Roman Emperour, (whose Homagers the British Kings were untill this time) for their Assistance. They dispatch Petition after Petition, Embassie on Embassie, representing their wofull estate. Now the Barbarians beat them to the Sea, the Sea repelled them to the Barbarians; and thus bandied betwixt Death and Death, they must either be kill'd or drowned. They inforced their Request for Aid, with much Earnestnesse and Importunity; all in vain, seeing Whisperings and Hollowings are like to a Deaf Eare, and no Answer was returned. Had they been as carefull in bemoaning their Sins to God, as clamorous to declare their Sufferings to the Roman Emperour, their Requests in Heaven had been as graciously received, as their Petitions on Earth were carelesly rejected.

True Reasons why the Romans neglected to send Aid to the Britans.

15. What might be the Cause of this Neglect? Had the Imperial Crown so many Flowers, that it might afford to scatter some of them? Was Britain grown inconsiderable, formerly worth the Conquering, now not worth the Keeping? or was it because they conceived the Britans Need not so much as was pretended; and Aid is an Almes ill-bestowed on those Beggars, who are lame of Lazinesse, and will not work for their Living? Or was the Service accounted desperate; and no wise Physician will willingly undertake a Disease which he conceives incurable? The plain truth is, the Roman Empire now grown Ruinous, could not repair it's out-Rooms, and was fain to let them fall down to maintain the rest; and like Fencers, receiving a blow on their Leg to save their Head, exposed the Remote Countries of Spain, France, and Britain, to the Spoil of Pagans, to secure the Eastern Countries, near CONSTANTINOPLE the Seat of the Empire.

The sad successe of the Pagan Saxons, invited by King Vortiger into Britain.

16. Here Vortiger, forsaken of God and man, and left to himself, (Malice could not wish him a worse Adviser) resolves on a desperate Project, to call in the Pagan Saxons out of Germany for his Assistance, under Horsus and Hengistus their Captains. Over they come at first but in three great Ships, (a small Earnest will serve to bind a great Bargain:) first possessing the Island of Thanet in Kent; but following afterwards in such Swarms, that quickly they grew formidable to him that invited them over, of Guests turning Sojourners, then In-mates, and lastly Land-lords, till they had dispossessed the Britans of the best of the Island: the entertaining of mercenary Souldiers, being like the administring of Quick-silver to one in Iliaca Passio, a Receipt not so properly prescribed by the Physitian to the Patient, as by Necessity to the Physitian. If hired Aid do on a sudden the Work they are sent for, and so have a present Passage to be discharg'd, sovereign use may be made of them: otherwise, if long tarrying, they will eat the Entralls, and corrode the Bowells of that State which entertains them, as here it came to passe.

17. For soon after the Saxons erected seven Kingdomes in Britain. And because because their severall Limits conduce much to the clear understanding of the following History, and we for the present are well at Leisure, we will present the Reader with the Description of their severall Principalities. The Partition was made by mutuall Consent, thus farre forth, that every King caught what he could, and kept what he caught; and there being amongst them a Parity of high-spirited Princes, (who more prized an absolute Sovereignty over a little, then a Propriety with Subjection in never so much,) they erected seven severall Kingdomes, in little more then but the third part of this Island: (A thing which will seem no wonder to him, who hath read how the little Land of [a] CANAAN found room at the same time for one and thirty Kings.) But let us reckon them up.

The respective bounds of the Saxon Heptarchie.

a Iosh. 12. 24.

1. The first was the Kingdome of KENT; which began Anno 457. under King Hengist. It contained the County of Kent, as it is at this day bounded, without any notable difference. And though this Kingdome was the least of all, (as consisting but of one intire County, without any other addition) yet was it much befriended in the Situation for Traffick with France and Germany. Besides, it being secured on three Sides with Thames and the Sea, and fenced on the fourth with Woods, this made their Kings (naturally defended at home) more considerable in their Impressions on their Neighbours.
2. Of the SOUTH-SAXONS, comprising Sussex and Surry, (both which, till very lately, were under one Sheriff.) And this Kingdome began Anno 491, under King Ella, and was the weakest of all the seven, affording few Kings, and fewer Actions of moment.
3. Of the EAST-SAXONS, comprehending Essex, Middlesex, and so much of Hartfordshire as is under the Bishop of London's Jurisdiction, whose Diocese is adequate to this Kingdome. A small Ring, if we survey the little Circuit of Ground; but it had a fair Diamond in it, the City of London (though then but a Stripling in Growth) well thriving in Wealth and Greatness. This Kingdome began in Erchenwin about the year 527.
4. Of the EAST-ANGLES, containing Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, with the Isle of Ely, and (as it seems, saith a Reverend [b] Writer) part of Bedfordshire. It began Anno 575, under King Uffa, and lay most exposed to the Cruelty of the Danish Incursions.

b Usher de Brit. Eccl. Primord. p. 394.

5. Of MERCIA: so called, because it lay in the middest of the Island, being the Merches or Limits, on which [c] all the residue of the Kingdomes did bound and border. It began Anno 582. under King Cridda, and contained the whole Counties of Lincoln, Northampton, (with Rutland, then and long since part thereof) Huntingdon, Buckingham, Oxford, Worcester, Warwick, Darby, Nottingham, Leicester, Stafford, and Chester. Besides part of Hereford and Salop (the Remnant whereof was possess'd by the Welsh,) Gloucester, Bedford, and [d] Lincaster. In view it was the greatest of all the seven: but it abated the Puissance thereof, because on the West it affronted the Britans, being deadly Enemies; and bordering on so many Kingdomes, the Mercians had work enough at home to shut their own Doors.

d Idem ibid.

6. Of NORTHUMBERLAND, corrivall with Mercia in Greatnesse, (though farre inferiour in Populousnesse) as to which belonged whatsoever lieth betwixt Humber and Edenborough-Frith. It was subdivided sometimes into two Kingdomes, of Bernicia and Deira. The later consisted of the Remainder of Lancashire, with the intire Counties of York, Durham, Westmorland, and Cumberland. Bernicia contained Northumberland, with the South of Scotland to Edenborough.

borough. But this Division lasted not long, before both were united together. It began Anno 547. under King Ida. Anno Dom. 449

7. Of the WEST-SAXONS; who possessed Huntshire, Berkshire, Wiltshire, Somerset, Dorset, and Devonshire; part of Cornwall, and Glocestershire: yea some assigne a Moiety of Surrey unto them. This Kingdome began Anno 519, under King Cerdicus, and excelled for plenty of Ports, (on the South and Severn Sea) store of Burroughs, stoutnesse of active men, (some impute this to the Naturall cause of their being hatch't under the warm Wings of the South-West Wind,) which being excellent Wrastlers, gave at last a Fall to all the other Saxon Kingdomes. So that as the seven Streams of Nilus loose themselves in the Mid-land Sea, this Heptarchy was at last devoured in the West-Saxons Monarchy.

The reason that there is some difference in Writers in bounding of these severall Kingdomes, is, because England being then the constant Cock-pit of Warre, the Limits of these Kingdomes were in daily motion, sometimes marching forward, sometimes retreating backward, according to variety of Successe. We may see what great difference there is, betwixt the Bounds of the Sea at High-water, and at Low-water Mark: and so the same Kingdome was much disproportioned to it self, when extended with the happy Chance of Warre, and when contracted at a low Ebb of Ill Successe. And here we must not forget that amongst these seven Kings, during the Heptarchie, commonly one was most puissant, over-ruling the rest, who stiled himself [a] King of the English Nation.

a Camden's Brit. pag. 139.

8. But to return to the British Church, and the year of our Lord 449, wherein S^t. Patrick, the Apostle of Ireland, is notoriously reported to have come to Glassenbury; where finding twelve old Monks, (Successours to those who were first founded there by Joseph of Arimathea) he, though unwilling, was chosen their Abbot, and lived with them 39 yeares, observing the Rule of S^t. Mark, and his Egyptian Monks: the Order of Benedictines being as yet unborn in the world. Give we here a List of these 12 Monks; withall forewarning the Reader, that for all their harsh Sound, they are so many Saints, least otherwise he should suspect them by the ill noise of their Names to be worse Creatures.

3. Brenwall	6. Adel-wolred	9. Breden	12. Hin.

Irish S. Patrick said to live and die at Glassenbury.

But know that some of these Names, as the 3. 6. and 9. are pure, plain [b] Saxon words, which renders the rest suspected. So that whosoever it was, that first gave these British Monks such Saxon Names, made more Haste then good Speed, preventing the true Language of that Age.

b First observed by Mr. Camden, and since by the Arch-bishop of Armach. He is made Co-partner in the Church with the Virgin Mary.

9. So great was the Credit of S^t. Patrick at Glassenbury, that after his Death and Buriall there, that Church which formerly was dedicated to the Virgin Mary alone, was in after-Ages jointly consecrated to her and S^t. Patrick. A great Presumption: For if it be true, what is reported, that at the first, by direction of the Angel [c] Gabriel, that Church was solely devoted to the Virgin Mary; surely either the same, or some other Angel of equall Power, ought to have ordered the Admission of S^t. Patrick to the same, to be match'd and impaled with the Blessed Virgin in the Honour thereof. In reference to S^t. Patrick's being at Glassenbury, severall Saxon Kings granted large Charters, with great Profits and Priviledges to this Place.

But be it known to whom it may concern, that the Britiſh are not ſo over-fond of S^t. Patrick, as to raviſh him into their Country againſt his will, and the conſent of Time. Yea, S^t. Patrick miſs'd as much Honour, in not being at Glaſſenbury, as Glaſſenbury hath loſt Credit, if he were never there; ſeeing the Britiſh juſtly ſet as high a Rate on that Place, as the Iriſh do on his Perſon. See but the Glorious Titles (which with ſmall Alteration might ſerve for Ieruſalem it ſelf) given to Glaſſenbury: and ſeeing now the Place is for the moſt part buried in it's own Duſt, let none envy theſe Epithets for the Epitaph thereof.

We are ſorry therefore for S^t. Patrick's ſake, if he was never there. To ſalve all, ſome have found out another Patrick, called Seniour, or Sen Patrick, (a nice difference) equall with the Iriſh Apoſtle in Time, and not much inferiour in Holineſſe, who certainly liv'd at Glaſſenbury. The plain truth is, that as in the [e] Comœdian, when there were two Amphitruo's, and two Soſia's, they made much fallacious Intricacy, and pleaſant Deluſion in the eyes of the Spectatours: So there being in this Age two Patricks (others [f] ſay three) two [g] Merlins, two [h] Gildaſes, and (that the Homonymy may be as well in Place as in Perſons) three [i] Bangors, three [k] Glaſſenburies, (as Haſte or Ignorance in Writers miſtake them;) theſe jumbled together have made a marvelous Confuſion in Writers, to the great prejudice of Hiſtory, where they are not exactly obſerved.

450 21. But leaving S^t. Patrick, let us trie whether we can have better Succeſſe with S^t. Vrſula, Daughter of Dinoth, or Deo-notus Duke of Cornwall, who in this year is ſaid with eleven thouſand Virgins to have ſailed over into Little Britain in France, there to be married to the Britans their Country-men, who refuſed to wed French-women for their Wives: but by foul Weather theſe Virgins were caſt on the French Shore, amongſt Pagans, by whom they were cruelly murdered, for refuſing to forſake their Religion, or betray their Chaſtity. Others tell the Story quite contrary; how the aforeſaid Vrſula with her Virgin-Army, went to Rome, where ſhe converſed with Pope [l] Cyriacus, her Country-man, and with him returning back into Britain, was murdered by the command of Attila King of the Hunnes, at Colen, with all the reſt of the Virgins; and the aforeſaid Pope Cyriacus; whoſe Name is omitted in the Papall Catalogue, becauſe before his Death he ſurrendred his place to Anterus his Succeſſour. In which Relation we much commend the even tenour thereof, conſiſting of ſo level Lies, that no one ſwelling Improbability is above the reſt; but for matter of Time, Place, and Perſons, all paſſages unlikely alike. We dare not defame Britain, as to ſuſpect but that eleven thouſand Chriſtian Virgins, all at once, able to travail, might be found therein: though at this time Paganiſme proſpered in this Land, and Religion was in a low Condition. But what made theſe Chriſtian Amazons with Vrſula their Penthefilea to go (not to ſay to gad) to Rome? Surely they were no [m] Daughters of Sarah, which did abide in her tent, but rather [n] Siſters of Dinah, which would go abroad to ſee foreign Faſhions; and therefore their Hard Uſage is the leſſe to be pitried. Was it modeſt for ſo many Maids to wander by themſelves, without a Maſculine Guard to protect them? did ever ſuch a Wood of weak Ivy grow alone, without any other Trees to ſupport it? But the City of Colen will not abate us one of the eleven thouſand, where their Reliques, and Sepulchrall Inſcriptions are at this day to be ſeen. And we may as ſafely believe that theſe Virgin-Martyrs lie there entomb'd, as that the Bodies of the three Wise men of the East, commonly called the Three Kings of Colen, which came to visit our Infant-Saviour at Bethlehem, are interred in the same City, which the Monks of Colen brag of, and shew to Travellers. Besides all this, there is a Town in Barkshire called [a] Maiden-head, which (as many other Churches in Christendome,) was dedicated in memory of their Virginity: which if it be not an Argument strong enough to convert the Reader to the belief of this Story, we must leave him to his Infidelity; that as Tales of Bugbears are made to fright crying Children, so this Story of Vrsula was contrived to befool Credulous men. Why so little Church-Story in this Age.

22. Nor hath the judicious Reader cause to wonder, that no better account is given of the British Church in this Age, considering the generall Persecution by Pagan Saxons. Religion now a dayes plaid least in sight, hiding it self in Holes; and the Face of the Church was so blubber'd with Teares, that she may seem almost to have wept her Eyes out, having lost her Seers, and principall Pastours. Onely two prime Preachers appear: Vodine the learned and pious Bishop of London; who taking the confidence to reprove Vortiger the British King, for putting away his lawfull Wife, and wedding Rowen, the Heathen daughter of Hengist, was by him most barbarously [b] murdered: The second Gildas Albanius (much ancienter then his name-sake surnamed the Wise) born in Scotland, bred in France, whence returning into the South of Britain, he applied himself to the preaching of Divinity, and reading Liberall Sciences to many Auditours and Scholars at [c] Pepidiane a Promontory in Pembrokeshire. 453

23. It happened on a day, as Gildas was in his Sermon, (Reader, whether smiling or frowning, forgive the Digression) a Nunne big with child came into the Congregation, whereat the Preacher presently was [d] struck dumb, (would not a Maid's Child amaze any man?) and could proceed no further. Afterward he gave this reason of his Silence, because that Virgin bare in her body an Infant of such signall Sanctity, as farre transcended him. Thus as lesser Load-stones are reported to loose their Vertue in the presence of those that are bigger; so Gildas was silenced at the approach of the Welsh S^t. David, (being then but Hanse en Keldar,) though afterward, like Zachary, he recovered his Speech again. Thus fabulous [e] Authors, make this S^t. David a Mock-John Baptist, forceing a fond Parallel betwixt them; where to make the Proportion current, Gildas must be allowed Father to S^t. David. But enough; I like this sent so ill, I will follow it no further. 462

24. Mean time fierce and frequent Fighting betwixt the British and Saxons, about defending and enlarging their Dominions. And although Gildas (and out of him Bede) confesse often alternation of Successe, yet other Saxon Writers mention not the least Overthrow of their own side, but constant Conquering: as if their Generals had alwayes buckled on Victory with their Armour. It is almost incredible, that ingenuous men should be so injurious to the Truth, and their own Credits, by Partiality, were it not that the Factions of Modern Pens invite us to the belief thereof; not describing Battels with a Full Face (presenting both Sides) but with a Half Face, advancing their own, and depressing the Atchievements of the Opposite Party. Most true it is, the British got many Victories, especially under hopefull Prince Vortimer, whose Valour was the best Bank against the Saxon Deluge; untill broken down by untimely Death, the Pagans generally prevailed, much by their Courage, more by their Treachery.

The partiality of Saxon Writers.

25. For they invited the British to a Parley and Banquet on Salesbury Plain; where suddenly drawing out their Seaxes, (concealed under their long Coats,) being crooked Swords, the Emblem of their indirect Proceedings, they made their innocent Guests with their bloud, pay the Shots of their Entertainment. Here Aurelius Ambrosius is reported to have erected that Monument of Stone-Henge to their memory.

26. It is contrived in form of a Crown, consisting of three Circles of stones set up Gate-wise; some called Corse-stones, of [a] 12 Tunne, others called Cronets, of 7 Tuns weight: (those haply for greater, and these for inferiour Officers:) and one Stone at distance seems to stand Sentinel for the rest. It seems equally impossible that they were bred here, or brought hither, seeing (no navigable water near) such voluminous bulks are unmanageable in Cart or Wagon. As for the Tale of Merlin's conjuring them by Magick out of Ireland, and bringing them aloft in the Skies (what in Charles VVain?) 'tis too ridiculous to be confuted. This hath put Learned men on necessity to conceive them artificall Stones, consolidated of Sand. Stand they there in Defiance of Wind & Weather, (which hath discomposed the method of them) which if made of any Pretious matter (a Bait to tempt Avarice) no doubt long since had been indited of Superstition; whereas now they are protected by their own Weight & Worthlesness.

27. Vortiger the British King fled into VVales, to his Castle Genereu, impregnable for Situation, which he mann'd and woman'd, (conveying a multitude of his Whores into it,) and there lived surfeiting in Lust, while his Land lay sweltering in Bloud. Here Aurelius Ambrosius setting fire on his Castle, burnt him and his to Ashes. This gave occasion to the Report so constantly affirmed by many Authours, (and men are prone to believe Prodigious Deaths, of such as led Licentious Lives) that Vortiger's Palace, like another Sodom, was burnt by Fire from Heaven. Indeed in a secondary sense it was true; as all Exemplary Punishments, more visibly proceed from Divine Vengeance. But otherwise, the first Raisers of this Fable, did apparent Wrong to the Attribute of Gods Truth, in pretending to do extraordinary Right unto his Justice.

Vortiger burning in lust, burnt to ashes.

28. This Aurelius Ambrosius is said to be extracted of the Roman Race, who having done this Execution on Vortiger the Tyrant, was a singular Champion of the British against their Enemies. One composed of Valour and Religion, wholly imploying himself in time of Peace, to raise new Churches, repair old, and endow both: unworthy therefore the Libell of an [b] Italian Author, who on no other Evidence, then his own bare Assertion, traduceth this Ambrosius, to have been a favourer of Iudaisme, Arrianisme, Manicheisme, and a Persecuter of the Professours of true Religion. Thus the greatest Vertue is Sanctuary too small to secure any from the pursuit of Slanderous Pens: and thus some humorous Authors, leaving the Road of true Reports, because common, go a Way by themselves of different Relation, so to entitle themselves to more immediate and peculiar Intelligence; as if others, (being onely of Truth's Councell,) had not received such private Instructions as themselves, being Cabinet-Historians.

[b] Gotefrid. Viterbiensis Chro. part. 18.

29. Leave we this Ambrosius bickering with the Saxons, with interchange of Successe, much commended for his Constancy in all Conditions. For sometimes his Valour was the Hammer upon, sometimes his Patience was the Anvil beneath his Enemies; but alwayes he bravely bare up his Spirits: and as the Sun looks biggest on the Earth when he is neerest to set, so he carried it out with the boldest appearance, in the lowest Declination of his Fortune. If we behold the Church in his time, the most visible estate thereof presents it self to us in the Academy, which Dubritius kept, near the River Wye in Monmouthshire. His Father, say [c] some, was unknown; others make him to be son to [d] Pepian a Petty King in this Age: it being observable, that in this and the next Century, all men eminent for Learning and Religion, are either made without known Fathers, or Sons to Kings (no Mean betwixt these Extremes, as by many instances may appear;) so that such as consider the Narrownesse of the Principality, will admire at the Number of British Princes. This Dubritius taught many Scholars for seven yeares together, in Humane & Divine Learning, (being Himself, in his Life, a Book of Piety of the best Edition for his Pupils to peruse:) amongst whom the chiefest, Thelian, Sampson, Vbelin, Merchiguin, Elguored, &c. for the Reader had better believe then read the Names of the rest, remarkable onely for Length, and Hardnesse, without any other Information. Afterward Dubritius tim removed to Warwick, (haply miſtaken for [a] Werwick, a Village ſome two miles from Cardigan) and from thence it ſeemes returned to Moch-Rhos, that is, the Place of a Hog: becauſe he was admoniſhed, in a Viſion in his Sleep, there to build a Chappel or Oratory, where he ſhould find a white [b] Sow lodging with the Hogs. a clean Conceit, and as full of Wit as Devotion. It ſeems the Friar, Father of this Fable, had read as farre as the eighth Book of Virgil's Æneids, where the River Tiber, in a Dream, adviſed Æneas to erect an Altar, and ſacrifice to Juno in the place where he ſhould find the Sow lying with the Pigs; and from this Pagan Hint, was advantaged for a Papiſh Legend.

30. Here we cannot but renew our former Complaint: and it is ſome Mitigation to our Miſery, (as perchance ſome Eaſe to the Reader) if we can but vent our old Grievances in new Expreſſions: how in ſtead of true Hiſtory, devoured by Time, prodigious Tales of impudent brazen-fac'd Monks are obtruded upon us. Thus when the Golden Shields of King Solomon were taken away, [c] Rehoboam ſubſtituted Shields of Braſſe in their room; though not ſo Good, perchance more Gawdy, eſpecially to ignorant eyes viewing them at diſtance, and wanting either the Skill or Opportunity to bring them to the Touch. Amongſt which the Tale of Cungarus the Eremite, otherwiſe called Docwinn (but firſt let the one Man be allowed, before his two Names be admitted:) may challenge a principall place; being reported Son of a Conſtantinopolitan Emperour, and [d] Lucina his Empreſſe. A Name un-owned by any Grecian Hiſtorians. The beſt is, that unconſcionable Liars, though they moſt hurt themſelves, do the leaſt harm others, whoſe Lead Ones are both the Poiſon & the Antidote, ſeeing no Wiſe man will believe them. Small Griet and Gravell may choak a man, but that Stone can never ſtop his Throat, which cannot enter into his Mouth.

31. In very deed, very little at this time was ever reported of Church-matters. For a Drought of Chriſtian Writers (in the Heat of Perſecution) cauſed a Dearth of all Hiſtory. Now it was that Cerdicus firſt King of the Weſt-Saxons, having overcome the Britans at Winchester, kill'd all the Monks belonging to the Church of [e] St. Amphibalus, & turned the ſame into a Temple of Idolatry. Alſo Theon Archbiſhop of London, ſeeing the Pagan Saxons to prevail, left his See, and [f] about this time may be preſumed to have fled into Wales, as I ſay, about this time. For what Liberty is allowed to Prognoſticatours of Weather, to uſe all favourable Correctives and Qualifications [like to be rain, inclined to rain, ſomewhat rainy, &c.] the ſame Latitude we muſt requeſt, in relating actions paſt in point of Chronologie; hic fere temporibus, per hæc tempora, circa, circiter, plus minus, &c. And what we take upon Truſt in this kind, let the Reader be pleaſed to charge, not on the Score of our Ignorance, but on the Uncertainty of that Ages Computation. As for St. Petrock, Son to the King of Cumberland, we remit him to the next Age, becauſe though Budding in this, full Blown in the next Century.

32. This Age is aſſigned by Authors for that Famous Ambroſe Merlin (differing from Sylveſter Merlin the Scot) though it be doubtfull whether ever ſuch a man in rerum natura: it being ſuſpicious, Firſt, Becauſe he is reported born at Caer-merthen, & that City ſo denominated from him. Whereas it is called Maridunum by Ptolemie many yeares before. Thus it is ominous to begin with a Lie.

Secondly, Becauſe it was ſaid his Mother was a Nun, got with Child by a Devil in the form of an Incubus; perchance ſuch a one as Chaucer deſcribes.

It ſeems, that as Veſtall Virgins, when they had ſtollen a Great Belly, uſed to entitle ſome Deity to the getting of their Child, (ſo did the Mother of Romulus and Remus,) whereby they both ſaved themſelves from Shame, & gained Reputation: ſo Nuns in this Age, when with child, unable to perſwade people (as the Poets feign of the Spaniſh Mares) that they were impregnated by the Wind alone, made the World believe that ſome Spirit had conſorted with them. This makes the whole Story of Merlin very doubtfull; and as for all his Miracles & Propheſyes, they ſink with the Subject. For ſure the ſame Hand which made the Puppet, gave it all it's Motions, and ſuited his Perſon with Properties accordingly. May the Reader be pleaſed to take notice of three ancient Britiſh Writers.

1. Aquila Septonius, or the Eagle of Shaftsbury, whether He or She.
2. Perdix Præſagus, or Partridge the propheſier.
3. Merlin Ambroſe.

All three Birds of a Feather, and perchance hatch'd in the ſame Neſt of ignorant Credulity: nor can I meet with a fourth to make up the Meſſe, except it be the Arabian Phœnix. But becauſe it is a Task too great for a Giant, to encounter a received Tradition, let Merlin be left in a Twi-light as we found him. And ſurely no judicious man will cenſure the Mention of Merlin (whoſe Magicall Pranks and Conjurations are ſo frequent in our Stories) to be a Deviation from the Hiſtory of the Church, who hath read both of Simon Magus, and Elymas the Sorcerer in the Acts of the Apoſtles. To Douse Fuller of Hampshire, Esquire.

I Cannot say certainly of you as Naomi did of Boaz, He is near of kin unto us, having no Assurance (though great Probability) of Alliance unto you. However, Sir, if you shall be pleased in Courtesy to account me your Kinsman, I will endeavour that (as it will be an Honour to me) it may be to you no Disgrace. * 2 Ruth 20.

501 1. QUestionlesse we shall not be accounted Trespassers, though onely Ecclesiasticall Businesse be our right Road, to go a little in the By-way of State-matters, because leading the shortest Passage for the present to our Church-story. Most miserable at this time was the British Common-wealth, crouded up into barren Corners, whil'st their Enemies, the Pagan Saxons, possest the East and South; if not the greatest, the best part of the Island. Much ado had Vter Pen-dragon, the British King, with all the sinews of his Care and Courage, to keep his disjoynted Kingdome together: whose onely desire was to prolong the Life, it being above his hopes to procure the Health of that languishing State. And though sometimes the Britans got the better, yet one may say, their Victories were spent before they were gain'd; being so farre behind-hand before, that their Conquest made no Shew, swallowed up in the discharging of old Arrearages. Needs then must Religion now in Britain be in a dolefull condition; For he who expects a flourishing Church in a fading Common-wealth, let him try whether one side of his Face can smile, when the other is pinched.

The most miserable estate of the British Common-wealth.

508 2. Pen-dragon dying, left the British Kingdome to Arthur his Son, so famous in History, that he is counted one of the Nine Worthies: and it is more then comes to the Proportion of Britain, that amongst but Nine in the whole World, Two should prove Natives of this Island, Constantine and Arthur. This later was the British Hector, who could not defend that Troy, which was designed to destruction: and it soundeth much to his Honour, that perceiving his Countrey condemned by Gods Justice to Ruine, he could procure a Reprieve, though not prevail for the Pardon thereof. More unhappy was he after his Death, Hyperbolicall Monks so advancing his Victories above all reach of Belief, that the twelve pitch't Battels of Arthur, wherein he conquered the Pagan Saxons, find no more credit then the twelve Labours of Hercules. Belike the Monks hoped to passe their Lies for current, because countenanced with the mixture of some Truths; whereas the contrary came to passe, and the very Truths which they have written of him are discredited, because found in company with so many Lies. Insomuch that learned Leland is put put to it, to make a Book for the asserting of Arthur. Many are unsetled about him, because Gildas his Country-man (living much about his Age) makes no mention of him: though such may be something satisfied, if considering, the principall Intent of that Querulous Authour is not to praise, but to reprove, not greatly to grace, but justly to shame his Country, his Book being a bare Black Bill of the Sins and Sufferings, Monsters and Tyrants of Britain, keeping no Catalogue of the Worthies of this Island; so that neither Lucius, Constantine, nor Arthur are once named by him. But the best evidence that once Arthur lived in Britain is, because it is certain he died in Britain, as appeared undeniably by his Corps, Coffin and Epitaph, taken up out of his Monument in Glassenbury, in the reign of King Henry the second, whereof [a] many Persons of Quality were eye-witnesses. Anno Dom. 508

3. The entire Body of the British Church at this time was in Wales, where Banchor on the North, and Caer-lion (on Usk, in Monmouthshire) on the South, were the two Eyes thereof, for Learning and Religion. The later had in it the Court of King Arthur, the See of an Arch-Bishop, a Colledge of [b] 200 Philosophers, who therein studied Astronomie, and was a Populous place, of great extent. But Cities, as well as their Builders, are mortall: it is reduced at this day to a small Village. But as Aged Parents content and comfort themselves in beholding their Children, wherein their Memories will be continued after their Death; so Caer-lion is not a little delighted to see herself still survive in her Daughter [c] Newport, a neighbouring Town raised out of the Ruines of her Mother. Whil'st the other stood in Prime, there was scarce an Eminent man, who did not touch here for his Education; whom we will reckon in order, the rather, because all the Church-History of this Age seems confined to some principall Persons. Dubritius afore-mentioned was the Father and Founder of them all, late Bishop of Landaffe, now Arch-Bishop of Caer-lion, a great Champion of the Truth against Pelagius; and he had the honour here to crown two Kings, Vter and Arthur. Being very old, he resigned his Arch-bishoprick to David, his Scholar; and that he might be more able and active to wrastle with Death, he stript himself out of all worldly employment, and became an Anchoret, in the Island of [d] Eardsey. Six hundred yeares after, (namely May the 20, 1120) his Bones were translated to Landaffe, and by Urban, Bishop thereof, buried in the Church, towards the North side thereof. 516

4. David, the next Arch-Bishop, of Royall Extraction, was Uncle to King Arthur. He privately studied the Scriptures 10 yeares, before he would presume to preach, and alwayes carried the Gospels about him. He kept a Synod against the Pelagian Errour (a second Edition whereof was set forth in his time) and confirmed many wavering Souls in the Faith. By leave obtained from King Arthur, he removed the Archiepiscopall Seat from Caer-lion to Menevea, now called S^t. Davids, in Pembrokeshire. In which exchange his Devotion is rather to be admired, then his Discretion to be commended; leaving a Fruitfull Soile, for a bleach Barren [e] place; though the worse it was, the better for his purpose, being a great promoter of a Monasticall life. And though the place was much exposed to the Rapine of [f] Pirats, yet this Holy man laid up his heavenly Treasure, where Thieves do not break through, nor steal. 519

5. Yet I am sensible that I have spent, to my shame, so much precious time in reading the Legend of his Life, that I will not wilfully double my guiltinesse in writing the same, and tempt the Reader to offend in like nature. This [g] Miracle I cannot omit. David one day was preaching in an open Field to the Multitude, and could not be well seen because of the Concourse; (though they make him four [h] Cubits high, a man and half in Stature;) when behold the Earth, whereon he stood, officiously heaving it self up, mounted him to a competent Visibility above all his Audience. as our [a] Saviour himself, when he taught the people, was pleased to chuse a Mountain, making use of the advantage of Nature, without improving his Miraculous Power. He died aged 146 yeares, on the first of March; still celebrated by the Welsh with [*] wearing of a Leek; perchance to perpetuate the memory of his Abstinence, whose contented mind made many a savoury Meal on such Roots of the Earth.

6. A wonder it is to see how many Methusalahs (extreme Aged men) these times did produce. S^t. Patrick [b] died aged 122. Sampson aged 120. David 146. Gildas Badonicus 90, &c. Some Reason whereof may be alleaged, because living Retired in a Contemplative way, they did not bruise their Bodies, with embroiling them in Worldly Affairs: or it may be ascribed to their Temperate Diet, whil'st many of our Age spill their Radicall Moisture through the Leaks of their own Luxury. Nor is it absurd to say, that God made these great Tapers of a more firm and compacted Wax then ordinary, that so they might last the longer in burning to give Light to his Church, and bestowed on them an especiall strong naturall Constitution.

Reasons why men in this Age lived so long.

b See Balæus in their general lives.

7. About the same time (Accurateness in computing yeares is not to be expected; for never were more Doublings and Redoublings made by a hunted Hare, then there are Intricacies in the Chronology of this Age, going backward and forward;) flourished Cadocus Abbot of Llancarvan in Glamorganshire, Son of the Prince and Toparch of that Countrey. This godly and learned man so renounced the World, that he [c] reteined part of his paternall Principality in his possession, whereby he daily fed three hundred of Clergy-men, Widows, and Poor people, besides Guests and Visitants daily resorting to him. He is equally commended for his Policy, in keeping the Root (the Right of his Estate) in his own hands; and for his Piety, in bestowing the Fruit (the Profits thereof) in the relieving of others. It seems, in that Age wilfull Poverty was not by vow entail'd on Monasticall life. Nor did this Cadocus (as Regulars in after-times) with open hands scatter away his whole Means, so foolishly to grasp his Fist full of Popular Applause. He is said afterwards to have died at Beneventum in Italy.

c Ioan. Tinmuthensis in ejus vita.

8. Iltutus comes next into play, a zealous man, and deep Scholar; who not far from Cadocus, at Llan-Iwit in Glamorganshire (contractedly for Llan-iltut) preached Gods Word, and set up a Colledge of Scholars, being himself a great observer of a Single Life. It is reported of him, that when his Wife repaired to him for due Benevolence, or some ghostly Counsell, he [d] put out her Eyes, out of Anger, for interrupting him in his constant course of Chastity. But surely some blind Monk, having one of his Eyes put out with Ignorance, and the other with Superstition, was the first founder of this Fable. Thus godly Saints in that Age were made Martyrs after their Death; persecuted (though in their Commendation) with impudent and improbable Lies. It is reported also of the same Iltutus, that he turned [e] Men into Stones. Had it been Stones into Men, (converting stupid Souls into Christians, by his Preaching) it had been capable of an Allegoricall Construction: whereas, as now told, it is a Lie in the literall, and Non-sense in the mysticall meaning thereof.

Iltutus abused with Monkish forgeries.

521 9. Sampson succeeds, Scholar to Iltutus, made by Dubritius Bishop at large, [f] sine titulo. It seems in that Age, all Bishops were not fixed to the Chair of a peculiar Church, but some might sit down in any Vacant place for their Cathedrall, and there exercise their Episcopall Authority, provided it were without Prejudice to other Bishops. Afterwards this Sampson was made Arch-Bishop of Dole in French Britain; and in those dayes, such was the Correspondency betwixt this Greater, and that Lesser Britain, that they seemed to possesse Learned men in common betwixt them. Had he put them out to the Bank, by procuring ſeverall Copies to be tranſcribed, Learning thereby had been a Gainer; and a Saver, had he onely ſecured the Originals; whereas now her Loſſe is irrecoverable: Principall and Intereſt, Authenticks and Tranſcripts, are all imbezzelled. Nor is the matter much, whether they had miſcarryed at home, by Foes Violence, or abroad, by ſuch Friends Negligence. Anno Dom. 521

10. It were a Sin to omit St. Patern, for three and twenty yeares a conſtant Preacher at Llan-Patern in Cardiganſhire. His fatherlike Care over his Flock paſſeth with peculiar Commendation, that he [b] govern'd his people by feeding them, and fed his people by governing them. Some yeares after the Place continued an Epiſcopall See, and was extinguiſhed upon Occaſion of the Peoples barbarouſly murdering of their Biſhop. 540

11. St. Petrock comes in for his ſhare, (from whom Petrock-ſtow, contracted Padſtow, in Cornwall is denominated.) One of great Piety and Painfulneſs in that Age. Afterward he is ſaid to have gone to the Eaſt-Indies, (all far Countreys are Eaſt-Indies to ignorant people:) and at his return to be buried at Bodman in Cornwall. That County is the Cornu-copiæ of Saints, (moſt of Iriſh extraction) and the names of their Towns and Villages, the beſt Nomenclator of the Devout men of this Age. If the people of that Province have as much Holineſſe in their Hearts, as the Pariſhes therein carry Sanctity in their Names, Cornwall may paſſe for another Holy Land in publick reputation. 548

12. Next St Petrock comes St. Telian; for it is pity to part two ſuch intimate Friends. He was called, by alluſion to his Name, [c] Helios, which in Greek ſignifieth the Sun, becauſe of the Luſtre of his Life and Learning. But the Vulgar ſort, who count it no fault to miſcall their Betters, if they have hard Names, called him Elian, (one of that [d] name was one of our Saviours Anteſtors:) turning the Greek into an Hebrew word, and underſtanding both alike. He was Scholar to Dubritius, and ſucceeded him in the Biſhoprick of Landaffe. A pious man, conſtant Preacher, and [e] zealous reprover of the reigning Sins of that time. This is all the certain truth extant of him; which ſome Monks counting too little, have with their fabulous breath [f] blown up the Story of his Life to ſuch a Bigneſs, that the Credit thereof breaks with it's own Improbability. Witneſſe his Journey to Jeruſalem, full of ſtrange Miracles, where he had a Cymbill given him, excelling the ſound of an Organ, and ringing every hour of it's own accord. No doubt a Loud one. Loaden with Merits, ſaith the [g] Author, (I had thought nothing but Sin could burthen a Saint:) he departed this Life, having his Memory continued in many Churches of South-Wales, dedicated to him, and is remembred in the Roman Kalender on the ninth of February. 550

13. I had almoſt forgotten Congel, Abbot of Bangor, who much altered the Diſcipline of that Monaſtery; Kentigern the famous Biſhop of Elwye in North-Wales; St. Aſaph his Succeſſour in the ſame place. In whoſe mouth this Sentence was frequent, [h] Such, who are againſt the preaching of God's Word, envy the Salvation of Mankind. As for Gildas, ſurnamed the Wiſe, their Contemporary, we reſerve his [i] Character for our Library of Britiſh Hiſtorians. 15. To moſt of theſe Authours many written Volumes are aſſigned, the Titles and Beginnings whereof you may find in our Country-men Bale and Pitts, who will perſwade you that they have ſeen and peruſed ſome of them. This they do partly to enhaunce the merit of their Induſtry, in finding out ſo many Rarities; and partly to commend to the world the latitude of their own Reading. I ſhall as ſoon believe that they have ſeen all Solomon's Volumes, which he wrote from the Cedar of Libanus, to the Hyſſope that groweth on the Wall. But this Humour poſſeſſeth many men, that brag of many Books, coming under their Diſcovery: as if not onely with the Mice, they had crept through the Crannies of all Libraries; but alſo with the Mothes, had got betwixt the Leaves of all Treatiſes therein. In plain truth, as it is probable that thoſe Britiſh Prelates wrote many Books of conſequence; ſo it is certain that long ſince by Time they have been aboliſhed. As for thoſe ſpurious Tracts, which Monks in after-Ages ſet out under theſe Worthy mens names, they are no more to be accounted the true Off-ſpring of theſe learned Saints, then that common Manna, ordinarily ſold in Apothecaries Shops, is the ſelf-ſame with that Angels Food, which fell down from Heaven, and feaſted the Iſraelites.

To the right Honourable

OF DORCHESTER, EARLE OF KINGSTON,

Viſcount Newark, Lord Peirrepont, &c.

HOw low Learning ran in our Land amongſt the Native Nobility ſome two hundred yeares ſince, in the Reign of King Henry the ſixth, too plainly appeareth by the Motto in the Sword of the Martiall Earle of Shrewsbury, (where at the ſame time one may Smile at the Simplicity, and Sigh at the Barbariſme thereof;) SUM TALBOTI, PRO OCCIDERE INIMICOS MEOS. The beſt Latin that Lord (and perchance his Chaplains too, in that Age) could afford.

But in the next Generation we may obſerve the Riſe of Learning in Noble Families. I behold John Tiptoft Earle of Worceſter (bred in Baiholl Colledge) as the firſt Engliſh Perſon of Honour that graced Learning with the Study thereof, in the dayes of King Edward the fourth, both at Home and in Forreign Vniverſities. He made ſo Eloquent an Oration in the Vatican, in the preſence of Pope Pius the ſecond, (one of the leaſt Bad, and moſt Learned of any of his Order) that his Holineſs was divided betwixt Weeping and VVondering thereat.

* I. Bale de Scripit. Angl.

This Earle may be ſaid to have left John Bourchier, Baron of Berners and Governour of Callis, the Heir to his Learning; as who wrote many Treatiſes, and made Excurſions into Variety of Studies, in the dayes of King Henry the ſeventh.

* Idem & Pitz de Scrip. Anglic.

This Learned Baron had ſeverall Succeſſours under King Henry the eighth, at the ſame time, to his Parts and Liberall Studies.

1. Henry Lord Stafford, Son to the laſt Duke of Buckingham of that Name.

2. William Lord Montjoy, a great Patron to Eraſmus, and well skilled in Chymiſtry and Mathematicks.

3. Henry

3. Henry Howard, Earle of Surrey, (though last in Time, not least in Merit) the first reviver of English Poetry: so that he may seem in some sort to wave his Coronet, to wear the Laurell.

Since whose time to our dayes Learning hath ever had a visible succession in our Nobility. Amongst whom your Honour, as Captain of the Higheſt Form, is moſt illuſtrious.

Indeed, your Lordſhip is a reall Refutation of that Scandalous Poſition which ſome maintain, That ſuch who are generally ſeen in all Arts, cannot be eminently skilfull in any one. A Poſition no better then a Libell on Learning, invented and vented either by the Idle, who would not themſelves Study; or by the Envious, who deſire to diſcourage the Endeavours of others.

VVhereas there is ſuch a Sympathy betwixt ſeveral Sciences (as alſo betwixt the learned Languages) that (as in a Regular Fortification one Piece ſtrengtheneth another) a reſultive Firmeneſs ariſeth from their Complication, reflecting Life and Luſtre one on another. Arts may be ſaid to be Arched together: and all Learned Faculties have ſuch a Mutual Reciprocation. Thus one is the better Canoniſt, for being a good Civilian, and a better Common-Lawyer, for being both of them. And hereof your Honour is an Experimentall Proof, whoſe Knowledge is ſpread ſo broad, yet lieth ſo thick in all Liberall Sciences.

VVhat remaineth, but that I crave leave humbly to mind your Lordſhip of that alluſive Motto to your Name,

Name, The Reason I ; that your Honour reposing yourself piously in this life, may in a good Old Age be gloriously translated into another? The desire of

IT is wonderfull to see how the Fruits of great Events are vertually compriſed in the ſmall Seed of their Cauſes, and how a Contemptible Accident may give the Occaſion of moſt Conſiderable Effects; as may appeare by the Converſion of the Saxons to Chriſtianity. For it happened that certain Saxon Children were to be ſold for Slaves, at the Market-place at Rome; when Divine Providence, the great Clock-keeper of Time, ordering not onely Houres, but even [a] Inſtants, to his own Honour, ſo diſpoſed it, that Gregory, afterwards firſt Biſhop of Rome of that Name, was preſent to behold them. It grieved the Good man to ſee the Diſproportion betwixt the Faces and Fortunes, the Complexions and Conditions of thoſe Children, condemned to a Servile Eſtate, though carrying Liberall Looks, ſo legible was Ingenuity in their Faces. It added more to his Sorrow, when he conceived that thoſe Youths were twice Vaſſalls, bought by their Maſters, and [b] ſold under Sin; Servants in their Bodies, and Slaves in their Souls to Satan: which occaſioned the [c] Good man to enter into further enquiry with the Merchants (which ſet them to Sale) what they were, and whence they came, according to this enſuing Dialogue.

Thus Gregorie's gracious Heart set the Sound of every word to the Tune of spirituall Goodnesse. Nor can his words be justly censured for Levity if we consider how in that Age, the Elegancy of Poetry consisted in Rhythme, and the Eloquence of Prose in Allusions. And, which was the main, where his Pleasant Conceits did end, there his Pious Endeavours began; which did not terminate in a Verball Jest, but produce Reall Effects, which ensued hereupon.

Gregory would convert England in his person, but doth it by his proxy.

2. For repairing to Pelagius Bishop of Rome, he imparted his Discoveries unto him, desiring that some might be sent to endeavour the Conversion of the English Nation, tendering his Personall Service thereunto. But Pelagius was unwilling to expose Gregory to so dangerous a Design, and the People of Rome accounting him a precious Jewell, to be choicely kept for his own wearing, would not cast this Pearle before Swine, by hazarding him to the Insolency of the Pagans. Now Pelagius not long after being called into another World, Gregory succeeded in his place; who rising to new Greatnesse, did not fall from his old Goodnesse, but prosecuting his Project with more Earnestnesse, sent Augustine the Monk, with Mellitus, and Fourty more, to preach the Gospell in Britain. He himself tarrying behind in Body, went with them in his [a] Spirit, accompanying them with his effectuall Prayers: and none will deny, but that [b] Moses in the Mount contributed as much to the conquering of Amalek, as Joshua in the Valley.

Augustine and his fellows shrink for fear.

3. These men had not gone far, when they were surprised with a Qualm of Feare, and sending Augustine back again to Gregory, requested to be excused from going to so Barbarous a Nation, not as yet converted to Civility, whose Language they did not understand. Here some will be ready to deride them for Cowards; who more seriously considering with how many Excuses Moses, [c] being sent by God himself, declined the going to Pharaoh, and how loth [d] Jeremy was to preach to his Countrey-men, the stiffe-necked Jews, will presently change their Censuring into Commiserating the Frailty of Flesh, and common Condition of Mankind. But those make short Miles, who looking through a Window, travell a Dayes-journey in an instant; whil'st Wayfaring men must honestly pay for every Step, and dearly earn it with their Industry. It is facile for men in their pleasing Speculations to project the Conversion of a Kingdome, and with themselves to discourse a Heathen Nation into Christianity; whil'st those must encounter many Difficulties, who really go about to perform it. Gregory perceiving them to tire in their Undertakings, spurr'd them on with his Exhortatory Letter; the Copy whereof is here inserted, to acquaint us with the Stile of the Bishops of Rome in that Age.

Our Almighty Lord defend you with his Grace, and grant me to see the Fruit of your Labours in his Kingdome of Heaven. And though I cannot Labour my self with you, yet I may enjoy part of your Reward, for that I have a Will to labour. God keep you healthy, my dearly beloved Children.*

Dated the 23. of July, our Lord MAURICIUS TIBERIUS reigning, our most Vertuous Emperour, in the 14. year of his Empire, the 13. year after his Consulship, Indictione 14.

As yet we see the Chaplain had not lorded it over his Patron; as yet the Popes Crown was not built three stories high, but observed a Distance of Submission towards the Emperour, as appeares by his respectfull Expressions. Yea, this Bishop measured the time by the yeares of the Emperours Reign, whose Successours have learn't a new Arithmetick, in their modern dates of Charters, onely reckoning by the yeares of their own Consecration, without relating to any Imperiall Account. Gregory (by the way) was the first, which in Humility used the Stile of Servus Servorum Dei. But as in the Method of Nature, a Low Valley is immediately seconded with an Ambitious Hill: so after this Humble Gregory, (a submissive Soul) within two yeares followed Boniface the third, in whom was the Pitch of Pride, and Height of aspiring Haughtinesse, to be term'd the Universall Bishop of the World.

4. Besides the aforesaid Letter, Gregory wrote many others, [a] one to Theodorick and Theodebert, Kings of France, and severall Epistles to sundry French Bishops, to accommodate and assist Augustine and his Companions in so pious a Design. And, which must not be forgotten, with them he sent over [b] Candidus, a Priest, into France, to receive the Profits and long-detained Arreres of the Popes [c] Patrimoniolum, as he terms it, (the Diminutive is well increased at this time) and with the Mony to buy Cloaths for the Poore, and also to buy English-Pagan-captive Youths in France of 17 or 18 yeare old, that they might be brought up in Christianity in Monasteries, so at once bestowing both Liberty, Religion, and Learning upon them. A Transcendent degree of Charity; an Almes worthy Gregorie's hands to give it. And now Augustine with his Partners well encouraged, effectually prosecute their Project, passing quietly through France, save onely at the Village of Saye in Anjou, where some gigling Huswives, (Light Leaves will be wagg'd with Little Wind) causelesly fell a flouting at them. But in after-Ages, the People of the same Place, to repaire this Wrong, erected a Masculine Church (Women being interdicted the Entrance thereof) to the Memory of S^t. Augustine; and how soundly one Woman smarted for her Presumption herein, take it on the trust of [d] my Authour.

Augustine for all his Power of working Miracles, needs interpreters to preach to the English.

Hard Hearts, if our obdurate Belief, more ſtubborn then the Stone, will not as pliably receive the Impreſſion of this Miracle. But it is worthy our conſideration, that though Auguſtine all his way might be track'd by the Wonders he left behind him (when Thirſty miraculouſly fetching [a] a Fountain, when Cold a Fire, reſtoring the Blind and Lame to their Eyes and Limbs) yet for all this he was fain to bring Interpreters out of France with him, by whoſe help he might underſtand the Engliſh, and be underſtood by them. Whereas in Holy Writ, when the Apoſtles (and Papiſts commonly call Auguſtine the Engliſh Apoſtle, how properly we ſhall ſee hereafter) went to a Forreign Nation, God gave them the Language thereof, leaſt otherwiſe their Preaching ſhould have the Vigour thereof abated, taken at the ſecond Hand, or rather at the ſecond Mouth, as Auguſtine's was; who uſed an Interpreter (not as [b] Joſeph to his brethren, out of State and Policie, but) out of mere Neceſſity. This, I ſay, well thought on, will make our Belief to demurre to the Truth of his ſo frequent Miracles, being ſo Redundant in working them on Triviall Occaſions, and ſo Defective in a matter of moſt Moment. But leaving him and his for a time ſafely landed and lodged, that our Gratitude to God may be the greater, for freeing the Saxons our Anceſtours from the Bondage of Idolatry, let us behold with Horrour the huge Fetters of Errour and Ignorance, wherewith the Devil kept them in Durance, before the Goſpell was preached unto them. The SAXONS, like the reſt of the Germans, whil'ſt pure impure Pagans, worſhipped many Idols, Barbarous in Name, ſome Monſtrous, all Antick for Shape, and Abominable in the Rites and Ceremonies of their Adoration. Some averre that as the Germans (affecting an Autarchy, or Sole-ſufficiency amongſt themſelves,) diſdained Commerce in Cuſtomes, or Civile Government with the Romans; ſo they communicated not with them in their Religion. Yet others affirm that in after-Ages, the Dutch did enter Common with the Romiſh Superſtition; at leaſt-wiſe ſome Modern Authours have reduced the Saxon Idols (ſymbolizing with the Romans in Power and Properties) to ſome conformity with the Roman Deities. Thus we ſee the whole Week beſcattered with Saxon Idols, whoſe Pagan-Gods were the God-fathers of the Dayes, and gave them their Names. This ſome Zealot may behold as the Object of a neceſſary Reformation, deſiring to have the Dayes of the Week new dipt, and called after other Names. Though indeed this Suppoſed Scandall will not offend the wiſe, as beneath their Notice, and cannot offend the Ignorant, as above their Knowledge. Wherefore none need ſo haſtily to hurry to the Top of the Main Maſt, thence to pluck down the Badge of [a] Caſtor and Pollux: but rather let them be carefull, ſteadily to ſteere their Ship to the Heaven, for which it is bound; and let us redeem the Time, for the Dayes are evill: not becauſe in their Name they bear the Cognizance of the Pagan-Gods; but becauſe ſwarming with the Sins of Prophane men, which all ſhould labour to reprove in others, and amend in themſelves.

a Act. 28. 11.

7. But it was not a Week or a Moneth, yea ſcarce a yeare of Dayes, which could ſeverally containe the numerous Saxon Idols. Beſides the fore-named, they had [b] Neptune, to whom in their abominable Decimations, they ſacrificed every tenth Captive, whom they had taken in War; ſo making that Sea-God to ſwim in Man's Bloud, per hujuſmodi, non tam ſacrificia purgati, quam ſacrilegia polluti, ſaith an ancient Chriſtian [c] Authour. Secondly, Eoſter or Goſter, a Goddeſſe, which they worſhipped in the Spring-time, wherein the Feaſt of Eaſter afterwards was celebrated, and ſo thence named, as Bede obſerveth. Thirdly, Flynt, ſo termed becauſe ſet on a great Flint-ſtone, which, I dare boldly ſay, had more Sparks of Divine nature, then that Idol which thereon was erected. Laſtly, Tacitus obſerveth, that

All these antiquated by Christianity.

8. Besides these, they had other Lesser Gods, of a Lower Form and Younger House; as Helmsteed, Prono, Fridegast and Stwe: all which at this day (to use the [a] Prophets Expression) are cast to the Moles and the Bats; fit Company for them, which have Eyes and see not, Blind to the blind, like all those which put Confidence in them. And as the true and reall [b] Serpent of Aaron, did swallow up and devour the seeming Serpents, which Iannes and Iambres, the Ægyptian Inchanters, did make: so, long since in England, the Religion of the true God hath out-lived and out-lasted, confuted and confounded all false and feigned Deities. To conclude this Discourse. I have heard of a man, who being Drunk, rode over a Narrow Bridge (the first and last that ever passed that Way, as which in likelyhood led him to imminent Death,) and next morning viewing how he had escaped, he fell into a Swound, with acting over again the Danger of his Adventure in his bare Apprehension. So, should England (now, thanks be to God, grown sober and restored to her self) seriously recollect her sad Condition, when Posting in the Paths of Perdition, being intoxicated with the Cup of Idolatrie, she would fall into a Trance of Amazement, at the consideration of her desperate state, before Christianity recovered her to her right Senses: the manner whereof we now come to relate.

The character of King Ethelbert.

9. When Augustine the Monk (as is afore said) landed in Thanet, Ethelbert was then King of Kent. One, who had very much of Good Nature in him; of a Wild Olive well civilized, and a Stock fit to be grafted upon. Yea, he was already, with [c] King Agrippa (though not in the same sense) almost a Christian; because his other half, [d] Queen Berhta, daughter to the King of France, was a Christian: to whom he permitted the free use of her Religion, allowing her both Luidhard a Bishop, for her Chaplain, and an old Church in Canterbury (formerly dedicated by the Romans to S^t. Martin) to exercise her Devotion therein. Besides, at this time, this Ethelbert was in effect Monarch of England; whilest his Person had Residence chiefly in Kent, his Power had Influence even to Humber, all the rest of the Saxon Kings being Homagers unto him: which afterward much expedited the passage of the Gospel in England. Thus each officious Accident shall dutifully tender his Service to the advance of that Design, which God will have effected.

Augustine's addresses, and Ethelbert's answer.

10. Then Augustine acquainted this Ethelbert with his Arrivall, informing him by his Messengers, that he brought the best Tidings unto him, which would certainly procure eternall Happinesse in Heaven, and endless Reigning in Bliss with the true God, to such as should entertain them. Soon after Ethelbert repaired into Thanet; to whom Augustine made his addresse μετὰ πολλῆς φαν[τασίας, with a deal of [spiritual, carnall] Pompe; [e] having a Silver Cross carried before him for a Banner, the Image of our Saviour painted in a Table, and singing the Letanie in the way as they went. King Ethelbert desired all things betwixt them might be transacted in the open Aire, refusing to come under a Roof, for fear of Fascination. And indeed a Stranger (who had never seen the like before) beholding Augustine with such abundance of Trinkets about him, being formerly jealous, might hereby have his Suspicion encreased, that he went about some strange Machination. However, Ethelbert returned him a civil Answer; That their Promises were fair and good; but because new and uncertain, he could not presently assent unto them, and leave the ancient Customes of the English, which had been for so long time observed. But because they were Strangers, coming 597 11. Hence Auguſtine, with his Followers, advanced to Canterbury, to the aforeſaid old Church of S^t. Martin's. Here they lived ſo piouſly, prayed ſo fervently, faſted ſo frequently, preached ſo conſtantly, wrought Miracles ſo commonly, that many people of Inferiour Rank, and at laſt King Ethelbert himſelf was baptized, and embraced the Chriſtian Religion. The ſame Ethelbert alſo ordered, that none ſhould be [a] forced into Religion, having underſtood, that Chriſts Service ought to be voluntary, and not compelled. And if his Courtiers had been as cautious, not to embrace Religion for Faſhion, as the King was carefull they ſhould not receive it for Fear, there had not at that time been made ſo many Chriſtians, for Convenience (probably) rather, then for Conſcience, who ſoon after returned again to Paganiſme. However, as it is rendered a reaſon in the dayes of Hezekiah, why the Iews at ſo ſhort warning, ſo unanimouſly kept the Paſſeover, God had prepared the People, for the thing was done ſuddenly: ſo, on the ſame account it came to paſſe, that in ſo little a time (beſides temporary Believers) ſo many true and ſincere Converts embraced the Chriſtian Faith.

12. Then Auguſtine by his Letters informed Gregory of the Progreſſe, and Proficiency of his Paines in England. Gregory returned him a diſcreet Anſwer, rejoycing with him, and adviſing of him, not to be puffed up by Pride, for the great Miracles wrought by him; but, timendo gaudere, & gaudendo pertimeſcere. He minded him how, when the Diſciples triumphed at their [b] caſting out of Devils, Chriſt more ſpirituallized their joy, rather to rejoyce that their Names were written in Heaven. And indeed, as ſome eminent in Piety never attained this Honour ([c] Iohn [Baptiſt] did no miracle:) ſo many, finally diſavowed of God, as unknown unto him, ſhall plead for themſelves (and truly no doubt) [d] in thy Name have we caſt out Devils. Yet, this Admonition of Gregory is with me (and ought to be with all unprejudiced perſons) an Argument beyond exception, that (though no diſcreet man will believe Auguſtine's Miracles in the latitude of Monkiſh Relations) he is ignorantly and uncharitably peeviſh and moroſe, who utterly denies ſome Miracles to have been really effected by him. About the ſame time, S^t. Gregory ſent from Rome Mellitus, Iuſtus, Paulinus, and Ruffinianus, to be Fellow-labourers with Auguſtine in the Engliſh Harveſt.

For ſuch as account this a Converſion of all England, to make their words good, do make uſe of a long and ſtrong Synecdoche, a Part for the Whole, farre more then Half of the Land lying ſome yeares after in the Darkneſs of Paganiſme; which others afterward enlightned with the Beams of the Goſpel. But, as he is eſteemed the Architect, or Maſter-workman, not who builds up moſt of the Wall; but, who firſt deſigneth the Fabrick, and layeth the Foundation thereof: in the ſame reſpect, Auguſtine carrieth away the Credit of all that came after him, becauſe the primitive Planter of the Goſpel amongſt the Saxons. And it is obſerveable that this Converſion was done without any Perſecution (yea conſiderable Oppoſition;) coſting ſome Pain, no Torture, ſome Sweat, no Bloud; not one Martyr being made in the whole managing thereof. Mean time, the poor Chriſtian Britans, living peaceably at home, there enjoyed God, the Goſpell, and their Mountains; little skilfull in, and leſſe caring for the Ceremonies al a mode, brought over by Auguſtine: and indeed their Poverty could not 601 1. MUch about this time Pope Gregory sent two Arch-Bishops Palls into England; the one for[a] London, the other for York. The former of these Cities had been honoured with an Arch-bishop's See some hundred yeares since King Lucius. But at the instance of Augustine, and by a new Order of the foresaid Gregory, this Pall sent to London, was removed thence to Canterbury, (whereof Augustine was made Arch-Bishop) and there, for the future, fixed and confirmed for severall Reasons. First, London already had Lustre enough, being the biggest City in Britain; and it was needlesse to adde new Spirituall to her old Temporall Greatnesse, which conjoyned, might cause Pride in any one place, whilest divided, they might give Honour to two Cities. Secondly, London, by reason of the Receit thereof, was likely to prove the residing place for the English Monarch; and it was probable that the Archiepiscopall Dignity would there be eclipst and out-shined by the Regall Diadem. Thirdly, had Augustine been Arch-Bishop of London, he might have seemed to succeed the British Arch-Bishops, and to have derived some Right from them, contrary trary to his Humour, who would Lead All, but Follow None; and therefore would not wear an Old Title, but have a ſpan-New Arch-Biſhops Chaire carved out for himſelf. Laſtly, Canterbury was the place, wherein Chriſtianity was firſt received by the Saxons, and therefore deſerved to be honoured, to perpetuate the Memory thereof. Thus London hereafter muſt be contented with the plain Seat of a Biſhop, the Mother being made a Daughter, and muſt come behind Canterbury, which did much wrong, and perchance ſomething trouble her. But Churches have more Diſcretion and Humility, then to break their Hearts about earthly Precedency: and the matter is not much, which See went firſt, when living; ſeeing our Age hath laid them both alike levell in their Graves.

Auguſtine ſummons a Synod of Saxon and Britiſh Biſhops.

2. Auguſtine thus armed with Archiepiſcopall Authority, to ſhew a Caſt of his Office, by the Aid of Ethelbert King of Kent, called a Councill, for the Saxon and Britiſh Biſhops to come together, in the Confines of the Wiccians and Weſt-Saxons. An indifferent Place, for mutuall Eaſe, in mid-way betwixt both; haply preſaging, that as their diſtant Perſons met on equall termes, ſo their oppoſite Opinions might agree in ſome Moderation. The particular Place was called AUGUSTINES AKE (that is his Oak, in our modern Dialect) which [a] Stapleton (miſtaken by the affinity of Wiccii or Veccii, with Vectis, the Latine name for the Iſle of Wight) ſeeketh near Southampton; where, indeed, he may find many Oaks in the New Foreſt, and yet miſſe the right one. For this Oak ſtood in the Confines of [b] Worceſter and Hereſordſhire (though at this day Time hath confounded it Root and Branch) and therefore this Meeting is in Latine called Synodus [c] Vigornienſis. Many ſolemn Entertainments, we know, were anciently made under [d] Trees: and a Palm-tree ſerved Deborah for her Weſtminſter-Hall, wherein ſhe judged [e] Iſrael. But ſeverall reaſons are aſſigned, why Auguſtine kept this Councill under an Oak. Firſt, ſo publick a place was free from Exceptions; whereunto none were debarred Acceſſe. Secondly, being congregated under the view of Heaven, and not pent within the Walles of a private Houſe, they were minded of clear, fair, and open Proceedings, without ſecret Ends, or ſiniſter Intents. Thirdly, perchance ſome Pagan Saxons (allured with Novelty) would repair to the Councill, whoſe Iealouſy was ſuch, as in no caſe they would come under a Roof, for fear of [f] Faſcination, as hath been formerly obſerved. Laſtly, Auguſtine knowing that the Pagan Britans performed their Superſtitions under an [g] Oak, celebrated his Synod under the ſame, in ſome Imitation, and yet a Correction of their Idolatry: As in a religious Parallel, Pagan Temples had formerly by him been converted into Churches of Saints. But when all is done, the matter is not ſo clear, but that the place called Auguſtine's Oak, may as well be a Town as a Tree, ſo called from ſome eminent Oak in, at, or near it: as the Vine in Hampſhire, ſo named from Vines anciently growing there, is a beautifull Houſe, and principall Seat, where the Barons Sandes have their Habitation. And, what is moſt appoſite for our purpoſe, Sozomen calleth the Place where Theophilus kept a Synod againſt St. Chryſoſtome, the Oak; which, notwithſtanding, is notoriouſly known to have been a populous Suburb of the City of Chalcedon.

3. Copied exactly many yeares ſince by Sr. Henry Spelman out of an ancient Britiſh manuſcript of Mr. Peter Moſtons a Welch Gentleman; Spelman's Concilia pag. 108.

See we here the Pedigree of the Britiſh Church, which the ſhorter the ancienter, the fewer Steps it had, the higher it reached. They were ſubject in Spirituall matters to the Biſhop of Caer-lion, and above him unto God, without any ſubordination unto the Pope: ſo that it was more then a Preſumption, that Religion came into Britain, not by the Semicircle of Rome, but in a Direct Line from the Aſiatick Churches. We muſt not forget, that though many yeares ſince, the Archiepiſcopall See of the Britans was removed from Caer-lion to S^t. Davids; yet it ſtill retained the Title of Caer-lion, as of the firſt and moſt famous place.

4. A late Papiſt much impugneth the Credit of this Manuſcript (as made ſince the Dayes of King Henry the eighth) and cavilleth at the VVelſh thereof, as modern, and full of falſe Spelling. He need not have uſed ſo much Violence to wreſt it out of our Hands, who can part with it without conſiderable Loſſe to our ſelves, or Gain to our Adverſaries; for it is but a Breviate or Abſtract of thoſe Paſſages, which in Bede and other Authours appear moſt true, of the Britiſh refuſing Subjection to the See of Rome. Whileſt therefore the Chapter is Chronicall, it matters not if the Contents be Apocrypha (as the Additions of ſome wel-meaning Scribe.) And though this VVelſh be far later then the Dayes of Abbot Dinoth, and the Engliſh (added in the originall) later then the VVelſh; yet the Latin, as ancienter then both, containeth nothing contrary to the ſenſe of all Authours, which write this Intercourſe betwixt Auguſtine and the VVelſh Nation.

The credit of this manuſcript impugned.

5. But this Synod in fine proved ineffectuall, the Britiſh Biſhops refuſing to ſubmit, and Auguſtine to communicate with them without ſuch Submiſſion. Whereupon, at Auguſtine's motion, a Blind man was publick-ly presented amongst them: on whom the British Bishops practised in vain with their Prayers, to restore him to his Sight; which, at the Request of Augustine to God, was [a] presently and perfectly performed. This Miracle convinced the Britans, that Augustine was in the right for the critticall Observation of Easter. But yet, they could not absque suorum consensu ac licentia, without the National Consent of their own People, and principall Elders therein, renounce their ancient Customes, to embrace new Practices. Indeed, as for their submitting to Augustine's Jurisdiction, they apprehended it unsafe for the present, and mischievous for the future; having another Civil Government under Kings of their own, and suspecting his Spirituall Power might in processe of time intrench upon their Temporall Liberty. 6. Departing hence, the Britans repaired to an Aged Anchoret, characterred by Beda to be sanctus & prudens, holy and wise (and none would wish his Counseller better qualified) and craved his Advise, how hereafter they should behave themselves in the next Synod, wherein they had promised to give Augustine a meeting: which out of our Authour may thus be Dialogue-wise digested.

Anno Dom. 601 joyn with him in Preaching to the Saxons, soon after they should feel the force of their Enemies Sword, and be suddenly confounded by those, whom they would not endeavour to convert. Which accordingly came to passe.

603 alias 605 9. For not long after, Ethelfride the Pagan King of Northumberland, having conquered Chester, invaded Wales, and bade the Britans battel. Amongst them was a Regiment of the Monks of Bangor, all naked, and unarmed, save with Tears and Prayers (whose Vollies whereof they discharged to Heaven for the good Successe of their Country-men) being all by themselves upon an Advantage of Ground; and one Brockmaile a Britan (as Captain of their Life-guard) had a Company of Souldiers to defend them. Ethelfride being informed that these Monks prayed against him, concluded them to be his effectual Enemies, though otherwise offering him no Hostility; and fiercely falling on them, put twelve hundred of them to the Sword, fifty onely escaping: Brockmaile most basely deserting them, whom he was set to defend.

The massacre of the Monks of Bangor.

10. But here some Birds sing a different Note from the rest, which must be listened unto; namely, such Authours, considerable for their Number, Antiquity, Gravity, and Learning, who accuse this Augustine for the Designer of the Death and Destruction of these innocent British Monks: so that he cunningly foretold, what he himself cruelly intended to fulfill. Thus, well might Iezabel, who [a] calleth herself a Propheteſſe, certainly foreshew the death of Naboth, for denying his Vine-yard to Ahab, when she had purposely before-hand packed and plotted the same. An heavy Accusation if true, that Augustine (to use my [b] Friend's Expression) Gregorii Vicarius, should be Gregis ſicarius; & Eccleſiæ futuræ Anglicanæ Converſor, should be præſentis Britannicæ everſor; so that instead of a Prophets Reward, he deserved the Punishment of a Murderer. But to clear this point, conceive we a Grand-Jury of four and twenty judicious Readers empannelled, before whom the Memory of Augustine is indicted of Murder, and Witnesses produced on both Sides. Let none censure me, if in these Proceedings my Pen failes in legal Formalities, such Exactnesse not being by me intended, but onely some general Conformity with a Law-triall, to fix the History in our Fancies with more Pleasure and Delight.

Augustine suspected to be their murderer.

b Mr. Abraham Wheelock, in his notes on Bede, pag. 115.

11. The Bill first was solemnly read, running to this effect, That Augustine the Monk (commonly called the English Apostle) not having the Feare of God before his Eyes, out of fore-thought Malice, feloniously did plot, project, and contrive the Murther of twelve hundred Monks of Bangor, by soliciting Ethelbert the Christian King of Kent, to move Ethelfride the Pagan King of Northumberland, with force of Armes to kill and slay the Monks aforesaid, &c. An Accusation so hainous, that at first it filled the whole Jury with Silence, Horrour, and Amazement; till afterwards they recollected themselves to attend unto the following Witnesses.

Witnesses produced against him.

1. Ieffery Monmouth, whose Welsh Bloud was up, as concern'd in the Cause of his Country-men; Ethelbert King of Kent (said [c] he) when he saw the Britans disdaining to yield Subjection to Augustine, and that they scorned to be subject to himself, stirred up the Northumberlanders, and other Saxon Princes, that gathering a great Army against the City of Bangor, they should go forth to destroy the Abbot Dionoth, and the other Clergy, who had formerly slighted them.

c Manuscript. in pub. lib. Cantab. pag. 167.

2. Thomas Gray, an old [d] Chronicler (as it is written in French) brought in this Evidence, That Augustine being refused of the Christian Britans, enflamed Ethelbertus King of Kent to levy his Power, and to war against them, himself being also in company, (as in the old Abstract of Chronicles is recorded) and marching with him towards the Slaughter; Where they had no more regard of Mercy, then a Wolf hath upon a Sheep.

d Cited in Jewel's Apolog. part 1. pag. 11.

3. Nicolas Trivet, a Dominican, who wrote some three hundred years since, [a] deposed, That Ethelbert King of Kent, being highly offended, incited Ethelfride King of Northumberland, and other petty Saxon Kings, because they had contemned Augustine in the Council, &c. Anno Dom. 603

4. Elsebiensis Monachus commenting on those words of Merlin, Delebitur iterum Religio, Religion shall again be destroyed, thus [b] expoundeth them; This was afterwards fulfilled, either by Gormund, or by Augustine, who caused twelve hundred Monks to be slain at Bangor in Wales, because they obeyed him not in a Councill.

These Testimonies much moved the Jury; who, notwithstanding, reserved their other Eare, as it became Honest men, to hearken to the Depositions in Augustine's behalf.

12. Amongst these, that of [c] Bede was most materiall: Sicque completum est praesagium sancti Pontificis Augustini [quamvis ipso jam multo ante tempore ad caelestia regna sublato] ut etiam temporalis interitus ultionem sentirent perfidi, quod oblata sibi perpetuae salutis consilia spreverant. Which words (for, it is seasonably remembred, all Pleas must now be in English) may thus be translated; And so the propheſy of holy Bishop Augustine was fulfilled [although himself long before that was taken out of this Life to the Kingdome of Heaven] that also the treacherous People might feel the Revenge of Temporal Ruine, because they had despised the Counsells of Eternall Salvation offered unto them.

13. Much Difference arose hereabouts: the rather, because some urged that Parenthesis (Although himself long before, &c.) to have been studiously interpolated in Bede, on purpose for the Purgation of Augustine, by some in after-Ages that favoured him; alledging, that it is not in the ancient Saxon Copies, being put in as a piece of new Cloth into an old Garment, with intent to fill it up, but in event making it worse; because this Passage checketh the Pen of Bede in the full Speed thereof (no lesse against the Rules of History, then of Horsemanship) as he was writing the Life of Augustine, the Story whereof notwithstanding still runs on, and continues untill the end of the next Chapter. Here some of the Jury betook themselves to the point of Chronologie, as most proper to decide the matter now depending; but such was the Variety of Authours, that no Certainty could thence be extracted. For, though the Massacre of the Monks of Bangor is generally noted to be [d] Anno 603. which falls out before the Death of Augustine: yet the Annals of Ulster (whose Authority is not to be contemned) [e] observe the same in the year 613. which undoubtedly was after Augustine's Decease.

14. Then a second sort of Witnesses presented themselves, as [f] M. Parker, [g] Bishop Jewel, and others, somewhat sharp against Augustine in their Expressions: which wrought the lesse with the Jury, partly, because of such Authours their known Opposition to the Romish Church; and partly, because of their Modern writing, almost a thousand years after the matter in fact. Onely the Moderate Testimony of Reverend M^r. Fox much moved the whole Court, as one throughly well-affected in Religion, and averse from all Popery and Cruelty, thus expressing himself: [h] This seemeth rather suspicious then true, that Ethelbert being a Christian King, either could so much prevail with a Pagan Idolater, or else would attempt so far to commit such a cruel Deed: But of uncertain things I have nothing certainly to say, lesse to judge. This (I say) prevailed so far with the Jury, that consulting with themselves, they found an Ignoramus. With whose commendable Charity I concurre; preferring rather to clear a Twi-light Innocence into Noon-day, then to darken it into Midnight.

15. To return to the Monks of Bangor. Their innocent Bloud went not long unrevenged: for we find [i] recorded, how three British Princes, namely, Bleiderick Duke of Cornwall, Margadud Duke of South-Wales, and Cadwan Duke of North-Wales, bade Battel to the Northumberlanders, as they were invading Wales, Wales, and not onely dangerously wounded the aforesaid Ethelfride their King, but also discomfited his Army, and slew ten thousand and sixty of his Souldiers, forcing him at last to Articles of Composition, that he should confine himself within his own Country, North of Trent, and leave all Wales to be entirely and peaceably enjoyed by the Britans, the true Owners thereof.

16. However here, to our great Grief, we are fain to take our Farewell, for some hundreds of years, of the British Church, wanting Instructions concerning the Remarkable Particulars thereof. Yet Dr. Harpsfield deserves a Check, both for his false[a] Ground-work, and presumptuous Inference built thereupon. For, first, he slighteth the British Nation, as such an one, as since this their Dissenting from Augustine, and the Romish Church in Ceremonies, never archieved any Actions of Renown, or mounted to any Eminency in the world. Then, he imputeth their being so long depressed, and at last subdued by the English, as a just Punishment of God, on their not Complying with Rome: so pragmaticall a Prier he is into Divine Secrets. But he who thus casteth forth a National Abuse, can never see where such a Stone lighteth, for (besides the Nation for the time being) their Posterity ingaged therein have just cause either to find, or make Reparation to themselves. I could, and would my self assert the British from his Scandalous Pen, were it not against the Rules of Manners and Discretion; to take this Office out of the hands of some of their own Nation, for whom it is more proper, as they are more able to perform it.

Farewell taken for some years of the British Church.

17. Onely give me leave to insert a Line or two (some Pleasant Discourse will not do amiss, after so much Sad matter) in Commendation of the British Tongue, and Vindication thereof, against such as causelesly traduce it. First, their Language is Native. It was one of those which departed from Babel: and herein it relates to God, as the more immediate Authour thereof; whereas most Tongues in Europe ow their Beginning to humane Depraying of some Original Language. Thus the Italian, Spanish, and French, Daughters, or Neeces to the Latine, are generated from the Corruption thereof. Secondly, Unmixed. For, though it hath some few Forrain Words, and useth them sometimes; yet she rather accepteth them out of State, then borroweth them out of Need, as having besides these, other Words of her own to express the same things. Yea, the Romans were so far from making the Britans to do, that they could not make them to speak as they would have them: their very Language never had a perfect Conquest in this Island. Thirdly, Unaltered. Other Tongues are daily disguised with forrain Words, so that in a Century of years, they grow Strangers to themselves: as now an English-man needs an Interpreter to understand Chaucer's English. But the British continues so constant to it self, that the Prophesies of old Taliesin (who lived above a thousand years since) are at this day intelligible in that Tongue. Lastly, Durable, which had it's Beginning at the Confusion of Tongues, and is likely not to have it's Ending till the Dissolution of the World.

Commendation of the British language.

18. Some indeed inveigh against it, as being hard to be pronounced, having a conflux of many Consonants, and some of them double-sounded, yea, whereas the Mouth is the place wherein the Office of Speech is generally kept, the British words must be uttered through the Throat. But this rather argues the Antiquity thereof, herein running parallel with the Hebrew (the common Tongue of the Old World, before it was inclosed into severall Languages) and hath much Affinity therewith, in joyning of words with Affixes, and many other Correspondencies. Some also cavill, that it grates and tortures the eares of Hearers with the Harshnesse thereof: whereas indeed it is unpleasant onely to such as are Ignorant of it. And thus every Tongue seems stammering, which is not understood; yea, Greek it self is Barbarisme to Barbarians. Besides, what is nick-named Harshness therein, maketh it indeed more full, stately, and masculine. But such is the Epicurisme of Modern Times, Causelesly traduced by ignorance.

Times, to adduce all words to the Eare, that (as in the French) they melt out, in pronouncing, many essentiall Letters, taking out all the Bones, to make them bend the better in speaking: and such Hypocrites in their Words speak them not truly in their native Strength, as the plain-dealing British do, which pronounce every letter therein more manly, if lesse melodious. Lastly, some condemn it unjustly as a Worthlesse Tongue, because leading to no matter of moment; and, who will care to carry about that Key, which can unlock no Treasure? But this is false; that Tongue affording Monuments of Antiquity, some being left, though many be lost, and moe had been extant, but for want of Diligence in Seeking, and Carefulnesse in Preserving them.

Augustine baptizeth 10000. in one day.

19. But, craving pardon of the Reader for this Digression, we reassume our Augustine, who all this while was very industrious, and no lesse successefull in converting the Saxons to the Christian Faith. Insomuch that a certain [a] Authour reporteth, how in the River Swale near Richmond in Yorkshire, Augustine on one day baptized above ten thousand; adding withall, that the People not onely passed without Danger through so deep a River, but also they who were sick, and deformed when they went in, were whole [b] and handsome when they came forth again. The judicious Reader may in this Miracle discover, how the Authour thereof (no doubt some ignorant Monk) hath therein jumbled and confounded three distinct Scripture-Histories, to make a mock-Parallel betwixt the Rivers Iordan and Swale;

Borrowing	1. The Peoples safe passing through it,	from	Ioshua's [c] conducting the Israelites through	Iordan.
	2. Their being baptized in it,		Iohn's [d] baptizing the Iews in
	3. The curing of their Infirmities by it,		Elisha's [e] healing Naaman's leprosie in

But here it must be remembred, that Bede maketh no mention at all hereof, and ascribeth this numerous Baptizing to Paulinus Arch-Bishop of York many years after. It would argue too much Morosity in us, to demurre in our faith to the whole Fact, till Authours are all agreed about the Doer thereof. For mine own part, I conceive Paulinus the more probable Person, as questioning whether Augustine (most conversant amongst the South and West-Saxons) ever moved so far Northward.

The simplicity of ancient Baptisme.

20. And, if so many were baptized in one day, it appeares plainly, that in that Age, the Administration of that Sacrament was not loaded with those Superstitious Ceremonies, as essentiall thereunto, of Crossing, Spittle, Oyl, Cream, Salt, and such like Trinkets; which Protestants generally as little know what they are, as Papists why they use them. I say, in that Age nothing was used with Baptisme but Baptisme; the Word and the Water made the Sacrament. Yea, the Arch-Bishop is said to have [f] commanded by the voice of Cryers, that the People should enter the River confidently, two by two, and, in the name of the Trinity, baptize one another by turns. This, indeed, was the most compendious way; otherwise Ioshua's day, wherein the Sun stood still, had been too short for one mans personal performance of such an Employment.

The Idol Heale destroied by Augustine at Cern.

21. Another considerable Accession was made to Christianity in the South-West part of this Isle, and particularly in Dorsetshire; where Augustine at Cern, destroyed the Idol of Heale, or Æsculapius, which the Saxons formerly [g] adored. But in his journey hither (Reader, they are not mine, but my [h] Authours words) with his Holy Company, they were cruelly oppressed with the three familiar Discommodities of Travellers, Hunger, Thirst, and Wearinesse; when Augustine striking his Staffe into the Ground, fetch'd forth a crystal Fountain, which quenched the extremity of their Thirst: whence the Place was afterward ward called Cernel, from Cerno in Latine, to see, and El in Hebrew, God. A Composition of a Name hardly to be precedented, that a Word should commence per saltum, from Latine into Hebrew, without taking Greek by the way thereof. Why not rather Cernwell, Behold the fountain; or Cernheal, See the Destruction of the Idol? But in truth, in all Books ancient and [a] modern, the Place is plainly written Cern, without any paragogical apposition thereunto.

22. Indeed, most of the Miracles assign'd unto this Augustine, intended with their Strangeness to raise and heighten, with their Levity and Absurdity do depresse and offend true Devotion. Witnesse, how when the Villagers in Dorsetshire beat Augustine, and his Fellows, and in Mockery fastened Fish-tailes at their Backs, in punishment hereof, All that [b] Generation had that given them by Nature, which so contemptibly they fastened on the Backs of these Holy men. Fy for shame! he needs an hard Plate on his Face that reports it, and a soft Place in his Head that believes it.

23. However, for the main, we undoubtedly believe that the Preaching of Augustine and his Fellows took good Effect, finding the visible Progresse, and the Improvement thereof, in the Conversion of so many from Paganisme to Christianity. For, Sebert King of Essex (nephew to Ethelbert King of Kent, by Ricula his Sister) embraced the Faith, with all his Kingdome, by the Ministery of Mellitus, whom Augustine ordained Bishop of London; much about the same time making one Iustus a Roman (who was vir sui nominis, a man answering his Name) Bishop of Rochester. Many other remarkable matters happened in the Life of Augustine, especially those Questions and Answers, which passed betwixt him and Gregory the Great; by us purposely omitted, partly, because they are too voluminous to insert; and partly, because they are at large in many [c] Authours, to whom we remit the Reader.

24. And now was the time come of Augustine's Dissolution, whose Body was buried in the Northern Porch of the New Church in Canterbury, dedicated to Peter and Paul, having (as [d] Bede informs us) this Inscription written upon his Monument; Here resteth Lord Augustine the first Arch-Bishop of Canterbury; who being in times past sent hither from Blessed Gregory Bishop of the Roman City, and supported by God with the working of Miracles, brought King Ethelbert and his Countrey, from the Worshipping of Idols to the Faith of Christ: and the dayes of his Office being finished in Peace, he died the seventh of the Calends of June, the same King reigning.

Augustine's death and Epitaph.

d Eccles. Hist. lib. 2. cap. 3.

25. But in this Epitaph one thing is wanting, and that mainly materiall; namely the Year when he died. Strangely is that Watch contrived, and is generally useless, which shews the Minute of the Hour, not the Hour of the Day. As this Epitaph points at the Day, of smaller consequence; leaving out the Year, of greater concernment. This hath put mens Fansies on various Conjectures. Some make it a mere Omission of Bede: which notwithstanding is very strange, because otherwise he is most Criticall, and Punctuall in the Notation of Time. Others conceive it a fault of Commission, in some of after-Ages, who purposely expunged the Year (beshrew their Fingers that thrust out the Eyes, the Date of this Epitaph) lest the same should make too clear Discoveries of Augustine's surviving after the Massacre of the Monks of Bangor; which would increase the Suspicion of his having a Finger therein. Others place the Neglect in the Monument-maker, and not in Bede; seeing he was but the bare Relater of the Epitaph, and therefore loath to add, or alter any thing thereof. Perchance the Tombe-maker registred the Day, as a Nicety most likely to be forgotten; omitting the Year, as a thing generally, universally, and notoriously known, all men keeping a Record thereof, which in processe of time became wholly forgotten. Thus, those things are not long effectually kept by any, which are equally to be kept by All,

The date of the year, how wanting therein.

All, and not charged on any One mans particular Account. Sure I am, the setting up of this Land-mark, the noting of the Year of his Death, had given excellent Direction to such as travel in the Saxon Chronologie; who now wander at Randome for the want of it. Anno Dom. 610

Farewell to S. Augustine.

26. And now we take our Farewell of Augustine, of whom we give this Character. He found here a plain Religion (Simplicity is the Badge of Antiquity) practised by the Britans, living some of them in the Contempt, and many moe in the Ignorance of Worldly Vanities, in a barren Country: And surely, Piety is most healthful in those places, where it can least surfeit of Earthly Pleasures. He brought in a Religion spun with a Courser Threed, though garded with a Finer Trimming, made luscious to the Senses with pleasing Ceremonies, so that many, who could not judge of the Goodnesse, were courted with the Gaudinesse thereof. Indeed the Papists brag, that he was the Apostle of the English; but not one in the Stile of S^t. Paul, [a] neither from men, nor by man, but by Iesus Christ; being onely a derivative Apostle, sent by the second hand: in which sense also he was not our sole Apostle; though he first put in his Sickle, others reaped down more of the English Harvest, propagating the Gospel farther, as shall appear hereafter. But because the Beginnings of things are of greatest consequence, we commend his Paines, condemn his Pride, allow his Life, approve his Learning, admire his Miracles, admit the Foundation of his Doctrine Iesus Christ; but refuse the Hay and Stubble he built thereupon. We are indebted to God his Goodnesse in moving Gregory, Gregorie's Carefulnesse in sending Augustine, Augustine's Forwardnesse in preaching here: but above all, let us blesse God's exceeding great Favour, that that Doctrine which Augustine planted here but impure, and his Successours made worse with watering, is since, by the happy Reformation, cleared and refined to the Purity of the Scriptures.

Laurentius succeedeth Augustine. b Bede Eccles. Hist. lib. 2. c. 4.

27. After the death of Augustine, Laurentius a Roman succeeded him, whom Augustine in his Life-time not onely designed for, but ordained [b] in that Place, out of his abundant Caution, that the Infant-Church might not be Orphan an Hour, lest Satan should assault the Breath of such a Vacancy, to the Disadvantage of Religion. Such a super-Ordination in such cases was Canonicall, it being [*] a Tradition, that S^t. Peter in like manner consecrated Clement his Successour in the Church of Rome. And sure it is, the Prophet Elijah (no doubt to his great Comfort whilest living) [c] anointed Elisha to minister in his Room, in his Propheticall Function. In one respect Laurentius exceeded Augustine, that he reduced the Recusant Britans and Scots, (probably demeaning himself more humbly then his Predecessour) to some tolerable Conformity to the Romish Ceremonies, especially in the Celebration of Easter. Now, seeing frequent Mention hath formerly been made, of the Difference between the Romish and British Churches, in Observation of that Festivall; we will endeavour, as truly as briefly, to state the Controversie betwixt them, with Arguments each side produceth in their own behalf.

It is enough to prove the Practice of Rome was the right, that it was the Practice of Rome; yea, did it not deserve the Stab of Excommunication, for any dissenting from her practice, tantamountingly to give her the Lie? However, it seems the Reputation of Rome's Infallibility was yet in the Nonage thereof, that the British durst so boldly differ from them, without danger of Damnation.

29. Yea, they pretended ancient Tradition on their side, from the Primitive Times, derived from S^t. John himself; as by the ensuing Verses (which we thought fit to translate) may appear: The Britons their plea.

Nos seriem[a] patriam, non frivola scripta tenemus,

Time was, when once the Activity of Peter and John with holy Zeal was excellently emploied, contending in a Race, which should first come to the Grave of our [b] Saviour: but see here the Romans and the Britans, the pretended Followers of these two Apostles, not running, but wrestling in a violent Contention, who should most truly observe the Resurrection of Christ out of his Grave.

b John 20.4.

30. Strange! that so Good, and Wise men, should thus fall out about the Mint and Cummin of Religion, a Ceremony not at all decided in Scripture. It is to be feared, that the When marred the How of Easter; and the Controversie about the Time, spoiled a more materiall Circumstance, of the Manner of keeping this Feast; these opposite Parties scarce being mutually in Charity at the receiving of the Sacrament, at that solemn Festivall, kept among the Jews with unleavened Bread, celebrated among Christians with too much Leaven (sowre and swelling) of Anger and Passion. The best is, for the present Laurentius composed the Quarrel, and brought both [c] Britans and Scots (that is, the Inhabitants of Ireland) to complie with the Romans therein. But as every small Wrinch, or stepping awrie, is enough to put an ill-set Bone out of joynt: so each petty Animosity was great enough to discompose this Agreement. But enough of this Controversie for the present, we shall meet it too soon again; which like a restlesse Ghost, will haunt our English History, for more then an hundred and fifty yeares together. The controversie reconciled by Laurentius.

c Bede's Hist. lib. 2. cap. 4.

31. Onely I will adde that, although about Augustine's time, this Controversie was then most heightned and inflamed; yet an old Grudge it was long before, betwixt the Romans and Britans. For, if old Taliessyn (stiled Chief of Bards by the Britans) lived (as [d] Pitseus, a Catholick Writer, will have it) in the year five hundred and fourty; and if the following verses be Taliessyn's, as it is [e] undoubtedly believed; then this Difference was on foot fifty yeares before Augustine came into England. Wo be to that Shepheard (I say)
That will not watch his Fold alway,
As to his Office doth belong.
Wo be to him that doth not keep From Romish Wolves his Sheep
With staffe and weapon strong.

These words, From Romish Wolves, relate to the Vigilancy of the British Pastours, to keep their People from Rome's Infection in these points. Thus, whilest the Britans accounted the Romans Wolves, and the Romans held the Britans to be Goats, what became of Christ's little flock of Sheep the whiles? The best is, the good God, we hope, will be mercifull in his Sentence on Men, though passionate Men be merciless in their Censures one on another. Anno Dom. 613

The death of Ethelbert, and decay of Christianity.

32. To return to Laurentius. The great Joy for the Agreement made by him, was quickly abated with Grief, at the Death of King Ethelbert: who having reigned fifty six, and been a Christian one and twenty yeares, was buried nigh to his good Wife, Queen Bertha (who died a little before him) in the Porch of S^t. Martin's Church in Canterbury, which Fabrick, with some other Churches, by him were beautifully built, and bountifully endowed. In Ethelbert's Grave was buried much of the Kentish Christianity: for Eadbald his Son both refused His Father's Religion, and wallowing in Sensuality, was guilty of that Sin not so much as named amongst the Gentiles, in keeping his Father's second Wife. Such as formerly had took up Christianity, as the Court-Fashion, now left it; & whom Ethelbert's Smiles had made Converts, Eadbald's Frowns quickly made Apostates. Yea, at the same time (so infectious are the bare Examples of Great men) the three Sons of the King of the East-Saxons fell back to Paganisme. These refused to be baptized, and yet, in Derision, demanded of the Bishop Mellitus, to receive the Eucharist; which he flatly denied them; Baptisme being an Introductory Sacrament, and it being unlawfull to break into the Church, without going through this Porch. Yet they gave Mellitus fair Warning, and free leave to depart; who coming into Kent, held there a Councill with Laurentius and Iustus, what was best to be done. At last they concluded, that it was in vain, prodigally to lose their Paines here, which they might expend with more profit in their own Country: and seeing Martyrdome, as it is not cowardly to be declined, so it is not ambitiously to be affected; they resolved to go the way which Divine Providence directed them, and to return into France: which Mellitus and Iustus did accordingly. Febr. 24

Mellitus and Iustus their departure defended.

33. Was this well done of them, to leave their Charge? Did not God place them Centinells in his Church, and could they come off from their Duty, before they were relieved by Order? But surely their ill Usage was an interpretative Discharge unto them. In warrant whereof, we have not onely Christs [a] Precept, to leave the unworthy House with a witnesse (namely with the Dust of our Feet shaken off as a Testimony against it;) but also his Practice, going from the [b] Gadarenes, when they desired he should depart their Coasts. Indeed, the Word of Life is a quick Commodity, and ought not, as a Drug, to be obtruded on those Chapmen who are unwilling to buy it; yea, in whose Nostrills the very Savour of Life unto Life doth stink, because profered unto them.

b Matth. 8. 34. and cap. 9. 1.

Laurentius, intending to depart, rebuked.

34. Laurentius entertained the like Resolution of Departure; when, lying on his Bed, S^t. Peter is [c] said to have taken him to task in a Vision. Yea, S^t. Peter was not onely seen, but felt, sharply and soundly Whipping him, for his unworthy Intention to forsake his Flock; who rather should have followed S^t. Peter's Example (as he imitated Christ's) whom no Losses or Crosses could so deterre, as to desert his Charge. Some will say, Peter herein appeared a partial Parent, so severely disciplining this his Son, whilest two other of his Children, being more guilty, Mellitus and Iustus (who had actually done what Laurentius onely designed) escaped without any Correction. But we must know, though these seemed more faulty, by what appeares in open View, yet the Passages behind the Curtain (Considerables concealed from us) might much alter the case. And indeed, Pastours leaving their People is so tickliish a Point, and subject to such secret Circumstances, that God and their own Consciences are onely the competent Judges of the Lawfulnesse or Unlawfulnesse thereof.

35. Thus, all black and blew, Laurentius repaireth to Eadbald King of Kent, and presenteth himself unto him in that sad Condition. The King, much amazed zed thereat, demands, who durſt offer ſuch Violence to ſo Good a man? Whereby it plainly appears, that though Eadbald himſelf refuſed Chriſtianity, yet he afforded Civility and Protection to Laurentius, and to all in Kent of his Religion. He largely relates what had happened unto him; and in fine ſo prevailed on Eadbald, that he not onely put away his VVife-Mother-VVhore, but alſo embraced Chriſtianity, and at his deſire, Iuſtus and Mellitus returned again into England.

36. Rocheſter readily received Iuſtus their Biſhop, being a little Place, of few Perſons, and they therefore the eaſier all to be brought to be of one Mind. But large London (though then, for Greatneſſe, but the Suburbs to the preſent City) I ſay, London then, was even London then, as wanton in the Infancy, as now wayward in the Old-age thereof; where generally the People, long radicated in Wickedneſſe, refuſed to entertain their good Paſtour returning unto them. But here my good[a] Friend, in his Notes on this Paſſage, makes an ingenious Reſervation, that (though the major part muſt be confeſſed peeviſh in all populous places) London in all Ages afforded eminent Favourers of Learned and Religious men. And would I could (being the meaneſt of Miniſters) as truly entitle my ſelf to the foreſaid Qualifications, as I heartily concurre with him in my gratefull Confeſſion, that I have effectually found plenty of good Patrons in that Honourable Corporation. Mellitus thus rejected, was glad to lead a private life in London, till that after the *619 Feb. 3. * Death of Laurentius, he ſucceeded him in the Church of Canterbury.

37. A grave, and good man, but much afflicted with the Gout, and highly meriting of his See of Canterbury; eſpecially if true, what Bede * reports, that, when a grievous Fire happened in that City, Mellitus accoſted the very Fury thereof with faithfull Prayer, and his own bare Hands (ſtrange! that no modern Monk hath ſince in his Relation put a Crucifix, or Holy-water-ſprinkle into them) and ſo preſently quenched the Raging of the Flames. Say not, why could he not as eaſily have cured his own Gout, as quenched this Fire? ſeeing Miracles are done, not for mens ordinary Eaſe, but God's ſolemn Honour. Yea, the Apoſtles themſelves were not at pleaſure Maſters of their miraculous Power, for their perſonal uſe; ſeeing S[t]. Paul could neither cure the[b] often Infirmities of his dear Son Timothy, nor remove the acute, deſperate Diſeaſe, wherewith he himſelf in[c] Aſia was afflicted. Five years ſate Mellitus in Canterbury: after whoſe

*624 April 24. * Death, Iuſtus Biſhop of Rocheſter ſucceeded him, and had his Pall ſolemnly ſent him by Pope Boniface.

38. By the way, the Pall is a Pontificall Veſtment, conſiderable for the Matter, Making, and Myſteries thereof. For the Matter, it is made of Lambs Wooll, and Superſtition. I ſay, of Lambs VVooll, [d] as it comes from the Sheeps Back, without any other artificiall Colour, ſpun (ſay ſome) by a peculiar Order of Nunnes, firſt caſt into the Tombe of S[t]. Peter, taken from his Body (ſay[e] others) ſurely moſt ſacred if from both; and [ſuperſtitiouſly] adorned with little black Croſſes. For the Form thereof; the[f] Breadth exceeded not three Fingers (one of our Bachelours Lamb-skin Hoods in Cambridge would make three of them) having two Labells hanging down before and behind, which the Arch-Biſhops onely, when going to the Altar, put about their Necks, above their other Pontificall Ornaments. Three Myſteries were couched therein. Firſt, Humility, which beautifies the Clergy above all their coſtly Copes. Secondly, Innocency, to imitate Lamb-like Simplicitie. And thirdly, Induſtry, to follow[g] him who fetched his wandring Sheep home on his Shoulders. But to ſpeak plainly, the Myſtery of Myſteries in this Pall was, that the Arch-Biſhops receiving it, ſhewed therein their Dependence on Rome; and a Mote in this manner ceremoniouſly taken, was a ſufficient Acknowledgement of their Subjection. And, as it owned Rome's Power; ſo in after-Ages it encreaſed their Profit. For, though now ſuch Palls were freely given to Arch-Biſhops, whoſe Places in Britain for the preſent were rather cumberſome then commodious, having little more then their Paines for their Labour; yet in after-Ages the Arch-Bishop of Canterburie's Pall was [a] sold for five thousand [b] Florenes: so that the Pope might well have the Golden Fleece, if he could sell all his Lambs-Wooll at that rate. Onely let me adde, that the Authour of [c] Canterbury-Book stiles this Pall, Tanquam grande Christi Sacramentum. It is well tanquam came in to help it, or else we should have had eight Sacraments. But, leaving these Husks to such Palats as are pleased to feed on them, we come to the Kernell of Religion, how the same was propagated in other Parts of England. And first, of the Preparative for the Purge of Paganisme out of the Kingdome of Northumberland.

Anno Dom. 624

39. Edwine, the King thereof, was Monarch of all England, with the Isles of Man and Anglesey, more puissant then any of His Predecessours. And this, saith [e] Bede, was In auspicium suscipiendæ Fidei, in good Handsell of the Faith he was hereafter to receive. God first made him Great, and after Gracious; that so by his Power, he might be the more effectuall Instrument of his Glory. Now he had married Edelburge, daughter of Ethelbert King of Kent: to whom he not onely permitted free Exercise of Religion, to her self and her Servants, but also promised himself to embrace it, if, on Examination, it appeared the most Holy, and fittest for Divine Service. In the Court of this Queen was one Paulinus, a pious Bishop, who, with much Pains and little Profit, long laboured in vain to convert the Pagans. God hereby both humbling him, and shewing, that the Hour of his Mercy shall not be ante-dated one Minute, by any humane Endeavours. However, Paulinus, seeing he could not be happy to gain, would be carefull to save, and daily plyed the Word and Sacraments, thereby to corroborate his owne People in Piety.

625

40. Now it happened that one Eumere, a Swash-buckler (a Contemner of his own life, and thereby Master of another man's) sent from Quichelm, King of the West-Saxons, with an envenomed Dagger sought to kill King Edwine: when Lilla, one of his Guard, foreseeing the Blow, and interposing himself, shielded his Sovereign with his own Body, yea, deaded the Stroak with his own Death. Loyalty's Martyr; in a Case which is likely to find moe to commend, then imitate it, on the like occasion. Edwine notwithstanding slightly hurt, was very sensible of the Deliverance, and promised, that if he might conquer the treacherous West-Saxon King, with his Adherents, he would become a Christian. And though there be no indenting, and conditional capitulating with God (who is to be taken on any terms) yet this in a Pagan was a good step to Heaven, and Paulinus was glad he had got him thus far; especially, when in Earnest of the Sincerity of his Resolution, he consigned over his infant-Daughter [f] Eanfled, to be baptized, whom Paulinus christened, with twelve moe of the Queen's Family. Well, the West-Saxon King was quickly overcome, and all his Complices either killed, or conquered; and yet King Edwine demurred to embrace Christianity. But he communicated with the sagest of his Counsell, with whom he had daily Debates, being loth rashly to rush on a matter of such Moment. And truly, that Religion which is rather suddenly parched up, then seasonably ripened, doth commonly unglue afterwards. Yea, he would sit long alone, making company to himself, and silently arguing the Case in his own Heart, being partly convinced in his Judgement of the Goodnesse of the Christian Religion, and yet he durst not entertain Truth, a lawfull King, for fear to displease Custome, a cruell Tyrant.

41. Amongst the many Debates he had with his Counsell about altering his Religion, two Passages must not be forgotten; whereof one was the Speech of Coifi, the prime Pagan-Priest. Surely (said he) these Gods, whom we worship, are not of any Power, or Efficacy in themselves; for none hath served them more conscientiously then my self, yet other men, lesse meriting of them, have received moe and greater Favours from their hand, and prosper better in all things they undertake. Now, if these were Gods of any Activity, they would have been more beneficiall to me, who have been so observant of them. Here the Reader will smile at Coifi his Solecisme, wherein the Premisses are guilty of Pride, as the Inference thereon of Errour and Mistake. If he turn Christian on these termes, he will be taught a new Lesson: how not onely all outward things happen alike, to good and bad, to [a] him that sacrificeth, as to him that sacrificeth not; but also, that [b] Judgement beginneth at the house of God, and the best men meet with the worst Successe in Temporal matters. However, God was pleased to sanctifie this mans Errour, as introductory to his Conversion: and let none wonder, if the first Glimmering of Grace in Pagans, be scarce a degree above Blindnesse.

b 1 Pet. 4. 17.

42. Better, in my opinion, was the plain Comparison, which another nameless Courtier made at the same time. Mans life (said [c] he) O King, is like unto a little Sparrow, which, whilest your Majesty is feasting by the Fire in your Parlour with your royall Retinue, flies in at one Window, and out at another. Indeed we see it that short time it remaineth in the House, and then is it well sheltred from Wind and Weather; but presently it passeth from Cold to Cold, and whence it came, and whither it goes, we are altogether ignorant. Thus, we can give some account of our Soul, during it's abode in the Body, whilest housed and harboured therein; but where it was before, and how it fareth after, is to us altogether unknown. If therefore Paulinus his Preaching will certainly inform us herein, he deserveth, in my opinion, to be entertained.

43. Long looked for comes at last. King Edwine almost three yeares a Candidate at large of Christianity, cordially embraceth the same, and with many of his Nobles, and Multitudes of his Subjects, is solemnly baptized by Paulinus, in the little Church * of S[t] Peters in York, hastily set up by the King for that purpose, and afterward by him changed into a firmer and fairer Fabrick. Thus, as those Children which are backward of their Tongues, when attaining to Speech, pronounce their words the more plainly and distinctly: so Edwine, long, yea tedious before his turning to Christianity, more effectually at last embraced the same. And when it was put to the Question, what Person most proper to destroy the Heathen Altars? Coifi the chief Priest tendered his Service, as fittest for the purpose, solemnly to demolish what he had before so superstitiously adored. Down go all the Pagan Altars, and Images at God-mundingham (now Godmanham, a small [d] Village in the East-Riding of Yorkshire) and those Idols with their Hands were so far from defending themselves, that their mock-Mouths could not afford one word, to bemoan their finall Destruction.

Edwine converted, and baptized.

44. When thou art converted, strengthen thy Brethren, was the personall Precept given to [e] Peter, but ought generally to be the Practice of all good men; as here it was of King Edwine, restlesse, untill he had also perswaded Earpwald, King of the East-Angles, to embrace the Christian Faith. Indeed Redwald, Earpwald's Father, had formerly at Canterbury (to ingratiate himself with King Ethelbert) professed Christianity; but, returning home, he revolted to Paganisme at the instance of His [f] Wife. So great is the Power of the Weaker Sex, even in matters of Religion. For, as Bertha and Edelburge, the Queens of Ethelbert and Edwine, occasioned, and expedited the Conversion of their Husbands Kingdomes: so here a Female-instrument obstructed that holy Design. Yea, Redwald afterwards in the same Church set up a [g] Samaritane-mongrel-Religion, having Altare [h] & Arulam, a Communion-Table and an idolatrous Altar in the same Temple. You cannot be partakers (saith the [i] Apostle) of the Lords Table, and of the table of Devils; that is, You cannot lawfully, conscionably, comfortably; but, de facto, it may be done, was done by Redwald in this his miscellaneous Religion.

For, wanting accommodations to appear in Princely Equipage, he applyed himſelf the more cloſe to his Studies: ſeeing, that Means which would maintain a Prince but like a Scholar, would maintain a Scholar like a Prince. Yea, which was beſt of all, on his Learning he grafted true Religion; Bede giving him this Character, that he became Vir Chriſtianiſſimus & doctiſſimus: (can more be ſaid in ſo few words?) and returning home, aſſiſted by the Preaching of Felix, a Monk of Burgundy, Iuxta nominis ſui ſacramentum, ſaith Bede (happy was his Name, and Happineſſe was with him) converted his Subjects to Chriſtianity. This Felix was made the firſt Biſhop of Dunwich in Suffolk; a place formerly furniſhed with [a] two and fifty Churches, and hath ſcarce two now remaining, the reſt being ſwallowed up by the Sea. I can hardly hold my ſelf from calling the Sea ſacrilegious; ſave that, on ſecond thoughts, conſidering that Element to be but a Naturall Agent, yea, ſuch whoſe Motions are ordered by Divine Providence, Hither ſhalt thou come, and no farther, I will rather reſerve this Epithete, ſacrilegious, to be beſtowed on thoſe men, who willingly and wilfully demoliſh the places appointed for God's Service.

46. This Sigebert is generally reputed the Founder of the Univerſity of Cambridge. And becauſe the point in hand is ſomewhat litigious, we will take the more Paines in clearing thereof, two things being warily premiſed. Firſt, that Sigebert's founding the Univerſity of Cambridge ought not by any to be extended to leſſen and abate, much leſſe to drown and deſtroy her more ancient Title to Learning; which ſhe deriveth (according to good [b] Authours) from many hundred yeares before. Valeant, quantum valere poſſint, let ſuch her over-grown Evidences ſtand as valid as they may, by us neither confirmed, nor confuted for the preſent. And indeed, all ſuch Old things in either Univerſity, though ſpecious to the Eye, muſt be cloſely kept, and tenderly touched, leſt otherwiſe, being roughly handled, they ſhould moulder into Duſt. Secondly, let none ſuſpect, my Extraction from Cambridge will betray me to partiality to my Mother, who deſire in this Difference to be like Melchiſedec, ἀγενεάλογος, without Deſcent, onely to be directed by the Truth. And here I make this fair and free Confeſſion, which, I hope, will be accepted for ingenuous: That, as in Thamar's travell of [c] Twins, Zarah firſt put out his Hand, and then drew it in again, whileſt Pharez firſt came forth into the World; ſo I plainly perceive Cambridge with an extended Arme, time out of mind, firſt challenging the Birth-right, and Priority of place for Learning; but afterwards drawing it in again, ſhe lay for many yeares deſolate, and of leſſe account; whileſt Oxford, if later, larger, came forth in more entire Proportion, and ever ſince conſtantly continued in the full Dimenſions of an Univerſity.

47. Theſe things being thus cautiouſly ſtated, we proceed, beginning with Bede, on whoſe Teſtimony all the following Hiſtory is founded.

The leading teſtimony of Bede explained.

Beda lib. 3. Eccleſ. Hiſt. cap. 18.

Sigebertus, ubi Regno potitus eſt, mox ea quæ in Galliis bene diſpoſita vidit, imitari cupiens, inſtituit Scholam, in qua pueri literis erudirentur, juvante ſe Epiſcopo Felice (quem de Cantia acceperat) eiſque pædagogos ac magiſtros, juxta morem Cantuariorum, præbente.

Sigebert, when he had obtained the Kingdome, preſently deſiring to imitate thoſe things which he had ſeen well-ordered in France, inſtituted a School, wherein Youths might be trained up in Learning, Felix the Biſhop (whom he had received out of Kent) aſſiſting him, and providing for them Teachers, and Maſters, according to the Cuſtome of thoſe in Canterbury.

See here, King Sigebert, to make his School complete, united therein such Conveniences for Education, as he had observed commendable

1. Abroad, in France: where Learning at, and before his time, was brought to great Perfection; S^t. Hierome[a] affirming, that even in his Age, he had seen Studia in Galliis florentissima, most flourishing Universities in France.

2. At home, in Canterbury: where even at this time Learning was professed, though more increased some fourty yeares after; when as the same Bede[b] reports, that in the dayes of Theodorus the Arch-Bishop, there were those that taught Geometry, Arithmetick and Musick (the fashionable studies of that Age) together with Divinity. The perfect Character of an University, where Divinity the Queen is waited on by her Maids-of-Honour.

But I question, whether the Formality of Commencing was used in that Age: inclining rather to the negative, that such Distinction of Graduates was then unknown, except in S^t. Paul's sense, [c] Such as used the office of a Deacon well, purchased to themselves a good Degree.

48. So much for Bede's Text. Come we now to ancient Authours commenting upon him. Ancient I call those, who wrote many yeares before the Differences were started about the Seniority of the Universityes, and therefore are presumed unpartiall, as unconcerned in a Controversie which did not appear. First, Polydore[d] Virgil, who from Bede's words plainly collects, that Sigebert then founded the University of Cambridge. Nor see I any cause for that Passage in the[e] Assertion of Oxford's Antiquity, charging Polydore, Quod affectibus indulgens, adamatæ studet Academiæ; who being a Forrainer, and an Italian, had nothing to byas his Affection to one University more then the other. Learned[f] Leland succeeds, who being employed by King Henry the eighth to make a Collection of British Antiquities (much scattered at the Dissolution of Abbies) thus expresseth himself.

Olim Granta fuit Titulis Vrbs inclyta multis,

Hæc ego, perquirens Gentis Monumenta Britannæ, Asserui in Laudem, Granta diserta, tuam.

Grant, long ago a City of great Fame,
From neighbouring River doth receive her Name.
When storms of Saxon-warres her overthrew,
Near to the old, sprang up another new.
Monk Felix, whil'st he Sigebert obeys,
Light'ned this place with Schools, and Learning's rayes.
Searching the Monuments of British Nation,
This I assert in Grant's due Commendation.

Here we omit the severall Testimonies of[g] Bale, George Lilie, and Thomas Cooper, in their severall Histories Anno 636. with many moe, concluding Sigebert then the Founder of the University of Cambridge.

49. But our Cousin-germans of Oxford will scarce give Credit hereunto, multiplying Objections against it. Obj. There were (say they) many places (besides Cambridge) in the Kingdome of the East-Angles (conteining Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeshire) which, with equall Probability, may pretend to this School of Sigebert's Foundation, seeing Bede doth not nominatim affirm Cambridge for the particular Place, where this University was erected.

First objection against Sigebert's founding of Cambridge.

Anno Dom. 631

Answer.

50. Anſ. Though Bede be Dumb in this particular, not naming Cambridge; yet he makes ſuch Signes, that moſt intelligent Antiquaries by us alledged, underſtand him to intend the ſame: eſpecially ſeeing Cambridge is acknowledged by all Authours, time out of mind, to have been a place for the Education of Students in Literature.

Second Objection.

51. Obj. If any ſuch Univerſity was founded by Sigebert, it was at Grantcheſter, differing, as in Appellation, ſo in Situation from Cambridge (as being a good mile South-Weſt thereof.) Cambridge therefore cannot entitle it ſelf, but by apparent Uſurpation, to the ancient Priviledges of Grantcheſter.

Answer.

52. Anſ. Moſt uſuall it is for ancient places to alter their Names (Babylon to Bagdet, Byzantium to Conſtantinople, our old Verulam to S^t. Albans) ſtill retaining the numerical Nature they had before. Oxford (they tell us) was once called [a] Belloſitum, and yet not altered from it's ſame ſelf by another Name. Nor is it any news for great Cities, in proceſſe of time (as weary of long ſtanding) to eaſe themſelves a little, by hitching into another place. Thus, ſome part of modern Rome is removed more then a mile from the ancient Area thereof. Thus, Ieruſalem at this day is come down from Mount Sion, and more South-Weſt climbed up Mount Calvary. Yet, either of theſe Places would account themſelves highly injured, if not reputed, for the main, the ſame with the former. Sufficeth it, that ſome part of Cambridge ſtands at this day, where [b] Grantcheſter did (which anciently [c] extended North-Weſt, as far as the Village called Howſe) and that's enough to keep poſſeſſion of the Priviledges of Grantcheſter, as properly belonging thereunto. Eſpecially, ſeeing Oxford at this day layes claim to the Antiquityes of Crekelade and Lechlade (Towns diſtant ſixteen miles off, the one in Wilts, the other in Gloceſterſhire) two ancient Schools of Greek and Latine (as ſome will have it) removed afterwards to Oxford; from whence ſome of her Aſſertours do date her Beginning.

Third Objection.

53. Obj. Sigebert founded but Scholam, which makes little to the Honour of Cambridge: For thereby her Profeſſours are degraded to Pedants; and by a retrograde Motion Cambridge is ſent back to Eaton, I mean, is made no better then a great Grammar-School.

Answer.

54. Anſ. If the beſt of Latine Oratours may be believed, Schola properly ſignifies the Place where all Arts are publickly profeſſed. [d] Ex Platonis ſchola Ponticus Heraclides, Ponticus Heraclides came out of the ſchool of Plato: Which is notoriouſly known to have been an Academie; yea, all his Scholars known by the name of Academicks to this day. Thoſe of Salerno in Italy, dedicating a book of Phyſick to our Henry (the ſecond, I take it) begin thus,

Anglorum Regi ſcribit Schola tota Salerni.

School-boys deſerve to be whipped indeed, if preſuming to preſcribe Receipts to a King: But that Schola there is ſufficiently known to have been a famous Univerſity. And under the favour of the Univerſity, the word Univerſitas is but a baſe, and barbarous Latine (whiles Schola is pure Greek originally) to deſign, either the Place where generall Learning is publickly profeſſed, or the Perſons ſtudying therein. And, though I dare not totally concurre with that [e] Learned Critick, that Univerſitas was firſt uſed in the foreſaid ſenſe, about the reign of King Henry the third; yet, I believe, it will not be found in any Claſſicall Authour, in that modern acception.

e Mr. Camden in his Britannia, pag. 381. in Oxfordſhire.

Fourth Objection.

55. Obj. In good Authours, Sigebert is ſaid to have founded not only Scholam, a School, but Scholas, Schools, in the plurall. If Schola therefore be an Univerſity, either he made moe Univerſities then one in Cambridge (which is abſurd to affirm;) or elſe he erected moe Univerſities in other places of his Kingdome, which Cantabrigians will not willingly confeſſe.

Answer.

56. Anſ. The variation of the Number is of no Concernment. For, if reſpect be had to the ſeverall Arts there profeſſed, Sigebert founded Schools in the plurall:

Anno Dom. 631

plurall: but if regard be taken of the Cyclopædy of the Learning reſulting from thoſe ſeverall Sciences, he erected but one Grand School. Every Freſh-man knows that the ſingle Quadrant, wherein the publick Lectures are read, and Acts kept, is called plurally the Schools, in each Univerſity.

57. Obj. But Bede terms them Pueros, Boyes, properly under the Rod, and Ferula, whom Sigebert placed in his School: and the word Pædagogi, Vſhers, placed over them, imports the ſame; that they were no Univerſity-Students, but a company of little Lads, that lived there under Correction. Fifth Objection.

58. Anſ. Criticks will ſatisfie you, that the word Pueri ſignifies even thoſe of more Maturity, eſpecially if living ſub regimine, under the Diſcipline of Superiours. Secondly, Bede, being a great Divine, and converſant in Scripture-phraſe, borroweth an expreſſion thence; Chriſt calling his Diſciples Παιδία, [a] Children. He uſeth alſo Pædagogos in the ſame notion with [b] St. Paul's παιδαγωγὸς εἰς Χριστὸν, which our laſt Tranſlatours reade Inſtructours in Chriſt, even to the Corinthians, who ſtill needed ſuch Pædagogues or Teachers, though already [c] enriched in all utterance and knowledge. Thirdly, the Saxon ancient Copy of Bede, which (doubtleſſe) doth emphatically render the Latine, tranſlates pueri geonge menn. Fourthly, Aſſerius Menevenſis, ſpeaking of Alfred's founding of Oxford, ſaith, that he endowed the ſame, Suæ propriæ Gentis nobilibus Pueris, & etiam ignobilibus; and it is but equal, that the Pueri at Cambridge ſhould be allowed as much man in them, as thoſe at Oxford. Laſtly, the young Frie of Scholars, when firſt admitted, is ſuch, to whom * Pueri, in the proper ſenſe thereof, may well be applyed. And here it may ſeaſonably be remembred, how an [d] Oxford Antiquary affirmeth, that Edward the fifth Prince of Wales, and Richard his brother, Duke of York, Oxoniæ ſtuduerunt, ſtudied at Oxford, in the life-time of their Father. Stout Students no doubt, whereof the Elder could not then be ten, the Younger not nine yeares old. But I forget what Lawyers hold, that the Kings eldeſt Son is at full Age (for ſome Purpoſes) at the day of his Birth (in which reſpect he may ſue out his Liveries for the Dukedome of Cornwall:) and this (perchance) may ſomewhat mend the matter. 59. But enough of this matter, which ſome will cenſure as an Impertinency to our Church-Hiſtory, and ſcarcely coming within the Church-yard thereof. My Prayers ſhall be, that each Univerſity may turn all Envy into generous, yea gracious, yea glorious Emulation; contending by laudable means, which ſhall ſurpaſſe other in their Serviceableneſſe to God, the Church, and Common-wealth: that ſo Commencing in Piety, and Proceeding in Learning, they may agree againſt their two generall Adverſaries, Ignorance, and Profaneneſſe. May it never be ſaid of them, what Naomi [e] ſaid of her ſelf, that ſhe was too old to bear Sons: may they never be ſuperannuated into Barrenneſſe, but like the good Trees in Gods Garden, They ſhall ſtill bring forth Fruit in their old age, they ſhall be fat and flouriſhing. 632 60. Seaſonably Sigebert erected an Univerſity at Cambridge, thereby in part to repair the late great Loſſe of Chriſtianity in England when (the year after) Edwine, King of Northumberland, was ſlain in [f] Battel by Cadwald King of Wales, and Penda King of the Mercians. After whoſe Death, his whole Kingdome relapſed to Paganiſme; and Paulinus, Arch-Biſhop of York, taking with him Queen Ethelburge, returned into Kent, and there became Biſhop of the (then vacant) Church of Rocheſter. Mortified man, he minded not whether he went up, or down hill, whileſt he went on ſtrait in his Calling to glorifie God, and edifie others; ſenſible of no Diſgrace, when degrading himſelf from a great Arch-Biſhop, to become a poor Biſhop. Such betray much Pride and Peeviſhneſſe, who, outed of eminent Places, will rather be Nothing in the Church, then any thing leſſe then what they have been before. Edwine, King of Northumberland, ſlain.

The unhappy year.

61. After the death of King Edwine, his Kingdome of Northumberland was divided into two parts, both petty Kingdomes; Anno Dom. 632

1. Bernicia, reaching[a] from the River Tees to Edenburgh Frith, whereof Eanfrith was King.
2. Deira (whence (say some) Deirham, or Durham) lay betwixt Tees and Humber, whereof Osrick was King.

a Camden's Brit. pag. 797.

These both proved Apostates from the Christian Faith: and God in his justice let in Cadwald, King of the Britans, upon them, who slew them, harassed their Countrey, and made a lamentable Desolation, within the compasse of one year, without respect to Age or Sex; untill Oswald (bred and brought up in Scotland) next of the Bloud-Royall, came to be King of Northumberland, whom God sent to redeem that miserable Country from the hands of their Enemies, and many eminent Victories he obtained. 633

A lost year well found.

62. The fatall year, wherein so many Outrages were committed on the Apostate Northumberlanders, by Cadwald King of the Britans, is detested by all Saxon Chronologers. And therefore all the Annalists, and writers of Histories in that Age, by joynt-consent, universally resolved to damn and drown the Memoriall of that Annus infaustus (as they call it) Unlucky year, but made so by Ungodly men. Yea, they unanimously[b] agreed to allow those two Apostate Kings, no yeares reign in their Chronicles, adding the time (subtracted from them) to Oswald, their Christian Successour, accounting him to have reigned[c] nine yeares; which indeed were but eight of his own, and one of these Historians their Adoption. Yet is it no news even in Scripture it self, to bury the reign of Tyrants, under the Monument of a good Prince succeeding them. Thus when Ehud is[d] said to have judged the land fourscore year; those eighteen[e] yeares are included, wherein Eglon the Moabite oppressed Israel.

A victory given from heaven. 635

63. Amongst the many Victories atchieved by this Oswald, one most remarkable was gained by him near Hexam in Northumberland, against the Pagans, against whom he erected the Standard of the Crosse, in a place which time out of mind was called Heafen-feld (Haledon at this day,) by a Prolepsis, not answering the name thereof untill this time. Hence a Poet writing the life of Oswald;

Tunc primum scivit causam cur nomen haberet
Heafen-feld, hoc est, cœlestis campus, & illi
Nomen ab antiquo dedit appellatio Gentis
Præterita, tanquam belli præsaga futuri.

Then he began the reason first to know
Of Heafen-feld, why it was called so;
Nam'd by the Natives long since by forefight,
That in that field would hap an heavenly fight.

Thus it is generally reported, that the place nigh Lipsick, where the King of Sweden got one of his signal Victories, was, time out of mind, termed by the Dutch[f] Gots Acre, or, Gods ground. And thus, as Onesimus and Eutychus were so called from their Infancy, but never truely answered their Names, till after the[g] Conversion of the one, and Reviving of the[h] other: so Places (whether casually, or prophetically) have Names anciently imposed upon them, which are sometimes verified many Ages after.

But whether Pariſhes, as uſually underſtood for places bounded in regard of the Profits from the people therein, payable onely to a Paſtour incumbent there; I ſay, whether ſuch Pariſhes were extant in this Age, may well be queſtioned, as inconſiſtent with the Community of Eccleſiaſtick Profits, which then ſeemed joyntly enjoyed by the Biſhop and his Clergy.

A moroſe Preacher little edifieth.

69. No ſooner was Oſwald (whom we formerly mentioned) ſettled in his Kingdome of Northumberland, but his firſt Princely Care was, to provide Paſtours to inſtruct his People in Chriſtianity. In order whereunto he ſends into Scotland (where he had his own Education) for ſome Eminent Preachers. Unuſuall the Sun ſhould come out of the North, to enlighten the South, as here it came to paſſe. One Preacher was ſent him thence, whoſe Name we find not, but thus much of his Nature; that, being over-rigid and ſevere, his Sermons made no Impreſſion on his Engliſh Auditory. Hard with hard (ſaith the Proverb) makes no Wall: and no Wonder, if the ſpirituall Building went on no better, wherein the Auſterity and Harſhneſſe of the Paſtour, met with the Ignorance and Sturdineſſe of the People. His exemplary Life was a Pattern for all pious Paſtours. Firſt, he left to the Clergy, Saluberrimum abſtinentiæ, vel continentiæ exemplum; though we read not he vowed Virginity himſelf, or impoſed it on others. He lived as he taught; and, whatſoever the Bounty of Princes or great Perſons beſtowed on him, he gave to the Poor. He ſeldome travelled but on Foot; and, when invited to large Feaſts at Court, uſed to ariſe after a ſhort Refection, and betake himſelf to his Meditations. But whether thoſe words of [b] S[t]. Paul, ſpoken of his Country-men the Jews, in reference to their Stumbling at Chriſt, the Saviour of Mankind, be fitly appliable to Aidan, onely differing in an outward Ceremony, let others decide. True it is, this Aidan was a prime Champion of the Quartadecimans, as who had been brought up under, or with S[t]. Colme, in Ireland. The writer of the Life of this S[t]. Colme (let this be inſerted by the way) reports, how the ſaid Saint had a Revelation [c] of the Holy Ghoſt, which propheſied unto him of this Diſcord, which after many dayes ſhould ariſe in the Church, about the diverſity of the Feaſt of Eaſter. segnitia distabat, so much differed his life from the Laxinesse of our Age: taxing those of his Time for Neglect of the Scriptures. And the Ignorance bemoaned in his Age, continued and encreased after his Death.

637 73. When Aidan came first into England, he was not perfect in the Language of our Country. For although the Speech of the modern Southern-Scot be onely a Doricke Dialect of, no distinct Language from English; yet Aidan, who naturally spoke Irish, was not intelligible of his English Congregation. Wherefore King Oswald, a better Scotch-man (as bred amongst them) then Aidan was English-man, interpreted to the People, what the other preached unto them. Thus these two put together made a perfect Preacher. And although some will say, Sermons thus at the Second-hand must lose much of their Life and Lustre; yet the same Spirit working in both, the Ordinance proved effectuall to the Salvation of many Souls. The royall interpreter.

640 74. This year the first Lent was kept in England; conceive it in those Parts thereof which obeyed the Roman Celebration of Easter. Otherwise it is suspicious, that the Quartadecimans were no good Quadragesimarians, and no such conscientious Observers of Lent on the Romish Account. Surely, if people were taught in Lent to fast (as from Flesh, so) from a proud and false opinion of Meriting thereby, Policy would be well pleased, and Piety not offended at the Observing thereof; whilest Continent-Countries might keep it without any Losse to their Souls, and Islands with great Gain to their Estates. The first Lent in England.

642 75. Oswald, King of Northumberland, fighting at Maserfield (since Oswastree) in Shropshire, against Penda the Pagan Prince of Mercia, was overthrown, slain, and his Body most barbarously abused, and chopped in Pieces. Yea, it is observable that such Saxon Kings, which were first converted to Christianity, and such who were the most active Restorers of Religion after a generall Apostasie, commonly came to Violent Deaths, by the hands of Heathens. As, The ill successe of good Kings.

Edwine, first Christian King of Northumberland, slain by Pagan Penda, Anno 632.

Erpenwald, first Christian King of East-Angles, slain by his own People, Anno 639.

Peada, first Christian King of Mercia, slain by his own Wife, Anno 659.

Edelwald, or Ethelwald, first Christian King of Sussex, slain likewise.

Oswald, the most Religious Restorer of Christianity in Northumberland, slain Anno 642.

Anna, the most Pious King of the East-Angles, slain by Penda, Anno 654.

Edmond, the most Devout King of the East-Angles, martyred by the Danes, Anno 870.

Inquiring into the Causes hereof, we find; First, that the Lustre of their Lives shining before men, made them the fairer Mark for their malicious Enemies. Secondly, Satan, accounting them Traitours against his Kingdome of Darknesse, left no stone unturned, thereby to bring them to Temporall Destruction, the greatest Hurt which his Power could inflict. Thirdly, God, to try the Patience of his Infant-Church, acquainted them with Afflictions from their very Cradle. Such therefore are mistaken, who make Prosperity a note either of Piety in particular Persons, or Verity in a whole Church; seeing, take it one time with another, and it misseth the Mark oftner then it hits is. As for our Oswald, Legions of Miracles are attributed unto him after Death; all which we willingly omit, insisting onely on One as most remarkable.

76. The Story goes thus. On an Easter-day Oswald was sitting in his Palace at Dinner with Bishop Aidan: when in comes one of his Servants, and informeth him, that abundance of Poor people from all parts sate in the Streets, expecting some Almes for their Relief. Presently King Oswald commands, Oswald's hand said never to putrifie.

mands, not onely that the Meat set before him should be given them, but also that the large Silver-Charger holding the same should be broke in pieces, and (in want perchance of present Coin) parted betwixt them. Whereupon, Aidan laying hold on Oswald's right Hand (and that alone, we know, ought to be the [a] Almoner) May this hand (said he) [b] never be consumed: which is said accordingly to come to passe. So that when all the other Members of King Oswald's Body (torn asunder by his barbarous Enemies) were putrified, his right Hand always remained unconsumed. Anno Dom. 642

But it is not enough for us, that we have the Poets Pen for it; if we also had Oswald's Hand to shew for the same, much might be wrought on our belief herein.

Mystically true.

77. For my own part, I conceive that Aidan his words to Oswald, that his Hand should never wax old, or be consumed, were spiritually spoken, in a Mysticall Meaning, parallel to those Scripture-expressions; The Righteous shall be in [d] everlasting Remembrance, even, when the name of the Wicked shall [e] rot. The bountifull hand never consumes: neither actually, it never wastes nor empairs an Estate, God so ordering it, that the more he giveth the more he hath; nor passively, it is not consumed, the Acts thereof remaining in a perpetuall Memoriall here, and hereafter. But, grant this Miracle of Oswald's Hand literally true in the Latitude thereof; I desire any ingenuous Papist to consider the Time wherein it was acted. It was Easter-day, yea, such an Easter-day as was celebrated by the Quartadecimans, Aidan being present thereat, contrary to the time which the Canons of Rome appointed. Now, did not a Divine Finger in Oswald his miraculous Hand, point out this Day then to be truly observed? Let the Papists produce such another Miracle, to grace and credit their Easter Roman-stile, and then they say something to the Purpose.

What better Demonstration of his present being in perfect Blisse, then those many Miracles, which the Papists confidently report to be done by him after his Death, in curing Sick people of their severall Maladies? 644 79. This year Paulinus, late Arch-Bishop of York, since Bishop of Rochester, ended his Life; and one Ithamar succeeded him, born in Kent, and the first English-man Bishop, all being Forrainers before him. As he was the first of his Nation, I believe him the second of his Name, meeting with no moe save onely [b] Ithamar, the youngest Son of Aaron, High-Priest of Israel. The death of Paulinus. b Exod. 6. 23.

645 80. After King Oswald his Death, four Christian contemporary Kings flourished in England. First Oswy, King of Northumberland, more commendable for the Managing, then the Gaining of his Kingdome; except any will say, that no good Keeping can make amends for the ill Getting of a Crown, seeing he defeated Ethelwald (Oswald's Son, and) the true Heire thereof. Bede [c] termeth him Regem Christianissimum, The most Christian King; a Stile wherewith the present Majesty of France will not be offended, as which many years after was settled on his Ancestours. Long had this Oswy endeavoured in vain by Presents to purchase Peace from Penda, the Pagan King of Mercia, who miserably harassed his Country, and refused any Gifts, (though never so rich and great) which were tendered unto him. At last, saith my [d] Authour, Oswy resolved, We will offer our Presents to such a King, who is higher in Command, and humbler in his Courtesie, as who will not disdain to accept them. Whereupon he devoted his Daughter to God, in her perpetuall Virginity, and soon after obtained a memorable Conquest over his Enemies, and cleared the Country from his Cruelty. Most Christian King Oswy. c Lib. 3. c. 21. d Idem.

81. Secondly, Sigebert, King of Essex, and the Restorer of Religion in his Kingdome (which formerly had apostatized after the Departure of Mellitus) valiant, and pious, though taxed for his contumacious Company-keeping (contrary to his Confessours command) with an Excommunicated Count, in whose House he was afterward murdered by two Villains: Who, being demanded the Cause of their Cruelty, why they killed so harmlesse and innocent a Prince, had nothing to say for themselves, but they did it, because his [e] Goodnesse had done the Kingdome hurt; such his proneness to pardon Offenders, on their (though but seeming) Submission, that his Meekness made many Malefactours. But I hope, and believe, that the Heirs of Sigebert (though the Story be silent herein) finding his Fault, amended it in themselves, and exercised just Severity in the Execution of these two damnable Traitours. Sigebert the too-good. e Beda lib. 3. cap. 22.

654 82. Anna may be accounted the third Successour to Sigebert, and happy in a numerous and holy Off-spring. Yea, all his Children (save Firminus the eldest, slain with his Father in a Fight against Pagan Penda) were either Mitred, or Vailed, when Living; Sainted, and Shrined, when Dead: as Erkenwald, Bishop of London; Ethelred, or Audrey, and Sexburga, successively Foundresses and Abbesses of Elie, Withgith, a Nun therein; and Ethilburg, Abbesse of Beorking, nigh London. Anna happy in an holy issue.

656 83. Peada, Prince of Mercia, may make up the Quaternion, who married Alfrede, Daughter of Oswy King of Northumberland; and thereupon renouncing Paganisme, embraced Christianity, and propagated it in his Dominions. Indeed Penda, his Father, that Persecuter of Piety, was still alive (and survived two yeares after) persisting an Heathen till Death, but mollified to permit a Toleration of Christianity in his Subjects. Yea, Penda in his Old-age used an expression (which might have beseemed the Mouth of a better man) namely, That he hated not Christians, but onely such who [f] professed Christ's Faith, without his Works; accounting them contemptible, who pretended to Believe in God, without Obeying him. The conversion of the Mercians to Christianity under Prince Peada. f Beda lib. 3. cap. 21.

84. A brace of Brethren, both Bishops, both eminent for Learning and Religion, now appeared in the Church; so like in Name, they are oft mistaken in Authours one for another. Now, though it be pleasant for Brethren to live St. Cedde, and St. Chad.

live together in Vnity; yet it is not fit, by Errour they ſhould be jumbled together in Confuſion. Obſerve their Difference therefore. Anno Dom. 656

S^t. Cedde (in Latine Ceddus) I believe the elder, born at [a] London (where afterward he was Biſhop) bred in Holy Iſland, an active promoter in making the Eaſt-Saxons Converts (or rather Reverts) to the Faith. He is remembred in the Romiſh Kalendar, January the ſeventh.

S^t. Chad (in Latine Cedda) born in [b] Northumberland, bred likewiſe in Holy Iſland, and Scholar to Aidanus. He was Biſhop of Lichfield; a milde, and modeſt man, of whom more hereafter. His death is celebrated in the Kalendar March the ſecond, and the Duſt of his Tombe is by Papiſts reported to cure all Diſeaſes [alike] in Man and Beaſt. I believe it might make the dumb to ſee, and the lame to ſpeak.

The later of theſe was, as the Longeſt Liver, ſo the moſt eminent in his Life; who made many Chriſtians, and amongſt the reſt VVulfade and Ruſine, Sons to Wulphere King of Mercia, ſucceeding Peada therein, who was ſuddenly ſlain, and his untimely Death was a great Loſs to Religion.

Fridona firſt Engliſh Arch-biſhop.

85. Look we now on the See of Canterbury, where (to our comfort) we have gotten one of our own Country-men into the place, Fridona a Saxon. Yet, for the more State of the buſineſſe, he aſſumed the name of Deus-dedit. We know, Arch-Biſhops of his See are termed Alterius orbis Papa, and ſuch changing of Names was faſhionable with the Popes. He was conſecrated by Ithamar alone, Biſhop of Rocheſter, the firſt Engliſh Biſhop conſecrating the firſt Engliſh Arch-Biſhop. Let no Sophiſter cavill with his thread-bare Maxime, Nihil dat quod non habet, and therefore a ſingle Biſhop could not conferre Archiepiſcopal Power, but leave it to the Canon-Lawyers, to decide what may be done in caſe of Extremity. Mean time, how cauſeleſſe is the Caption of the Papiſts [c] at the Conſecration of Matthew Parker, becauſe no Arch-Biſhop (though four Biſhops) was preſent thereat. Seeing, though an Arch-Biſhop be requiſite ad Dignitatem, Biſhops will ſuffice ad Honeſtatem; and a ſingle Biſhop (as [d] Ithamar here) may be effectuall ad eſſentiam of an Archiepiſcopal Conſecration. No wonder therefore if Evagrius was acknowledged a legitimate Biſhop by the [e] Pope himſelf, though contrary to the Rigour of the Canon, conſecrated by [f] Paulinus alone. Deus-dedit anſwered his Name (A good Arch-Biſhop is Gods Gift) and for nine yeares and more, ruled the Church to his great Commendation.

Wolphere's murther of his two Sons.

86. A barbarous Murther was committed by Wolphere, King of Mercia, who 662 underſtanding that his two Sons, Wulfade and Ruſine, had embraced Chriſtianity, cruelly ſlew them with his own Hands. But afterwards, repenting of ſo foul a Fact, he himſelf turned Chriſtian; and in Teſtimony thereof, finiſhed the fair Fabrick of the Monaſtery at Peterborough, begun by Peada his Brother. The whole Story thereof was, till lately, ſet forth in Painting, and Poetry (ſuch as it was) in the Glaſs-windows, round about the Cloiſters of Peterborough.

The making of Glaſſe brought firſt into England.

87. And now, having fallen on the mention of Glaſſe, be it ſeaſonably remembred, that juſt at this time one Benault, a forrain Biſhop (but of what place I find not) brought the Myſtery of making Glaſſe into England, to the great Beautifying of our Churches and Houſes; the Eyes being the Grace of the Body, as Windows are of Buildings. I conceive, his Invention was White Glaſſe alone, more ancient then Painted Glaſſe in this Iſland, as Plain-ſong is much ſeniour to all Deſcanting, and running of Diviſion.

Scotiſh Biſhops diſſent from others in keeping Eaſter.

88. The Paroxiſme continued and encreaſed, betwixt the Scotiſh Biſhops (headed, after Aidan's Death, by Finan, Biſhop of Holy-Iſland) and ſuch who celebrated Eaſter after the Roman Rite. The later ſo bitterly deteſted the forme Anno Dom. 662 former, that they would not receive Conſecration of them, or Impoſition of Hands; as if their very Fingers ends were infected with Schiſme, for diſſenting from Rome. Yea, they would neither give the Sacrament of the Euchariſt to them, nor receive it from them: and yet they never quarrelled at, or queſtioned the validity of Baptiſme conferred by them; ſeeing Biſhop Finan chriſtened the King of the Eaſt-Saxons, and all his Subjects. Somewhat more moderate were the Scots, or Quartadecimans, in their Cariage to the other, ſeeing S^t. Chad (Scotized in his Judgement) refuſed not Conſecration from Wyni, Biſhop of Wincheſter, though one of the contrary Opinion.

89. Nor was this Controverſie confined to Cloiſters and Colledges, but derived it ſelf from the Kings Court, down into private Families. Thus Oſwy, King of Northumberland, was of the Scotiſh perſwaſion, whileſt his Queen and eldeſt Son were of the Romiſh Opinion, in Celebration of Eaſter. One Board would not hold them, whom one Bed did contain. It fell out ſo ſometimes, that the Husband's Palm-Sunday was the Wife's Eaſter-day; and in other Families, the Wife faſted, and kept Lent ſtill, whileſt her Husband feaſted, and obſerved Eaſter. Say not, that Wife deſerved to faſt alwayes, who in ſo indifferent a Ceremony would not conform to her Husband's Judgement. For Conſciences, in ſuch kinds, are to be led, not drawn. Great was the Diſturbance in every great Family; onely the Poor gained by the Difference, cauſing a Duplicate of Feſtivalls, two Eaſters being kept every year in the ſame Houſe.

This controverſy ſpreads into private families.

663 90. To compoſe this Controverſie (if poſſible) a Councill was called at Streanch-Hall (now Whitby in Yorkſhire) by the procurement of S^t. Hilda, Abbeſs therein. Here appeared, amongſt many others,

A Councell is called to compoſe this controverſie.

For the Romiſh Eaſter,	Moderatours.	For the Scotiſh Eaſter.
VVilfride, an Abbot, a zealous Champion. Romanus, a Prieſt, very hot in the Quarrel: And others.	Hilda, the Abbeſs of Streanch-Hall. S. Cedd, Biſhop of London, propending to the Scotiſh, but not throughly perſwaded.	S^t. Coleman, Biſhop of Holy-Iſland, who ſucceeded Finan in that place.

But Baronius and Binnius will in no caſe allow this for a Councill (though elſewhere extending that name to meaner Meetings) onely they call it a Collation, becauſe (forſooth) it wanted ſome Councill-Formalities, all Biſhops not being ſolemnly ſummoned, but onely ſome Voluntiers appearing therein. Beſides, as there was ſomething too little, ſo ſomething too much for a Canonicall Councill; Hilda, a Woman, being Moderatreſſe therein; which ſeemed irregular.

91. In this Councill, or Collation (call it which you pleaſe) after much arguing pro and con, VVilfride at laſt knockt all down with this Argument; That the Romiſh Celebration of Eaſter was founded on the Practice of S^t. Peter, Prince of the Apoſtles, and Porter of Heaven. King Oſwy hearing this was affrighted, who had rather anger all the other eleven Apoſtles, then offend S^t. Peter, one ſo high in Power and Place; for fear (as he ſaid) leſt coming to Heaven-gate, S^t. Peter ſhould deny him a Caſt of his Office, and refuſe to let him into Happineſſe. S^t. Coleman, being on the other ſide, was angry, that ſo ſlight an Argument had made ſo deep an Impreſſion on the King's Credulity. And, to manifeſt his Diſtaſte, after the Councill was broken up, carried all thoſe of his own Opinion home with him into Scotland. One Tuda ſucceeded him in his Biſhoprick of Holy-Iſland, the firſt of that See that conformed himſelf in this Controverſie to the Romiſh Church, and died in the ſame year, of the Plague.

Wilfride his prevailing argument.

92. As for VVilfride, he was well rewarded for his Paines in this Councill, being preſently promoted to be Biſhop of York, which, ſince Paulinus his Death, was no longer an Arch-Biſhop's, but a plain Biſhop's See. But, though appointed for the place by King Oſwy, he refuſed Conſecration from any Engliſh Biſhops, being all irregular, as conſecrated by the ſchiſmaticall Scots; onely VVyni, late Biſhop of VVincheſter, now of London, was ordained canonically, but lately he had contracted juſt Shame for his Simony, in buying his Biſhoprick. Over goes VVilfride therefore to Rome for Conſecration, and ſtayes there ſo long, that in his Abſence the King put S^t. Chad into the Biſhoprick of York. The writer of VVilfride's Life complains lowdly hereof; Anno Dom. 663

His intended, but diſappointed preferment.

Audacter ſponſam vivo rapuere marito.
Boldly in the Husband's life,
Away from him they took his Wife.

But, by the Poets leave, York was but eſpouſed, not married to VVilfride, whileſt he was in England: and after his going over beyond-Sea, he ſtayed ſo long, that his Church preſumed him dead, and herſelf a Maid-Widow, which lawfully might receive another Husband. At laſt VVilfride returning home had York reſtored unto him, and S^t. Chad was removed to the new-founded Biſhoprick of Lichfield.

Abbeſs Hilda. a 2 Chr. 34. 22.

93. The Abbeſs Hilda, whom we mentioned before, was like another Huldah, which lived in the [a] Colledge, ſuperiour to moſt of her Sex in Learning, inferiour to none in Religion. Monks aſcribe it to her Sanctity, that ſhe turned many Serpents in that Country into Stones. Plenty of which Stones are found at this day about VVhitby, the place of her Aboad, having the Shape of Serpents, but moſt headleſſe; as the Tale is truthleſſe, relating it to her Miraculous Operation. Who knows not, but that at Alderly in Gloceſterſhire, there are found Stones reſembling Cockles, or Periwincles, in a place far from the Sea? which are eſteemed by the Learned the Gameſome Work of Nature, ſometimes pleaſed to diſport it ſelf, and poſe us by propounding ſuch Riddles unto us.

A miracle imputed to her holineſs.

94. Some impute it alſo to Hilda her Holineſſe, that Wilde-geeſe, when flying over the Grounds near her Convent, fell down to the ground, as doing Homage to the Sanctity thereof. As the Credit of the Reporters hath converted wiſe men to believe the Thing: ſo they juſtly remain incredulous, that it proceedeth from any Miracle, but ſecret Antipathy. But as Philoſophers, when poſed in Nature, and proſecuted to render Reaſons of her Myſteries, took Sanctuary at Occulta Qualitas: Monks in the ſame kind make their Refuge to the Shrine of ſome Saint, attributing all they cannot anſwer, to His, or Her miraculous Operation. Yea ſometimes ſuch is Monkiſh Impudence, falſely to aſſign that to a Saint (though all Chronologies proteſt againſt the Poſſibility thereof) which is the plain and pregnant effect of Nature. Witneſſe when they [b] write, that Richard de la VVich, Biſhop of Chiceſter, with his fervent Prayers obtained, that the VViches, or ſalt Springs, ſhould boil out of the earth in Durtwich in VVorceſterſhire; which are mentioned, and deſcribed by ancient Authours dead before the Cradle of the ſaid Richard de la VVich was made.

Theodorus Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

95. Look we now on the See of Canterbury, and there after the Death of the laſt Arch-Biſhop (and four yeares Vacancy) we find that Church hath changed her Latine into Greek, I mean, dead Deus-dedit, into Theodorus his Succeſſour, put in by the Pope. This Theodorus was a Grecian by Name, and Nation, fellow-Citizen with S^t. Paul, born in [c] Tarſus in Cilicia; and herein like him, that he [d] ſpake with Tongues more then they all, had more skill in learned Languages then all his Brethren, Biſhops of England, in that Age. Yea, as Children when young, are permitted to Play; but when of ſome yeares, are ſent to learn their Book: ſo hitherto the Infant-Church of England may be ſaid to have loſt time for matter of Learning, and now Theodorus ſet it firſt to School, brought Books to it, and it to Books; erecting a well-furniſhed Library, and teaching his Clergie how to make uſe thereof. 668 all means he might ſave ſome. Whereas he moſt rigourouſly preſſed Conformity to Rome, in the Obſervation of Eaſter: and to that purpoſe a Councill was called at Herad-ford, now Hartford, and not Hereford, as judicious and induſtrious Biſhop Godwine (partiall to the place whereof he himſelf was Biſhop) doth miſtake it. Here Eaſter was ſettled after the Romiſh Rite; and we are not ſorry for the ſame, willing rather it ſhould be any way ordered, then that the Reader (with whom I ſympathize, more then grutch my own Pains) ſhould be troubled any longer with ſuch a ſmall-great Controverſie, low in it's own Merit, but heightned with the Spleen and Paſſion of ſuch as proſecuted it. In this Synod nine other Articles were concluded of, as they follow here in order, out of Bede, [a] as Stapleton himſelf hath tranſlated them.

a Lib. 4. cap. 5.

1. That no Biſhop ſhould have ought to do in anothers Dioceſe, but be contented with the Charge of the people committed unto him.
2. That no Biſhop ſhould moleſt, or any wiſe trouble ſuch Monaſteries as were conſecrated, and given to God, nor violently take from them ought that was theirs.
3. That Monks ſhould not go from place to place, that is to ſay, from one Monaſtery to another, unleſſe by the leave of their own Abbot; but ſhould continue in the Obedience which they promiſed at the time of their Converſion, and entring into Religion.
4. That none of the Clergie forſaking his own Biſhop, ſhould run up and down where he liſt, nor when he came any whither, ſhould be received without Letters of Commendation from his Dioceſan. And, if that he be once received, & will not return, being warned and called, both the Receiver and he that is Received ſhall incurre the Sentence of Excommunication.
5. That ſuch Biſhops and Clerks as are Strangers, be content with ſuch Hoſpitality as is given them; and that it be lawfull for none of them to execute any Office of a Prieſt, without the permiſſion of the Biſhop in whoſe Dioceſe they are known to be.
6. That whereas by the ancient Decrees, a Synod and Convocation ought to be aſſembled twice a year; yet becauſe diverſe Inconveniences do happen among us, it hath ſeemed good to us all, that it ſhould be aſſembled once a year, the firſt day of Auguſt, at the place called Cloſeſhooh.
7. That no Biſhop ſhould ambitiouſly preferre himſelf before another, but ſhould all acknowledge the time, and order of their Conſecration.
8. That the Number of Biſhops ſhould be encreaſed, the number of Chriſtian folk waxing daily greater; but hereof at this time we ſaid no further.
9. That no man commit Advoutry nor Fornication; that no man forſake his own Wife, but for onely Fornication, as the Holy Goſpel teacheth. And, if any man put away his Wife being lawfully married unto him, if he will be a right Chriſtian man, let him be joyned to none other: but let him ſo continue ſtill ſole, or elſe be reconciled again to his own Wife.

I wonder, no mention herein of ſettling the Tonſure of Prieſts (a Controverſie running parallel with that of Eaſter) according to the Roman Rite. To conclude, let not the Reader expect the like exemplification of all Articles in following Synods, ſo largely as here we have preſented them. For this Synod Stapleton [b] calls the firſt of the Engliſh-Nation (underſtand him, whoſe Canons are completely extant) and therefore more Patrimony is due to the Heir and Eldeſt Son, then to the younger Brethren, who ſhall be content to be confined to their Penſions, I mean, to have their Articles not exemplified, but epitomized hereafter.

b In his tranſlatione of Bede fol. 118.

He envieth Wilfride Bishop of York.

97. Theodorus, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, beheld VVilfride, Bishop of York (one of great Parts, and greater Passions) with envious eyes; and therefore, to abate his Power, he endeavoured that the Diocese of York might be divided. VVilfride offended hereat goes over to Rome to impede the Project, and by the way is tossed with a grievous Tempest. It is an ill wind which bloweth no man Profit. He is cast on the Shoar of Freezland in Belgia, where the Inhabitants, as yet Pagans, were by his Preaching converted to Christianity. This may be observed in this Wilfride, his πάθη were better then his ἔργα; his casuall and occasionall were better then his intentionall Performances (which shews plainly, that Providence acted more vigourously in him, then his own Prudence:) I mean, when at Ease in Wealth, at home, he busied himself in Toyes and Trifles of Ceremonious Controversies; but when (as now, and afterwards) a Stranger, and little better then an Exile, he effectually promoted the Honour and Glory of God. Anno Dom. 678

The South-Saxons (as formerly the Frezlanders) converted by Wilfride.

98. And as it is observed of Nightingales, that they sing the sweetest, when farthest from their Nests: so this VVilfride was most diligent in God's Service, when at the greatest distance from his own Home. For though returning into England, he returned not unto York, but stayed in the Pagan Kingdome of the South-Saxons, who also, by God's Blessing on his Endeavours, were perswaded to embrace the Christian Faith. 679

The first, the last.

99. These South-Saxons, of all the seven Kingdomes, were the last which submitted themselves to the perfect Freedome of God's Service, and yet their Country was in Situation next to Kent, where the Gospel was first planted. Herein it was verified, Many that are first, shall be last; and the last, first. Yea, the Spirit, which bloweth where it listeth, observeth no visible Rules of Motion; but sometimes taking no notice of those in the middle, reacheth to them which are farthest off. Indeed Edilwalch their King, was a little before Christened by the perswasion of VVolphere, King of Mercia (who was his Godfather, and at his baptizing gave him for a Gift the Isle of VVight, & provinciam [a] Meanuarorum in gente Occidentalium Saxonum) but his Country still remained in Paganisme. And although Dicul, a Scot, with some six of his Brethren, had a small Monastery at Bosenham in Sussex; yet they, rather enjoying themselves, then medling with others, were more carefull of their own Safety, then their Neighbours Conversion. And indeed, the Pagans neither heeded their Life, nor minded their Doctrine.

[a] Bede lib. 4. cap. 13.

Pagan obstinacy punished with famine.

100. However, these South-Saxons paid for their Stubbornesse, in standing out so long against the Gospel; for they alwayes were a miserable people, and at this present afflicted with a great Famine, caused by three years Drought; so that fourty men in a row, holding hand in hand, used to throw themselves into the Sea, to avoid the misery of a Lingering Death. In this wofull Condition did VVilfride, Bishop of York, find them, when he first preached the Gospel unto them; and on that very day wherein he baptized them (as if God from Heaven had powred water into the Font) he obtained store of Rain, which procured great Plenty. Observe (though I am not so ill-natured as to wrangle with all Miracles) an Apish Imitation of Elijah (who carried the Key of Heaven at his Girdle, to lock, or unlock it by his Prayer:) onely Elijah gave Rain after three yeares and six moneths, VVilfride after bare three yeares; it being good manners to come a little short of his Betters.

South-Saxons first taught to fish.

101. Also (saith my [b] Authour) he taught the people (who till then knew not how to catch any Fishes, but Eeles) how to take all kind of Fish in the Sea, and Rivers. Strange! that thus long they should live in Ignorance of so usefull a Trade, being (though Infidels) no Idiots: especially seeing mens Capacities come very soon to be of age to understand their own Profit; and the Examples of their Neighbours might have been Tutours unto them.

[b] Bede ibidem

Anno Dom. 680

But Wilfride afterward wanted no Hearers, People flocking unto him; as when Christ made his Auditours his Guests, they followed after him, because they ate of the Loaves, and were filled. The Priests Eappa, Padda, Bruchelin, and Oidda, assisted in baptizing the common people; and King Edilwalch gave Wilfride a piece of Land, containing eighty nine Families, at Selsey, where he erected a Bishops See, since translated to Chichester.

A double good deed.

102. Amongst other good deeds, Wilfride freed two hundred and fifty men and maid-Servants, both out of Soul-Slavery, and Bodily Bondage. For, having baptized them, he procured their Liberty of their Masters, which they (no doubt) chearfully embraced, according to S^t. Paul's [a] counsel, Art thou called a Servant? care not for it: but if thou maist be made free, use it rather. And thus by God's Blessing, in the space of eighty and two yeares (from five hundred ninety seven, to six hundred seventy nine) was the whole Saxon Heptarchie converted to Christianity, and did never again relapse to Paganisme.

a 1 Cor. 7. 21.

Godfathers used to men of mature Age.

103. Mention being [b] lately made of Wolphere, the Mercian King, his being Godfather unto Edilwalch, King of the South-Saxons, some will much admire, that one arrived at yeares of Maturity, able to render an Account of his Faith, should have a Godfather, which (with Swadling-clouts) they conceive belong to Infants alone. Yet this was very fashionable in that Age: not onely for the greater state, in Kings, Princes, and Publick Persons; but, in majorem cautelam, even amongst Private people. For such Susceptors were thought to put an Obligation on the Credits (and by reflection on the Consciences) of new Christians (whereof too many in those dayes were baptized out of civile Designes) to walk worthy of their Profession, were it but to save their Friends Reputation, who had undertaken for their Sincerity therein.

Cadwallader founds a Welsh Hospital at Rome.

104. Cadwallader, the last King of Wales, wearied out with Warre, Famine, and Pestilence, left his own Land, and (with some small Treasure) fled to Alan, King of Little Britain. But Princes are welcome in forrain parts, when Pleasure (not Need) brings them thither; or, whilest they are so considerable in themselves, as to command their own Entertainment. Whereas this distressed King his Company was beheld not onely as Useless, and Expensive, but Dangerous, as likely to draw with it the Displeasure of the Saxon Kings (his Enemies) on his Entertainer. But it seems, Cadwallader had better Friends in Heaven, then any he found on Earth, if it be true what confidently is reported, that an [c] Angel appeared unto him, advising him to go to Rome, there to take on him the Habite of a Monk, and spend the remainder of his Life. Here he purchased Lands, all by the foresaid Angelicall Direction, built an House (after his Death converted into an Hospitall) and by his Will so ordered it, that certain Priests of his own Country should for ever have the Rule and Government thereof. These were to entertain all Welsh-Pilgrims with Meat, Drink, and Lodging, for the space of a moneth, and to give them a certain Summe of Money for a viaticum at their Departure, towards their Charges in returning to their own Country.

105. Many a year did this Hospitall flourish in good Plenty, till the middle of Queen Elisabeth her Reign; when fair the Revenues belonging, and few the Welsh-Pilgrims repairing thereto. This made Father Parsons, with the rest of our English Iesuites, cast an envious eye thereon, who would never be quiet, untill they had obtained of Pope Gregory the 13. to eject the old British, and unite this Hospitall to the English Colledge at Rome. This, no doubt, stirred up the Welsh bloud of D^r. Morris, D^r. Lewes, D^r. Smith, M^r. Griffith, who in vain stickled to the utmost of their Power, to continue this Foundation to their Country-men. In my poor Opinion, seeing an Angel is said to direct in the Founding and endowing of this Hospitall, it was but fit that either the ſame Angel appearing again, or ſome other of an higher (or at leaſt equall Dignity and Degree, in the Celeſtiall Hierarchie) ſhould have altered the Uſe, and confirmed the Alienation thereof. But of this more [a] hereafter. Anno Dom.

a Vide Annum Domini 1569. The Eccleſiaſticall Laws of King Ina.

106. Ina, King of the VVeſt-Saxons, about this time ſet forth his Saxon Laws, tranſlated into Engliſh by M^r. Lambert. Eleven of his Laws concerned Church-matters; Kings in that Age underſtanding their own Power, the Pope having not as yet intrenched on their juſt Prerogative. Theſe Conſtitutions were concluded on by the King, through the Perſwaſion of Kenred his Father, Hedda and Erkenwald his Biſhops, and all his Aldermen and wiſe Senatours of the People. Let none wonder that Ina, in his Preface to theſe Laws, termeth Erkenwald His Biſhop, whoſe See of London was properly under the King of the Eaſt-Saxons. For he might call him his in Affection, (whoſe Dioceſe was in another King's Poſſeſſion;) Ina highly honouring Erkenwald for his Piety, and therefore inviting him (forward of himſelf to all Goodneſſe) to be preſent at the paſſing of theſe Laws. Beſides, [b] ſome aſſign Surrey as part of the Kingdome of the VVeſt-Saxons: probably at this preſent Ina's Puiſſance ſallied over the Thames, and London might be reduced into his Honorary Protection. 2. That every Infant be baptized within thirty dayes after his Birth, on the Penalty of his Parents forfeiting thirty ſhillings; and if the Child chance to die before he be baptized, all his Eſtate.
3. If the Servant doth any Work on the Lords day at the Maſters Command, the Servant ſhall be [d] acquitted, and the M^r. pay thirty ſhillings. But if he did that work without his Maſters Command, let him be beaten, or redeem it with Money, &c. A Prieſt offending in this kind was to be double puniſhed.
4. The Firſt-fruits of Seeds were to be paid to the Church on the Feaſt of S^t. Martin, on the Penalty of fourty ſhillings, beſides the payment of the ſaid Firſt-fruits twelve times over.
5. If any deſerving Stripes ſhall flie to a Church, his Stripes ſhall be forgiven him. If guilty of a Capitall Crime, he ſhall enjoy his Life, but make Recompence according to what is right and due.
6. Fighters in the King's Court, to loſe their Goods, and to be at the King's Mercy for their Life. Such as fight in the Church, to pay 120 ſhillings. If in the houſe of an Alderman, 60 ſhil. &c.
7. Such as falſifie their Witneſſe or Pawn in the preſence of the Biſhop, to pay 120. ſhillings.
8. Severall Penalties of Money impoſed on thoſe that ſhould kill a Stranger.
9. Such as are breakers of the Peace in the Town of the King or Arch-Biſhop, puniſhable with one hundred and twenty ſhillings; in the Town of an Alderman, eight ſhillings; in the Town of one of the King's Servants, ſixty ſhillings, &c.
10. Firſt-fruits of all Seeds were to be paid by Houſe-keepers as due to that place wherein they themſelves were reſident on the day of Chriſt's Nativity.
11. What Summes of Money are to be paid by ſuch who have killed their God-fathers or God-ſons.

107. A great Council (for ſo it is tituled) was held at Becanceld by Withred, King of Kent, and Bertuald, Arch-Biſhop of Britain (ſo called therein) underſtand him of Canterbury; wherein many things were concluded in favour of the Church. Five Kentiſh Abbeſſes, namely, Mildred, Etheldred, Æbe, Wilnolde, and Hereſwide, were not onely preſent, but ſubſcribed their Names and Croſſes to the Conſtitutions concluded therein. And we may obſerve, that their Subſcriptions are not onely placed before and above all Presbyters, but alſo above [a] Botred a Biſhop, (but of what Dioceſe not ſpecified) preſent in this great Council. It ſeems it was the Courteſy of England to allow the upper hand to the weaker Sex, as in their Siting, ſo in their Subſcriptions.

108. We will conclude this Century with the miraculous Holineſs of Ethelreda, or S[t]. Audre: profeſſing at firſt to be afraid to adventure on ſo high a Subject, diſheartened in reading a Popiſh Authour to rant ſo in her Commendation. "Let [b] the fabulous Greeks talk no more of their chaſt "Penelope, who in the twenty yeares abſence of her Husband Vlyſſes lived "continently, in deſpite of the tempting Importunity of many noble Woers: "and let the proud Romans ceaſe to bragg of their fair Lucretia, that "choſe rather to become the bloudy inſtrument of her own Death, then "to live after the violent Raviſhment of her Honour: and let all the world "turn their Minds to admire, and their Tongues and Pens to ſound the "Praiſes of the Chriſtian Vertues and Chaſtity of our bleſſed Ethelreda, &c. But leaving the Bubbles of his Rhetorick to break of themſelves, on ſerious conſiderations we are ſo far from admiring, 'tis more then we can do to excuſe this S[t]. Audre, as her Story is reported.

b The Flowers of the Saints written by Hierome Porter.

109. This Audre was Daughter to Anna King of the Eaſt-Angles, and from her Infancy a great affecter of Virginity. However, ſhe was over-perſwaded to marry one Tombert, Prince of the Fen-land, with whom ſhe lived three yeares in the Bands of unexperienced Wedlock, both, by mutuall Conſent, abſtaining from Carnal Copulation. After his Death, ſo importunate were her Friends with her, that ſhe married with Egfride King of Northumberland.

Twice a Wife, ſtill a Maid.

110. Strange, that being once free, ſhe would again entangle her ſelf; and ſtranger, that being married, ſhe utterly refuſed to afford her Husband what the [c] Apoſtle calls due Benevolence, though he by importunate Intreaties requeſted the ſame. Being Benevolence, it was Uncharitable to deny it; being Due, it was Unjuſt to detain it; being both, ſhe was uncharitable and unjuſt in the ſame action. Was not this a Mockage of Marriage (if in that Age counted a Sacrament) ſolemnly to give her ſelf unto her Husband, whom formerly ſhe had paſſed away by a previous Vow of Virginity? At laſt ſhe wreſted leave from her Husband to live a Nun in the Monaſtery of Ely, which ſhe built and endowed. After her entrance therein ſhe ever wore Woollen, and never [d] Linen about her: which whether it made her more Holy, or leſſe Cleanly, let others decide. Our [e] Authour tells us, that in Memory of her, our Engliſh Women are wont to wear about their Necks a certain Chain made of fine ſmall Silk, which they call Ethelred's Chain. I muſt profeſſe my ſelf not ſo well acquainted with the Sex, as either to confute or confirm the truth thereof. At laſt ſhe died of a Swelling in her Throat, and was buried in Ely.

But alaſs, the ſoft and fenny Ground of Ely Iſle (where ſcarce a ſtone bigg enough to bury a Worm under it) afforded not a Tombe-ſtone for that purpoſe. Being thus at a Loſſe, their want [f] is ſaid 696 to be miraculouſly ſupplyed; for under the ruined Walls of Grantcheſter, or Cambridge, a Coffin was found, with a Cover correſpondent, both of white Marble, which did fit her Body ſo exactly, as if (which one may believe was true) it was made for it. Herein was Audre's Corps ſtately inſhrined, and for many yeares ſuperſtitiouſly adored.

Confuted by a credible witnesse.

112. But Io. Cajus, Fellow of Gonvile-Hall, within ten Miles of Ely, at the Dissolution of Abbyes, being reputed no great Enemy to the Romish Religion, doth on his own Knowledge report, Anno Dom. 696

In his Histor. Cantab. lib. 1. pag. 8.

Although the blindnesse of that Age bred Admiration therein: yet when the Tombe was pluckt down in the Reign of King Henry the eighth, it was found made of common Stone, & not of white Marble, as Bede reporteth.

Thus was her Tombe degraded & debased one degree, which makes the Truth of all the rest to be suspected. And if all Popish Miracles were brought to the Test, they would be found to shrink from Marble to common Stone, nay from Stone to Dirt and untempered Morter.

The Council at Berghamsteed.

113. It is needlesse here to insert the Canons concluded on at Berghamsteed, by Withred King of Kent, and Bertuald Arch-bishop of Canterbury. First, because Topicall, confined to that small Kingdome. Secondly, hard to be understood, as depending on some Saxon Law-terms, whereon Conjectures are the best Comment. Thirdly, such as are understood are obsolete; viz. If a Master gave his Servant Flesh to eat on a Fasting-day, his Servant was on the Refusall, and Complaint thereof, to be made [a] free. Some punishments therein were very absurdly proportioned; viz. Six shillings or a Whipping was to be paid by that Servant who ate flesh on Fasting-dayes: and just the same Penalty was inflicted on him if convicted of offering Oblations to the Devil: as if equall their Offences. And be it remembred, that this Council was kept cum viris quibusdam Militaribus, some Souldiers being present thereat; and yet the fifth Canon therein was made to punish Adultery in men of their Profession.

Wilfride restored to York, and outed again.

114. As for Bishop Wilfride, whom lately we mentioned so active about the removall of S*t*. Audre's Corps, he was about this time restored to his Bishoprick of York. Whereupon he fairly quitted the Bishoprick of Selsey, which Edilwalch, and after Cedwall, Kings of Sussex, bestowed upon him, and returned to York. It is much this Rowling Stone should gather so much Mosse, and get Wealth enough to found two Monasteries; who sometimes had three Bishopricks together, York, Lindisfern, and Hagulsted; sometimes none at all, living many yeares together in Exile. And indeed he continued not long in York, but being expelled thence again, was for a time made Bishop of Leicester. Nor was the King of Northumberland content with his bare Expulsion, but also he would have him confesse the same Legall, and resign it according to the late Decrees which the Arch-bishop of Canterbury had made against him. But more hereof, God willing, in the next Century.

701 PAinfull VVilfride was no sooner out of one Trouble, but he was engaged in another. Hereupon[a] Harpsfield calls him the Athanasius of that Age; onely saith he, that Father was persecuted by Hereticks, and this VVilfride by Catholicks. He might have added, that Athanasius was troubled for Essentiall and Doctrinall Truths, whilest VVilfride was vexed about Ceremonious and Circumstantiall matters. And now Alfride, who succeeded Egfride, King of Northumberland, powerfully opposed him, being the paramount Prince, and in effect Monarch of the Saxon Heptarchie. For, as we have noted before, amongst these seven Kings, as amongst the Planets, there was ever one Sun that out-shined all the rest. This Alfride, joyning with Bertuald Arch-bishop of Canterbury, called a [b] Council, and summoned Wilfride, who appeared there accordingly. But being demanded, whether he would obey the Decrees of Theodore late Arch-bishop of Canterbury, he warily returned; That he was willing to obey them so farre as they were consonant to the Holy Canons. This Answer was not satisfactory to his Adversaries, as having in it too little of a Grant, to please them, and yet not enough of a Deniall, to give them a just Offence. Then they sought by fair means to perswade him, because much Trouble had arose in the Church about him, voluntarily to resign under hand and seal his Possessions, and Arch-Bishoprick; affirming, it would be a glorious act, to preferre the Publick Good before his Private Profit. But Wilfride persisted loyall to his own Innocence, affirming, such a Cession might be interpreted a Confession of his Guiltinesse; and appealed from that Councill to his Holinesse: and this Wilfride persecuted afresh by Alfride King of Northumberland.

Wilfride appealeth to Rome, and is acquitted.

2. They accused him of Contumacy, that he had contemptuously denied Canonicall Obedience to the Arch-bishop of Canterbury. He cleared himself, and complained that he had been unjustly deprived, and that two Monasteries of his own Founding (Rippon and Hexham) were violently detained from him. No fewer then seventy severall [a] Councils, (understand them so many severall Meetings of the Conclave) were assembled in four moneths, and employed onely, or chiefly about deciding of this Difference: belike there were Intricacies therein more then are specified in Authours (Knots to employ so many cunning Fingers to unty them) or else the Court of Rome was well at Leasure. The Sentence of Pope John the seventh passed on his side, and his Opposers were sent home with Blame and Shame, whilest Wilfride returned with Honour, managing his Successe with much Moderation; equally commendable, that his Innocence kept him from Drooping in Affliction, and his Humility from Insulting in Prosperity.

He is at last restored, and dyeth in peace.

3. Bertuald, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, humbly entertained the Popes Letters in behalf of Wilfride, and welcomed his Person at his Return. But Alfride, King of Northumberland, refused to re-seat him in his Bishoprick, stoutly maintaining, [b] that 't was against reason to communicate with a man twice condemned by the Council of England, notwithstanding all Apostolick Commands in favour of him. But soon after he fell dangerously sick, a consequent of, and therefore caused by his former Stubbornesse, as those that construe all Events to the advantage of the Roman See, interpret this a Punishment on his Obstinacy. Supplied with Sickneſſe, he confessed his Fault; and so Wilfride was restored to his Place: whose Life was like an April-day (and a Day thereof is a Moneth for Variety) often interchangeably fair and foul; and after many Alterations, he set fair in full Lustre at last. Being fourty five yeares a Bishop, in the seventie-sixth year of his age, he died, and was buried in his Monastery at Rippon. And as he had been a great Traveller, when living; so his Bones took one Journey after his death, being translated by [c] Odo Arch-bishop of Canterbury, from Rippon to Canterbury; in Reparation (perchance) for those many Wrongs, which the Predecessours of Odo had done to this Wilfride. Let not therefore the Papists vaunt immoderately of the Unity of their Church, neither let them uncharitablie insult on our unhappy Differences; seeing by the confession of their own Authours, there was Digladiabile Odium, Hatred (as one may say) even to Daggers-drawing, betwixt Wilfride, and certain principall Persons, conceived signall for Sanctity in that Age, and sithence put into the Calender of their Saints. And it is as sure, as sad a Truth, that as long as Corruption resides in the bosomes of the Best, there will be Dissensions, inflamed by malicious Instruments, betwixt Pious people, which otherwise agree in main matters of Religion.

Sherborn taken out of Winchester Bishoprick.

4. The Bishoprick of Sherborn was taken out of the Bishoprick of Winchester, by King Ina, and Adelme his Kinsman made first Bishop thereof. I find no Compensation given to the See of Winchester, for this great Canton cut out of it: as in after-Ages, when Ely was taken out of Lincoln Dioceſe, the Manour of Spaldwick in Huntingtonshire was given by King Henry the first to Lincolne, in Reparation of it's Loss, for so much of the Jurisdiction taken from it. But at this time, when Sherborn was parted from Winchester, the Damage to Winchester accruing thereby, was not considerable; Episcopall Jurisdiction in that Age not being beneficiall, but rather burthensome. So that Winchester might turn her Complaints into Thankfulnesse, being thus eased of her cumbersome Greatnesse. This Adelme, Bishop of Sherborn, was the [d] first of our English Nation, who wrote in Latine; and the first that taught English-men to make Latine Verse, according to his Promise, a Bede.

8. By the way, one Mistake (I could not have discerned it my self, had not a learned [b] Writer discovered it unto me) makes Books of this Age more numerous, and the Kings therein more Learned then indeed they were. Namely, because every Latine Charter, granted by any King to a Monastery, is termed by the Saxon Writers, Liber, or Libellus, a Book. Wherefore, when they tell us of such and such Books, made by the Saxon Kings; understand we most of them of their Charters of Donation. In which sense King Edgar, who, some two hundred yeares after this time, founded as many Monasteries as Weeks in the year (and consequently made as many Charters) was a voluminous Writer, of no lesse then fifty two Books. And yet this large acception of Books will not make up the Number, which Bale and Pitz pretend they have seen in this Age. A Vanity in them to affect a Title-learning; (though a Stationers Apprentice, after some weeks Experience might excell them therein) and the greater, because many imaginary Authours, which they make as if they had seen, either were never extant, or long since extinguished.

Multitude of books created by a mistake.

b Spelman in Concilia pag. 210.

6. But the multitude of Books encreaseth not our Marvel so much, as the Numerosity of Saints (such as they were) in this Age; whereof four parts of five (according to the Heraldry of such who wrote their Lives) were of Royall, or Noble Extraction. It addeth to the wonder, because S^t. Paul [c] saith, Not many Noble are called: except any confine that Observation of the Apostle to times of Persecution, whereas Christianity now in England flourished in all Peace and Prosperity. But, to reader their noble Parentage at this time the more probable, know, that under the Saxon Heptarchy, Royalty was encreased seven-fold in England, which must beget a proportionable multiplication of Nobility attending them. Yet, when all is done, as the Jewish Rabbins, on their bare Tradition, without ground from Scripture, make Ruth the Daughter to Eglon, King of Moab, merely to make the Descent of their King David from her the more illustrious: so it is suspicious, that to advance the Temporall Reputation of these Saints, such Monks as wrote their Lives causelesly clarifyed, and refined many of their Bloods into Noble Extraction. However, if truely pious indeed, such Saints have the best Nobility in the Scripture-sense, [d] These were more noble, because they received the word with all readinesse of mind.

7. Of these noble Saints, S^t. Guthlake, a Benedictine Monk, was the first Saxon that professed an Heremitical life in England, to which purpose he chose a Fenny place in Lincolnshire, called Crowland; that is, the raw or crudd-land; so raw indeed, that before him no man could digest to live therein. Yea, the Devils are said to claim this place as their peculiar, and to call it [e] their own land. Is any place, but the Prison of Hell, properly theirs? Yet wonder not at their Presumption, pretending this Spot of ground to be theirs, whose Impudence durst affirm, that God had given them [f] all the World, and the Glory thereof. Could those infernal Fiends, tortured with immateriall Fire, take any Pleasure, or make any Ease to themselves, by padling here in Puddles, and dabling in the moist dirty Marishes? However Guthlake took the Boldnesse to enter common with them, and erect his Cell in Crowland. But if his prodigious Life may be believed, Ducks and Mallards do not now flock thither faster in September, then Heards of Devils came about him; all whom he is said said victoriously to have vanquished. But, whom Satan's Power could not foil, his Policy had almost destroyed; by perswading Guthlake to fast fourty dayes and nights together, after the Example of Moses and Elias: till, finding this Project destructive to Nature, he was forced in his own Defence, to take some necessary, but very sparing Refection. He died in his own Cell, and Pega his sister, an Anchoritesse, led a solitary life, not far from him. Anno Dom. 708 a Idem, p. 347.

9. Eowes also, a poor plain man, was eminent in this Age: a Shepheard, say some; a Neatherd, others; Swineherd, say the third sort, and that most probable. For whilest he lived in Worcestershire, not far from the River Avon, the Virgin Mary is said to have appeared unto him, even where (fare well all good Tokens) he found a lost Sow [b] with seven Piggs sucking upon her; and to have given order, that in that very place a Monastery should be erected to her Honour. The beastly Monk, who made this Vision, had e'ne learned as far as Virgil's Æneids, whence he fetched the Platform of this pretty Conceit, a place so marked being foretold fortunate to Æneas, to found Alba [since Rome] therein.

Where under Oakes on Shore there shall be found
A mighty Sow, all white, cast on the ground,
With thirty sucking Piggs; that place is sign'd
To build your Town, and ease your wearied Mind.

Here the Monk, mutatis mutandis, (but principally shrinking the Number of the Pigs from thirty to seven, as more mystical) he applies the Apparition to his Purpose) A pretty Parallel, that Pagan-Rome, and Popish Superstition (if Hue-and-cry should be made after them) might be discovered by the same Marks. This gave the first motion to the Foundation of Eovesham Abbey (so called from Eowes aforesaid), first built in that Sow-place.

9. But the Building thereof was hastened by a second, more near and cleanly, Apparition of the Virgin Mary in the same place; who is pretended to have shewed her self, with two Maiden-attendants, to Egwin, Bishop of Worcester, prompting him to expedite a Structure therein. [d] Egwin posts presently to Rome, and makes faith of this Vision to Constantine the Pope; who convinced in his judgement of the truth thereof, dispatcheth his Commands to Brightwall, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, to assemble a Synod at Alnestler in Worcestershire, to promote the building of an Abbey in that place: which was done accordingly, and the same was bountifully endowed by Offa, and other Mercian Kings, with very large Revenues. And not long after, another Synod (saith my [e] Authour) was called at London, to introduce into England the Doctrine of Image-worship, not heard of before, and now first beginning to appear in the publick practice thereof. 709

Here we expected that Binnius and Baronius, two of the Romish Champions, should have been both joyfull at and thankfull for this London Synod, in favour of Image-worship, a point so beneficiall to the Popish Coffers. But behold them, contrary to our expectation, sad and sullen; insomuch as they cast away the Credit of this Synod, as of no account, and disdain to accept the same. For, say they, long before, by Augustine the Monk, Worship of Images was introduced into England. But let them shew us when, and where the same was done. We deny not but that Augustine brought in with him, in a Banner, the [f] Image of Christ on the Crosse, very lively depictured; but this makes nothing to the Worshipping thereof. Vast the distance in their own nature, betwixt the Historical Use, and Adoration of Pictures; though, through

Not was it probable, that Auguſtine would deliver Doctrine point-blank againſt Gregory, that ſent him, who moſt zealouſly[a] inveigheth againſt all Worſhipping of Images. Wherefore, let Binnius and Baronius make much of this London-Synod for Image-worſhip, or elſe they muſt be glad to accept of later Councils in England to prove the ſame, ſeeing before this time none can be produced tending thereunto.

11. Now alſo flouriſhed another noble-born Saint, namely John of Beverley, Arch-biſhop of York, a Learned man, and who gave the[b] Education to one more learned then himſelf, I mean, Venerable Bede. Now, though John Baptiſt did[c] none, yet John of Beverley is ſaid to have done many Miracles. But, did not the Monk over-do, who reports in his Relation, that this John of Beverley, by making the Sign of the Croſſe on a Dumb Youth, with a ſcalled head, not onely reſtored him to Speech, and an Head of Haire, but Eloquent Diſcourſe, and brave[d] Curled Locks? Some yeares before his Death, he quit-

718 ted his Arch-biſhoprick, and retired himſelf to his Monaſtery at Beverley, where he died: and which afterwards King Athelſtan made (I will not call it a SANCTUARY, becauſe unhallowed with the largeneſſe of the Liberties allowed thereunto, but) a place of Refuge for Murderers and Malefactours: ſo that the FREED-STOOL in Beverley, became the Seat of the Scornfull; and, ſuch hainous Offenders as could recover the ſame, did therein ſecurely deſie all Legall Proſecution againſt them.

12. About this time it grew faſhionable with Kings and Queens in England, to renounce the World, and turn Monks and Nuns, commonly in Convents of their own Foundation. Surely, it is not onely lawfull, but commendable for men to leave the World, before it leaveth them, by being [e] crucified thereunto, and uſing it as if they uſed it not: But let others diſpute, whether this properly be Renouncing the World, for Chriſtians to bury their Parts and Perſons in a Cloiſter, which, put forth to the Bank, would turn to good Account for Church and Common-wealth. David (I dare ſay) as holy a man as any of theſe, lived a King, and died a King: the ſwaying of his Sceptre did not hinder the tuning of his Harp; his Dignity being no Impediment to his Devotion. And whileſt theſe Kings turning Monks, pretended to go out of the World, a world of ſpirituall Pride and Superſtition went into them, if (as it is too too ſuſpicious) they had an high opinion to Merit Heaven thereby.

Kings and Queens turn Monks and Nuns.

e Gal. 6. 14.

13. Amongſt the Saxon Princes who thus renounced the World, in this and the next Century, theſe nine following were the principall.

King Ina his fine, and rent to the Church.

1. Kinigilſus, King of VVeſt-Saxons.	4. Edbertus, King of Northumberland.	7. Offa, King of Eaſt-Saxons.
2. Ina, King of VVeſt-Saxons.	5. Ethelredus, King of Mercia.	8. Sebbi, King of Eaſt-Saxons.
3. Ceololfus, King of Northumberland.	6. Kenredus, King of Mercia.	9. Sigebertus, King of Eaſt-Angles.

Of all whom King Ina was paramount, for his reputed Piety; who accounting himſelf to hold all that he had of God, his Land-Lord in chief, paid not onely a great Fine, but ſettled a conſtant Rent on the Church, then accounted the Receiver-general of the God of Heaven. Great Fine; for beſides his Beneſaction to other, he beſtowed on the Church of Glaſſenbury two thouſand ſix hundred fourty pounds[f] weight, in the Utenſills thereof, of maſſie Gold and Silver. So that whiles ſome admire at his Bounty, why he gave ſo much; others wonder more at his Wealth, how he got ſo much; being in that Age wherein ſuch Dearth of Coin, and he (though perchance, the honorary Monarch of England) but the effectuall King of the VVeſt-Saxons. every fire-house in England (a small Summe in the single Drops, but swelling great in the general Chanel) which (saith Polydore Virgil) this King Ina began in England. I say, Polydore Virgil (and let every Artificer be believed in his own Art) seeing (as he confesseth) this place was his first Preferment in England, which brought him over to be the Popes Publicane, or Collectour of that Contribution. Afterwards this King went to Rome, & there built a School for the English, and a Church adjoyning unto it, to bury their Dead. Anno Dom. 726 Winnifride an English-man converteth the Germans.

14. But, if my judgement mistake not, Winnifride, an English-man, was better employed, being busied, about this time, to convert to Christ the Provinces of Frantonia and Hassia in Germany. True it is, the English were indebted to the Dutch, from them formerly deriving their Originall, by Naturall Generation: and how none will censure them for Incest, if the Son begate his Parent; and this Winnifride, descended from the Dutch, was an active Instrument of their Regeneration. 730

Bede, though sene soe, went not to Rome.

15. Now, although many in this Age posted from England to Rome, possessed with an high opinion of the Holinesse thereof, yet sure I am, one of the best Judgement (namely Venerable Bede) was often sent for by Pope Sergius himself, to come to Rome; yet, for ought we can find, never went thither: which, no doubt, he would not have declined, if sensible of any transcendent Sanctity in that Place, to advantage the Dwellers therein the neater to Heaven. This Bede was born in the Kingdome of Northumberland, at [a] Girvy [now Tarrow] in the Bishoprick of Durham, brought up by S. Cuthbert, and was the profoundest Scholar in his Age, for Latine, Greek, Philosophy, History, Divinity, Mathematicks, Musick, and what not? Homilies of his making were read in his Life-time, in the Christian Churches; a Dignity afforded to him alone. We are much beholding to his Ecclesiasticall History, written by him, and dedicated to Ceolwolfus King of Northumberland. A worthy Work indeed, though, in some respect, we could heartily wish that his Faith had been lesse, and his Charity more. Faith lesse, in believing and reporting so many prodigious Miracles of the Saxons: except any will say, that this in him was not so much Vitium Hominis, as Seculi. Charity more, I mean to the Britans, being no Friend to them, and over-partial to his own Country-men, slightly, and slenderly touching British matters, onely thereof to make a Pedestall, the more fairly to reare and advance his Saxon History thereupon.

Bede probably went out of his Cell.

16. Some report that Bede never went out of his Cell, but lived and died therein. If so, the Scholars of Cambridge will be very sory, because thereby deprived of their Honour, by Bede's living once in their University, whose House they still shew, betwixt S. John's Colledge and Round-Church, or S. Sepulchres. Surely Bede was not fixed to his Cell, as the Cockle to his Shel, seeing no Observance of his Benedictine Order imposed such a Penance upon him. Indeed his own words, in the end of his Book, give some Countenance to their Conjecture of his voluntary Confinement, speaking of himself, Cunctum tempus vitæ in ejusdem Monasterii habitatione peragens. But his Expression imports onely his generall Residence therein, that he was no Gadder abroad, or Discontinuer from his Convent, for a long time; though he might for some short space make his Abode elsewhere. Thus, when of the Prophetesse it is said, [b] that she departed not from the Temple: we understand it not so, as if she never went out thereof, but that for the main, she spent the most of her time therein.

[b] Luke 2. 37.

Bede why surnamed Venerabilis.

17. He is generally surnamed Venerable, but why, Authours differ therein. Some say, a Dunce-Monk, being to make his Epitaph, was non-plust to make that Dactyle, which is onely of the Quorum in the Hexameter, and therefore at Night left the Verse thus gaping, Hic sunt in fossa Bedæ . . . . . ossa.

till he had consulted with his Pillow, to fill up the Hiatus. But returning in the morning, an Angel (we have often heard of their Singing, see now of their

Anno Dom. 730

Poetry) had filled up the Chaſma with Venerabilis. Others, diſclaiming this Conceit, aſſign this Reaſon: Becauſe Bede's Homilies were (as aforeſaid) read in all [a] Churches in his Life-time; plain Bede was conceived too little, and S[t]. Bede too much; becauſe, according to Popiſh, (but not S[t]. Paul's) Principles, Saint is too much Flattery to be given to any whileſt alive; Solon allowing none happy, and this mine Authour none, in this degree, holy, before their Death. Wherefore Venerable was found out as an Expedient to accommodate the Difference, luckily hitting the Mark, as a Title neither too high, nor too low; juſt even to ſo good a man, and great a Scholar, whileſt alive. This is obſervable in all thoſe who have written the Life of Bede; that, whereas ſuch Saxon-Saints, as had not the tenth of his Sanctity, nor hundredth part of his Learning, are ſaid to have wrought Miracles ad Lectoris nauſeam; not one ſingle Miracle is reported to have been done by Bede. Whereof (under favour) I conceive this the Reaſon: Monks, who wrote the Lives of many of their Saints, knew little more of many of them then their bare Names, and Times wherein they lived; which made them Hiſtoriæ vacuam miraculis ſupplere, to plump up the Hollowneſſe of their Hiſtory with improbable Miracles, ſwelling the Bowells of their Books with empty Wind, in default of ſufficient ſolid Food to fill them. Whereas Bede's Life affording plenty and variety of reall and effectuall Matter, the Writer thereof (why ſhould a Rich man be a Thief, or Lyar?) had no Temptation (I am ſure no Need) to farſe his book with fond Miracles, who might rather leave, then lack of materiall Paſſages therein.

734 18. One of the laſt things he did, was the tranſlating of the Goſpel of S[t]. John into Engliſh. When Death ſeiſed on him, one of his devout Scholars, whom he uſed for his Secretary, or Amanuenſis, complained, My beloved Maſter, there remains yet one Sentence unwritten. Write it then quickly, replied Bede: and ſummoning all his ſpirits together (like the laſt Blaze of a Candle going out) he indited it, and expired. Thus Gods Children are immortall, whiles their Father hath any thing for them to do on Earth; and Death, that Beaſt, cannot overcome and kill them, till firſt they have [b] finiſhed their Teſtimony: which done, like Silk-worms, they willingly die, when their Web is ended, and are comfortably entombed in their own Endeavours. Nor have I ought elſe to obſerve of Bede, ſave onely this; A forreign Embaſſadour, ſome two hundred yeares ſince, coming to Durham, addreſſed himſelf firſt to the high and ſumptuous Shrine of S[t]. Cuthbert, If thou beeſt a Saint, pray for me: then coming to the plain, low, and little Tombe of Bede, Becauſe (ſaid he) thou art a Saint, good Bede, pray for me.

735 19. Now began the Saxons to be infected with an univerſall Vitiouſneſſe. The cauſe whereof was; Ethelbald, King of Mercia, contemned Marriage: and though Abſtinence from it in ſome caſes may be commendable, the Contempt thereof alwayes is dangerous, yea damnable; as it proved in him. For, his unlawfull Luſt made no difference of Places, or Perſons. Caſtles, or Cloiſters; common-Kerchief, or Nuns-vaile; all came alike to him. But, oh the legiſlative power which is in a great Prince his Example. His Subjects preſumed, they might not onely impune, but legitime, follow his Precedent; which made the Land ſwarm with Wickedneſſe.

The general viciouſneſſe of the Saxons, how occaſioned.

20. This cauſed the Letter of Boniface, Arch-biſhop of Ments (an Engliſh-man born, and lately very eminent for converting the Germans to Chriſtianity) to King Ethelbald; wherein he obſerved the prudent method of S[t]. Paul to the [c] Corinthians. As the Apoſtle firſt commended them, I praiſe you, Brethren, that you remember me in all things, &c. ſo he began with a large Encomium of King Ethelbald his Charity, and bountifull Almes-giving. Hence ſeaſonably he deſcended to his Faults; ſhall I praiſe you in this? I praiſe you not; and ſoundly and roundly told him of his notorious Incontinency; proving, both by Scripture, and Reaſon, the Hainouſneſſe of that Sin, and heavy Iudgements of God

God upon it. In fine, this wrought so farre on the King's good Nature, that he not onely reformed himself, but, with Cuthbert Arch-bishop of Canterbury, called a solemn Synod at Cloves-Ho, or Clives-at-Ho, for the Reformation of others. Anno Dom. 733 Cliff in Kent probably the ancient Cloves-Ho. a Camden's Brit. in Kent.

21. But where this Cloves-Ho should be, Authours make much Inquiry. It is generally conceived the same with Cliff, near Gravesend, in Kent. Though a learned [a] Authour will hardly consent thereunto; and his Intimations to the contrary are of no great Validity. For, whereas he alledgeth that this Cliff is in Kent, whilest Ethelbald, who called this Synod, was King of Mercia; He minded not mean time (what, no doubt, he knew well) that this Ethelbald is stiled in the [b] Letter of Bonifate Arch-bishop of Ments unto him, Inclyta Anglorum Imperii sceptra gubernans, Ruling the famous Sceptre of the English Empire. And whereas he objecteth, the Site of that place inconvenient for such an Assembly; It seems fit enough (though confessed dirty in Winter, and unhealthy at all times) for the Vicinity thereof to London and Canterbury, the residing places of the King and Arch-bishop, the two Persons in this Synod most concerned. Nor doth the modern Meanness of the place make any thing against it; it might be a Gallant in that Age, which is a Beggar now-a-dayes. And though, we confesse, there be many Cliffs in the In-land Shires (properly belonging to Mercia,) yet the addition of Ho, or Haw, speaketh the maritime posture thereof. So that Clives-Ho, [c] or Haw, seems to be a Cliff near the Sea, well agreeing to the Situation of Cliff in Kent aforesaid.

22. But the Acts of this Synod are more certain, then the Place thereof, being (generally accounted) one and thirty Canons (although some small Variation in their Number, and Order) all extant at large in [d] Malmesbury; and of which we take notice of these four, as of most Concernment;

d Dr Gesse Pont. lib. 1. in Cuthberto.

1. That the Priests [e] learn, and teach to know the Creed, Lords Prayer, and words of Consecration in the Masse [or Eucharist] in the English tongue. It seems, Learning then ran low, that the Priests themselves had need to learn them: yet Ignorance was not then so high, but that the people were permitted to be taught them.

e Discant, & doceant. Malmesbury.

2. That the Lords Day be honourably observed. We understand it not so, as if the Sanctity of that Day depended onely upon Ecclesiasticall Constitutions; or, that the Command thereof in Scripture is so infirm, in point of right to oblige mens Consciences, that it needs the title of mans Power, ad corroborandum: Onely, Humane Authority was here cast in as over-weight, for the better Observation of the day. Carnal men being more affected, and affrighted with Corporal Penalties of mans inflicting (as nearer unto them,) then with Eternal Punishments, which Divine Iustice, at distance, denounceth against them.

3. That the sin of Drunkennesse be avoided, especially in the Clergy. Indeed it was high-time to suppresse that Sin, which was grown so rife, that (as Bonifface, Arch-bishop of Ments, doth observe in his Letter to [f] Cuthbert, Arch-bishop of Canterbury) the English Bishops were so farre from punishing it, that they were guilty of the same. Moreover he addeth, Ebrietas speciale malum nostræ Gentis: hoc nec Franci, nec Galli, nec Longobardi, nec Romani, nec Græci faciunt; Drunkennesse is a speciall Evill of our Nation (namely of the Saxons, of which Country this Bonifface was a Native) for neither Franks, nor Gauls, nor Lombards, nor Romans, nor Greeks (understand him, anciently, for we know the modern Proverb, of a merry Greek) are guilty thereof.

f Extant in Sr. Henry Spelman's Councils p. 241.

4. That Prayers be publickly made for Kings and Princes. An excellent Canon indeed, because Canonicall Scripture, and long before made by [g] St. Paul himself, I exhort therefore, that Supplications be made for all men, for Kings, &c.

g 1 Tim. 2. 1.

This

Anno Dom. 747 This Synod being finished, with the Royall Assent, & all the Bishops their Subscriptions thereunto; Cuthbert, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, with wonderfull Celerity, returned the Canons concluded therein, by Rinebert his Deacon, to Bonifface Arch-bishop of Ments, who was affected with great joy at the sight thereof.

23. At this time flourished Egbert, Arch-bishop of York, famous in his Generation for, First his Royall Extraction, being Brother to Eadbert, King of Northumberland; both of them lovingly lying buried together, in the Porch of the Church of York. For in that Age, the greatest Princes and Prelates their Corpses came no nearer then the Church-Porch, and (as I may say) onely knocked at the Church-Doors; though, in after-Ages the Bodies of Meaner persons were admitted into the Church, and buried therein. Secondly, for his procuring the Archiepiscopal Pall to his See. For after the Departure, or rather the Banishment of Paulinus from York, his Successours were content with the plain Title of Bishop, untill this Egbert (to do something extraordinary, proportionable to his Princely Extraction) procured the Restitution of his Pall, which ipso facto re-advanced his Church into an Arch-bishoprick. Thirdly, for furnishing the same with a plentifull Library, highly commended by Alcuinus, in his Epistle to Charles the Great, wishing France had the like; which though exceeding England in Paper, till of late years, ever came short of it in Books.

Egbert Arch-bishop of York famous in severall respects.

750 Fourthly, for his Canons, for the regulating of his Province. Whereof one sort is called, Egbert his [a] Excerptions out of Fathers, and is generally good: the other intituled, Canons for the remedie of Sin, and are fraught with abundance of abominable Beastlinesse, and Superstition.

a At large in Sr. Henry Spelman's Councils, pag. 258. The beastly Canons of Egbert.

24. I will give the Reader onely a Taste (or rather a Distaste) of these Canons, by which he may guesse the rest. If a Lay-man hath carnal knowledge of a Nun, let him doe Penance for two yeares &c. five three. If a Child be begotten betwixt them, then four yeares: if they kill it, then seven yeares [b] Penance. Penance also is provided for Bestiality, and Sodomie, in the same Canons. Thus, where God in Scripture denounceth Death, [c] Whoso sheddeth mans Bloud, by man shall his bloud be shed; they now changed it into Penance, and in after-Ages commuted that Penance into Money; so by degrees making the Word of God of none effect, by their paltry Canons. See we here also, how forced Virginity was the Mother of much Uncleanesse; it being appliable to them, what the Apostle speaketh of others: [d] It is a shame even to speak of those things, which are done of them in secret. And one may justly admire how these Canonists, being pretended Virgins, could arrive at the knowledge of the Criticismes of all Obscenity; so that chast Love may lye seven and seven yeares in the undefiled Marriage-bed, and be utterly ignorant what the Language of Lust meaneth in such filthy Canons. Yea, when such Love, by the help of an Interpreter, shall understand the same, it would blush for Shame; were it not that that Red would be turned into Paleness, as amazed at so horrid Uncleanness.

755 23. Some five yeares after, Kenulphus, King of West-Saxons, conferred large Priviledges on the Monastery of Abbington. We will recite so much of his [e] Charter, as concerns us, because usefull to shew the Power which Kings in that Age had in Ecclesiasticall Matters.

The Charter of Kenulphus to the Abbot of Abbington.

modicis rebus, in æternam hæreditatem. Et, quod prædictus Richinus, *&c. ab omni Episcopali jure in sempiternum esset quietus, ut inhabitatores ejus nullius Episcopi, aut suorum Officialium jugo inde deprimantur; sed in cunctis rerum eventibus, & discussionibus causarum, Abbatis Monasteriis prædicti decreto subjiciantur. mean matters, as an inheritance for ever. And, that the aforesaid Richine, &c. should be for ever acquit from all Episcopal jurisdiction, that the Inhabitants thereof be thenceforth oppressed with the yoke of no Bishop, or his Officials; but in all events of matters, and discussions of causes, they be subject to the decree of the Abbot of the aforesaid Monastery. So that, &c.

Anno Dom. 755

From this Charter, S^t. Edward[a] Cook the Kings Attorney inferreth, that King Kenulphus had Ecclesiasticall Jurisdiction in himself, in that he had power to discharge and exempt this Abbot from the Iurisdiction of the Bishop. Which Ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction was alwayes invested in the Imperiall Crown of England: and therefore the Statute made under Henry the eighth, concerning the Kings Spirituall Authority, was not introductory of a new Law, but declaratory onely of an old.

a His Reports part 5. fol. 9.

26. But Father Parsons (for he it is who stands under the Vizard of the Catholick Divine, in a Book wrote of set purpose against Master Attorney, in this point) will by no means allow King Kenulphus any Ecclesiasticall Power, but by many Fetches seeks to evade so pregnant a Proof.

The Cavills of Parsons against S^t. Edw. Cook confuted.

Arg. 1. First he[b] pleadeth, that in this Charter, Kenulphus did not exempt the Abbot from all Iurisdiction Spirituall of the Bishop, but from some Temporall Interest, or Pretense, which, perhaps, the Bishop of the Diocese claimed over the Lordship of Culnam.

b Catholick Divine, alias Parsons, in his answer to the Kings Attorney, p. 95, 96, &c.

Answ. Perhaps (commend not his Modesty, but thank his Guiltinesse, for his timorous Assertion) saith he: but, how doth this appeare? for he bringeth no proof: and, if he affirmeth it on free cost, we can confute it as cheap, by denying it.

Arg. 2. Secondly, saith he, the King exempted the Abbot, ab omni Episcopali jure, that is, from all Right of the Bishop, and not Iurisdiction.

Answ. Sharp Wit, to cut so small a Mote in two parts, for no purpose; seeing, jus and Iurisdiction are often known to import the same sense.

Arg. 3. Thirdly, he objecteth, the words no way seem fitly to agree to be spoken of the Bishops Ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction, which run thus, That the Abbot should be quiet from the Bishops Right, and that the Inhabitants from thenceforward should not be oppressed by the Yoke of the Bishops Officers.

Answ. Why? what Incongruity, but that these words may be spoken, as they are, of Ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction? Is the word Yoke too course a Phrase to be applied to the Bishops Spirituall Power, as they sometimes did manage it? I appeale to those who felt it: for no Yoke is heavy to him that puts it on, but to those who bear it. Mark by the way, the word he rendereth Officers, is in the Charter (not Officiarii, Lay-Latine, but) Officiales, which is Church-language, and the very dialect of the Court-Christian, and should be translated Officials, to whom Bishops committed their Spirituall Power. But Parsons knew well how to lay his Thumb on what he would not have seen.

Arg. 4. Fourthly, However it were, it is manifestly false, saith he, that this Ecclesiasticall Iurisdiction of King Kenulphus was derived from his Crown; it might be, he had it from the Pope, which is most likely.

Answ. Which is most unlikely; for no Clause in the Charter relates to any delegate power; and yet such a Passage might easily have been inserted, yea, could not justly have been omitted, if he had claimed his Iurisdiction by Deputation from the Pope.

Arg. 5.

Anno Dom. 755

Arg. 5. Lastly, (which, he saith, seemeth to convince the whole matter, and decide the very Case) one[a] Rethurus, Abbot of Abbington, went afterwards to Rome, to obtain confirmation of the Priviledges of his Monastery from the See Apostolick.

a Harpsfield Hist. Ang. seculo primo c. 9. ex Mariano Scoto.

Answ. What of this? This post-fact of Rethurus argues no Invalidity in Kenulphus his former Grant, but rather shews the over-Officiousnesse of a pragmaticall Abbot, who, to ingratiate himself with the Pope, craved of him what he had before. Yea, such cunning Compliance of the Clergy with his Holinesse, by degrees fixed in him a supposed Ecclesiasticall Power paramount, which really he never had, nor rightly ever ought to have.

See here the King's Power in Church-matters, in conferring Ecclesiasticall Priviledges; and this single Threed we will twist with another Instance, so strong, that the Iesuites Art shall be unable to break it in sunder.

758 27. By the Constitution of Augustine, first Arch-bishop of Canterbury, confirmed by the authority of Gregory the Great, Bishop of Rome, it was decreed, that no Corpse, either of Prince or Prelate, should be buried within the Walls of a City, but onely in the Suburbs thereof; and that alone in the Porch of the Church, and not in the Body. Now Cuthbert, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, having built Christ-Church therein, was desirous to adorn it with the Corpses of great Persons, therein afterwards to be interred. In pursuance of this his Design, he durst not adventure on this Innovation by his own Power, nor did he make his applications to the Pope of Rome (as most proper to repeal that Act, which the See Apostolick had decreed) but onely addresseth himself to Eadbert, King of Kent, and from him, partim precario, partim etiam pretio, partly praying, partly paying for it, saith my[b] Authour, obtained his Request. Behold here an ancient Church-Canon recalled at the Suit of an Arch-bishop, by the Authority of a King. This Cuthbert afterwards handselled Christ-Church with his own Corpse; whose Predecessours were all buried in S^t. Augustines, without the Walls of Canterbury. Thus began Corpses to be buried in the Churches, which by degrees brought in much Superstition; especially after degrees of inherent Sanctity were erroneously fixed in the severall parts thereof: the Porch saying to the Church-yard, the Church to the Porch, the Chancel to the Church, the East-end to all, Stand farther off, for I am holier then you. And, as if the Steps to the High Altar, were the Stairs to Heaven, their Souls were conceived in a nearer degree to Happinesse, whose Bodies were mounted there to be interred.

28. About this time the Bill of fare of Monks was bettered generally in England, and more liberty indulged in their Diet. It was first occasioned some twenty yeares since, when Ceolwolphus, formerly King of Northumberland, but then a Monk in the Convent of Lindisfern, or Holy Island, [c] gave leave to that Convent to drink Ale and Wine, anciently confined by Aidan, their first Founder, to Milk and Water. Let others dispute, whether Ceolwolphus thus dispensed with them by his new Abbatical, or old Regal Power, which he so resigned, that in some cases he might resume it, especially to be King in his own Convent. And indeed, the cold, raw, and bleak Situation of that place, with many bitter Blasts from the Sea, and no Shelter on the Land, speaks it self to each Inhabitant there, [d] Drink no longer Water, but use a little Wine for thy Stomacks sake, and thine often Infirmities. However, this locall Priviledge, first justly indulged 760 to the Monks of Lindisfern, was about this time extended to all the Monasteries of England, whose primitive over-Austerity in Abstinence was turned now into a Self-sufficiency, that soon improved into Plenty, that quickly depraved into Riot, and that at last occasioned their Ruine.

with a considerable Army. Severall Reasons are assigned for their coming hither, to revenge themselves for some pretended Injuries; though the true Reason was, because England was richer and roomthyer then their own Countrey. Anno Dom. 789

Denmark formerly fruitfull, is now become barren of men.

30. It is admirable to consider what Sholes of people were formerly vented out of Cimbrica Chersonesus, take it in the largest [a] extent for Denmark, Norway and Swedeland, who by the terrible Names of Gothes, Ostro-Gothes, Visi-Gothes, Huns, Vandals, Danes, Nortmans, overranne the faireſt and fruitfullest parts of Christendome; whereas now, though for these last three hundred yeares (the Swedish Warres in Germany excepted) that Countrey hath sent forth no visible Numbers of People, and yet is very thinly inhabited, so that one may travell some hundreds of Miles therein through mere Desarts, every man whom he meeteth having a Phœnix in his right hand. Yea, so few the Natives, that some of their Garrisons are manned with Forreigners, and their Kings fain to entertain mercenary Dutch and Scotch to manage their Warres.

Two reasons thereof.

31. Strange, that this Countrey, formerly all on the giving, should now be onely on the taking hand. Some [b] impute their modern comparative Barrennesse to their excessive Drinking (a Vice belike which lately hath infected that Nation) drinking themselves past Goats into Stocks, out of Wantonnesse into Stupidity, which by a contracted Habit debilitateth their former Fruitfulnesse. Others, more [c] truely, ascribe their former Fruitfulnesse to their promiscuous Copulations with Women during their Paganisme, which are not so numerous since Christianity hath confined them to the Marriage of one Wife.

The reason of reasons.

32. If I might speak according to my own Profession of a Divine (soaring over Second Causes in Nature) I should ascribe their ancient Populousnesse to Divine Operation. As the Widow her Oyle multiplyed till her Debts were satisfied, and that effected for which the Miracle was intended, which done, the Increase thereof instantly ceased: So these Northern Parts flowed with Crouds of People, till their Inundations had payed the Scores of sinfull Christians, and then (the Birch growing no more, when the wanton Children were sufficiently whipped) the Procreativeness of those Nations presently stinted and abated.

33. The Landing of these Danes in England was ushered with many sad Prognosticks: [d] Starres were seen strangely falling from Heaven, and sundry terrible Flames appeared in the Skies. From the firing of such extraordinary Beacons, all concluded some new Enemie was approaching the Nation. Serpents were seen in Sussex, and Bloud reigned in some parts of the Land. Lindesfern or Holy Island was the first that felt the Fury of these Pagans, but soon after no place was safe and secure from their Cruelty; whereof more hereafter.

The Archepiscopal Pall removed to Lichfield.

34. At this time the Arch-bishoprick of Canterbury was in part removed to Lichfield, five essentiall things concurring to that great Alteration. 790

1. The Puissance and Ambition of Offa, King of Mercia, commanding in Chief over England. He would have the brightest Mitre to attend the biggest Crown.

2. The complying nature of Pope Adrian: except any will call it his Thankfulnesse, to gratifie King Offa, for the large Gifts received from him.

3. The easy and unactive Disposition of Iambert (or Lambert) Arch-bishop of Canterbury: unlesse any will term it his Policy, that finding himself unable to resist (a Pope and a Prince over-match for a Prelate) he would not strive to keep what must be taken away from him.

4. The commodious Situation of Lichfield, almost in the Navell of the Land: and where should the highest Candlestick stand (the Metropolitan Cathedrall) but in the middest of the Table? whereas Kent it self was but a Corner (whence it taketh it's Name) and Canterbury seated in the Corner of that Corner, a remote Nook thereof.

On theſe and other conſiderations, Aldulph was made the firſt (and laſt) Archbiſhop of Lichfield (though others make Humbert and Higbert his Succeſſours in that Dignity) and ſix Suffraganes (viz. VVorceſter, Hereford, Leiceſter, Sidnaceſter, Helmham, and Dunwich,) ſubjected to his Juriſdiction. Yet was not the Archiepiſcopall See removed (as ſome ſeem to conceive) but communicated to Lichfield: Canterbury ſtill retaining it's former Dignity, and part of it's Province; the Biſhops of London, Rocheſter, VVincheſter, and Sarisbury continuing ſtill ſubject unto him.

793 35. King Offa having ſettled an Arch-biſhoprick at Lichfield, his next Deſign was to enſhrine the Corps of S^t. Alban: five[c] hundred and ſeven years had paſſed ſince his Death and plain Buriall. For as Iohn Baptiſt, the laſt Martyr before Chriſt, and S^t. Steven, the firſt Martyr after him, were fairly interred by their Friends and Followers, without any more adoe: ſo the Corps of S^t. Alban were quietly committed to the Earth, and there ſome Centuries of yeares peaceably repoſed. But now Offa, they ſay, was admoniſhed in a Viſion, to beſtow more publick Sepulture upon him. A Starre, we know, directed to the place of Chriſt's Birth, whereas a bright[d] Beam (ſay the Monks) diſcovered the place of S^t. Alban's Buriall. A Beam ſuſpected by ſome ſhot by him, who can turn himſelf into an Angell of Light, becauſe gaining ſo much by their Superſtition. Then was Alban's Body in pompous manner taken up, enſhrined, and adored by the Beholders. No wonder then if the Danes now invaded the Dominions of the Engliſh, ſeeing the Engliſh invaded the Prerogative of God, diverting the Worſhip due to him alone, to the rotten Relicks of Dead men: And henceforth the old Romans City of Verulam, loſt it's Name under the new Saxon Town of S^t. Albans.

794 36. King Offa went to Rome, and there confirmed and enlarged to Pope Adrian the Gift of Peter-pence, what Ina King of the VVeſt-Saxons had formerly beſtowed. For this Favour the Pope granted him, that no Engliſhman for Penance impoſed ſhould be baniſhed out of his own Countrey.

Peter-pence re-confirmed to Rome.

37 But bold Beggars are the Bane of the beſt Bounty, when grown ſo impudent, that what at firſt was given them for Almes, in proceſſe of time they challenge for Rent. Some call this a Tribute (Badge of Subjection) of England to the See of Rome; among whom is Polydore Virgil, once Collectour of thoſe Peter-pence in England. But blame him not for magnifying his own Office; who, had he owned this Money (as indeed it was) given in frank-Almonage, had then appeared no better then a gentle Beggar, whereas now he hopes to advance his Employment to a nobler Notion.

Gift no debt.

795 38. Offa having done all his work at Rome, namely procured the Canonization of S^t. Alban, the Abſolution of his own Sins and many Murders, and viſited and endowed the Engliſh Colledge there, returned home, fell to found the Monaſtery of S^t. Albans, beſtowing great Lands and Liberties upon it; as freeing it from the Payment of Peter-pence, Epiſcopall Iuriſdiction, and the like. This is alleadged and urged by our Regians, to prove the Kings Paramount Power in Eccleſiaſticis; ſeeing none can give, ſave what they are formally or eminently poſſeſſed of. And whereas Papiſts plead that Offa had fore-requeſted the granting of theſe Priviledges from the Pope, no mention at all thereof appears in the Charter[e] of his Foundation (here too large to inſert) but that all was done by his own abſolute Authority. Learned Alcuinus confuteth Image-worſhip.

40. We will conclude this Century with two eminent men (to leave at laſt a good Relliſh in the memory of the Reader) now flouriſhing therein. The one Alcuinus, or Albinus: it being queſtionable whether he were more famous for Venerable Bede, who was his Maſter, or Charles the Great, who was his Scholar; whileſt it is out of doubt that he is moſt honoured for his own Learning and Religion. And becauſe Engliſh-men may be preſumed partiall in the praiſe of an Engliſh-man; hear what a Character a learned [a] Forreigner gives of him: Vir in divinis ſcriptis eruditiſsimus, & in ſecularium literarum peritia nulli ſuo tempore ſecundus, Carmine excellens & Proſa. But he got himſelf the greateſt credit by oppoſing the Canons of the ſecond Niteene Council, [b] wherein the ſuperſtitious Adoration of Images was enjoyned. Theſe Canons, ſome ſeven years ſince, were ſent by Charles the Great to King Offa, to be received of the Engliſh; who notwithſtanding generally diſtaſted and rejected them, the aforeſaid Alcuinus writing a learned Epiſtle againſt the ſame. He was fetcht by Charles his Scholar, calling him his Delicious Maſter; where he firſt founded the Vniverſity of Paris, and died Abbot of St. Martins in Tours.

Egbert the firſt fixed Monarch of England.

41. The other was Egbert, who in this very year made himſelf ſole Monarch of England. True it is, in the Saxon Heptarchy there was generally one who out-powered all the reſt. But ſuch Monarchy was deſultory and moveable, ſometimes the Weſt-Saxon, ſometimes the Mercian, ſometimes the Northumberland King ruled over the reſt. But henceforward Egbert fixed the ſupreme Soveraignty in himſelf and his Poſterity: for though afterwards there continued ſome other Petty Kings, as Kenulph King of Mercia, &c. yet they ſhined but dimly (as the Moon when the Sun is riſen) and in the next Age were utterly extinguiſhed. So that hereafter we ſhall double our Files, and for the better regulating of time, next the Columne of the year of our Lord, adde another of the Reign of our Engliſh Kings. 800 Egberti primi Monarchæ Angliæ I

3. Now, to make a ſhort, but neceſſary Digreſſion, in this Synod we may obſerve, That Biſhops appeared perſonally, and the reſt of the Clergy were repreſented, Monks in their Abbots, and the Seculars in the Prieſts and Deacons of their Dioceſe reſpectively. Such Abbots as in this Catalogue have the addition of Pr. were alſo Prieſts, and ſo preſent in a double Capacity; though perchance they made onely uſe of their Abbotſhip. No Deans appear here, as a Dignity of farre later Inſtitution. The Biſhops, in the order of their Subſcriptions, ſeem to obſerve Seniority of their Conſecrations, and not Dignity of their Biſhopricks; ſeeing London lags one of the laſt, to which our Church-[a] Heraulds did afterwards aſſign the higheſt place, next the Arch-biſhops: onely Lichfield may ſeem to have had the Precedency, by the Courteſie of the Synod, that the loſt Dignity thereof might be buried in Honour, being ſo lately the Seat of an Arch-biſhop. Laſtly, this was but a Provinciall Council for Canterbury alone, York with his two Suffragans (Lindisfern and Hexham) not mentioned in the meeting. Thus, as the Anatomie of a little Child, repreſenting all Parts thereof, is accounted a greater Rarity, then the Sceleton of a man of full Stature: ſo I conceive it more acceptable to the ſtudious in Antiquity, to behold the Form of theſe Synods, with the diſtinct Members thereof, in the Infancy of the Saxon Church, then to ſee a compleat Council in after-Ages, when grown to full Perfection.

Some obſervables on the method and manner of their meeting.

4. Paſſe we by ſome Petty Synods celebrated in the Reign and Countrey of King Kenulph of Mercia. Eminent was the Council at Celichyth under Wolfred (who ſucceeded Æthelard) Arch-biſhop of Canterbury. Wherein, amongſt other things ſlight or ſuperſtitious, was decreed,

The Acts of the Council at Celichyth.

1. That the Catholick Faith ſhould be kept, and ancient Canons obſerved.
2. That [b] new Churches ſhould be conſecrated with Holy-water by their Biſhops, and the Saint ſomewhere painted therein to whom the ſame is dedicated.
3. That all in Chriſtian Charity mutually love one another.
4. That Abbots and Abbeſſes be blameleſſe perſons, choſen by the Biſhop with the conſent of the Convent.
5. That no Scotch-man baptize, or adminiſter the Euchariſt in England; it being uncertain, whether, or by whom they are ordained. [We may diſcover herein ſome remaining Dreggs of the long-laſting Difference about the Celebration of Eaſter, which made the ſuſpicious Engliſh ſtill to harbour a cauſeleſſe prejudice againſt the Scotch Prieſthood.]
6. That the judiciall Sentences of Biſhops in former Synods remain ratified; as alſo all their Acts ſolemnly ſigned with the Croſſe.
7. That no Abbey-lands be leaſed out longer then, in dies, & ſpatium unius hominis, that is (as I take it) for the ſingle life of one man; except in ſome caſe of Extremity; to help againſt Famine, Invaſion of Foes, or for obtaining of Freedome.
8. That things dedicated to God remain ſo for ever.
9. That the Acts of all Synods be fairly written out, with the Date thereof, and name of the Arch-biſhop Preſident, and Biſhops preſent thereat.
10. That Biſhops at their death give the full Tithe of their Goods to the Poor, and ſet free every Engliſh-man which in their life-time was a Slave unto them.
11. That Biſhops invade not the Dioceſe, Prieſts the Pariſh, neither the Office of another; ſave onely when deſired to baptize, or viſit the Sick. The Refuſers whereof in any place are to be ſuſpended their Miniſtery, till reconciled to the Biſhop.
12. That they pour not water upon the Heads of Infants, but immerge them in the Font, in imitation of Chriſt, who (ſay they) was thrice [c] ſo waſhed in Iordan.

But where is this in Scripture? The manifestation indeed of the Trinity plainly appears in the [a] Text; Father in the Voice, Son personally present, Holy Spirit in the Dove; but as for thrice washing him, altum silentium. However, see how our modern Sectaries meet Popery in shunning it, requiring the person to be plunged; though Criticks have cleared it, that Baptize doth import as well Dipping, as Drenching in water.

[a] Matth. 3. 16, 17.

5. And now we take our farewell of King Kenulph, who, for all his great Bustling in Church-matters for the first twenty yeares in this Century, was (as genus subalternum amongst the Logitians) a King over his Subjects, yet but a Subject to King Egbert, who now at Wincheſter was solemnly crowned Monarch of the Southern and greater Moiety of this Island, enjoyning all the people therein to term it Engelond, (since England) that so the petty Names of seven former distinct Kingdomes might be honourably buried in that general Appellation.

Egbert proclaimed Monarch of England.

6 Some will wonder, seeing this Nation was compounded of Saxons, Iuites, and Angles, why it should not rather be denominated of the first, as in Number greatest, and highest in Reputation. Such consider not that a Grand Continent in Germany was already named Saxony; and it was not handsome for this Land to wear a Name at second hand belonging to another. Besides, England is a name of Credit, importing in Dutch the same with the Land of [b] Angels. And now the Name stamped with the Kings Command soon became currant, and extinguished all the rest. For Kent, Essex, Sussex, Northumberland (though remaining in common Discourse) shrunk from former Kingdomes into modern Counties; VVestsex, Mercia, and East-Angles were in effect finally forgotten. It will not be amisse to wish that seeing so great a Tract of Ground meets in one Name, the People thereof may agree in Christian Vnity and Affections.

Seven Kingdomes swallowed up in Engeland.

[b] verstegan of decayed intelligence.

7. King Egbert was now in the Exaltation of his Greatnesse. But never will humane Happinesse hold out full Measure to mans Desire. Freed from homebred Hostility, he was ready to repose himself in the Bed of Ease and Honour; when the Danes not onely jogged his Elbows, but pinched his Sides, to the disturbance of his future Quiet. They beat the English in a Navall Fight at Carmouth in Dorsetshire, which proved fatall to our Nation. For an Island is never an Island indeed, untill mastered at Sea, cut off from Commerce with the Continent. Henceforward these Pagans settled themselves in some part of the Land, though claiming it by no other Title, then their own Pride and Covetousnesse, and keeping it in no other Tenure, then that of Violence and Cruelty.

Danes disturb King Egberi.

8. Athelwolphus his Son succeeded King Egbert in the Throne: a Prince not lesse commended for his Valour, then Devotion, and generally fortunate in his Undertakings; though much molested all his life-time by the Danes. But nothing makes him so remarkable to Posterity, as the granting of this Charter, or rather the solemn passing of this Act ensuing.

11 — 848 alias 855 — 18

This Athelwolphus was deſigned by his Father to be Biſhop of Wincheſter, bred in a Monaſtery, after taken out, and abſolved of his Vows by the Pope: and having had Church-education in his Youth, retained to his Old-age the indeleble Character of his affections thereunto. In expreſſion whereof, in a ſolemn Council kept at Wincheſter, he ſubjected the whole Kingdome of England to the Payment of Tithes, as by the foregoing Inſtrument doth appear. He was the firſt born Monarch of England. Indeed, before his time there were Monarchs of the Saxon Heptarchie; but not ſucceſſive and fixed in a Family, but fluctuating from one Kingdome to another. Egbert, father to this Athelwolph, was the firſt that atchieved this Monarchie, and left it to this his Son, not Monarcha factus, but natus, and ſo in unqueſtionable Power to make the foreſaid Act obligatory over all the Land.

Former Acts for Tithes infirme.

9. Indeed, before his time many Acts for Tithes are produced, which when preſſed will prove of no great Validity. Such are the Imperiall Edicts in Civil Law, never poſſeſſed of full power in England; as alſo the Canons of ſome Councils & Popes, never admitted into plenary Obedience by conſent of Prince and People. Adde to theſe, firſt, ſuch Laws as were made by King Ina, and Offa, Monarchs indeed of England in their turns, as I may ſay, but not deriving the ſame to the Iſſue of their Bodies: So that their Acts as perſonall may by ſome froward Spirits be cavilled at, as determining with their own Lives. Joyn to theſe (if produceable) any Provinciall Conſtitutions of an Engliſh Arch-biſhop (perchance Egbertus of York:) thoſe might obey them, who would obey, being otherwiſe not ſubject to any civil Penalty. But now this Act of Athelwolphus appears entire in all the Proportions of a Law, made in his great Counſel, equivalent to after-Parliaments; not only cum conſilio Epiſcoporum, with the Advice of his Biſhops, (which eaſily may be preſumed willingly to concurre in ſuch a matter of Church-advancement) but alſo Principum meorum, of my Princes (ſaith he:) the Conſent of Inferiour perſons not being required in that Age.

Objections againſt this Act anſwered

10. However, nothing can be ſo ſtrong but it may meet with Cavills, though not to deſtroy, to diſturb the Validity thereof; as this Act hath: and we will ſeverally examine the Defects charged upon it.

1. Obj. Some object that Athelwolphus was but King of the Weſt-Saxons, as appears by his Stile, Rex occidentalium Saxonum, and not univerſall Monarch of England, whoſe Act onely is obligatory to his own Subjects. Let thoſe of Cornwall, Devon, Somerſet, Dorſet, Hants, Wilts, and Berks pay Tithes by vertue of this Command; other Parts of the Land are freed from the ſame, becauſe nihil dat quod non habet, none can derive that to others which they enjoy not themſelves; being King but of a Part, he could not lay this Law upon all the Land.

Anſ. He is tearmed eminently, not excluſively, King of the Weſt-Saxons: being fondeſt of that Title, as his Fathers firſt Inheritance, before he acquired the Monarchy of the whole Land. There were indeed at this time two other Royalets, as onely Kings by his leave, (viz.) Beorred King of Mercia, and Edmond King of Eaſt-Angles, who, as it plainly appears by [a] Ingulphus, were preſent at his Council, and conſented to the Acts thereof.

Anno Dom. 855 | Anno Regni Ethelwolphi 18

2. Obj. The Consideration was superstitious, to say so many Masses for the Souls of this King and his Captains when deceased.

Anſ. A double Consideration is mentioned in this Grant. The first, generall; so pious in it's self, no Exception can be taken thereat, viz. to divert the imminent Judgements of God from the Land, hourly fearing the Invasion of fierce forraign Pagans: so the better to secure the Nine parts thereof to himself and his Subjects, by setting apart, resigning, and surrendring a Tenth to God (the supreme Land-lord of all) in such as attended his daily Service. The second Consideration is more restrictive and particular, and resents indeed of the Ignorance of that Age; but yet is proportionable to the best Devotion those dayes produced: and easily may an accidentall Abuse be purged, by the pious Use intended, and designed generally to Gods Glory.

3. Obj. The King onely granted Tithes of his own Crown-land, non in Dominio, sed in Dominico suo, not in all his Dominions, but onely in his Demesnes.

Anſ. There needed no such solemn Consent of the Council of the Land, for the passing away of his Private Bounty. And that the Grant extended to the Kingdome in Generall, appears by [a] other Authours on the same. Adelwolphus decimonono anno regni sui, qui totam terram suam ad opus Ecclesiarum decimavit propter Amorem Dei, &c. More plainly another Authour: In eodem anno decimavit Athulf. rex de omni possessione sua in partem Domini, & in universo regimine sui Principatus sic constituit.

11. Here we insist not on the many Arguments out of Old and New Testament, to prove Tithes to be Jure Divino, which in due time may be produced, when all Tempests of Tumultuous Spirits are allayed, and when (what the Town-Clerk of Ephesus promised to the Citizens thereof) the Question may be determined [b] ἐν τῇ ἐννόμῳ ἐκκλησίᾳ, in a lawfull and ordinary Assembly, without fear of Force, and suspicion of Violence. For two Strings to a Bow do not amisse; being no Hinderance to the Archer for the better hitting of the Mark, who may wind up one, and use that for the present which he sees most for his own Convenience. Mean time most true it is, that men are not so conscientious to obey the Laws of God, as fearfull to resist the Edicts of Men: and therefore (though farre be it from the Clergy to quit their Title to Tithes by Divine Right) they conceive it the surest way sometimes to make use of Humane Injunctions, as having the most potent Influence on mens Affections; especially in this Age, when the love of many (both to God and Goodnesse) beginneth to wax cold.

A pleasant passage.

12. A Reverend Doctour in Cambridge, and afterwards Bishop of Sarisbury, was troubled at his small living at Hoggmton, with a peremptory Anabaptist, who plainly told him, It goes against my Conscience to pay you Tithes, except you can shew me a place of Scripture whereby they are due unto you. The Doctour returned, Why should it not go as much against my Conscience, that you should enjoy your Nine parts, for which you can shew no place of Scripture? To whom the other rejoyned, But I have for my Land, Deeds and Evidences from my Fathers, who purchased, and were peaceably possessed thereof by the Laws of the Land. The same is my Title, saith the Doctour; Tithes being confirmed unto me by many Statutes of the Land time out of mind. Thus he drave that Nail, not which was of the strongest Metall or sharpest Point, but which would go best for the present. It was Argumentum ad hominem, fittest for the person he was to meddle with; who afterwards peaceably payed his Tithes unto him. Had the Doctour ingaged in Scripture-Argument, though never so pregnant & pertinent, it had been endlesse to dispute with him, who made Clamour the end of his Dispute, whose Obstinacy and Ignorance made him uncapable of solid Reason; and therefore the worse the Argument, the better for his Apprehension.

13. Most

Anno Regni Ethelwolphi 18 — Anno Dom. 855

13. Most solid and ingenious was the Answer of a most eminent Serjeant at Law of this Age, to the impertinent Clamours of such against the payment of Tithes, because (as they say) due onely by Humane Right. My Cloak is my Cloak by the Law of Man: But he is a Thief by the Law of God that taketh it away from me.

A solid Answer of a learned Serjeant.

14. True it is that this Law did not presently find an universall Obedience in all the Land. And the Wonder is not great, if at the first making thereof it met with many Recusants; since corroborated by eight hundred yeares Prescription, and many Confirmations, it findes Obstacles and Oppositions at this day: for in succeeding Ages severall Kings confirmed the same, thongh Papall Exemptions of severall Orders, and modus Decimandi according to custome, have almost since tithed the Tithes in some places.

This law not presently and perfectly obeyed.

15. King Athelwolphus the next year took his (call it Progresse or) Pilgrimage to Rome. Where the report of his Piety prevented his Arrivall, & provided both Welcome and Wonder for his Entertainment. Here he confirmed unto the Pope his Predecessours Grant of Peter-pence, and as a Surplusage, bestowed upon him the yearly Revenue of three hundred Marks, thus to be expended.

King Athelwolph's journey to Rome, and bounty to the Pope. a William Malmesbury, ut prius.

1. To maintain Candles for S^t. Peter, one hundred
2. To maintain Candles for S^t. Paul, one hundred } Marks.
3. For a free Largesse to the Pope, one hundred

16. If any be curious to know how these 300 Marks were in after-Ages divided and collected, let them peruse the following Account: if the Particulars be truely cast up, and (attested to me out of Sir Tho. Cotton's Librarie, and, as they say, out of the Vatican it self) be authenticall.

How this Summe was divided, and collected out of severall Dioceses.

	l.	s.	d.		l.	s.	d.		l.	s.	d.
Canterbury	8	8	0	Ely	5	0	0	Exceter	9	5	0
London	26	10	0	Lincoln	42	0	0	Worcester	10	5	0
Rochester	5	12	0	Chichester	8	0	0	Hereford	6	0	0

Sarisbury	17	0	0	Covent. & Lichfield	41	5	0	York	11	10	0

These Summes were demanded by Pope Gregory the thirteenth in the 46. of Edward the third, (on that Token, that their payment was much opposed by John of Gaunt.) I dare not discede from my Copy a tittle, coming, as they say, from the Register at Rome: nor will I demand a Reason, why Durham and Carliste are here omitted; much lesse examine the Equity of their Proportions, as applied to their respective Dioceses; but implicitly believe all done very justly. The reason why the Welsh Bishopricks were exempted is, because at the grant hereof by King Athelwolph, Wales was not then under his Dominion. This 300 Marks was but a distinct payment by it self, and not the whole Body of Peter-pence (amounting to a greater Summe,) whereof, God willing, hereafter.

Ethelredi 1 — 867

17. After the Death of King Athelwolphus, and his two Sons Ethelbald and Ethelbert succeeding him, this Land was in a sad Condition, though nothing so bad as under the Reign of Ethelred his third Son, and Successour: for then indeed most miserable was the state of the English, harassed by the Danes, who, like the running-Gout, shifted from joynt to joynt, from place to place; often repelled from the severall Shires, never expelled out of England. The Saxon Folly hurt them more, then the Danish Fury; refusing effectually to unite, to make a joynt-Resistance against a generall Enemy. For some sixty yeares since, the West-Saxons had subdued the other six Kings of this Nation; yet so, that they still continued Kings, but Homagers to the West-Saxon Monarchy. The shortning of their Sceptres stuck in their Stomacks, especially of the Mercian and Northumbrian Kings, the most puissant of all the rest. Whereupon, beholding Ethelred, the West-Saxon King (the Staffe and Stay of the whole Nation) embroiled with the Invasion of the Danes, they not only lazily looked on, but secretly smiled at this Sight, as the only way to Conquer the Conquerour.

The Saxons wilfully accessory to their own ruine by the Danes.

Yea,

Anno Dom. 867 — Anno Regni Ethelredi 1

Yea, such their Envy, that rather then one (once their equal) should be above them in Felicity, they all would be equall with him in Misery. They would more contentedly be Slaves to a Forrain Foe, to whom they all stood unrelated, then Homagers to him, who had (as they thought) usurped Dominion over them. Never considering, that the Danes were Pagans; (Self-interest is deaf to the Checks of Conscience;) and Revenge (which is wilde at the best) was so mad in them, that they would procure it with the Hazzard, if not Losse, of their God, his Church, and true Religion. Thus the Height of the Saxon Pride and Envy, caused the Breadth of the Danish Power and Cruelty. Indeed the foresaid Saxon Kings, perceiving their Errour, endeavoured at last to help the West-Saxon (or rather to help themselves in him) against the Danes. But alas, it was too late. For, the Danish Garisons lay so indented in the Heart of the Land, that the Saxon Troups were blasted, before they could grow into Regiments; and their Strength (dispersed in the gathering) was routed, before regulated into an Army.

Fight betwixt Christians and Danes.

18. This year the Danes made an Invasion into Lincolnshire, where they met with stout Resistance: and let us take a List of the chief Officers on both sides. 870 — 4

Christian Saxons.	Danish Pagans.

The Christians had the better the first day, wherein the Danes lost three of their Kings, buried in a place thence called Trekingham: so had they the second, till at night, breaking their Ranks to pursue the Danes in their dissembled Flight, they were utterly overthrown.

Crowland Monks massacred.

19. Theodore Abbot of Crowland, hearing of the Danes Approach, shipped away most of his Monks, with the choicest Relicks and Treasures of his Convent, and cast his most precious Vessels into a Well in the Cloister. The rest remaining were at their Morning-prayers, when the Danes entring, slew

Theodore the Abbot on the High Altar,
Asher the Prior in the Vestiary,
Lathwin the Sub-Prior in the Refectory,
Pauline in the Quire,
Herbert in the Quire,
Wolride the Torch-Bearer in the same place,
Grimketule and Agamund, each of them an hundred yeares old, in the Cloisters.

[c] Ingulphus, pag. 866.

These, saith my [c] Authour, were first examinati, tortured to betray their Treasure, and then exanimati, put to death for their Refusall. The same Writer seems to wonder, that being killed in one place, their Bodies were afterwards found in another. Surely the Corpse removed not themselves, but no doubt the Danes dragged them from place to place when dead. There was one Child-Monk therein, but ten yeares old, (Turgar by name) of most lovely Looks and Person. Count Sidroke the younger pittying his tender yeares (all Devills are not cruell alike) cast a Danish [d] Coat upon him, and so saved him, who onely survived, to make the sad Relation of the Massacre.

20. Hence the Danes marched to Medeshamsted (since called Peterborough:) where where finding the Abbey-gates locked against them, they resolved to force their Entrance; in effecting whereof, Tulba, Brother to Count Hubba, was dangerously wounded, almost to Death, with a Stone cast at him. Hubba enraged hereat, like another Doeg, killed Abbot Hedda, and all the Monks, being fourscore and four, with his own hand. Count Sidroke gave an Item to young Monk Turgar (who hitherto attended him) in no wise to meet Count Hubba, for fear that his Danish Livery should not be found of proof against his Fury. Then was the Abbey set on Fire, which burned fifteen dayes together, wherein an excellent Library was consumed. Having pillaged the Abbey, and broke open the Tombes and Coffins of many Saints there interred, these Pagans marched forwards into Cambridgeshire, and passing the River Nine, two of their Wagons fell into the Water, wherein the Cattell which drew them were drowned, much of their rich Plunder lost, and more impaired.

led. Monastery burned.

21. Some dayes after, the Monks of Medeshamsted were buried altogether in a great Grave, and their Abbot in the middest of them, a Crosse being erected over the same; where one may have four yards square of Martyrs Dust, which no place else in England doth afford. Godric, Successour to Theodore, Abbot of Crowland, used annually to repair hither, and to say Masses two dayes together for the Souls of such as were entombed. One would think that by Popish Principles these were rather to be prayed to, then prayed for; many maintaining that Martyrs go the nearest way to Heaven, sine ambage Purgatorii: so that surely Godric did it not to better their Condition, but to expresse his own Affection, out of the Redundancy of his Devotion; which others will call the Superfluity of his Superstition.

A heap of Martyrs.

22. The Danes spared no Age, Sex, Condition of people; such was the Cruelty of this Pagan unpartial Sword. With a violent Inundation they broke into the Kingdome of the East-Angles; wasted Cambridge, and the Countrey thereabouts; burnt (the then City of) Thetford; forced Edmond, King of that Countrey, into his Castle of Framlingham; who perceiving himself unable to resist their Power, came forth, and at the Village of Hoxon in Suffolk tendered his Person unto them, hoping thereby to save the Effusion of his Subjects Blouds. Where, after many Indignities offered unto him, they bound him to a Tree; and because he would not renounce his Christianity, shot him with Arrow after Arrow; their Cruelty taking Deliberation, that he might the better digest one Pain, before another succeeded, so distinctly to protract his Torture (though Confusion be better then Method in matters of Cruelty) till not Mercie, but want of a Mark made them desist; according to the [a] Poets Expression,

23. However, the West-Saxon King Ethelbert behaved himself bravely, fighting, with various Successe, nine [b] Battels against the Danes: though ninety nine had not been sufficient against so numerous an Enemy. But we leave these things to the Historians of the State, to relate. We read of an [c] Heap of Stones, made between Iacob and Laban, with a mutuall Contract, that neither should passe the same for Harm. Thus would I have Ecclesiasticall and civil Historians indent about the Bounds, and Limits of their Subjects, that neither injuriously incroach on the Right of the other. And, if I chance to make an Excurſion into the matters of the Common-wealth, it is not out of Curioſity, or Buſybodineſſe, to be medling in other mens Lines: but onely in an amicable way, to give a kind Viſit, and to clear the mutuall Dependence of the Church on the Common-wealth. Yet let me ſay, that this War againſt the Danes was of Church-concernment; for it was as much pro aris, as pro focis, as much for Religion, as civil Intereſt. But one War muſt not be forgotten. Importunate Meſſengers brought the Tidings, that the Engliſh were dangerouſly ingaged with the Danes, at Eſſendune (haply Eſſenden now, in Surrey) and likely to be worſted. King Ethelbert was at his Devotions, which he would not omit, nor abbreviate for all their Clamour. No Suit would he hear on Earth, till firſt he had finiſhed his Requeſts to Heaven. Then, having performed the part of pious Moſes in the [a] Mount, he began to act valiant Joſhua in the Valley. The Danes are vanquiſhed, leaving Poſterity to learn, that time ſpent in Prayer, is laid out to the beſt Advantage.

24. But alas, this Daniſh Invaſion was a mortal Wound, Dedecus Saxonicæ fortitudinis; the Cure whereof was rather to be deſired, then hoped for. Eaſe for the preſent, was all Art could perform. King Ethelbert ſaw, that of theſe Pagans the more he ſlew, the more they grew, which went to his valiant Heart. Grief is an heavy Burthen; and generally, the ſtrongeſt Shoulders are able to bear the leaſt proportion thereof. The good King therefore withered away in the Flower of his Age, willingly preferred to encounter rather Death, then the Danes; for he knew how to make a joyfull End with the one, but endleſs was his Conteſt with the other: according to the Obſervation of the Engliſh [b] Hiſtorian, that the Saxon-Kings in this Age, magis optabant honeſtum Exitum, quam acerbum Imperium.

25. In this ſad condition God ſent England a Deliverer, namely, King Alfred, or Alured, born in England, bred in Rome, where, by a Prolepſis, he was anointed King by Pope Leo (though then but a private Prince, and his three elder Brothers alive) in auſpicium futuri regni, in hope that hereafter he ſhould come to the Crown. Nor did this Vnction make Alfred ante-date his Kingdome, who quietly waited till his foreſaid Brothers ſucceſſively reigned, and died before him, and then took his Turn in the Kingdome of the Weſt-ſaxons. The worſt was, his Condition was like a Bride-groom, who, though lawfully wedded, yet might not bed his Bride, till firſt he had conquered his Rival; and muſt redeem England, before he could reign over it. The Danes had London, many of the in-land, moe of the maritime Towns, and Alfred onely three effectuall Shires, Somerſet, Dorſet, and Wilts; yet by Gods Bleſſing on his Valour, he got to be Monarch of all England. Yea, conſider him as a King in his Court, as a Generall in his Camp, as a Chriſtian in his Cloſet, as a Patron in the Church, as a Founder in his Colledge, as a Father in his Family; his Actions will every way appear no leſſe excellent in themſelves, then exemplary to others.

872 — Alfredi ſeu Aluredi 1

26. His moſt daring Deſign was, when lying hid about Athelney in Somerſet-ſhire, and diſguiſed under the habit of a Fidler (being an excellent Muſician) he adventured into the Daniſh Camp. Had not his ſpirit been undaunted, the ſight of his armed Foes had been enough to have put his Inſtrument out of Tune. Here going unſuſpected through their Army, he diſcovered their Condition, and ſome of their Intentions. Some would ſay, that the Danes deſerved to be beaten indeed, if they would communicate their Counſels to a Fidler. But let ſuch know, Alfred made this generall Diſcovery of them, that they were remiſſe in their Diſcipline, lay idle and careleſſe: and Security diſarmes the beſt-appointed Army. Themiſtocles ſaid of himſelf, that he could not fiddle, but he knew how to make a little City great. But our Alfred could fiddle, and make a little City great too; yea, enlarge a petty and contracted Kingdome, into a vaſt and abſolute Monarchy.

Alfred, as a fidler, diſcovereth the Danish deſignes.

876 — 5

27. But, as the Poets feign of Anteus, the Son of the Earth, who fighting with

The Danish ſhips left water-bound

with Hercules, and often worsted by him, recovered his Strength again every time he touched the Earth, revived with an addition of new Spirits: so the Danes, which may seem the sons of Neptune, though often beaten by the English in land-Battels, no sooner recovered their Ships at Sea, but presently recruiting themselves, they returned from Denmark, more numerous and formidable then before. But at last (to follow the Poeticall Fancy) as Hercules, to prevent Antæus his farther reviving, hoised him aloft, and held him strangled in his Armes, till he was stark dead, and utterly expired: so, to secure the Danes from returning to the Sea, who out of the Thames had with their Fleet sailed up the River Ley, betwixt Hartfordshire and Essex, Alfred with Pioneers divided the grand Stream of Ley into severall Rivulets; so that their Ships lay Water-bound, leaving their Mariners to shift for themselves over land, most of which fell into the hands of their English Enemies: so that this proved a mortal Defeat to the Danish Insolence.

28. Alfred having thus reduced England to some tolerable terms of Quiet, made most of the Danes his Subjects by Conquest, & the rest his Friends by Composition, encountred a fiercer Foe, namely, Ignorance and Barbarisme, which had generally invaded the whole Nation. Insomuch that he writeth, that South of Thames he found not any that could read English. Indeed in these dayes all men turned Students; but what did they study? onely to live secretly, and safely from the Fury of the Danes. And now, that the next Age might be wiser then this, Alfred intended the founding of an University at Oxford. — The general ignorance in England.

29. Indeed, there were anciently standing on the Banks of Isis (which in due time commenceth Thamisis) two Towns; one Crekelade, or Greeklade, in Wiltshire; the other Lechlade, or Latinlade, in Glocestershire. In the former of these many yeares since (things time out of mind must not be condemned as time out of truth) the Greek Tongue, as in the later the Latine Tongue, are said to be publickly professed by Philosophers. But where was Hebrew-lade, the Hebrew Tongue being more necessarie then both the former, for the understanding of the Old Testament? Alas, in this Age it was banished, not onely out of England, but out of Christendome. As in the ordinary method of Nature, the more aged usually die first: so no wonder if Hebrew (generally presumed the oldest Language in the world) expired first in this Age of Ignorance, utterly abolished out of the Western Countries. Yea, it is well the other two learned Tongues were preserved in these places; Crekelade and Lechlade being then Cities of eminent Note, shrunk now to mean Towns, and content with plain English, where Latine and Greek were formerly professed. — Ancient Schools at Crekelade and Lechlade.

11 — 882 — 30. But now the Muses swam down the Stream of the River Isis, to be twenty miles nearer to the rising Sun, and were by King Alfred removed from Crekelade and Lechlade, to Oxford, where he founded an University. Yet some say, Alfred did find, and not found Letters therein, seeing there was a sprinkling of Students therein before: though Learning was very low, and little therein, till this considerable Accession, when Alfred founded therein three Colledges, one for Grammarians, a second for Philosophers, a third for Divines. Take a List of their primitive Professours. — The University first founded by Alfred at Oxford.

In Logick { John of S^t. Davids } In Mathematicks { Ioannes Monachus. }

It is credibly reported, that what is now called Vniversity-Colledge, was then one of King Alfred's Foundations, as the Verses written in their Hall, under his Armes, do attest.

31. At the same time wherein King Alfred built Vniversity Colledge in Oxford, he also founded another House called Kings-great-Hall (intimating a lesser hard by) now included within the compasse [a] of Braxen-nose Colledge. And hence it is that at this very day it payeth some chief Rent to Vniversity Colledge, as the ancient Owner thereof. Here he placed Iohannes Scotus (highly endeared in this Kings Affections) Reader therein. On the clearing of whose Extraction and Opinions a long Story doth depend.

32. This Scotus is called Iohannes Scotus Erigena, (with addition sometimes of Sophista:) so that all may amount to a kind of Definition of him as to his Individuall Person. Conceive we Scotus for his Genus, which because homonymous in [b] that Age (as signifying both Scotland and Ireland) Erigena is added for his Difference, that is, born (as some will have it) in Ireland, called [c] Erin in their own Countrey Language. But Dempster, a Scotch [d] Writer, who will leave nothing that can be gotten above ground (yea, will dive and digge into the Water and Land of others) to the credit of his Countrey, claimeth Scotus as born in Scotland, spelling him Airigena, from Aire, a small place therein. But besides unanswerable Arguments to the contrary, gena is a termination seldome added to so restrictive a word, but (as Francigena, Angligena) denoteth generally the Nation, not petty place of a mans Extraction. As for Dempster, his Credit runneth low with me, ever since he made Pope Innocentius the first a Scotch-man, because calling himself Albanus, (and Scotland, forsooth, is Albania) it being notoriously known that the said Innocent was born at Long Alba nigh Rome. Yea Bellarmine himself said, reading the three books of Dempster, wherein he hooketh in so many for his Countrymen, that he thought that if he should add a fourth, he would make JESUS CHRIST himself to be a Scotch-man.

33. All this while Wales stands modestly silent, with intention to put in her Claim the last to Scotus his Nativity, whom many Writers make born at [e] Saint Davids. Whilest some will have the Epithet of Erigena affixed unto him quasi ἠρι γενόμενος, early-born, because of the timely rising of his Parts (as a Morning-starre) in those dark dayes: which I can better applaud for an ingenious Allusion, then approve for a true and serious Assertion. But be Scotus born where he please, most sure it is, by King Alfred he was made a Professour of Learning in Oxford.

Miserably murdered by his Scholars.

34. I confesse [f] Cajus maketh this John Scotus Scholar to Bede (as many [g] good Authours also do) and brought up at Cambridge: to which the Sons of our Aunt are loth to consent, that one who was taught in Cambridge, should teach in Oxford; and their [h] eloquent Oratour falls very foul, save that it is some ease to be railed on in good Latine) on him for the same. Now because we Cambridge-men are loth to take a Limbe of John Scotus (or any other Learned man) more then what will come of it self, with the Consent of Chronologie; and because I find [i] Bale dislikes the same, chiefly on the account of his improbable Vivacity of an hundred and seventy years; I can be content to resign my particular Title unto him, provided it be without Prejudice to others of our Vniversity, who hereafter may challenge him with better Arguments.

35. I much wonder that this Scotus should be so degraded in his Old-age from Oxford to Malmesbury; from a Professour in an Vniversity, to a Schoolmaster in a Countrey-town; where pouring Learning into his Ladds (rather in proportion to the Plenty of the Fountain, then to the Receipt of the Vessels) he was severe to such Scholars as were dull in their Apprehensions. This so irritated their Anger against him, that by an universall Conspiracy they dispatched him in the School with their Pen-knives. I find not what Punishment was inflicted upon them: Whipping being too little, if sturdy Youths; and Hanging too much, if but little Boyes. Onely I observe one Cassianus, a Schoolmaster in Primitive times, sent the same way on the same Occasion; his Death being elegantly described by [a] Prudentius.

Primi-

36. All the Amends which is made to the Memory of Scotus is, that he was made a Martyr after his Death, and his Anniversary is remembred in the Kalendar on the fourth of the Ides of November, in the Roman Martyrologie, set forth at Antwerp 1586. by the command of Gregory the thirteenth. But since Baronius hath unmartyred him; and that on good reason, saith [b] Henry Fitz-Simon, attesting that an Apologie is provided, confirmed with approbation of many Popes, Cardinalls, and many learned Doctours, justifying Baronius therein, which we, as yet, have not beheld. Indeed Scotus detested some Superstitions of the times, especially about the Presence in the Lords Supper; and I have [c] read that his Book de Eucharistia was condemned in the Vercellian Synod, for some Passages therein, by Pope Leo. This makes it suspicious, that some Hands of more age and Heads of more Malice, then School-boyes, might guide the Pen-knives which murdered Scotus, because of his known Opposition against some Practises and Opinions of that ignorant Age.

37. It is much that this Scotus, though carrying in his Name a Comment on himself, that all should not suffice so distinctly to expound him to some Apprehensions, but that still they confound him with others of his Name; sometimes with Iohannes Scotus [d] Mailrossius, sometimes with Iohn Dunce Scotus; though indeed there be Difference enough of Time, Place, and other distinguishing Characters, betwixt them. Our present Scotus being most probably an Irishman, a great Linguist in the learned Tongues, a vast Traveller into the Eastern parts, a Monk by profession, killed and buried at Malmesbury. The other Scotus born in Northumberland, skilled onely (and that but meanly) in Latine, never travelling farther then France, and the hither part of Germany, a Franciscan by his Order, dying of an Apoplexy, and buried at Colen; of whom (God willing) largely hereafter.

38. To return to King Alfred. As for the Maintenance of the Scholars, it issued forth annually from Alfred's Exchequer, who made a fourefold [e] division of his Wealth; understand it of the Surplusage thereof, more then what his Court and Camp expended: One part to the Poor, of all kinds, that came and craved of him; a second to the Monasteries of his own Erection; a third to the School, understand Oxford, which he himself had founded; the fourth, and last, to the neighbouring Monasteries round about. However, we may easily believe that after his Death, the Students of Oxford were often at a losse of Livelihood. For, seeing the Coffers of the greatest Kings (especially in the time of War) are subject to a Drought of Coin, there must needs be a Dearth in those Colledges, which are watered thence for their Maintenance. Scholars may in time of Peace, but Souldiers must be paid in time of War. Wherefore, the most certain Subsistence for Scholars (so far forth as inconstant things, as all Sublunary, can be made constant) is, what ariseth from solid Lands, wherewith they are endowed. For, though even such Revenues are subject to Casualties, yet some Water will ever be running, though the Tide thereof may ebb, or flow, according to the fall, or rise of Commodities.

39. But it is hard so to compose two Swarms of Bees in one Hive, but that they will fall out, and fight. The Colledge of Logick, it seems, from the Foundation thereof, studied Divisions, as well as Distinctions; there happening a dangerous Difference betwixt the Aborigines and the Advenæ, the old Stock of Students, and the new Store brought in by S^t. Grimball: the former, standing on their Seniority, expected more Respect unto themselves, deriving their Priviledges from their learned Auncestors, time out of mind; which the Grimballists would not consent unto. Both sides appealed to Alfred, as their Patron. He coming to Oxford, carried himself with much moderation, as accounting that Agreement most durable, into which the parties were perswaded, not commanded. Grimball, expecting King Alfred's zealous ingaging on his side, according

The Armes of Oxford, a Brian Twine in Apolog. Antiq. Oxon.

40. An [a] Antiquary tells us, that the ancient Armes were assigned to Oxford about this time, namely, in a Field Azure, a Bible with seven Seales appendant thereunto, opened (at the beginning of S^t. Johns Gospel, In the beginning was the Word, &c.) betwixt three Crowns Or: which three Crowns (saith he) signifie the three Senses of the Scripture: in the which, I confesse, I do not understand him. For, either we must admit but one Sense of the Scripture, as principally intended therein (which is the generall Opinion of the Protestants:) or, if with the Papists, we will allow moe Senses then one, we must conclude [b] four, namely, the literall, allegoricall, morall, and anagogicall. What if the three Crowns import the three Professions which Alfred here founded, and all necessary to the understanding of the Book betwixt them? Grammar, to understand the Letter; Philosophy, the Reason; and Divinity, the Mystery of the Scripture.

41. One of the first Scholars of Note, whom I find bred in Oxford, was one Dunwolphus, once a Swineheard in Athelney, when Alfred lurked therein, being the Kings Host, who entertained him, or rather his Master, whom the King served. Alfred perceiving in him pregnancy of Parts (though stifled with the Narrownesse, and cripled with the Lowneſse of his Vocation) sent him to [c] Oxford, where he became, after some yeares study, Doctour in Divinity, and was by the King, in Gratitude, preferred to be Bishop of [d] VVinchester. But the Monks of VVinchester are so proud and sullen, they disdain to accept this man for their Bishop, affirming, that their See stood void at this time; more willing to confesse a Vacancy, then admit a Swineheard into their Episcopall Chaire. Whereas surely Alfred, so great a Scholar, and good a man, would not have advanced him per saltum, from a Swineheard to a Bishop, had he not been qualified by intermediate Degrees of Education. For mine own part, I see no reason why VVinchester should be ashamed of him; and for ought I know, Dunwolph might be as good a Bishop as Dunstan, of whom the Monks of VVinchester so boast, both without cause, and measure. 887. 16

42. Councils (except Councils of VVarre) were very rare in this Age. The [e] first I find a solemn one, celebrated by King Alfred; the place not expressed, but the Canons therein fairly transmitted to Posterity. The Preface of these Canons is very remarkable, consisting of three parts.

3. The fifteenth Chapter of the Acts, containing the Council of Jerusalem, as being a Divine Precedent, or Warrant for Christians to convene together, and conclude Orders for regulating mens Conversations.

It is remarkable, that in the aforesaid ten Commandments, as exemplified in this Council of Alfred, the second Commandment is wholly expunged; Image-worship beginning then to grow common in the world, and the Clergy, who gained thereby (hating the second Commandement, on the same ac-

The worſt is, when this was wanting, the Decalogue was but an Ennealogue; and therefore to preſerve the number of ten, the Papiſts generally cleave the laſt Commandment into two: but in Alfred's Preface, this is made the tenth and laſt Commandment, Thou ſhalt not worſhip Gods of Gold and Silver. Which, as it comes in out of it's proper place, (and why ſhould not Gods Order be obſerved, as well as his Number, in the Commandments?) ſo is it defectively rendered, nothing ſo full againſt graven-Images, as God propounded it. The Canons made in this Council fall under a three-fold Conſideration. Some relate onely to the Common-wealth, and by us may properly be forborn. Others concern onely Monks and Friers, (a ſixth Finger, and no neceſſary Member of the Church:) and, as Abbo moritur cum perſona; ſo with the Extirpation of thoſe Convents, thoſe Canons may ſeem to expire. | a 1 King. 22. 8

18 | 889 | 43. Plegmund an Eremite in the Iſle of Cheſter (now called Plegmundſham) Tutour to King Alfred, was by him preferred to be Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, then a miſerable place, as hardly recovered from the late Sacking of the Danes. By the Kings command, he called the Clergy of England together, and made a Collection of Almes, to be ſent to Rome and Ieruſalem: and Athelm, Arch-biſhop of York, was imployed in the Journey, going perſonally to the aforeſaid Places, to ſee the Contribution there faithfully delivered, and equally diſtributed. | A generall Contribution to Rome and Ieruſalem.

About the end of this Century died worthy King Alfred, remarkable to Poſterity on many Accounts, whereof this not the leaſt, That he turned Davids Pſalms into Engliſh; ſo that a Royall Text met with a Royall Tranſlatour. He left his Crown to Edward his Sonne (commonly called the Elder) farre inferiour to his Father in Skill in, but not ſo much in his Love to good Literature. Indeed he had an excellent Tutour, Aſſerius Menevenſis, Arch-biſhop of St. Davids, (the faithfull Writer of his Fathers Actions) ſuppoſed by ſome Biſhop of Sherburn, which is denied by [b] others, (though one of the ſame name was ſome yeares before) as inconſiſtent with Chronologie. | Death of King Alfred.

45. As for the principall Clergy-men extant at this time, we take ſpeciall notice of two: the one, Berthulf, Biſhop of VVincheſter, made one of the Guardians of the Realm againſt the Incurſion of the Danes; the other, Halard, Biſhop of Dorcheſter, advanced alſo into the ſame Employment. But alaſs, what weak Guardians were theſe to defend the Land, which could not ſecure their own Sees! And in what Capacity (ſave in Prayers and Teares) were they able to make any Reſiſtance? for now the Danes not onely aſſailed the Skirts and Out-ſides of the Land, but alſo made Inrodes many miles into the Continent thereof. Inſomuch that VVincheſter lay void ſix, and Sherburn ſeven yeares; ſuch the Pagan Fury, that none durſt offer to undertake thoſe Places. | Weak Guardians God wote.

46. True it is, the Engliſh oftentimes in Battell got the Advantage of them; when the Pagan Danes being conquered had but one way to ſhift for themſelves, namely, to counterfeit themſelves Chriſtians, and embrace Baptiſme: but no ſooner had they got Power again into their hands, but that they turning Apoſtates were ten times more cruell then ever before. Thus ſucceſſively was the Land affected with Sickneſſe, Recovery, and Relapſes; the peoples Condition being ſo much the more diſconſolate, becauſe promiſing a Continuance of Happineſſe to themſelves upon their Victories, they were on their Overthrows remanded to the ſame, if not a worſe Condition. | The wofull eſtate of the Engliſh.

Edvardi Senioris 3 | 904 | 1. AT this time there was a great Dearth of Bishops in the Land, which lasted for seven yeares (as long as the Famine in Ægypt) during which time, there was no Bishop in all the West parts of England. Pope Formosus was foully offended hereat, and thereupon, cum magna Iracundia & Devotione, with much Passion and Piety, by his Curse and Excommunication, interdicted King, Kingdome, and all the Subjects therein. We cannot but gaze at the Novelty of this act, (as we conceive, a leading Case in this kind) whilest the skilfull in the Canon Law can give an account of the Equity of the Popes Proceedings, why all should suffer for some, the guiltlesse with the guilty, and have the Word and Sacraments taken from them, for the want of Bishops in other places: otherwise, the Punishment seemeth unjust in the rigid justice thereof, and (if not heavier) larger then the Offence, and beareth no Proportion with common Equity, Christian Charity, and Gods Proceedings, who saith, the soul that sinneth, shall dye.

2. Notwithstanding, this excommunicating of K. Edward by the Pope is highly urged:

The Character of those

Kings on whom the Pope most improved himself.

urged by [a] Parsons, to prove the Popes Power in England over Princes, according to his constant Solœcisme clean through the tenure of his Book, to reason à Facto ad Ius, arguing from the Popes barely doing it, that he may justly do it. We deny not but that in this Age, active and ambitious Popes mightily improved their Power upon five sorts of Princes. First, on such as were lazy, and voluptuous; who, on condition they might enjoy their Sports and Delights for the present, cared not for their Posterity. Secondly, on such as were openly vicious, and so obnoxious to Censure; who would part with any thing, out of the apprehension of their Guiltinesse. Thirdly, on such as were tender, and easie-natured; who gave, not so much out of Bounty to give, as out of Bashfulnesse to deny the Popes Importunity. Fourthly, on those of a timorous spirit; who were affrighted with their own Fancies of the Popes Terriblenesse, and being captivated unto him by their own Fear, they ransomed themselves at what Price he pleased. Lastly, on pious Princes; whose blind Zeal, and misled Devotion, thought nothing too precious for him: in which form we rank this Edward the Elder, then King of England. And it is worth our observing, that in point of Power and Profit, what the Popes once get, they ever hold, being as good at keeping, as catching; so that what one got by Encroching, his Successour prescribed that Encrochment for a Title, which whether it will hold good in matter of Right, it is not for an Historian to dispute.

The Pope pleased, and England absolved again.

3. But to return to our Story. We are glad to see Malmesbury so merry, who calleth this Passage of the Popes interdicting England, Iocundum memoratu, pleasant to be reported, because it ended so well. For Pleigmund Arch-bishop of Canterbury posted to Rome, bringing with him honorifica munera, (such Ushers will make one way through the thickest Croud to the Popes Presence) informing his Holinesse that Edward, King of England, in a late-summoned Synod, had founded some new, and supplied all old vacant Bishopricks. Pacified herewith the Pope turned his Curse into a Blessing, and ratified their Elections. The worst is, a learned [b] Pen tells me, that in this Story there is an inextricable Errour in point of Chronology, which will not suffer Pope Formosus and this King Edward the Elder to meet together. And Baronius makes the Mistake worse, by endeavouring to mend it. I have so much Warinesse, as not to enter into that Labyrinth, out of which I cannot return; but leave the Doubt to the Popes Datarie to clear, proper to him, as versed in such matters. The same [c] Pen informs me, that the sole way to reconcile the Difference is, to read Pope Leo the fifth instead of Pope Formosus: which for Quietnesse I am content to do, the rather, because such a Roaring Curse best beseems the mouth of a Lion.

Vacant Bishopricks supplied, and new erected.

4. Hear now the names of the seven Bishops which Pleigmund consecrated in one day: a great dayes-work, and a good one, if all were fit for the Function. Wildstan Bishop of Winchester, (a Learned and Holy man) Werstan of Shireburn, Kinulfe of Dorchester, Beornege of Selsey, Athelme of Wells, Eadulfe of Crediton in Devon, and Athelstan in Cornwall of S^t. Petrocks. These three last Western Bishopricks, were in this Council newly erected. But S^t. Petrocks had never long any settled Seat, being much in motion, translated from Bodman in Cornwall (upon the wasting of it by the Danes) to S^t. Germans in the same County, and afterward united to Crediton in Devonshire. This Bishopriek was founded principally for the reduction of the rebellious Cornish to the Romish Rites; who as they used the Language, so they imitated the Lives and Doctrine of the ancient Britans, neither hitherto, nor long after submitting themselves to the See Apostolick.

King Edward in a new Synod confirms his fathers constitutions

5. A Synod was called at Intingford, where Edward the Elder, and Guthurn King of the Danes, in that part of England which formerly belonged to the East-Angles, onely confirmed the same [d] ecclesiasticall Constitutions, which Alured, Edwards Father, with the said Guthurn, had made before. Here the curious Palats of our Age will complain of Crambe, that two Kings, with their Clergy, should meet together onely actum agere, to do what was done to their hands. But whilest some count all Councils idle, which do not add or alter others others will commend their Diſcretion, who can diſcern what is well ordered already, approve their Policie, in enjoyning ſuch things unto others, and principally praiſe their Piety, for practiſing them in themſelves. And whoſoever looks abroad into the world, with a judicious Eye, will ſoon ſee, that there is not ſo much need of New Laws, (the Multitude whereof rather cumbers mens Memories, then quickens their Practiſe) as an abſolute neceſſity to enforce Old Laws, with a new and vigorous Execution of them.

For the Danes (who made all the Sea-coaſts of England their Haunt, and kept the Kingdome of the East-Angles for their Home) had baniſhed all Learning from that place; Apollo's Harp being ſilenced by Mars his Drum: till this Kings Bounty brought Learning back again thither, as by his following Charter may appear.

The Credit of this Charter is queſtioned by ſome, becauſe of the barbarous Stile thereof: as if an Univerſity were disgraced with honourable Priviledges granted unto it in baſe Latine. But know, that Age was ſo poor in Learning, it could not go to the Coſt of good Language. Who can look to find a fair Face in the hoteſt parts of Æthiopia? Thoſe Times were ignorant: and as it is obſerved of the Country-people born at the Village of[b] Carlton in Leiceſterſhire, that they have all (proceeding from ſome ſecret cauſe in their Soil or Water) a ſtrange uncouth VVharling in their Speech; ſo it was proper to the perſons writing in this Age, to have a harſh, unpleaſant, grating Stile, (and ſo much the ſowrer to Criticall Eares, the more it is ſweetned with an affected Rhythm,) though a Blemiſh, yet a Badge of their genuine Deeds, which were paſſed in thoſe times.

Propterea ad Clerimoniam augmentandam, ſicut Pater ſuus Oxoniam, ſic ipſe ab antiquo cum cæteris Studiis generalibus ſuſpenſam, deſolatam, & deſtructam Cantabrigiam, iterum ad primam Gloriam erexit:

Therefore for the augmentation of Clerklike Learning, as his Father had done to Oxford, ſo he again raiſed up Cambridge to her firſt Glory, which for a long time, with other generall Schools, had been ſuſpended, deſolate, and deſtroyed:

nec non ibi Aulas Studientium, & Doctorum Magistrorumque Cathedras & Sedilia, ut dilectissimus Cleri nutritor, amator, & defensor, suis sumtibus erigi & fabricari præcepit. Ab Oxonia namque Vniversitate, quã Pater suus nobilis Rex erexerat, Magistros Artiũ quas liberales vocamus, pariter in sacra Theologia Doctores, advocavit, ibiq; ad legendũ formaliter, & docendũ invitavit.

as also, like a most loving Nourisher of the Clergie, he commanded that Halls for Students, Chairs and Seats of Doctors and Masters, should there be erected, & built on his own proper Charges: for he called from Oxford Universitie, which his noble Father the King had erected, Masters of those Arts which we call liberall, together with Doctors in holy Divinity, and invited them there formally to read and teach.

Cambridge represented in a three-fold estate.

8. Have we here Cambridge presented in a three-fold Condition. First, what she had been long before King Edward's time; fairly flourishing with Learning. Secondly, in what case he found her; desolate, and decayed. Then the Cup of Cambridge was at the bottom, her Breasts dry, and her Sun in an Eclipse. She was, saith Rosse, suspended, not by the power of any Popes Keyes (as the word may import,) but by the force of Pagan Swords, who here interrupted the exercise of Acts and publick Lectures; as in Spain, Germany, and other Forrein Parts, places appointed for Learning had shared in the like Calamity. Thirdly, in what condition Edward left her; under whom, as under the Father of the Act, Cambridge it self did then Commence and take a new Degree. Happy this Edward, who like a wealthy Landlord had two Nurseries of choice Fruit; so that if the one, by any sad accident, chanced to faile, he could supply it from the other, without being beholding to his Neighbours. This was the Love betwixt the two Sisters; what either had, neither could want, and Oxford, which lent now, borrowed another time, as in due place shall appear. If the same Authour[a] elsewhere calleth this King Edward Founder of Cambridge, it is by an easie and obvious Errour, because a totall Repairer doth amount to a partiall Founder. Nor doth Cambridge regret thereat; seeing Gratefull Expressions, which had rather transgresse in the Excesse, then the Defect, may in Courtesy call their Mender, their Maker.

10. Onely I must not omit one Passage in this Council, acquainting us with the Herauldry of that Age, and the Distances and Degrees of Persons, collected from their VVeers or VVeer-Gilds, that is Taxes, and Valuations; it being truly to be said in that Age, Dignities and degrees amongst the Saxons.

Quantum quisque sua Nummorum servat in Arca,
Tantum habet et Fidei ———

Every ones Testimony in Law-cases in Courts was credited according to his Wealth.

1. Ceorles (whence our Northern word Carles, and common word Churles) being Countrey Clowns, whose VVeer-gild was 200. shillings, or 10. pounds; the same with Villanes, who held land in Villanage of others. These, if by Blessing on their Industry they rose so high as to have five Hides of Land of their own, with a place in the Kings Court, and some other Priviledges, now hardly to be understood, were advanced to be Thanes.

2. The VVeer-gild, or Value of a Thane, was six times as much as a Churle, or a Villane, namely twelve times a hundred shillings, therefore termed a twelve-hind-man: whose Oath in Law was equivalent to six Oaths of Churles, or Villanes; as a Shilling passing in Payment countervaileth six two-pences. Note, that if a Masseer, or Merchant, pass the great Sea thrice (understand the Mediterranian, not the Narrow Seas betwixt us and France) and not in the Notion of a Servant, but on his own account; he then was dignified with the reputation of a Thane. These Thanes were of two sorts: Meset Thanes, Priests qualified to say Masse; and VVorould-Thanes, that is, secular, or temporall Thanes.

3. Of the first, if a Scholar made such proficiency in his Studies, that he took holy Orders, he was reverently respected, and (though not valued as a VVorould-Thane in Rates and Taxes) Amends were to be made for any Wrongs done unto him, equall to a Thane; and in case he should be kill'd, the Penalty thereof was the higher, the more Orders the person had taken. Observe by the way (so far as we can understand the Saxon Laws) that Man-slaughter was not then punished with Death, but might be redeemed by the proportionable Payment of a Summe of Mony, according to the Quality of the Person slain; part thereof payable to the King, part to his Kindred, part to the Countrey thereabouts.

But the further prosecution hereof, (where the Footsteps are almost out-worn with Time) we leave to more expert Antiquaries; who will tell you, that Alderman in that Age was equall to our modern Earle, who with Bishops were of the same Valuation: also that Comes in that Age, sounded as much as Duke in ours, Arch-bishops going along with them in all considerable Equipage.

Anno Dom. 928 | Ann. Reg. Adel. stan 3

Dunstan his first coming into favour at the Court.

11. Now began S^t. Dunstan to appear in Court, born at Glassenbury, of Noble Parentage (as almost what Saint in this Age was not honourably extracted?) Nephew both to Elphegus Bishop of Winchester, and Athelm Arch-bishop of Canterbury, yea Kinsman remote to King Athelstane himself: and being thus highly related, he could not misse of Preferment. His Eminencies were Painting and Graving (two Qualities disposing him to be very usefull for Saint-worshipping, either for Pictures or Images) an excellent Musician (Preaching in those dayes could not be heard for Singing in Churches) & an admirable Worker in Brass and Iron. These Accomplishments commended him at Court to be acceptable to Company; and for some time he continued with the King in great Reputation. 933 | 10

Banished thence on suspicion of Magick.

12. But it is given to that Bowle which lyes next to the Mark, to have most take aime to remove it. Eminency occasions Envy, which made Dunstan's Enemies endeavour to depresse him. He is accused to the King for a Magician, and upon that account banished the Court. It was brought as Evidence against him, that he made his Harp not onely to have Motion, but make musick of it self, which no White Art could perform. 935 | 12

S^t. Dunstan's Harp fast by the Wall
Vpon a Pin did hang-a:
The Harp it self, with Ly and all,
Vntoucht by hand did twang-a.

For our part, let Dunstan's Harp hang there still, on a double Suspicion twisted together; first, whether this Story thereof were true or false: secondly, if true, whether done by Magick or Miracle. Sure I am, as good a Harper, and a better Saint then Dunstan was, hath no such Miracle reported of him, even David himself: who with his Harp praised God, pleased men, [a] frighted Devils; yet took pains with his own right [b] Hand to play, not lazily commanding Musick by Miracle to be made on his Instrument.

He retires unto his Cell-prison at Glassenbury

13. Banish'd from Court, Dunstan returns to Glassenbury, and there falls a puffing and blowing in his Forge. Here he made himself a Cell (or rather a Little-ease) being but four foot long, two and a half broad (enough to cripple his joynts with the Cramp, who could not lye along therein) whilest the height thereof was according to the stature of a man. Wisely and vertuously he would not confine himself upwards, that the Scantness of the earthly Dimensions in his Cell (Breadth and Length) might be enlarged in the Height thereof, and liberty left for the ascending of his Meditations. But it matters not how little the Prison be, if a man, with Dunstan, be his own Gaoler, to go in and out at pleasure. Leave we him at the Furnace in Smithery-work (excelling Alexander the Copper-smith therein) whilest we find such Monks as wrote his Life, at another Forge, whence they coined many impudent Miracles, pretended done by Dunstan, and this among the rest. 937 | 14

Takes a devil by the nose.

14. Dunstan was in his Vocation making some iron Trinkets, when a Proteus-Devil appeared unto him, changing into Shapes, but fixing himself at last into the form of a Fair Woman. Strange, that Satan (so subtil in making his Temptations most taking) should preferre this form; belike shrewdly guessing at Dunstan's Temper, that a Fair Woman might work upon him, and Vulcan might love a Venus. Dunstan perceiving it, pluckt his Tongs glowing hot out of the Fire, and with them kept him (or her shall I say?) there a long time by the Nose roaring and bellowing, till at last he brake loose, by what accident it is not told unto us. 938 | 15

This false miracle canvased.

15. I have better imployment then to spend precious time in confuting such Follies;

Anno Regni Athelstani | Anno Dom.

Follies; but give me leave to admire at these new Armes against Satan.* Take the shield of Faith (saith the Apostle) wherewith ye may quench all the fiery Darts of the Wicked. Dunstan found a new way by himself, with fiery Tongs to do the deed. But let us a little examine this Miracle. The Devil himself we know is a Spirit, and so impatible of materiall Fire. Now if it were a reall Body he assumed, the Snake could slip off his Skin at pleasure, and not be tied to it, much lesse tormented with it. Besides, did Dunstan willingly or unwillingly let the Devil go? If willingly; Mercy to so malicious an Enemy (incapable of being amended) was Cruelty to himself: if unwillingly; was it Dunstan's Fire or his Faith that fail'd him, that he could hold out against him no longer? But away with all Suspicions and Queries: none need to doubt of the truth thereof, finding it in a Sign painted in Fleet-street near Temple-barre.

* Eph. 6. 16.

15 | 938

16. During Dunstan's abode in his Cell, he had to his great Comfort and Contentment the company of a good Lady, Aelfgine by name, living fast by. No Preacher but Dunstan would please her, being so ravisht with his Society, that she would needs build a little Cell for her self hard by him. In processe of time this Lady died, and by her last Will left Christ to be the Heir, and Dunstan the Executor of her Estate. Enabled with the accession thereof, joyned to his paternall Possessions, which were very great, and now fallen into his hands, Dunstan erected the Abbey of Glassenbury, and became himself first Abbot thereof; ~~a Title till his time unknown in England~~: he built also and endowed many other Monasteries, filling them with Benedictine Monks, who began now to swarm in England, more then Magots in a hot May, so incredible was their Increase.

Aelfgine Dunstan's bountifull friend.

17. After the death of King Athelstane, Dunstan was recalled to Court in the reign of King Edmund, Athelstan's Brother, and flourished for a time in great Favour. But who would build on the brittle Bottome of Princes Love? Soon after he falls into the Kings Disfavour; the old Crime, of being a Magician (and a Wanton with Women to boot) being laid to his charge. Surely Dunstan by looking on his own Furnace, might learn thence, there was no Smoak but some Fire: either he was dishoneſt, or undiscreet, which gave the Groundwork to their generall Suspicion. Hereupon he is re-banisht the Court, and returned to his desired Cell at Glassenbury, but within three dayes was solemnly brought back again to Court, if the ensuing Story may be believed.

Recalled to Court, and re-banished thence.

Edmundi 1 | 940

18. King Edmund was in an eager pursuit of a Buck, on the top of a steep Rock, whence no Descent but Destruction. Down falls the Deer, and Dogs after him, and are dashed to pieces. The King follows in full speed on an unruly Horse, whom he could not rein, & is on the Brink of the Brink of the Precipice: yet his Prayers prove swifter then his Horse, he but ran, whilst they did fly to Heaven. He is sensible of his Sin in banishing Dunstan, confesseth it with Sorrow, vowes Amendment, promiseth to restore & preferre him. Instantly the Horse stops in his full Career, and his Rider is wonderfully preserved.

King Edmund his miraculous deliverance.

19. Thus farre a strong Faith may believe of the Story: but it must be a wild one which gives credit to the remainder. [a] Cervus & Canes reviviscunt, saith the impudent Monk, The Deer & Dogs revive again. I remember not in Scripture that God ever revived a brute Beast; partly, because such mean subjects are beneath the Majesty of a Miracle; and partly, because (as the Apostle saith) brute Beasts [b] are made to be taken & destroyed. Well then might the Monk have knockt off when he had done well, in saving the Man and Horse, and might have left the Dogs & Deer to have remained dead on the place; the Deer especially, were it but to make Venison Pasties, to feast the Courtiers at the solemnizing of their Lord and Masters so miraculous Deliverance.

Fy for shame lying Monk.

20. Dunstan returning to Court was in higher Favour then ever before. Nor was his Interest any whit abated by the untimely Death of King Edmund (slain by one Leoff a Thief) seeing his Brother Edred, succeeding to the Crown, continued and increased his Kindness to him. Under him Dunstan was the Dee-all at Court, King Edred a high Patron of Dunstan.

Court, being the Kings Treasurer, Chancellour, Counsellour, Confessour, all things. Bishopricks were bountifully profered him, pick and chuse where he please; but none were honoured with his Acceptance. Whether because he accounted himself too high for the place, and would not stoop to the Employment; or because he esteemed the place too high for him, unable conscientiously to discharge it in the midst of so many Avocations. Mean time Monasteries were every where erected (King Edred devoutly resigning all his Treasure to Dunstan's Disposall) Secular Priests being thrust out of their Convents, and Monks substituted in their rooms.

Anno Dom. 946 — Anno Regis Edredi 1

But King Edwine his professt enemy.

21. But after Edred's Death, the Case was altered with Dunstan falling into Disgrace with King Edwin his Successour. This King on his Coronation-day was said to be incestuously imbracing both Mother & Daughter, when Dunstan boldly coming into his Bed-chamber, after bitter Reproofs, stoutly fetcht him thence, and brought him forth into the company of his Noblemen. An heroick act, if true, done with a John Baptist spirit: and no wonder if Herod and Herodias, I mean this incestuous King and his Concubines, were highly offended with Dunstan for the same. 954 — 9 Edwini 1

Who, though wronged by the Monks, was a worthy Prince. a Hist. lib. 5. pag. 357.

22. But good men, and grave Authours give no belief herein, conceiving King Edwin (how bad soever characterred by the Monks his malicious Enemies) to have been a worthy Prince. In witnesse whereof they produce the words of a Henry Huntington, a learned man, but no Monk, thus describing him;

Edwin non illaudabiliter regni insulam tenuit.

Edwin was not undeserving of praise in managing the Sceptre of this Land.

Et rursus:

Edwin rex, anno regni sui quinto, cum in principio regnum ejus decentissime floreret, prospera & latabunda exordia mors immatura perrupit.

And again:

King Edwin in the fifth year of his Reign, when his Kingdome began at first most decently to flourish, had his prosperous and pleasant Beginnings broken off with untimely Death.

This Testimony considered, makes many men think better of King Edwin, and worse of Dunstan, as guilty of some uncivil Intrusion into the Kings Chamber, for which he justly incurred his royall Displeasure.

He banisheth Dunstan, and dieth heart-broken with grief.

23. Hereupon Dunstan is banished by King Edwin, not as before from England to England, from the Court to his Cell at Glassenbury; but is utterly expelled the Kingdome, and flieth into Flanders. Where his Friends say that his Fame prepared his Welcome, & the Governour of Gaunt most solemnly entertained him. Mean time, all the Monks in England of Dunstan's Plantation were rooted up, and Secular Priests set in their places. But soon after happened many Commotions in England, especially in Mercia and Northumberland. The Monks which write the Story of these Rebellions, conceive it unfit to impart to Posterity the Cause thereof; which makes wise men to suspect, that Dunstan (who could blow Coals elsewhere as well as in his Furnace) though at distance, vertually (or rather viciously present,) had a Finger, yea, a Hand therein. Heart-broken with these Rebellions, King Edwin died in the Flower of his Age. 956 — 3; 958 — 5 Edgari 1

Dunstan recalled by King Edgar, and takes a double Bishoprick.

24. Edgar succeeds him, and recalls Dunstan home, receiving him with all possible Affection. Yea now Dunstan's Stomack was come down, and he could digest a Bishoprick, which his Abstemiousness formerly refused. And one Bishoprick drew down another, Worcester and London, not successively, but both a-breast went down his Conscience. Yea, never Age afforded more Pluralist Bishops. In this Kings reign Letine held b Lincoln and Leicester; Oswald (a great Monk-monger, of whom hereafter) held York and Worcester; & Aldulph, his Successour in both Churches, did the like, pardoned, yea praised for the same: though Woolstan (because no favourer of Monks) is reproved for the like Plurality. Thus two men though doing the same thing, do not the same thing. Bigamy of Bishopricks goes by Favour; and it is condemnable in one, what 959 — 2

is commendable in another. Odo Severus, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, being ceremoniously to consecrate Dunstan Bishop of Worcester, used all the Formalities fashionable at the Consecration of an [a] Arch-bishop: And being reproved for the same, he answered for himself, That he foresaw that Dunstan, instantly after his death, would be Arch-bishop of Canterbury. And therefore (a compendious way to spare Paines) he onely by a provident Prolepsis ante-dated his Consecration. Surely, whosoever had seen the decrepit age of Odo, the affection of King Edgar to Dunstan, the affection of Dunstan to Dignity, needed no extraordinary prophetical Spirit to presage that (on the supposition of Dunstan's surviving him) he should succeed him in the Arch-bishoprick of Canterbury.

a Antiq. Britan. ibidem.

25. Yea King Edgar was so wholly Dunstanized, that he gave over his Soul, Body, and Estate to be ordered by him and two more (then the Triumvirate who ruled England) namely Ethelwald Bishop of Winchester, and Oswald Bishop of Worcester. This Oswald was the man who procured by the Kings Authority the Ejection of all Secular Priests out of Worcester, and the placing of Monks in their Room: which Act was called Oswald's Law in that Age. They might, if it pleased them, have stiled it Edgar's Law; the Legislative Power being then more in the King, then in the Bishop. This Oswald's Law afterwards enlarged it self over all England, Secular Priests being thrown out, and Monks every where fixed in their rooms; till King Henry the eighth his Law outed Oswald's Law, and ejected those Drones out of their Habitations.

Oswald's Law to eject secular Priests.

26. King Edgar violated the Chastity of a Nun at Wilton. Dunstan getting notice thereof, refused at the Kings Request to give him his Hand, because he had defiled a Daughter of God, as he termed her. Edgar hereby made sensible of his Sin, with Sorrow confessed it; and Dunstan (now Arch-bishop of Canterbury) enjoyned him seven years Penance for the same. Monks endeavour to inforce a mock-Parallel betwixt David and Edgar, Nathan and Dunstan, herein. Sure I am, on David's profession of his Repentance, Nathan presently pronounced Pardon; [b] the Lord also hath put away thy Sin, thou shalt not die; consigning him to be punished by God the Principall (using an Undutifull Son, Treacherous Servants, and Rebellious Subjects to be the Instruments thereof;) but imposing no voluntary Penance, that David should by Will-worship undertake on himself. All that I will adde, is this; If Dunstan did septennary Penance, to expiate every mortall Sin (to use their own Termes) he committed, he must have been a Methusalah, extremely aged, before the day of his Death.

b 2 Sam. 12. 13

12 969

27. More commendable was Dunstan's Carriage towards an English Count, who lived incestuously with his own Kinswoman. Dunstan admonished him once, twice, thrice; nothing prevailed: whereupon he proceeded to Excommunicate him. The Count slighted his Excommunication, conceiving his Head too high for Church-Censures to reach it. King Edgar (falsly informed) desires Dunstan to absolve him, and is denied. Yea the Pope sends to him to the same Purpose, and Dunstan persists in his [c] Refusall. At last the Count, conquered with Dunstan's Constancy, and the sense of his own Sin, came into a Nationall Council at Canterbury, where Dunstan sate President (active therein to substitute Monks in the places of Secular Priests) on his bare Feet, with a Bundle of Rods, tendering himself to Dunstan's Chastisement. This wrought on Dunstan's mild Nature, scarce refraining from Teares; who presently absolved him.

And carriage towards an incestuous Count.

c Osbern. in vita Dunstani

28. Three things herein are remarkable. First, that Bribes in the Court of Rome may purchase a Malefactor to be innocent. Secondly, that the Pope himself is not so infallible, but that his Key may misse the Lock, and he be mistaken in matter of Absolution. Thirdly, that men ought not so with blind Obedience to obey his pretended Holinesse, but that if (with Dunstan here) they see just Cause to the contrary, it is no Mortall Sin to disobey his Commands.

Observations thereon.

Benefactor to moſt Abbeys in England. And as he gave new Caſes to moſt Monaſteries (repairing their outward Buildings) ſo he gave new Linings to all, ſubſtituting Monks in ſtead of the Secular Prieſts, whom he expelled. Many Eccleſiaſticall Canons were by him ordained, which at large are preſented in S^r. Henry Spelman, and which I have neither Liſt nor Leiſure to recount in this my Hiſtory. Our Women have a Proverb, It is a ſad Burden to carry a dead mans Child: and ſurely an Hiſtorian hath no heart to take much Pains (which herein are Pains indeed) to exemplify dead Canons, (dead and buried long ſince, as moſt relating to Monkery) this Age, wherein we live, being little fond of Antiquity, to know thoſe things which were antiquated ſo many yeares ſince.

Edgar a moſt triumphant King.

30. Now though the Devotion of King Edgar may be condemned to be byaſſed to Superſtition, yet becauſe the Sincerity of his Heart ſought to advance Gods Honour, according to the Light in thoſe dark dayes, he appears one of the moſt puiſſant Princes that ever England enjoyed, both in Church and Common-wealth. I have read in a moſt fair and authentick guilded [a] Manuſcript, wherein he ſtileth himſelf Gods Vicar in England, for the ordering Eccleſiaſticall matters: a Title which at this day the Pope will hardly vouchſafe to any Chriſtian Princes. His Reign was bleſt with Peace and Proſperity, both by Land and Sea; inſomuch that in a royall Frolick, eight petty Kings rowed him over the river Dee near to Cheſter; namely five Princes of Wales (whereof Hoel-Dha was the principall) Kened King of Scotland, Malcolm King of Cumberland, and Mac-huſe a great Sea-Robber, who may paſſe for the Prince of Pirats.

A Nationall Council in Wales.

31. This Hoel-Dha, contemporary with King Edgar, was he that held a Nationall Councill for all Wales (at a place called Ty-guin, or the White-houſe (becauſe built of white Hurdles, to make it more beautifull) regulated after this manner. Out of every Hundred in Wales he choſe ſix Lay-men, with whom he joyned all the eminent Eccleſiaſticall Perſons (accounted an hundred & fourty) in his Dominions. Out of thoſe he choſe eleven Lay-men and one Clergy-man, (but ſuch a one as who alone by himſelf might paſſe vertually for eleven) Blangoridus by name, to enact what Laws they pleaſed, which after the impreſſion of Royall Aſſent upon them, ſhould be obſerved by that Nation. One might ſuſpect this Council, thus over-powered with Laicks therein, which pinch on the Prieſts ſide; whereas we find the Canons therein wholly made in favour of the Clergy: enacting this among the reſt, That the preſence of a Prieſt and a Iudge conſtitute a legall Court, as the two Perſons onely in the Quorum thereof. 970 13

The merry Lawes made therein, [b] S^r. Henry Spelman in his Councils, pag. 411.

32. But methinks the Lawes therein enacted (which a learned [b] Antiquary preſents us at large) fall far ſhort of the Gravity of a Councill: except any will excuſe it from the Age thereof; what we count light and triviall, might be eſteemed ſerious and ſolid in thoſe dayes. Beſides, the Laws diſcover in them a conceited affectation of the Number of Three. In three Caſes a Wife may legally leave her Husband: firſt, if he hath a Leproſy; ſecondly, if he hath a ſtinking Breath; thirdly, & if he be unable to give her due Benevolence. In three caſes it was lawfull for a man to kiſſe his Neighbours Wife: firſt, at a Banquet; ſecondly, at the Welch Play called Guare-raffau; and thirdly, when he comes from a far Journey, by way of Saluration. If a Man and his Wife were to part aſunder, they were to divide their Goods betwixt them ſo, that ſhe was to have the Sheep; he the Hogs: ſhe the Milk and milk-Veſſels, with all the Diſhes ſave one; he all the Beer and Barrels, with the Axe, Saw, &c.

Confirmed by the Pope.

33. But how ſilly ſoever theſe Canons ſeem to our modern Criticks, they were then conceived of ſuch Weight and Worth, that King Hoel-Dha with his Arch-biſhop of S^t. Davids, the Biſhops of Bangor, Landaffe & S^t. Aſaph, are ſaid to have taken a Iourney to Rome, and procured the Popes Confirmation to them. Nor find I ought elſe of this Synod, ſave that the Cloſe thereof preſents us with a liſt of ſeven Epiſcopall Seats then in Wales: 1. S^t. Davids, 2. Iſmael, 3. Degenian, 4. Vſſyll, 5. Teylaw, 6. Teuledauc, 7. Kenew [c]. I am not Welchman enough to point at theſe places, and to ſhew you where they be at this day, which 971 14 which we leave to ſome skilfull Antiquary of their own Nation. Onely we find that whereas the Churches were burdened with ſome Payments out of them, two of the Biſhops Seats (Viſyl and Kenew) were freed from the ſame. And this ſatisfactory Reaſon is rendred of their Exemption, quia terris carent, becauſe they had no Lands belonging unto them.

17 Regis Edvardi Martyris 1 — 974

34. King Edgar was peaceably gathered to his Fathers, leaving his Crown to Edward his Son, and his Son (becauſe under age) to the Tuition of Dunſtan. In this Kings Reign three Councils were ſucceſſively called, to determine the Differences between Monks and Secular Prieſts. The firſt was at Wincheſter; where the Prieſts being outed of their Convents, earneſtly preſſed for Reſtitution, and ſought by Arguments to clear their Innocence, and prove their Title to their ancient Poſſeſſions. The Council ſeemed ſomewhat inclinable to favour unto them; when preſently a Voice, as coming from a Crucifix behind Dunſtan, is reported to be heard, ſaying,

A Council at Wincheſter with a miraculous voice in it.

Abſit hoc ut fiat, abſit hoc ut fiat; Iudicaſtis bene, mutaretis non bene. — God forbid it ſhould be done, God forbid it ſhould be done; Ye have judged it well, and ſhould change it ill.

Whether theſe words were ſpoken in Latine or Engliſh, Authours leave us unreſolved. Monks equall this (for the truth thereof) to the [a] ſtill ſmall Voice to Elijah, whileſt others ſuſpect ſome Forgery; the rather, becauſe it is reported to come as from a Crucifix: they feare ſome ſecret Falſehood in the Fountain, becauſe viſible Superſtition was the Ciſtern thereof. However, this Voice proved for the preſent the caſting Voice to the Secular Prieſts, who thereby were overborn in their Cauſe, and ſo was the Council diſſolved.

4 — 977

35. Yet ſtill the Secular Prieſts did ſtruggle, refuſing to be finally concluded with this tranſient aiery Oracle. [b] To the Law, and to the Teſtimony: if they ſpeak not according to this word, &c. They had no warrant to relie on ſuch a vocal Deciſion, from which they appealed to the Scripture it ſelf. A ſecond Council is called at Kirtlington (now Katlage in Cambridge-ſhire, the Baronry of the right Honourable the Lord North) but nothing to purpoſe effected therein. Dunſtan (ſay the Monks) ſtill anſwered his Name, that is, Dun, a rocky Mountain, and Stain, a Stone (but, whether a precious Stone, or a Rock of Offence, let others decide) perſiſting unmoveable in his Reſolution; nor was any thing performed in this Council, but that by the Authority thereof, people were ſent on Pilgrimage to S[t]. Mary at Abbington.

Secular Prieſts ſtrive ſtill.
[b] Iſa. 8. 20.

36. The ſame year a third Council was called, at Caln in Wiltſhire. Hither repaired Prieſts, and Monks, with their full Forces, to trie the laſt Concluſion in the Controverſie betwixt them. The former, next the Equity of the Cauſe, relied moſt on the Ability of their Champion, one Beornelm, a Scottiſh Biſhop; who with no leſſe Eloquence then Strength, with Scripture and Reaſon defended their Cauſe. When behold, on a ſudden, the Beams brake in the Room where they were aſſembled, and moſt of the Secular Prieſts were ſlain, and buried under the Ruines thereof. All were affrighted, many maimed; onely the place whereon Dunſtan ſate, either (as ſome ſay) remained firm, or fell in ſuch ſort, that the Timber (the Sword to kill others) proved the Shield to preſerve him from Danger.

A portentous Council at Caln.

37. Some behold this Story as a notable Untruth: others ſuſpect the Devil therein, not for a Lyer, but a Murtherer, and this Maſſacre procured by Compact with him: a third ſort conceived that Dunſtan, who had ſo much of a Smith, had here ſomething of a Carpenter in him, and ſome Deviſe uſed by him about pinning and propping of the Room. It renders it the more ſuſpicious, becauſe he diſſwaded King Edward from being preſent there, pretending his want of Age; though he was preſent in the laſt Council, and ſurely he was never the younger for living ſome Moneths ſince the ſame Aſſembly. If truely performed, Dunſtan appears happier herein then Samſon himſelf, who could not so sever his Foes, but both must die together. Sure I am, no ingenuous Papist now-a-dayes, will make any uncharitable Inference from such an accident: especially since the Fall of Black Friers 1623. enough to make all good men turn the Censuring of others into an humble Silence, and pious Adoring of Divine Providence.

Seculars outed, and Monks advanced.

38. But the Monks made great Advantage of this Accident, conceiving that Heaven had confirmed their Cause (as lately by VVord at VVinchester, so) now by VVork in this Council at Calne. Hereupon Secular Priests are every where outed, and Monks substituted in their Room. Indeed these later in civil respect, were beheld as more beneficiall to their Convents; because Secular Priests did marry, and at their deaths did condere Testamenta, make their VVills, and bequeathed their Goods to their Wives and Children; whilest Monks, having no Issue (which they durst own) made their Monastery Heir of all they had. It was also objected against the Priests, that, by their Loosnesse, and Lazinesse, left at large in their Lives, they had caused the generall declination of Piety at this time: whilest it was presumed of the Monks, that, by the strict Rules of Observance, to which they were tied, they would repair the Ruines of Religion in all places.

Priests hardly dealt with.

39. It appears not, what Provision was made for these Priests when ejected; and they seem to have had hard Measure, to be dispossessed of their civil Right. Except any will say, it was no Injury to them, to loose their places so soon, but a great Favour, that they enjoyed them so long, living hitherto on the free Bounty of their Founders, and now at the full Dispose of the Church and State. Little can be said in excuse of the Priests, and lesse in commendation of the Monks; who though they swept clean at the first, as new Besomes, yet afterwards left more Dust behind them of their own bringing in, then their Predecessours had done. Thus the Hive of the Church was no whit bettered, by putting out Drones, and placing Wasps in their room. Yea, whereas formerly Corruptions came into the Church at the Wicket, now the broad-Gates were opened for their Entrance; Monkery making the way for Ignorance and Superstition, to overspread the whole World.

The prodigious prodigality in building, and endowing of Abbeys.

40. Another Humour of the former Age (to make one Digression for all) still continued, and encreased, venting it self in the fair Foundations, and stately Structures of so many Monasteries. So that one beholding their Greatnesse (being Corrivals with some Towns in receipt, and extent) would admire that they could be so neat; and considering their Neatnesse, must wonder they could be so great; and lastly, accounting their Number, will make all three the object of his Amazement. Especially, seeing many of these were founded in the Saxon Heptarchy, when seven Kings put together did spell but one in effect. So that it may seem a Miracle, what invisible Indies those petty Princes were Masters of, building such Structures which impoverish Posterity to repair them. For although some of these Monasteries were the fruit of many Ages, long in ripening, at several times, by sundry persons, all whose Parcels and Additions met at last in some tolerable Uniformity; yet most of them were begun and finished, absolute, and entire, by one Founder alone. And although we allow, that in those dayes Artificers were procured, and Materials purchased at easie Rates; yet there being then scarceness of Coin (as a little Money would then buy much Ware; so much Ware must first in exchange be given to provide that little Money) all things being audited proportionably, the Wonder still remains as great as before. But here we see with what eagerness those Designes are undertaken and pursued, which proceed from blind Zeal: every Finger being more then an Hand to build, when they thought Merit was annexed to their Performances. Oh, with what might and main did they mount their Walls, both day and night; erroniously conceiving, that their Souls were advantaged to Heaven, when taking the Rise from the top of a Steeple of their own erection.

41. But

Anno Regis Edvardi Martyris 4 — Anno Dom. 977

42. King Edward went to give his Mother-in-law at Corfe-Caſtle a reſpectfull Viſit, when by her Contrivance he was barbarouſly murthered, ſo to pave the way for her Son Ethelred his Succeſſion to the Crown. But King Edward, by loſing his Life, got the title of a Martyr, ſo conſtantly called in our Chronicles. Take the term in a large acception, otherwiſe reſtrictively it ſignifies ſuch an one, as ſuffers for the Teſtimony of the Truth. But, ſeeing this Edward was cruelly murthered, and is ſaid after death to work Miracles; let him, by the Courteſie of the Church, paſſe for a Martyr, not knowing any Act or Order to the contrary, to deny ſuch a Title unto him. — King Edward murthered, alias, martyred.

Ethelredi, cognom. the Unready. 1

43. Ethelred, Edward's half-Brother, ſucceeded him in the Throne. One with whom Dunſtan had a Quarrel from his Cradle, becauſe, when an Infant, he left more Water in the Font then he found there, at his Baptizing. Happy Dunſtan himſelf, if guilty of no greater Fault, which could be no Sin (nor properly a Slovenneſſe) in an Infant, if he did as an Infant! Yet from ſuch his addition, Dunſtan prognoſticated an Inundation of Danes would enſue in this Iſland: which accordingly came to paſſe. But Ethelred is more to be condemned, for the Bloud he ſhed when a man; it being vehemently ſuſpected, that he was acceſſary with his Mother to the murthering of his Brother Edward. — King Ethelred prognoſticated unſucceſsfull.

44. But Dunſtan ſurvived not to ſee his Prediction take effect, for he was happily prevented by Death, and buried on the South-ſide of the High Altar in the Church of Canterbury: where his Tombe was famous for ſome time, till Thomas Becket eclipſed the ſame; ſeeing Saints, like new Beſomes, ſweep clean at the firſt, and afterwards are clean ſwept out, by newer Saints which ſucceed them. Yea, Dunſtan's Grave grew ſo obſcure at Canterbury, that the Monks of Glaſſenbury taking heart thereat (and advantaged by John Capgrave's report, that Anno 1012. Dunſtan's Corpſe were tranſlated thither) pretended his Buriall, and built him a Shrine in their Convent. Men and Mony met at Glaſſenbury on this Miſtake; and their Convent got more by this eight foot length of Ground (the ſuppoſed Tombe of Dunſtan) then eight hundred Acres of the beſt Land they poſſeſſed elſewhere. Whereupon William Wareham, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, to trie the truth, and to prevent farther Fraud herein, cauſed a ſolemn ſearch to be made in the Cathedral of Canterbury, after Dunſtan's Corpſe, in the place Tradition reported him to be interred. — Dunſtan's corpſe wrongfully claimed by the Convent of Glaſſenbury.

45. Four of the Friars, fitteſt for the work (to wit, of ſtronger Bodies then Braines) undertook to make this Scrutinie Anno 1508. the 22. of April. Great Caution was uſed, that all ſhould be done ſemotis Laicis, no Lay-men being preſent; whether becauſe their Eies were too profane to behold ſo holy an Object, or too prying to diſcover the Default, if the Search ſucceeded not. In the Night they ſo plyed their Work, that ere Morning they diſcovered Dunſtan's Coffin, and reſted the day following from more Digging, as well they might, having taken ſo much Pains, and gained ſo much Profit by their endeavours. — A night Hue-and-Cry made after his corpſe.

46. Next Night they on afreſh; and, with main Force, plucked up the ponderous Coffin upon the Pavement. A Coffin built (as one may ſay) three Stories high: the outermoſt of Wood (but almoſt made Iron with the multitude of Nailes therein;) within that another of plain Lead; within that a third — Diſcovered, with the manner of the interment thereof.

of wrought Lead, wherein the bones of Dunstan[a] lay in his Pontificall Vests, with this Inscription in a Plate, Hic requiescit Sanctus Dunstanus Archiepiscopus. Some lumps of Flesh were found, which were said to smell very sweet (the Reliques perchance of some Spices which embalmed him) and all done in the presence of many worthy Witnesses: amongst whom, Cuthbert Tunstal was one, then the Arch-bishops Chancellour, afterward Bishop of Durham. Hereupon the Arch-bishop sent his Mandate to the Abbot and Convent of Glassenbury, henceforward to desist from any jactitation of Dunstan's Corpse, and abusing people with such Pretences. A Fault most frequent in that Convent, challenging almost the Monopolie of all English Saints, witnesse that impudent Lie of the rhythming Monk, writing thus of Glassenbury;

Hic Tumulus sanctus, hic Scala Poli celebratur;
Vix luit Inferni Pœnas hic qui tumulatur.

But, who is rather to be believed? S^t. Peter, that saith, [b] The righteous shall scarcely be saved; or this Monk, affirming that, Whoso is buried at Glassenbury, shall scarcely be damned?

47. After the death of Dunstan, their Patrone, the Monks (not much befriended by King Ethelred) were cast out of the Convent of Canterbury, or rather cast out themselves by their Misdemeanours. [c] Man in honour hath no understanding, &c. They wax'd so wanton with possessing the places of Secular Priests, that a Monk [d] himself of Canterbury confesseth, Monachi propter eorum Insolentiam sedibus pulsi, & Clerici introducti. Monks for their Insolencie were driven out of their Seats, and Secular Clerks brought into their room. Thus was it often, In Dock, out Nettle, as they could strengthen their Parties. For Siricius, the next Arch-bishop of Canterbury, endeavoured the re-expulsion of the Priests; which by Alfricus his Successour was effected. 988 9

48. But soon after, the Danes revenged the Quarrel of the Secular Priests; and by a firm Ejection outed the Monks, before they were well warm in their Nests. Their Fury fell more on Convents, then Castles: whether, because the former were in that Age more numerous (Castles afterwards were encreased by William the Conquerour;) or because their Prey and Plunder was presumed the richest, and easist to be gotten; or because the Danes, then generally Pagans, principally spited places of Religion. A Relapse is far more dangerous then a simple Disease, as here it proved in the Danes. England for these last sixty years had been cured of, and cleared from their Cruelty, which now returned more terrible then ever before. 989 10

49. These Danes were also advantaged by the Unactivenesse of King Ethelred, therefore surnamed the Vnready in our Chronicles. The Clock of his Consultations and Executions was alwayes set some Hours too late, vainly striving with much Industry to redresse, what a little Providence might seasonably have prevented. Now, when this Vnready King met with the Danes his overready Enemies, no wonder, if lamentable was the Event thereof. The best thing I find recorded of this King Ethelred, is, that in his dayes began the tryal of Causes by a Jury of twelve men to be chosen out of the Vicenage, of like quality, as near as may be suited, to the persons concerned therein. Hereby men have most fair play for their Lives: and let it be the desires of all honest hearts, that whilest we pluck off the Badges of all Norman Slavery, we part not with the Livery of our old Saxon Liberty. 990 11

50. In this sad condition King Ethelred hearkened to the perswasions of Siricius, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and with ten thousand Pounds purchased a present Peace with the Danes. Indeed it was conformable to the calling of a Church-man to procure Peace, having not onely [e] Scripture precepts therein, Seek peace and pursue it; but also Precedents for the same, when gracious [f] Hezekiah with a Present pacified Sennacherib to desist from invading him. However, this Arch-bishop generally suffered in his Reputation, condemned 991 12 of all, for counselling of what was, First, dishonourable; that an entire Nation, being at home in their own Land, should purchase a Peace from Forrainers, fewer in Number, and fetching their Recruits, and warlike Provisions from a Far Country: let them be paid in due Coin; not Silver, but Steel. Secondly, unprofitable: If once the Danes got but the Trick, to make the English bleed Money to buy Peace, they would never leave them, till they had sucked out their Heart-bloud, and exhausted the whole Treasure of the Land.

51. Indeed one may safely affirm, that the multitude of Monasteries invited the Invasion, and facilitated the Conquest of the Danes over England; and that in a double respect: First, because not onely the Fruit of the Kings Exchequer (I mean ready Money) was spent by this King his Predecessours on founding of Monasteries; but also the Root thereof, his Demeasne lands, pluckt up, & parted with, to endow the same: whereby the Sinews of War were wanting, to make effectuall Opposition against Forrein Enemies. Secondly, because England had at this time more Flesh, or Fat, then Bones (wherein the Strength of a Body consists) moe Monks, then Military men. For instance, Holy-Island near Northumberland is sufficiently known, for the Position thereof, an advantageous Landing-place, especially in relation to Denmark. This Multitudes of Monasteries caused the Danish invasion.

15 — 994 — place was presently forsaken of the fearfull Monks, frighted with the Danes their Approach; and Aldhunus, the Bishop thereof, removed his Cathedral and Convent to Durham, an Inland place of more Safety. Now, had there been a Castle in the place of this Monastery, to secure the same with Fighters instead of Feeders, men of Armes instead of men of Bellies therein, probably they might have stopped the Danish Invasion at the first Inlet thereof. England then as much wanting martiall men, as[a] since it hath surfeited with too many of them.

a Viz. in the wars between York and Lancaster.

16 — 995 — 52. The Danes, having received and spent their Money, invaded England afresh, according to all wise mens expectation. It is as easie for armed Might to pick a Quarrel, as it is hard for naked Innocence to make Resistance. The Deluge of their Cruelty over-ran the Realm; whose Sword made no more difference betwixt the Ages, Sexes, and Conditions of people, then the Fire (which they cast on Houses) made distinction in the Timber thereof, whether it was Elme, Oake, or Ash; the Fierceneſſe of the one killing, the Fury of the other consuming all it met with. Indeed in some small Skirmishes the English got the better, but all to no purpose. There is a place in Hartfordshire called Danes-end, where the Inhabitants by Tradition report (uncertain of the exact Date thereof) that a fatal blow in a Battel was given to the Danes thereabouts. But alas! this Danes-end was but Danes-beginning; they quickly recovered themselves as many, and mighty in the Field, and it seemed an endlesse end, to endeavour their utter Extirpation. Thus this Century sets with little Mirth, and the next is likely to arise with more Mourning.

3. Cambridge and Oxford both of them deeply tasted of this bitter Cup at the same time. Edmu. cognom. Ironside 1 — 1016

4. Here let State-Historians inform the Reader of intestine Warres betwixt Edmund Ironside (so called for his hardy enduring all Troubles) King of England, Defendour, and Canutus the Dane, Invader of this Land; till at last, (after a personall Duel fought) the Land was equally divided betwixt them. A division wherewith both seemed, neither were well pleased; seeing the least whole head cannot be fitted with the biggest half Crown; all or none was their desire. Canutus at last with his Silver Hand, was too hard for the other his Iron Side; who by his promised Bribes prevailed with one Edrick to kill this his Corrivall; which being performed he was fairely advanced with a [h] Halter. It would spoil the Trade of all Traytours, if such Coyn onely were current in paying their Rewards.

5. Canutus or Knot the Dane (from whom a Bird in Lincolnshire is so called, wherewith his Palate [i] was much pleased) bathed himself in English Bloud, whom at this distance of time, we may safely term a Tyrant, so many Murthers and Massacres were by him committed. For his Religion, as yet he was a Mungrel betwixt a Pagan and a Christian; though at last, the later prevailed, especially after his Pilgrimage to Rome.

Much he gave to the Pope, and something he gained from him; namely, an Immunity for Archbishops, from their excessive Charges about their Pall, and some other Favours he obtained for his Subjects. After his return into his own Country, he laid out all the remainder of his dayes in Acts of Charitie, in founding, or enriching

On this accident King Canutus made an excellent Sermon: Firſt, adoring the infinite Power of God, ſole Commander of the Winds and Waves: Secondly, confeſſing the frailty of all Fleſh, unable to ſtop the leaſt Drop of the Sea: Thirdly, confuting the Profaneneſſe of Flatterers, fixing an infinite Power in a finite Creature. 10. Two of his Sons ſucceeded him, more known by their handſome Sur-names, then any other Deſert. Then his legitimate Sonne, called Hardy Canute, more truely bloudy Canute, eminent for his Cruelty. With him expired the Daniſh Royall Line in England, leaving no Iſſue behind him, and opening an Opportunity for the baniſhed Sonne of King Ethelred to recover the Crown, whoſe enſuing Reign is richly worth our deſcription. 11. Edward the Confessour, youngest Son of King Ethelred, (his elder Brethren being slain, and their Children fled away) came to be King of England. I understand not the Ceremony which I read was used to this Edward, whilest as yet (saith a Monkish[a] Authour, properly enough in his own Language) he was contained in the weak Cloisters of his Mothers VVomb; at which time the Peers of the Land sware Allegiance unto him or her (the Sex as yet being unknown) before he was born. Indeed I find that Varanes his Child was crowned King whilest yet in his Mothers Body,[b] applicata ad Vterum Corona. But what Solemnity soever was done to this Hans-en-Kelder, it did not afterwards embolden him to the Anticipation of the Crown, attending till it descended upon him.

Edward the Confessour becomes King of England.

a Father Hierome Porter in the flowers of the lives of the Saints, pag. 2.

b Agathias lib. 4.

12. A worthy King, no less pious to God, then just to Man: For, whereas formerly there were manifold Laws in the Land, made, some by the Britans, others by the Danes, others by the English, swelling to an unmeasurable Number, to the great Mischief of his Subjects; he caused some few of the best to be selected, and the rest, as captious and unnecessary, to be rejected. Hence, say some, they were called the Common Laws, as calculated for the common Good, and no private persons Advantage.

The original of our Common Laws.

13. It is admirable, how the Danes in this Kings Reign were vanished away. They who formerly could scarce be numbred in England, they were so many, could now scarce be numbred they were so few, and those living quietly with their English Neighbours. As for forrein invading Danes in this Kings Reign, as I cannot see them, so I will not seek them, glad of their Room and Riddance. Indeed once I meet with an Assay of them in a Navy bound to infest England: but their King being casually drowned as he entred his own Fleet, put an end to their Hopes, and our Feares for that Designe.

No hostile Danes appear in England.

4 1046 14. Emma, King Edward's Mother, being suspected too familiar with Alwin Bishop of VVincheſter, under the colour of Devotion, put herself to be tryed by Ordall; whereof this the manner. Nine Plow-shares glowing hot were laid on the Ground, one foot distant from another; the party suspected was to be brought blind-folded, and bare-footed to passe over them: if he chanced to step in the Intervalls, or on the hot Iron unhurt, he was pronounced Innocent, otherwise condemned for an Offender. An unjust Law, wherein the Tryers had no Precept, the Tryed no Promise. Must Innocence be ruin'd as often as Malice would wrong it, if Miracle would not rescue it? This was not a way to try man, but tempt God: As just a Trying by Fire, as that of our modern Witches by Water. This Tryall Queen Emma admirably underwent, not sensible of the Plow-shares till past them, saying to such as led her, Oh, when shall I come to the place of my Purgation?

The manner of Ordall by fire.

15. By what Power this was performed, I will not dispute, finding amongst the[c] Heathens a City Feronia, twenty miles from Rome, under mount Soracte; where the Inhabitants, possessed with a spirit of a Deity therein worshipped, usually walked upon burning Coales, without any Harm. Onely I wonder, that Bishop Alwin (equally suspected, and equally innocent with Emma) should not profer himself to the like Triall. But, perchance, the prudent Prelate remembred, that such barbarous Customes, though kept up amongst the Common People, were forbidden by the ancient Canons, as also by the Letter of Pope Stephen the fifth, which about the year eight hundred eighty and seven he wrote to Humbert, Bishop of Mentz: And now Emma, who went willingly on this sad Errand, did the Businesse for them both, and cleared their Credits. The Church of Wincheſter got well hereby, viz. nine Mannours, which Queen Emma bestowed thereon, in Commemoration of her Deliverance.

16. King Edward the Confessour was married to the devout Lady Edith; his Wife in Minde, but not in Body; in Consent, not Act; being onely (as my Authour saith) an Abishag to the King. Strange! that two Persons, if loving each other in the prime of their yeares, should light on so happy a Temper, as mutually to warm, not to heat one another; which the Wise-men in our Age will will account difficult, and the Wanton impossible. Such will say, if this was true, that King Edward pass'd as great a Triall, as Queen Emma his Mother; and that his Ordall was as hard, as hers was painfull.

Yet, was there not a cause? a Gen. 1. 28.

17. Was it not pity, but the World should have moe of the Breed of them, who were so godly a Couple? Let Baseneſſe be barren, and Cruelty childleſſe; Pious persons deserve a double Portion in that Charter of Fruitfulneſſe, a Multiply and encreaſe. Yea, the Engliſh Crown now wanting an Heir, and, for Default thereof, likely to fall to Forreiners, might (I will not say have tempted, but) have moved King Edward to the Knowledge of his Wife. But whileſt Papists crie up this his incredible Continency: others easily unwonder the same, by imputing it partly to his Impotence, afflicted with an Infirmitie; partly to the Distaste of his Wife, whom he married onely for Coveniencie; and to the Distrust of her Chastity, on suspition whereof, he confined her to the Monasterie of Whore-well (as I take it) in Hamſhire.

The good daughter of a bad father.

18. But grant Queen Edith a chast Woman, as she is generally believed; Daughter she was to a wicked Father, Earle Godwin by name, whence the Proverb, Sicut ſpina roſam, genuit Godwinus Editham.

From prickly stock as springs a Rose;
So Edith from Earle Godwin grows.

little ill being written of the Daughter, and no good of the Father. Indeed King Edward was Father-in-law-ridden, who feared Earle Godwin rather then trusted him, as who with a long train of his Power could sweep many Dependents after him. This Godwin (like those Sands near Kent which bear his name) never spared what he could spoile, but swallowed all which came within his compass to devoure. Two Instances whereof, because both belonging to Church-matters, we will relate.

Godwin's device to get Berkley Nunnerie.

19. He cast a covetous Eye on the fair Nunnery of Berkley in Gloceſterſhire, and thus contrived it for himself. He left there an handsome young man, really, or seemingly, sick, for their Charity to recover; who quickly grows well, and wanton. He is toying, tempting, taking; such Fire and Flax quickly make a Flame. The Sisters loose their Chastity, and, without taking Wife in the way, are ready to make Mothers. The young man (if sick) returns to Earle Godwin in Health, leaving the healthfull Nuns sick behind him. The fame hereof fills the Country, flies to Court, is complained of by Earle Godwin to the King; Officers are sent to enquire, they return it to be true, the Nuns are turned out, their House and Lands forfeited, both bestowed on Earle Godwin; ſurpriſed VVeakneſſe being put out, and deſigning VVickedneſſe placed in the room thereof. Surely King Edward knew nothing of Godwin's Deceit herein; otherwise it was unjust, that the Whores should be punished, and the principall Pander rewarded.

Another tick to gain the mannour of Boſeham.

20. At another time he had a mind to the rich Mannour of Boſeham in Suſſex, and complemented it out of Robert Arch-bishop of Canterbury, in this manner. Coming to the Arch-bishop, he saith, Da mihi Baſium, that is, Give me a Buſs, or a Kiſſe, an usuall Favour from such a Prelate. The Arch-bishop returns, Do tibi Baſium, kissing him therewith. An holy Kiss (perchance) as given, but a crafty one as taken: for Godwin presently posts to Boſeham, and takes possession thereof. And though here was neither real Intention in him who passed it away, nor valuable Consideration to him, but a mere Circumvention; yet such was Godwin's Power, and the Arch-bishops poorneſſe of spirit, that he quietly enjoyed it. Nor have I ought else to observe either of Berkley or Boſeham, but that both these rich and ancient Mannours, Earle Godwin his brace of Cheats, and distant an hundred miles each from other, are now both met in the Right Honourable George Berkley (as Heir apparent thereof) the paramount Mecænas of my Studies: whose Ancestors as they were long since justly possessed of them; so I doubt not but their Posterity will long comfortably enjoy them.

Anno Regis Edvardi Confessoris 4 — Anno Dom. 1046

21. The Monks that wrote this King Edward's life, had too heavy a hand in over-spicing it with Miracles, which hath made the Relation too hot for the Mouth of any moderate Belief. A poor Cripple chanced to come to him, one who might have stockt a whole Hospitall with his own Maladies. It was questionable, whether the Difficulty of his Crawling caused more Pain, or the Deformity thereof more Shame unto him. The sight of him made all tender Beholders Cripples by Sympathie, commiserating his sad Condition. But it seems, this weak Wretch had a strong Fancy, and bold Face, who durst desire the King himself to carry him on his Back into the Church, on assurance (as he said) that thereby he should be recovered. The good King grants his Desire, and this Royal Porter beares him into the Church, where so strange an Alteration is said to happen; Qui venit quadrupes, decessit bipes, He that came on all four, departed straight, and upright.

A miracle reported done by King Edward.

19 — 1061

22. The Church into which the King carried the Cripple, was St. Peter's in Westminister, built by him on this Occasion. King Edward had made a Vow to visit the Reliques of St. Peter in Rome; and, because his Subjects could not safely spare him out of his own Country, the Pope dispensed with him for the Performance thereof. Now, although he went not to St. Peter, St. Peter came to him, and in severall Apparitions advised him to build him a Church in the place now called Westminster, then Thornie, because desolate, and overgrown with Thorns and Briars. Nor is it any news, that populous Cities at this present, were anciently Woods and Bushie plots. What else was Ierusalem it self in the dayes of Abraham, but a Thornie, when in the middest thereof on Mount Moriah, a Ram was caught by the [a] Horns in a Thicket? This Church many yeares before had been dedicated to, and (as the Monks say) consecrated by St. Peter, till destroyed by the Danes, King Edward raised it from the Ruines, endowing it with large Priviledges, and rich Possessions.

Westminster Church rebuilt by him.

a Gen. 22. 13.

23. Next to St. Peter, our Edward's Darling, he is said to be most in Favour with St. John the Apostle, who is reported to have appeared unto him in the shape of a Begging Pilgrim; the King, not having at the present Money to supply his Wants, pluckt off his Ring from his Finger, and bestowed it upon him. This very Ring, some yeares after, St. John sent him back again by two Pilgrims out of Palestine; but withall telling him, that he should die within six moneths after: a Message more welcome then the Ring to such a mortified man. If any doubt of the truth thereof, it is but riding to Havering in Essex, so called (as [b] they say) from this Ring, where (no doubt) the Inhabitants will give any sufficient Satisfaction therein.

A Ring said to be sent from St. John to King Edward.

b Camden's Britan. in Essex.

24. Amongst the many Visions in this Kings Reign, one I will not omit, because seeming to have somewhat more then mere Monk therein. One being inquisitive, what should become of England after King Edward's Death, received this Answer, The King dome of England belongeth to God himself, who will provide it a King at his pleasure. Indeed England is Gods on severall Titles. First, as a Country; the Earth is his, and the Fulnesse thereof: Secondly, as an Island, which are Gods Demesnes, which he keeps in his own hand of his daily Providence: Thirdly, as a Kingdome on which he hath bestowed miraculous Deliverances. Seeing then England is his own, we know who said, [c] Is it not lawfull to doe what I will with mine own? May he dispose of his own to his own Glory, and the good of his own Servants.

A Vision worth observing.

c Mat. 20. 15

25. Amongst the many resplendent Vertues in King Edward, Contempt of Wealth was not the least, whereof some bring in this for an Instance. The King lay on a Pallet surrounded with Curtains; by him stood a Chest of Silver, which Hugolin, his Treasurer (called away on some sudden Occasion) had left open. In comes a thievish Courtier, takes away as much Money as he could carry, and disposeth thereof. Then cometh he the second time for a new Burden, little suspecting that the unseen King saw him all the while, and having laden himself, departed. Some adde, he returned the third time. Be content (quoth

King Edward's contempt of wealth.

(quoth the King) with what you have, leſt, if Hugolin come in and catch you, he take it all from you. Soon after the Treaſurer returning, and fretting for loſs of the Money, Let him have it quietly (ſaid the King) he needeth it more then we do. Words which ſpake him a better man then King, as acceſſary to his own Robbing; who, if pleaſed to have made this pilfering Fellow to have taſted of the Whip for his pains, had marred a pretty jeaſt, but made a better Earneſt therein.

Anno Dom. 1061. Anno Regis Edwardi Confeſſoris 19.

King Edward's Wardrobe put into the Regalia.

26. Poſterity conceived ſo great an opinion of King Edward's Piety, that his Cloaths were depoſited amongſt the Regalia, and ſolemnly worn by our Engliſh Kings on their Coronation; never counting themſelves ſo fine, as when inveſted with his Robes; the Sanctity of Edward the firſt Wearer excuſing, yea adorning the modern Antiqueneſſe of his Apparell. Amongſt theſe is the Rod or Sceptre, with a Dove on the Top thereof, (the Emblem of Peace) becauſe in his Reign England enjoyed Halcyon dayes, free from Daniſh Invaſions: as alſo his Crown, Chair, Staffe, Tunick, cloſe Pall, [a] Tuiſni hoſen, Sandalls, Spurres, Gloves, &c. Expect not from me a Comment on theſe ſeverall Cloaths, or reaſon for the wearing of them. In generall, it was to mind our Kings, when habited with his Cloaths, to be cloathed with the habit of his vertuous Endowments; as when putting on the Gloves of this Confeſſour, their Hands ought to be like his, in moderate taking of Taxes from their Subjects. Indeed, Impoſitions once raiſed are ſeldome remitted, pretended Neceſſities being alwayes found out for their Continuance. But our Edward releaſed to his Subjects the grievous burden of Dane-gelt, payed to his Predeceſſours, conceiving it fit, now the Danes were departed, that the Gelt or Tax ſhould go after them. But now Edward's Staffe is broken, Chair overturned, Cloaths rent, and Crown melted, our preſent Age eſteeming them the Reliques of Superſtition.

a Sir Mills his Catalogue of honour, p. 59.

No Confeſſour in the ſtrictneſs of the word.

27. And yet all things being caſt up, I confeſſe I underſtand not how the name Confeſſour is proper to King Edward, in the ſtrict acceptance thereof. For a Confeſſour is one actually perſecuted for the teſtimony of the Truth, and prepared to loſe his Life for the ſame. He is a Martyr in Bullion, wanting onely the Stamp of a Violent Death to be impreſſed upon him. Now a great part of our Edward's Life, was led by him in Peace and Plenty; nothing bounding his Abundance but his own Moderation, & for twenty years together having no viſible Foe to offend him. And although in his youth he lived in Normandy, in a middle Condition, betwixt an Exile and a Traveller, flying thither for fear of the Danes; yet ſuch his Sufferings were of Civil Concernment, not directly relating to Conſcience, though at diſtance reducible thereunto. But ſeeing in the Titles of great Perſons, it is better to give too much then too little; a Confeſſour we found him, and a Confeſſour we leave him.

Stigand the vicious Arch-biſhop of Canterbury

28. Our Eyes have been ſo intent in beholding the Vertues of this King, we have been little at Leaſure to take notice of the Arch-biſhops of Canterbury, during his Reign. Know then that about ten yeares ſince, Robert Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, who ſucceeded Eadſin therein, fearing ſome hard meaſure from Earle Godwin (notwithſtanding he had been contentedly kiſſed out of his Mannour of Boſcham) conveyed himſelf away beyond the Seas, to his Monaſtery in Normandy, whence he came firſt into England. After whoſe Departure, Stigand Biſhop of Wincheſter intruded himſelf into that See, eminent onely for Vice, and ſordid Covetouſneſſe.

King Edward's Eccleſiaſticall Conſtitutions.

29. As for the Eccleſiaſticall Laws made by this King in his Reign, it will be enough to affix their Principall Titles.

1. That every Clerk and Scholar ſhould quietly enjoy their Goods and Poſſeſſions.
2. What ſolemn Feſtivalls people may come and goe of, without any Law-Sutes to diſturb them.
3. That in all Courts where the Biſhops Proctour doth appear, his Caſe is firſt to be heard and determined.

4. That

Anno Regis Edvardi Confessoris 19 — Anno Dom. 1061

4. That Guilty folk flying to the Church should there have Protection, not to be reprehended by any, but by the Bishop and his Ministers.

5. That Tithes be paid to the Church, of Sheep, Pigs, Bees, and the like.

6. How the Ordall was to be ordered for the Triall of Guilty persons by Fire and Water.

7. That Peter-pence, or Romescot, be faithfully payed to the Pope.

But I loose time, and referre the Reader to read these Constitutions at large, being three and twenty in number, in the worthy [a] Work of that no lesse Learned then Religious Knight Sir Henry Spelman.

a In his Councils, pag. 619.

24 — 1066 Jan. 4. — 30. And now the full time was come, wherein good King Edward exchanged this life for a better. Who, as he was famous for many personall Miracles, so he is reported to have entailed (by Heavens Consort) an hereditary Vertue on his Successours the Kings of England, (onely with this Condition, [b] that they continue constant in Christianity) to cure the Kings Evil. This Disease, known to the Greeks by the name of χοιράς, termed by Latines Struma, and Scrophula, hath it's Cause from Phlegm, it's chief and common outward Residence, in or near the Neck & Throat, where it expresseth it self in Knobs and Kernells, pregnant oftentimes with corrupted Bloud, & other putrified matter, which on the breaking of those Bunches, floweth forth, equally offensive to Sight, Smell and Touch. And yet this noisome Disease is happily healed by the Hands of the Kings of England stroaking the Soar: & if any doubt of the Truth thereof, they may be remitted to their own Eyes for farther Confirmation. But there is a sort of men, who to avoid the Censure of over-easie Credulity, and purchase the Repute of prudent Austerity, justly incurre the Censure of affected Frowardnesse. It being neither Manners nor Discretion in them, in matters notoriously known, to give daily Experience the Lye, by the Backwardnesse of their Belief.

How the Kings of England come to cure the Kings Evil.

b Primosius de Vulgar. Error. cap. ultimo.

31. But whence this Cure proceeds, is much controverted amongst the Learned. Some recount it in the Number of those ἀπροσδιόριστα, whose Reason cannot be demonstrated. For as in vicious Common-wealths Bastards are frequent, who being reputed Filii Populi, have no particular Father: so mans Ignorance increaseth the number of Occult Qualities, (which I might call Chances in Nature,) where the Effect is beheld, but cannot be certainly referred to any immediate and proper Cause thereof. Others impute it to the power [c] of Fancie, and an exalted Imagination. For when the poor Patient (who perchance seldome heard of, and never saw a King before) shall behold his Royall Hand dabling in a Puddle of Puttefaction, & with a charitable Confidence rubbing, smoothing, chafing those loathsome Kernells, (which I may call Clouds of Corruption, dissolved oft-times into a feculent Shower;) I say, when the Sick-man shall see an Hand so humble of an Arme so high, such Condescention in a King, to stroak that Soar, at which meaner Persons would stop their Nostrills, shut their Eyes, or turn their Faces; this raiseth, erecteth, enthroneth the Patients Fancie, summoning his spirits to assist Nature with their utmost Might, to encounter the Disease with greater Advantage. And who will look into the Legend of the Miracles of Imagination, shall find many strange, and almost incredible, things thereby really effected.

Severall opinions of the Causes thereof.

c Ferrerius, lib. 2. method. cap. 11. de Homeric. Curat.

32. Other Learned men, and particularly [d] Gaspar Peucerus, though acquitting this Cure from Diabolicall Conjuration, yet tax it as guilty of Superstition. With him all such do side, as quarrell at the Ceremonies and Circumstances used at the Healing of this Maladie. Either displeased at the Collect read, (consisting of the first nine verses of the Gospell of S[t]. John) as wholly improper, and nothing relating to the Occasion; or unresolved of the Efficacy of the Gold pendent about the Patients Neck, (whether partly compleating, or a bare Complement of the Cure;) or secretly unsatisfied, what manner and measure of Belief is required (according to the Modell whereof Health is observed to come sooner or later;) or openly offended with the [e] Sign of the Crosse, which was was used to be made by the Royall Hands on the Place infected. All which Exceptions fall to the ground, when it shall be avowed, that notwithstanding the Omission of such Ceremonies (as requisite rather to the Solemnity, then Substance of the Cure) the bare Hands of our Kings (without the Gloves, as I may term it, of the aforesaid Circumstances) have effected the healing of this Disease.

Many make the Cure miraculous.

33. Hereupon some make it a cleat Miracle, and immediately own Gods Finger in the Kings Hand. That when the Art of the Physitian is posed, the Industry of the Chirurgion tired out, the Experience of both at a Losse, when all humane Means cry craven; then that Wound made by the Hand of God, is cured by the hand of his Vice-gerent. Hath Heaven indued Vegetables (the worst and weakest of living Creatures) with cordiall Qualities? yea, hath it bestowed pretious Properties on dull and inanimate Waters, Stones and Mineralls, insomuch that such are condemned for Silly or Sullen, for Stupid or Stubborn, as doubt thereof? And shall we be so narrow-hearted, as not to conceive it possible, that Christian men, the noblest of corporeall Creatures; Kings, the most eminent of all Christian men; Kings of Britain, the First-Fruits of all Christian Kings, should receive that peculiar Priviledge, and sanative Power, whereof daily Instances are presented unto us? See here the vast Difference betwixt Papists and Protestants. How do the former court those Miracles, which fly from them; and often, in default of Reall ones, are glad and greedy to hug and embrace empty Shadows of things falsly reported to be done, or fondly reputed to be Miracles? Whereas many Protestants, on the contrary, (as in the matter in hand) are scrupulous in accepting Miracles truely tendered unto them. But although our Religion, firmly founded on, and safely fenced with the Scriptures, needs no Miracles to confirm or countenance the truth thereof: yet when they are by the hand of Heaven cast into our Scales (not to make our Doctrine Weight, but) as superpondium, or an Over-plus freely bestowed; sure they may safely without Sin be received; not to say, can scarce be refused, without (at least) some suspicion of Neglect & Ingratitude to the Goodnesse of God.

The ingenuous confession of a Catholick.

34. Nor will it be amisse here to relate a Passage which happened about the middest of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, after Pope Pius did let fly his Excommunication against her. There was a stiffe Roman Catholick (as they delight to term themselves) otherwise a man well accomplished, and of an ingenuous Disposition, who being cast into Prison, (I conceive for his Religion,) was there visited in an high degree, with the Kings Evil. And having with great Pain and Expence, but no Successe, long used the advice of Physitians, at last he humbly addressed himself unto the Queens Majestie, by whom, with Gods help, he was compleatly cured. And being demanded, What news? [a] I perceive, said he, now at last by plain experience, that the Excommunication denounced by the Pope against her Majestie is in very deed of none effect, seeing God hath blessed her with so great and miraculous a Vertue.

a Gu. Tucker in Charismate cap. 6. pag. 92.

Queen Elizabeth why displeased with the people in Glocestershire

35. This mention of Queen Elizabeth (there is a magnetick Vertue in Stories, for one to attract another) minds me of a Passage in the beginning of her Reign. Making her Progresse into Glocestershire, people affected with this Disease did in uncivil Crowds presse in upon her. Insomuch that her Majestie, betwixt Anger, Grief, and Compassion, let fall words to this effect: Alasse, poor people, I cannot, I cannot cure you; it is God alone that can doe it. Which words some interpreted, (contrary to her Intent and Practice, continuing such Cures till the day of her Death) an utter renouncing and disclaiming of any Instrumentall Efficacy in her self. Whereas she onely removed her Subjects Eyes from gazing on her, to look up to Heaven. For mens Minds naturally are so dull and heavy, that instead of traveling with their Thanks to God, the Cause of all Cures, they lazily take up their Lodging more then half-way on this side, mistaking the Dealer for the Giver of their Recovery. It follows not therefore, that the Queen refused to heal their Bodies, because carefull in the the first place to cure their Souls of this dangerous Mistake. A Princesse, who as she was a most exact Demander of her Due, (observed seldome or never to forgive her greatest Favourites what they owed her) so did she most punctually pay her Ingagements to others, as to all men, so most especially to God, loth that he should lose any Honour due unto him, by her unjust Detaining thereof.

36. The Kings of France share also with those of England in this miraculous Cure. And Laurentius reports, that when Francis the first, King of France, was kept Prisoner in Spain, he, notwithstanding his Exile and Restraint, daily cured infinite Multitudes of people of that Disease; according to this Epigram:

Hispanos inter sanat Rex Chæradas, estque
Captivus Superis gratus, ut ante fuit.

The Captive King the Evil cures in Spain;
Dear, as before, he doth to God remain.

So it seemeth his Medicinall Quality is affixed not to his Prosperity, but Person; so that during his Durance he was fully free to exercise the same.

The Kings of France cure the Kings Evil.

37. Thus farre we patiently hear, and sufficiently credit this Authour; but can no longer afford him either Belief or Attention; when he presumeth to tell us, that the Kings of England never [a] cured the Kings Evill, a Vertue appropriated onely to his Majestie of France. Onely he confesseth, that long ago some of our English Kings of the Anjouan Race (descended from Jeffery Plantagenet) did heal the Falling Sickneſſe, with certain Consecrated Annulets, a Custome long since disused. Thus he seeks to deprive our Princes of their Patrimoniall Vertue, and to make them Reparations (instead of their sanative Power, whereof they are peaceably possest to them and their Heires, holding it of God in chief) with assigning them an old Lease, where the Title at the best was litigious, and the Term long ago expired. But the Reader may be pleased to take notice, that this Laurentius was Physician in ordinary to King Henry the fourth of France, and so had his Judgement herein bowed awry with so weighty a Relation; Flattery being so catching a Disease, wherewith the best Doctors of Physick may sometimes be infected. To cry quits with him, Doctor Tucker, Chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, in a Treatise he wrote of this Subject, denyeth the Kings of France ever originally cured this Evil, but per aliquam [b] Propaginem, by a Sprig of Right derived from the primitive Power of our English Kings, under whose Jurisdiction most of the French Provinces were once subjected.

b In his charismate cap. 6. pag. 34.

38. Between these two Authours, violent in Opposition, haply we may find the Truth, whose constant Dwelling-place is pleasantly seated in a moderate Vale, betwixt two swelling Extremes. For it plainly appeareth by uncontroulable Arguments and Evidences, that both the Crowns, of England and France, have for many years been invested with this miraculous Gift; yet so, that our English Kings are the elder Brothers in the Possession thereof. For if S[t]. Lewes, King of France (who was contemporary with our King Henry the third) was the [c] first of that Royall Race, which healed this Evil, his Cradle was more then 160. yeares after the Coffin of our Edward the Confessour, from whom, as is aforesaid, our Kings derive this soveraign Power by constant Succession. But methinks my Book in this Discourse, begins to bunch or swell out, and some will censure this Digression for a Struma, or tedious Exuberancy, beyond the just Proportion of our History; wherefore no more hereof: onely I will conclude with two Prayers; extending the first to all Good people, That Divine Providence would be pleased to preserve them from this painfull and loathsome Disease. The second I shall confine to my self alone (not knowing how it will suit with the Consciences and Judgements of others,) yet so as not excluding any who are disposed to joyn with me in my Petition; namely, That if it be the Will of God to visit me (whose Body hath the Seeds of all Sickneſſe, and Soul of all Sins) with the aforeſaid Malady, I may have the Favour to be touched of his Majeſty, the Happineſs to be healed by him, and the Thankfulneſs to be grateſull to God the Authour, and Gods Image the Inſtrument of my Recovery. I'le onely adde this ſhort Story and then proceed. A little before theſe Wars began, a Miniſter (not over-loyally affected,) was accuſed, and was like to have been troubled for this Paſſage in his Sermon, that Oppreſſion was the Kings Evil. But being called to anſwer it before the Commiſſioners, he expounded his own words, that he meant Oppreſſion was the Kings Evil, not that the King cauſed it, but onely cured it, and alone in this Land could remedy and redreſſe the ſame.

Harold uſurpeth the Crown.

39. King Edward dying Childleſſe, cauſed by his affected Chaſtity, left the Land at a Loſſe for an Heir in a direct Line, & opened a Door to the Ambition of Collaterall Pretenders. Indeed the undoubted Right lay in Edgar Atheling, Son to Edward the Out-law, Grand-child to Edmond Iron-ſide King of England: But he being tender in Age, and (as it ſeems) ſoft in Temper, and of a forrein Garb, becauſe of his Education in Hungary, (his moſt potent Alliance in Germany, out of Diſtance to ſend him ſeaſonable Aſſiſtance,) was paſſed by by the Engliſh Nobility. Theſe choſe Harold to be King, whoſe Title to the Crown is not worth our deriving of it, much leſs his relying on it. But having endeared Marriallists by his Valour, engaged Courtiers by his Bounty, and obliged all ſorts of People by his Affability, he was advanced to the Crown by thoſe, who more conſidered his Ability to defend, then his Right to deſerve it.

William Duke of Normandy twiſteth many weak Titles together.

40. William Duke of Normandy was Competitour with Harold, who ſupplying in Number what he wanted in Strength of his Titles, claimed the Crown by Alliance, Adoption, and Donation from Edward the Confeſſour; though he was as unable to give and bequeath, as William, being a Baſtard, in the Strictneſſe of Saxon Laws, was uncapable to receive it. But his Sword was ſtronger then his Titles, and the Sins of the Engliſh more forceable then either, to deliver that Nation (now grown, as Authours obſerve, intolerably vicious) into his Subjection. So that in a pitch'd Field, he overcame and killed King Harold, with the prime of the Engliſh Nobility, (a juſt Puniſhment on their Perjury, for their deſerting their Lawfull Prince,) and ſuch as ſurvived, were forced either to hold the Stirrup, or Lackey by the Side of many a mean-born Norman, mounted to Places of Profit and Honour. This was the fifth time wherein the South of this Iſland was conquered; firſt by Romans, ſecondly by Picts and Scots, thirdly by Saxons, fourthly by the Danes, and fifthly by the Normans. This mindeth me of the Prophet Eliſha's ſpeech to [a] Ioaſh King of Iſrael; Thou ſhouldeſt have ſmitten Syria 5. or 6. times, then hadſt thou ſmitten Syria, till thou hadſt conſumed it. (It ſeemeth five may, but ſix muſt diſpatch a People.) God hath already ſmitten this Iſland five times with a Rod of Forrein Invaſion, let us beware the ſixth time (that ſinall, fatall Number) for fear it prove the laſt, and utter Confuſion and Deſtruction of our Nation.

a 2 Kings 13. 19.

William rebateth his conquering Sword with Compoſition.

41. Thus King William came in by Conqueſt, though in the later part of his Reign, growing more mild and moderate, he twiſted his Right of Victory with Compoſition: as ſuch who have raviſhed a Woman againſt her will, endeavour afterwards to make her Reparation by Wooing and Wedding her, whom formerly they had wronged; ſo with Love to cover their Luſt, by the moſt excuſable way of Marriage. So King William, though he had forced this Land, yet afterwards, not ſo much out of Remorſe as Policy, (to ſuppreſſe frequent Tumults, and procure Security to himſelf and Succeſſours) is ſaid to have cloſed with the Commons in a fair way of Agreement, reſtoring many ancient Priviledges unto them. Thus, though Conqueſt was more honourable for his Credit, Compoſition was comfortable for his Conſcience, and accounted moſt ſafe for his poſterity. Witneſſe that judiciall Sentence, which King William in open Court pronounced againſt himſelf, adjudging a Camden's Britannia in Norfolk.

42. But what Impression the Norman Victories made on the State, let Politicians observe; what Change it produced in the Laws, we leave to the Learned of that Faculty to prosecute: whilest that which renders the Conquest to Consideration in our Church-Story is, the manifest Change of Religion, from what formerly was publickly professed in England. To make this Mutation in it's due time more conspicuous, we will here conclude this Book with a brief Character of the principall Doctrines generally taught and believed by the English, in these four last Centuries, before tainted with any Norman Infection. For though we must confesse and bemoan, that Corruptions crept into the Church by Degrees, and Divine Worship began to be clogg'd with superstitious Ceremonies; yet that the Doctrine remained still sound and intire, in most materiall Points, will appeare by an Induction of the dominative Controversies, wherein we differ from the Church of Rome.

No Prayers for the Dead, in the modern notion of Papists.

For, though we find Prayers for the Dead, yet they were not in the nature of Propitiation for their Sins, or to procure Relaxation from their Sufferings: but were only an honourable Commemoration of their Memories, and a Sacrifice of Thanksgiving for their Salvation. Thus S[t]. Cuthbert, after he had seen the Soul of one Hadwaldus [e] carried by Angels into Heaven, did celebrate Obsequies of Prayers in his behalf.

Purgatory, though newly hatched, not yet fledged.

For, although there are frequent Visions and Revelations in this Age pretended, thereon to build Purgatory (which had no Foundation in Scripture) yet the Architects of that fancy-full Fabrick had not so handsomely contrived it, as it stands at this day in the Romish Belief. For [a] Bede, out of the Vision of Furseus, relateth certain great Fires above the Aire, appointed to examine every one according to the merits of his VVork; differing from the Papists Purgatory, which Bellarmine, by the common Consent of the School-men, determineth to be within the Bowels of the Earth. Thus nothing can be invented, and perfected at once.

Communion under both kinds.

For, [b] Bede relateth, that one Hilmer, an Officer of Egfride King of Northumberland, intreated our Cuthbert to send a Priest that might minister the Sacrament of the Lords Body and Bloud unto his Wife, that then lay a dying. And Cuthbert himself, immediatly before his own Departure out of this Life, received the Communion of the Lords Body and Bloud. And, lest any should fondly hope to decline so pregnant an Instance, by the novel conceit of Concomitancy (a Distinction that could not speak, because it was not born in that Age) it is punctually noted, that he distinctly received the Cup.

Pocula degustat vitæ, Christique supinum
Sanguine munit iter ———

His Voyage steep the easier to climbe up,
Christs Bloud he drank out of Lifes healthfull Cup.

So that the Eucharist was then administred entire, and not maimed (as it is by Papists at this day) serving it, as [d] Hanun the Ammonite did the Cloaths and Beards of David's Ambassadours, cutting it off at the Middle. And, though the word Mass was frequent in that Age (generally expressing all Divine Service;) yet was it not known to be offered as a propitiatory-Sacrifice for the quick and dead.

43. But if any desire farther Information herein, let him repair to the worthy Work, which Iames, the right learned and pious Arch-bishop of Armagh, hath written of the Religion professed by the ancient Irish and British. From whom I have borrowed many a Note (though not alwayes thanking him in the Margin, by citing his Name) and therefore now must make one generall Acknowledgement of my Engagement. In Cities we see, that such as sell by Retaile (though of lesse Credit) are of great Use, especially to poor people, in parcelling out Peny-worths of Commodities to them, whose Purses cannot extend to buy by Whole-sale from the Merchant. Conceive I in like manner, my Pains will not be altogether unprofitable, who in this History have fetch'd my Wares from the Store-house of that Reverend Prelate (the Cape-Merchant of all Learning) and here in little Remnants, deliver them out to petty-country-Chapmen, who hitherto have not had the Hap, or Happinesse to understand the original Treasuries, whence they are taken. And clean through this Work in point of Chronologie, I have with implicite Faith followed his [e] Computation, setting my Watch by his Dial, knowing his Dial to be set by the Sun, and Account most exactly calculated, according to the critical truth of Time. Long may he live for the Glory of God, and Good of his Church. For whereas many learned men, though they be deep Abysses of Knowledge, yet (like the Caspian Sea, receiving all, and having no Out-let) are loth to impart ought to others; this bright Sun is as bountifull to deal abroad his Beams, as such dark Dales as my self, are glad, and delighted to receive them.

Such generally the Envy of* Antiquaries, preferring that their Rarities ſhould die vvith them, and be buried in their Graves, rather then others receive any Benefit thereby.

You croſs the current of common Corruption; it being queſtionable vvhether you be more skilfull in knovving, carefull in keeping, or courteous in communicating your curious Collections in that kind.

Juſtly therefore have I dedicated theſe ſeverall Copies of Battel-Abbey Roll unto you: firſt, becauſe I have received one of the moſt authentick of them from your ovvn Hand: ſecondly, becauſe your ancient Name chargeth through and through moſt of theſe Catalogues. Yea, as the Archers came over vvith the Conquerour, ſo the Conquerour may be ſaid to come over vvith the Archers, (therefore placed in a List by themſelves,) becauſe their Valour atchieved the greateſt part of his Victory.

PEruſing the worthy Pains of grave and godly Mr. Fox, in his Book of Martyrs, I find him in the Reign of William the firſt, exemplifying a double Catalogue of ſuch eminent Perſons as came over at the Conqueſt. Now, ſeeing ſo Reverend a Writer accounted the inſerting thereof no Deviation from his Church-Hiſtory, we preſume accordingly, by way of Recreation of the Reader, to preſent him with a larger Liſt of thoſe Names, with ſome brief Notes thereupon. The Deſign propounded and aſſerted.

Imposing of names denotes dominion.
a Gen. 4.1.
b Gen. 2.23.
c Gen. 1.26.
d Exod. 3.14.

Here will I premiſe nothing about the ancient Original of Names, which argued the undoubted Dominion of him who firſt gave them, over thoſe on whom they were impoſed. Thus Eve [a] named Cain; to ſhew the command, even of the Mother, over the eldeſt (and therefore over all her) Children. Adam [b] named Eve, She ſhall be called VVoman; to ſignifie the Husbands Sovereignty over his Wife. God named [c] Adam, Let us make Adam, or Man; to denote his Power and Authority over Man. And God named himſelf, [d] I am hath ſent me unto you; importing his abſolute and independent being in, and from himſelf. But, waving what may be ſaid of the beginning of Names, we ſhall digeſt what we conceive neceſſary for our preſent Purpoſe, into the following Propoſitions.

Fixt Surnames not long before the Conqueſt.

The firſt is; Surnames were fixed in Families in England, at, or about the Conqueſt. I ſay, fixed. Formerly, though men had Surnames, yet their Sons did not, as I may ſay, follow ſuit with their Fathers, the Name deſcended not hereditarily on the Family. At, or about. Fourty years under or over will break no ſquares. It began ſomewhat ſooner, in the Confeſſours time, fetch'd out of France, but not univerſally ſettled till ſome hundred years after. When men therefore tell us, how their Surnames have been faſtened on their Families, ſome Centuries of years before the Conqueſt, we hear them ſay ſo. His Chronology was no better then his Herauldry, who boaſted that his Auncеſtours had given the three Gun-holes (which indeed were the three Annulets) for their Armes theſe thouſand yeares, when Guns themſelves have not been extant three hundred yeares in Europe. The ſame Soloeciſme in effect is committed by ſuch, who pretend to the Antiquity of Surnames, before the ſame were ſettled in rerum natura.

Surnames late in (becauſe not needfull to) Kings.

The ſecond; Kings had fixed Surnames later then Common people. Our four firſt Norman Kings had no Surnames, Henry the ſecond being the firſt of the Plantageniſts. Wonder not that a gentile Faſhion ſhould come later into the Court, then into the Country, and laſt to the Crown it ſelf. For Names being made to diſtinguiſh men, they were more neceſſary for common people, whoſe Obſcurities would be loſt in a Multitude, were they not found out by the ſigne of their Surnames, having no other Eminency whereby they might be differenced. But Princes (being comparatively few in reſpect of private perſons) are ſufficiently diſcovered by their own Luſtre, and Sovereignty may be ſaid to be a Surname to it ſelf; and therefore Kings, not of Neceſſity, but mere Pleaſure have accepted additions to their Chriſtian-names.

Many of the Normans moſt noble by birth.

The third; Many who came over out of Normandy, were Noble in their native Country. Eſpecially ſuch who are ſtiled from their Places, as le Sire de Soteville, le Sire de Margneville, le Sire de Tancarville, &c. whereby we underſtand them Lords and Owners of ſuch Mannours, Towns, and Caſtles from whence they took their Denomination. However this particle de ſuch a place (when without le Sire going before it) doth not alwayes give Livery and Seiſin, and preſently put the perſon ſo named into Poſſeſſion of the Place; ſometimes barely importing that he was born there, and not Owner thereof.

Yet ſome not ſo much as Gentlemen.

The fourth; All that came over with the Conquerour were not Gentlemen untill they came over with the Conquerour. For, inſtantly upon their Victory, their Fleſh was refined, Bloud clarified, Spirits elevated to an higher Purity and Perfection. Many a Peaſant in Normandy commenced Monſieur by coming over into England, where they quickly got Goods to their Gentry, Lands to their Goods, and thoſe of the moſt honourable Tenure in Capite it ſelf. What Richard the third ſaid, no leſſe ſpitefully then falſely, of the VVoodviles (Brethren to the Wife of his Brother King Edward the fourth, by whom they were advanced) that Many were made noble who formerly were not worth a Noble, was moſt true of ſome of the Norman Souldiery, ſuddenly ſtarſtarting up honourable from mean Originalls. Theſe cruelly inſulted over the Saxon ancient Gentry, whom they found in England. Thus on the new caſting of a Die, when Ace is on the Top, Siſe muſts needs be at the Bottome.

Many of the neighbouring Nations under the notion of Normans.

The fifth; Beſides native Normans, many of the neighbouring Countries ingaged in England's Invaſion. As Flemings, which Baldwin Earle of Flanders, and Father in law unto the Conquerour, ſent to aide him: VValloons, with many from Picardy, Britain, Anjou, and the very Heart of France. Thus when a Fair of Honour and Profit is proclaimed, Chapmen will flock from all parts unto it. Some will wonder, that any would be ſuch wilfull Loſers, as to exchange France for England, a Garden for a Field. Was not this degrading of their Souls in point of Pleaſure, going backward from VVine to Ale, from VVheat to Oates, then the generall Bread-corn of England? Beſides, coming Northward they left the Sun on their Backs; the Sun, who is a comfortable Vſher to go before, but bad Train-bearer to come behind one. But let ſuch know, that England in it ſelf is an excellent Country (too good for the unthankfull people which live therein) and ſuch Forreiners, who ſeemingly ſlight, ſecretly love, and like the Plenty and Profit thereof. But, grant England far ſhort of France in Goodneſſe, yet ſuch Adventurers hoped to atchieve to themſelves a better Condition in a worſe Country. Many a younger Brother came over hither, in hope here to find an elder Brotherſhip, and accordingly procured an Inheritance to him, and his Poſterity. As for the great French Nobility, Store was no ſore unto them: ſuch Pluraliſts retained ſtill their old Patrimonies in France, with the additions of their new Poſſeſſions in England.

W-names Walloons.

The ſixth; Names coming over with the Conqueſt, beginning with VV. were not out of France, but the Vicinage thereof. As the Britans diſclaim X. the Latines Y. (ſave when the badge of a Greek word Latinized:) ſo the French diſown VV. When we find it therefore the initiall letter of a Name (whereof many occur in the enſuing Catalogue) it argueth the ſame Walloon, or Almain. Yea, I am credibly informed, that ſome of the Engliſh here, wearied with Harold's Uſurpation, fled over into Normandy to fetch in the Conquerour; ſo that, when King William entred, they returned into England. And this particularly hath been avouched of the noble Family of the Wakes, who were here before the Conqueſt, yet found among the Norman Invaders.

The twilight credit of Battel-Abbey Roll.

The ſeventh; Battel-Abbey Roll is the beſt extant Catalogue of Norman Gentry, if a true Copy thereof could be procured.

1. Battel-Abbey Roll. Becauſe hung up in that Abbey, as fixt to the Freehold thereof, where the Names of ſuch as came over with the Conqueſt were recorded.
2. Beſt extant. Otherwiſe Induſtry, with Honeſty, Leiſure, and Liberty to peruſe Dooms-day-book, might collect one more perfect, out of impartiall Records, which neither fear, nor flatter. Such a Catalogue were to be believed on it's Word, before Battell Roll on it's Oath.
3. Yet that Abbey Roll deſerved Credit, if a true Copy might be procured. One asked, which was the beſt S^t. Auguſtine? To whom this Anſwer was given (generally true of all ancient Authours) even that Auguſtine which is leaſt corrected. For Corrections commonly are corruptive, as following the Fancy and Humour of the Corrector.

Battel-Abbey Roll hath been practiced upon with all the Figures of Diction, Proteſis, Aphereſis, &c. ſome names therein being augmented, ſubtracted, extended, contracted, lengthened, curtailed. The ſame Scruple therefore which troubleth Sophiſters, Whether Jaſon's weather-beaten Ship, ſo often clouted and patched with new Boards, were the ſame numerically with the firſt; may be be propounded of Battel-Abbey Roll, whether that extant with us, after so many Alterations, be individually the same with the Original? See what a deadly Gash our great[a] Antiquary gives to the Credit thereof; Whosoever considereth it well, shall find it to be forged, and those Names to be inserted, which the Time in every Age favoured, and were never mentioned in that Authenticall Record.

[a] Camden in his Remaines p. 152.

Obj. If such be the depraving of Battel-Abbey Roll, then no Credit at all is due unto it. Let it be pilloried for a mere Cheat, and be suffered no longer to go about, to deceive the honest Reader thereof: seeing we cannot hear the true Tone of Names therein, Monks have so set them to the Tune of their present Benefactours, and Minions of the Age they lived in.

Obj. Then it is of no credit.

Anſ. How credit thereunto is to be cautioned.

Anſ. Though there be much Adulteration therein, yet I conceive, the main Bulk and Body thereof uncorrupted. As they therefore overvalue this Roll, who make it the Grammer of French-Gentry, the Heraulds Institutes, and of Canonicall Credit amongst them: so such too much decry the same, who deny all trust thereunto. Yea, we may confidently relie on this Roll, where we find a Concurrence of ancient English Historians therewith: and this will appear in the generality of Names which that Roll presenteth unto us.

We find in our English Chronielers two printed Copies (a Manuscript thereof worth mentioning, I have not met with) of Battel-Abbey Roll. Wherein such various Lections, they agree neither in Number, Order, nor Spelling of the Names; which, though generally digested in an Alphabeticall way, are neither of them exactly ordered according to the same. But behold both.

Besides this Roll of Battel Abbey, there is another extant, not (as this) Alphabetically modelled, (the work of some Monk well at Leisure) but loose, without any literal Order. An argument, in my opinion, of the more native Purity thereof, (lesse soiled with partiall Fingers) as not so much tampered with by Art and Industry. It is reputed by many to be the Muster-roll of such principal Souldiers, as embarqued with Duke William at St. Valeries: and it is said that after the Fight ended, this List was called over, and all persons solemnly summoned, to answer to their Names therein; though many made no vous-avez, as either sick of their Wounds, or slain out-right amongst the six thousand and odd, which lost their Lives on the place. Were we assured hereof, we would preferre this before the former Roll, believing a French Muster-master, rather then any English Monk, (though the Abbot of Battel himself) as not so subject to the suspicion of Flattery herein. This Catalogue is taken out of Guillam Tayleur a Norman Chronicler of good Credit: but the worst is, we want Tayleur's French Originall, and I fear it hath passed through some Botchers hands, before it came to us. For there be three Editions thereof in our English Historians, which (like the feet of a Badger) fall out of unequal Length, (if the Reader be pleased to measure them) so different the Number of names therein. However, because this Catalogue may conduce to the supplying of Defects, clearing of Doubts, and amending of Faults in that former, we here present the several Copies thereof.

There is still another Catalogue, late in the possession of Thomas Scriven Esquire. I confesse, Quantus Author, tanta fides; and the Gentleman, long since dead, being generally unknown, some will question the Authority thereof. But know he was a good Promus-condus of ancient Records. Condus, in keeping them faithfully himself, and Promus, in imparting them freely to others. This his Catalogue is exemplified by John Stow in his Chronicle. Of whom though a Cambridge Comedian was pleased pleasantly to say, that Mendacio now and then jogg'd on the Elbow; yet indeed he deserveth [a] Camden's commendation of a famous Chronicler, lacking Learning rather then Truth, seldome omitting what is, sometimes recording what is not observeable. But see the [b] Catalogue.

Tuoire,

To theſe ſix Catalogues let me adde one more; not that I am an affecter of a Septenarie Number, but becauſe confident it is the beſt and moſt authentick of all the reſt. I find it in [a] M^r. Fox; but ſurely collected by ſome (more skilfull then himſelf in this kind) out of ſeverall ancient Chronicles. It containeth ſuch Perſons who after the Battel were advanced to Seignories in this Land. It preſenteth us onely with the initial Letters of their Chriſtian Names, ſave for the firſt ſeven therein. And although hereby we are left at an Uncertainty, as whether G. ſignifieth George or Gilbert, I. Iames or Iohn; yet more then a Conjecture may be made by obſerving what Chriſtian Name was predominant in their Poſterity.

I preſume the Reader ſufficiently wearied with ſo many dull Proſe-Catalogues; and now we will refreſh him a little with an old Song, as I find their Names metrically compoſed in the Chronicle of Iohn Brompton the Abbot. Indeed the Rythms may be ſaid to make themſelves; ſuch is the like Cadency of many Norman-names; and if the Verſes do but chime and tinck in the Cloſe, it is enough to the purpoſe.

Passe we now from Poetry to Painting, seeing great the affinity betwixt them, Fancy being predominant in both. Present we here the Reader with the Names and Armes of fourty Souldiers of King William the Conquerour, matched with as many Monks; but how, and on what occasion, the ensuing Writing will acquaint us.

In the time of Thurston, our Abbot of Ely, born of worshipfull Parentage in the Village of Wichford near Ely, King Harold, Son of Godwin, and together with him all the States of England almost, were slain by the Souldiers of William Duke of Normandy, Nephew to Saint Edward the King, upon the Feast of S^t. Calixt the Pope, in the year of our Lord God one thousand sixty and six.

Whereupon Egelwine Bishop of Durham, Egfride Abbot of S^t. Albans, the Earle of Margary, and Edward Byarn, with sundry other chief of the Land, together with their Friends, laden with great Treasures, fled unto us, desirous to withstand, so far as lay in them, the enterprise of the Bastard: by whose Aide we withstood the tempestuous Threats of the Normans seven yeares; untill such time as Belase, who at that time was General of the Kings Army, and from whom the circuit of certain Hills at the South end of Alderhithe-Causey, which at this day are corruptly called Belsar's-Hills, took their name, being cast up on purpose, that the Army in the Night time might lodge there safely, astonied us by the means of an huge number of Boats gathered together upon a sudden. A Councell then being called, it seemed good to our Captains in convenient time to crave the Kings Mercy. Whereupon certain were sent to the Kings Court, being then at Warwick, carrying with them to the King a mighty Treasure, a competent Price & Satisfaction to pacify him concerning an unadvised Attempt. Where with the Honourable King was appeased, yet with this Covenant and Condition, that so long as it pleased him, fourty of the Kings Souldiers should be maintained at the charge of the Monastery. For the King feared, lest that whilest he bent his forces against the Scots not yet subdued, the Isle of Ely (being indeed a dreadfull Strength) should again revolt to his great Danger. The Souldiers with their Retinue are sent, they come and here abide. Whereof each one is delivered to some principall Monk, as a Captain to his

Lieu-

Lieutenant, or a Guest to his Host. Now the King decreed that Bertwolde, the Butler, should minister Food to the Souldiers and Monks joyntly together, one with another, in the common Hall of the Monastery. What need many words? These Captains to their Lieutenants, these Guests to their Hosts, these Souldiers to their Monks were most welcome: for all of them entertained each one, each one entertained all, and every one mutually one another, with all duties of Humanity. At the length the Fire of the civil War being quenched, and the King established according to his Hearts desire, five yeares after, his Severity in punishing being in godly manner pacified, it pleased the King to withdraw this Yoke, wherewith the Pride of the Monks was now sufficiently abated. And the Conquerour reclaimed his Souldiers, to punish the ungodly Insolency of his Son Robert, who at that time in outragious manner kept Riot in Normandy. But our Monks (which is a wonder to report) did not onely with Teares bewaile the departure of their deerest Mates, the heroicall Souldiers, and welcome Guests; but howled out most fearfully, and beat their Breasts as destitute of Hope, after the manner of a new-married Wife, whose Husband is violently taken away, at an unseasonable time, out of her sweet Armes unto the Wars. For they doubted lest that, being thus forsaken, they should be subject to the Spoil; whereas they had lived securely at ease, with their armed Guests, to whose trust they had committed themselves and their Goods. They being now all ready for their Journey, every one of our Monks, many in number, invested in their Copes, in dutifull manner accompanied these Gentlemen departing, unto Hadenham, with Songs, Crosses, Censers, Processions, and all Solemnity that might be used. And returning home, took order that the Armes of each Souldier should be lively depainted upon the Wall of the common Hall, where they took their Repast together, to the perpetuall memory of the customed Kindness of their Souldier-like Guests, the which from time to time, from the Predecessours to the Successours, and from obscure Antiquity to our Posterity at this day, are curiously set forth to be viewed of all men, not without a pleasant Delight, in such manner as they glitter and shine honourable in the Margent of this Table.

This Writing was composed about the Reign of King Henry the seventh, but the Armes set up in Ely-Hall (as may appeare by inserting the Coat of Robert Orford, the fourteenth Bishop of Ely) about the year 1306. Which Hall was destroyed at the Dissolution; but another Transcript of the Armes of these Knights being depicted on the Wall of the Deanes Dining-room, was lately extant, whence our Draught here presented was taken (rather truly then neatly done, out of desire to conform to the Original) and communicated to me by that worthy Knight, and able Antiquary, S^r. Simon Archer of Warwickshire.

Some will wonder that M^r. Camden maketh no mention hereof, whose Omniscience in these things may be presumed of. Yea, which is more, there is (saith [a] he) a Rampire of mean Height, but of very large Compasse, which they call Belsar's-Hills, of one Bellisar, I wot not who; taking no notice of Belasis, the Norman Generall, who subdued Elie, and from whom our late-produced Writing attesteth those Hills to be so named. But, besides that Camdenus non videt omnia, great Antiquaries are sometimes subject to fits of Sullennesse, & will not see what they do see, when resolved to take no Notice thereof.

[a] Camden's Britannia in Cambridgeshire.

And now we have presented the Reader with eight severall Catalogues, two of Holinshead's, two of Stow's, two of M^r. Fox, one of Serven's, one of Friar Brompton's, besides the List of Elie Knights, I could wish a good Herauld would make a Mono-ogdoon, that is, one out of eight, and Alphabetically digest the same; also note what Names are extant, and which, how, and when extinct.

By names which I call extinct, understand, not existent in any signal and remarkable lustre proportionable to their former greatness, though possibly some obscure under-boughs, truly derived thence, may still be in being. That worthy [b] Doctour hath made many Converts in Physick to his seeming Paradox, main-maintaining the Circulation of Bloud running round about the Body of man. Nor is it leſſe true, that gentile Bloud fetcheth a Circuit in the body of a Nation, running from Yeomanrie, through Gentry to Nobility, and ſo retrograde, returning through Gentry to Yeomanrie again. My Father hath told me from the mouth of S^r. Robert Cotton, that that worthy Knight met in a Morning a true and undoubted Plantagenet holding the Plough in the Country.

He might adde Arms to ancient names, where he could recover any Certainty therein; for I am confident that hereditarie Arms are not ſo ancient as the Conqueſt, but fixed in Families about the beginning of Henry the third, finding before that time the warlike Deviſes of the Sons, not the ſame with the Fancies of their Fathers, and their Grand-children differing from both.

If any ſay that I have already gone too far in this Subject, who am no Herauld by Profeſſion, but onely Κηρυξ, Præco, a Crier in the ſpirituall acception of the Office: yea, that this favours of Revenge, as if, becauſe ſo many in this Age invade my Calling, I in requitall have made Incurſion into other mens Profeſſions; like men that take Letters of Mart, not caring whom they wrong, ſo they repair themſelves for their former ſuſtained, or pretended Loſſes: Let ſuch know that I adventure on Herauldry, not as a Calling, but as an acceſſorie quality for Recreation. And, in evidence of my Loyalty to the Kings of Arms, I ſubmit what here I have written to their Cenſure and Correction, who have obliged me unto them with their many and great Civilities.

Onely I will add ſome Corollaries to this Roll, and ſo conclude.

The prefixing of D' before names.

First Coroll. When any Name begins with a Vowel, or an H, the prefixing of D' createth a (ſeeming) new Name: as Arcy, D' Arcy; Aunvers, D' Aunvers; Haurel or Hairel, D' Hairel.

French Surnames diſcerned by their terminations.

Second Coroll. French Surnames are generally diſcernable by their Terminations

In	As	In	As
Age	Savage	Ers	Danvers
Ard	Giffard	Eux	Devereux
Champe	Beauchampe	Et	Barret
Court	Harcourt	Lay	Cholmelay
Cy	Darcy	Nay	Courtnay
Ell	Terrell	Ot	Talbot
Er	Archer	Vile	Nevile

Some few Names whoſe Endings are exceptions from theſe Rules, are eaſily obſerved by reading, and known to be of French Extraction.

Wivil cloſeth the Catalogue.

Third Coroll. Wivil is the laſt name in moſt Catalogues. Firſt fixed at Stanton Vivil in Leiceſterſhire, where they continued in the twenty fourth year of the Reign of King Henry the ſixth, on this Token, that William Vivill (being ſworn and examined) did depoſe that he could expend twenty pounds a year of old Rents beſides all Charges. Of this Houſe was Robert de Vivil Biſhop of Salisbury, one neither Handſome, nor Learned, but eminent for his long Life, (fourty five years Biſhop there) and high Spirit, that he would not ſuffer the Caſtle of Sarum to be parted from his See, challenged by William Mountacute Earle of Salisbury, without putting it upon Tryall of Battel. Long ſince the Wivils here are extinct, bearing Gules, Frettey Vary, a Chief Or. But there is extant an ancient Family of that name in the North (though different in Armes) augmented in State and Honour by Matches with the Heires of Pigot, Scroope of Upſall, and Bointon: whereof S^r. Marmaduke Wivil of Conſtable-Burton in Richmondſhire was created Baronet by King Iames, whoſe Grand-child Marmaduke Baronet Wivil married the Daughter of Coniers Lord Darcy. And I am glad that I may auſpiciouſly cloſe, and conclude my Catalogue with ſo worthy a Gentleman; bearing Gules, three Cheveronels braced in Baſe, Gobonee Argent and Azure, a Chief Or.

The family of the Walgraves.

Fourth Coroll. All names of Gentry which by authenticall Records came over at the Conqueſt, are not expreſſed in any of theſe Catalogues; as Saukvil, or Sackvil, and Walgrave, we finding two of that Surname.

One John Walgrave a Saxon, living at Walgrave in Northamptonſhire, and poſſeſſed of that Mannour before the Conqueſt.

The other a Walloon of that name, coming over with the Conquerour, and employed by him in many Services.

The later of theſe, on the former his conſent that he ſhould marry his onely Daughter, procured from the Conquerour a Pardon for his Father in Law, that he might quietly enjoy his Lands and Livings, deſcending on this Walloon VValgrave after the other his Death. Which Pardon, legible in French, was Anno 1612. in the poſſeſſion of the [a] Walgraves, ſtill flouriſhing in Suffolk.

Fifth Coroll. Let none wonder, if ſome names of VVorſhipfull and Honourable Families, undoubtedly of French Originall (but ſince the Conqueſt) have not appeared in the aforeſaid Catalogues. For know that after the Conqueſt, ſundry French-men of ſignall Worth entred England at ſeverall times, chiefly

At the Marriage
- First of King Henry the ſecond to Queen Eleanor, who brought the Dukedome of Aquitain & Earledome of Poictiers for her Dowrie.
- Secondly of Edward the ſecond to Iſabella Daughter to Philip the Fair King of France, when three thouſand French came over with her (complained of as a great Grievance) and many ſettled here.

After the Conqueſt ſeverall recruits of French in England.

Not to ſpeak of the Conqueſts of King Edward the third and Henry the fifth in France, cauſing ſuch an Intercourſe of the Nations, that then England and France may be ſaid to have born counterchangeably each others Natives.

Sixth Coroll. Many will admire no mention of Tradesmen in all theſe Catalogues, being of abſolute neceſſity both in War and Peace. For ſoon would the Head of the beſt Monſieur ake without a Capper, Hands be tanned without a Glover, Feet be foundred without a Tanner, Currier, Shoemaker, whole Body be ſtarved, cold, without VVeaver, Fuller, Tailour, hungry, without Baker, Brewer, Cook, harbourleſs, without Maſon, Smith and Carpenter. Say not, it was beneath the French Gallantry to ſtoup to ſuch mean Employments, who found all theſe Trades here amongſt the Engliſh their Vaſſalls. For (beſides that nothing is baſe which is honeſt, and neceſſary for humane Society) ſuch as are acquainted with the French, both ancient & modern, finicall humour, know they account our Tailours Botchers, Shoemakers Coblers, Cooks Slovens, compared to the exactneſſe of their Fancy and Palate; ſo that certainly ſuch Trades came over with them.

Tradeſmen not mentioned in this Roll came over with them.

Seventh Coroll. But hear what our great [b] Antiquary ſaith herein. In that moſt authenticall Regiſter, Doomeſday Book in the Exchequer, ye ſhall have Cocus, Aurifaber, Pictor, Piſtor, Accipitrarius, Camerarius, Venator, Piſcator, Medicus; Cook, Goldſmith, Painter, Baker, Falconer, Chamberlain, Huntſman, Fiſher, Leach, Marſhall, Porter, and others, which then held land in capite, and without doubt left theſe Names to their Poſterity; albeit haply they are not mentioned in thoſe Tables of Battel Abbey of ſuch as came in at the Conqueſt.

Eighth Coroll. Now let me beſpeak the Readers Pity (though poſſibly his ingenuous Sympathie hath given it before it was requeſted) for thoſe poor Engliſh-men who were to find Free-quarter for all theſe French. Where could their Land-lords lodge them? or rather how could they long continue Land-lords, when ſuch potent Gueſts came to their Houſes? O the ſeverall wayes which their Neceſſities dictated unto them! Some fought, as the Kentiſh; who capitulated for their Liberty: ſome fled, as thoſe in the North into Scotland: ſome hid themſelves, as many in middle England in the Iſle of Ely: ſome, as thoſe of Norfolk, traverſed their Title by Law, and that with good Succeſſe in the Old age of King William the Conquerour. Moſt betook themſelves to Patience, which taught many a Noble Hand to work, Foot to travel, Tongue to intreat; even thanking them for their Courteſie, who were pleaſed to reſtore a Shiver of their own Loaf which they violently took from them.

The ſad caſe of the Engliſh.

To the Right Honourable,

WILLIAM,

Lord Beauchampe, &c.

GRAND-CHILDE,

AND

HEIR APPARENT,

To the Right Honourable,

WILLIAM,

Marquiſs of Hertford.

SOme there are, who exact of every Chriſtian (as a Touchſtone of their ſincerity) to render an account of the exact time of their Converſion, with the Circumſtances thereof, how, when, and where performed. I muſt crave leave to enter my ſelf a Diſſenter herein, conceiving ſuch a Demand unreaſonable, reaſonable, as generally required eſential to all true Believers.

I confeſs ſome may return a ſatisfactory Anſwer thereunto; namely, ſuch, whoſe Souls (ſuddenly ſnatch'd out of Errour and Vitiouſneſs) were immediately wrought upon, (almoſt in an inſtant) by the Spirit of God. Thus of thoſe * three thouſand gained, (on Many-Saints-day) by Saint Peter, at Jeruſalem, with the preaching of one Sermon, each one might punctually and preciſely tell, the very Moment of their true Converſion, and generally, the WORSE men have been, the BETTER they can point at the accurate date thereof.

* Acts 22.41.

And thus as Kings count their actions by the years of their Reign, (Biſhops formerly of their Conſecration) ſo theſe may uſe the ſtile (In the year of our Converſion, firſt, or ſecond, &c.) And as * Herod kept a Feſtivall of his Natural Birth-day, ſuch (if ſo pleaſed) may duly and truly obſerve an Anniverſary Solemnity of their Regeneration.

* Mat. 14.6.

A Priviledge, not granted to all true Believers, God, to ſhew his Power that he Can, and Pleaſure that he VVill, vary the manner of Mens Converſion, (though going the ſame path by his VVord and Spirit) uſeth a flower pace in the hearts of others, in whom Grace is wrought ſenſim ſine ſenſu, modeled by degrees;

In

In ſuch, no mortal man can aſſign, the minutary juncture of Time, when preparing grace (which cleared the ground) ended, and ſaving grace (which finiſh'd the fabrick of Converſion) did firſt begin.

Obſervable to this purpoſe are the words of our Saviour, * So is the Kingdom of God, as if a man ſhould caſt ſeed into the ground, and ſhould ſleep, and riſe night and day, and the ſeed ſhould ſpring, and grow up, He Knoweth Not How. That grace is ſown, and is grown, Men know; but when, and how, (in the perſons aforeſaid) God Knows. * Mark 4. 26.

Beſides theſe, (adult Converts) there are a ſecond ſort of Chriſtians unable to diſcover the Date of grace dawning in them; namely, ſuch who with * Timothy, may be ſaid to be good, time out of minde, ſucking in grace with their milk, extracted from, and educated under a pious Parentage. * 2 Tim. 1. 5. and 3. 15.

I hope and truſt that your Honour may truly be ranked in this latter Form, that as many ancient deeds (written before the Reign of King Henry the third) are commonly without any date. Grace in like manner, will ariſe ſo early in your heart, (advantaged by your Godly Birth, and Breeding) that you ſhall not remember the beginning thereof.

However to make ſure work, it will be ſafeſt to examine your ſelf, (when arived at Age) what eminent acceſsions, ceſsions, and additions of Grace, you can remember, with the Place and Time, when the ſame were effectually wrought in your Soul, and what boſome-ſin you have conquered. Eſpecially take notice of your ſolemn Reconciling to God after Repentance for ſome ſin committed.

David no doubt in ſome ſort may be ſaid to be born good, God being his hope when in the * Womb, when on the Breaſts of his Mother, † Truſting in him, and * Taught by him, from his Youth. Now though probably he could not remember his firſt, and general Converſion, he could recount his Reconverſion, after his foul Offences of Adulterie and Murder, as by his Penitential Pſalm doth plainly appear.

* Pſal. 22. 10.
* Pſal. 71. 5.
* Pſal. 71. 17.

Otherwiſe ſuch who boaſt themſelves Converted before Memorie, (by the priviledg of their pious Infancy) if they can recover no Memorials of their Repentance after relaps, and produce no time, nor tokens thereof, are ſo far from being good from their Cradle, it is rather ſuſpicious they will be bad to their Coffin, if not labouring for a better ſpiritual eſtate.

And now my Lord let me recommend to your Childhood the Reading of the Holy Scriptures, as the * Apoſtle termeth them, holy in the fountain, flowing from the holy Spirit inditing them, holy in the Conduit-pipe, derived through * holy men penning them, holy in the Liquor,

* 2 Tim. 3. 15.
2 Peter 1. 21.

Liquor, teaching, and directing to Holineſs, holy in the Ciſterne, working Sanctity in ſuch as worthily receive them, and making them wiſe unto Salvation.

Now next to the Study of the Scriptures, Hiſtory beſt becometh a Gentleman, Church-Hiſtory a Chriſtian, the Britiſh Hiſtory an Engliſhman; all which qualifications meeting eminently in your Honour, give me ſome comfortable aſſurance, that theſe my weak endeavours will not be unwelcome unto you; by peruſing whereof, ſome profit may probably accrew to your ſelf, and more honour will certainly redown to

The meaneſt and unworthieſt

THE CHVRCH-HISTORY OF BRITAINE.

CENT. XI.

Octo. 14.

1. WIlliam Duke of Normandy being thus arrived, soon conquered Harold with an army of Normans, as far beneath the English in Number as above them in temperance: For the English being revelling before, had in the morning their brains arrested, for the arrearages of the indigested fumes of the former night, and were no better then drunk [a] when they came to fight. But these things belong to the Historians of the State to relate; whilest it is proper to us to observe, that King William to testifie his gratitude to God, for the victory, founded in that place, Battel-Abby, endowing it with revenues, and large immunities. The [b] Abbot whereof (being a Baron of Parliament) carried a pardon in his presence, who casually coming to the place of Execution, had power to save any Malefactor. The Abbey-Church, was a place of safety for any Fellon or Murtherer, though such Popish sanctuaries themselves, if accused as unlawful, can finde no refuge in Scripture precepts, or presidents for their justification, seeing the very Horns of the Altar, by divine command, did push away those wilful offenders which fled unto them: and impunity being the greatest motive to impiety, made their Covent the Center of sinners. Here the Monks flourished in all affluence, as the Old world in the dayes of Noah, they ate, they drank, they bought, they sold, would I might add, they married wives and were given in marriage, (for want whereof they did worse) till in the dayes of King Henry the eight they were all drowned in the general Deluge of the Dissolution.

2. Now it was proper to the place of Stigand, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, to perform the Solemnities of King Williams Coronation; but he declined that imployment, pretending Williams unlawful title, and loath to pour the ſacred oyl on his Head, whoſe Hands had ſhed ſo much innocent bloud: The other accounting himſelf to have a better title to the Crown, by conqueſt, then the Arch-Biſhop had to his Miter by Simony, diſdained his ſervice, and accepted the Crown from the hands of Aldred, Arch-Biſhop of York; who firſt required an Oath of him, to defend the Church, miniſter juſtice, and (amongſt other things) to uſe Engliſh-men as favourably as Normans. Notwithſtanding which Oath, he made the Normans his Darlings, and the Engliſh his Drudges; inſomuch as many Engliſh Biſhops and Abbots unable to comport themſelves with his harſhneſs, and conceiving it more credit and ſafety, to go then to be driven away; fearing by degrees they ſhould all be quarrelled out of their places, unwillingly willing quitted their preferments, and fled into Scotland. Here King Malcolme Canmore (who had married Margaret Niece to Edward the Confeſſor) freely received them. He himſelf had formerly lived fourteen years in England; and now of a grateful Gueſt, became a bountiful Hoſt, and courteouſly harboured theſe Exiles. And as, at this time, England began to turn France, imitating the language, Garbe, and manners thereof; ſo Scotland began now to turn England: the Families tranſplanted thither, tranſporting the Engliſh cuſtomes, faſhions, and Civilities along with them.

They omitted Nec lucum, nec lacum, c nec locum, ſo accurate they were in the very fractions of the land: and therefore it may ſeem a miracle, that the Monks of Crowland ſhould finde a courteſie peculiar to themſelves, (belike out of veneration to their Covent) that their lands were rated nec ad ſpatium, nec ad d præſium, neither ſo much in quantity, nor ſo high in value as indeed they were worth. The Popes firſt uſurpation of the Crown of England.

f Sir John Davys in his Iriſh Report, caſe of Præmunire fol. 87, & 89.

5. A f learned lawyer hath obſerved, that the firſt encroachment of the Biſhop of Rome upon the liberties of the Crown of England, was made in the time of King William the Conqueror. For the Conqueror came in with the Popes Banner, and under it won the battle, which got him the Garland; and therefore the Pope preſumed he might boldly pluck ſome flowers from it, being partly gain'd by his countenance and Bleſſing. Indeed King William kindly entertained theſe Legats, ſent from Rome, ſo to ſweeten the rank ſavor of his coming in by the ſword, in the noſtrils of religious men, pretending what he had gotten by power, he would keep by a pious compliance with his Holineſs. But eſpecially he did ſerve the Pope to be ſerved by him; that ſo with more eaſe and leſs envie, he might ſuppreſs the Engliſh Clergie. But although this politick Prince was courteous in his complemental addreſſes to the See Apoſtolick, yet withall he was careſull of the main chance to keep the eſſentials of his Crown, as, amongſt others, by theſe four remarkable particulars may appear.

* Yet King William inveſted eccleſiaſtical perſons, g Annal. Eccl. Lichfield M. S. cited by Mr Selden in his notes on Eadmerus pag. 14.

6. Firſt he h retained the ancient cuſtom of the Saxon Kings, inveſting Biſhops and Abbots, by delivering them a Ring and a Staff, whereby without more ado, they were put into plenary poſſeſſion of the power and profit of their place. Yea, when Arch-Biſhop Lanfrank, one ſo prevalent, that he could perſwade King William to any thing, (provided that the King himſelf thought it it fitting) requested William to bestow on him the donation of the Abbey of Saint Augustine in Canterbury; the King refused, saying, that he would keep all pastoral h Staves in his own hand. Wiser herein then his successors, who parted with those Staves, wherewith they themselves were beaten afterward.

h Gervasius Doroberaensis M. S. cited ibid.

1078. 12. 7. Secondly being demanded to do Fealty for his Crown of England, to Gregory the seventh Pope of Rome, he returned an answer as followeth.

And refuseth to do Fealty to the Pope.

In English.

Excellentissimo i Sanctæ Ecclesiæ Pastori Gregorio, gratia Dei Anglorum rex, & dux Normannorum Willielmus salutem cum amicitia. Hubertus Legatus tuus Religiose Pater, ad me veniens ex tua parte me admonuit, quatenus tibi & successoribus tuis fidelitatem facerem, & de pecunia quam antecessores mei ad Romanam ecclesiam mitere solebant, melius cogitarem. Unum admisi, alterum non admisi. Fidelitatem facere nolui, nec volo, quia nec ego promisi, nec antecessores meos antecessoribus tuis, id fecisse comperio. Pecunia tribus fermè annis, in Galliis me agente, negligenter collecta est. Nunc vero, divina misericordia me in regnum meum reverso, quod collectum per præfatum Legatum mittitur; Et quod reliquum est per Legatos Lanfranci, Archiepiscopi fidelis nostri, cum opportunum fuerit, transmittetur. Orate pro nobis, & pro statu Regni nostri, quia antecessores vestros dileximus, & vos præ omnibus sincerè diligere & obedienter audire desideramus.

TO Gregory the most excellent Pastor of the holy Church, William by the grace of God, King of the English & Duke of the Normans, wisheth health, and desireth k his friendship. Religious Father, your Legat Hubert coming unto me, admonished me, in your behalf, in asmuch as I should do fealty to you, and your successors, and that I should take better care, for the payment of the money, which my predecessors were wont to send to the Church of Rome. One thing I have granted, the other I have not granted. Fealty I would not do, nor will I, because I neither promised it, neither do I finde that my predecessors ever did it to your predecessors. The money for almost three years when I was abroad in France, hath been but negligently collected. But now seeing by divine mercy, I am returned into my Kingdom, what is gathered is sent by the aforesaid Legat; and the arrears which remain, shall be sent by the messengers of Lanfrank, our faithful Arch-Bishop, in time convenient. Pray for us, and for the good state of our Kingdom, because we have loved your predecessors, and do desire sincerely to love, and obediently to hear you, above all others.

i MS codex epistolarum Lanfranci cited by Sr John Davys in his Irish reports of Præmunire fol. 89.

k Or remembreth his love to him.

It is strange on what pretence of right the Pope required this Fealty; was it because he sent King William a consecrated Banner, that under the colour thereof he endeavoured to display his power over all England, as if the King must do him homage, as a Banneret of his creation, or because he had lately humbled Henry the fourth, the German Emperour, he thought that all Kings in like manner, must be slaves unto him, the Pope being then in his Vertical height, and Dog-dayes of the heat of his Power? But wee need no further inquiry into the cause of his Ambition, when we read him to be Gregory the seventh, otherwise Hildebrand that most active of all that sate in that Chair. Surely he sent this his demand rather with an intent to spie then hope to speed therein, so to sound the depth of King William, whom if he found shallow, he knew how to proceed accordingly; or else he meant to leave this demand dormant in the Deck, for his successors to make advantage thereof; who would claim for due, whatsoever they challenged before. However so bold an asker never met with a more bold denier. Soon did King William finde his spirits, who formerly had not loſt but hid them for his private ends. England's Conqueror would not be Romes Vaſſal, and hee had Brain enough to deny, what the other had Brow to require, and yet in ſuch wary language, that he carried himſelf in a religious diſtance, yet politick parity with his Holineſs.

King William ordereth the power both of Pope and Arch-Biſhop in his own Dominion.

8. Thirdly, King William would in no wiſe ſuffer any one in his Dominion, to acknowledg the Biſhop of Rome for Apoſtolical without his [a] command, or to receive the Popes Letters, except firſt they had been ſhewed unto him. As for the Arch-Biſhop of CANTERBURY, Primate of England, though by his own authority he might congregate Councels of Biſhops, and ſit Preſident in them; yet the King permitted him to appoint, or prohibit nothing, but what was according to His own will and pleaſure, and what the King had [b] ordained before.

Barons not to be excommunicated without the Kings command.

9. Laſtly, King William ſuffered no Biſhop to excommunicate any of his Barons, or Officers, for adultery, inceſt, or any ſuch hainous crime, except by the Kings Command, firſt made acquainted with the ſame. Here the word Baron is not to be taken in that reſtrictive ſenſe, to which the modern acception hath confined it, onely for ſuch of the higher Nobility, which have place, and Votes in Parliament; but [c] generally for ſuch who by Tenure en chef, or in Capite (as they term it) held land immediately of the King. And an Engliſh [d] Poet (counted the Virgil of his age, and the Ennius in ours) expreſſeth as much in his Rythmes, which we here ſet down, with all the ruſt thereof, without rubbing it off, (remembring how one [e] John Throkmorton a Juſticer of Cheſhire, in Queen Elizabeth's dayes, for not exhibiting a judicial Concord, with all the defects of the ſame; but ſupplying, or filling up what was worn out of the Authentical Original, was fined for being over officious) and therefore take them with their faults, and all, as followeth.

And a grave [f] Author gives a good reaſon, why the King muſt be inform'd before any of his Barons be excommunicated, leſt otherwiſe (ſaith he) the King not being certified thereof, ſhould out of ignorance unawares, communicate with perſons excommunicated, when ſuch Officers of His, ſhould come to kiſs His hand, be called to his Councel, or come to perform any perſonal attendance about Him. Hitherto we have ſeen how careful the Conqueror was, in preſerving His own right in Church-matters. We will conclude all with the Syllogiſme, which the [g] Oracle of the Common-Law frameth in this manner, g L. Cooks Reports, 8th part de Jure Regis Eccleſiaſtico, fol. 10.

It is agreed, that no man onely can make any appropriation of any Church, having cure of ſouls, being a thing Eccleſiaſtical, and to be made to ſome perſon Eccleſiaſtical, but he that hath Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction.

But William the firſt of himſelf, without any other (as King of England*) made appropriation of Churches, with cure to Eccleſiaſtical perſons, as by many inſtances may appear.*

Therefore it followeth, that He had Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction.

And ſo much concerning King William's policy, in doing juſtice to His own power. Proceed we now to His bounty, confirming old, and conferring new favors upon the Church and Clergie.

10. Firſt,

Anno Regis Gul. Conq. | Anno Dom. 1067

10. First, whereas before his time the Sheriff and Bishop joyntly kept their Courts together, (especially at the two solemn times, about Easter and Michaelmas) King William, in favour of the Clergie, assigned the Bishops, an [a] entire jurisdiction by themselves, wherein they should have cognizance of all causes, relating to Religion. I say relating to Religion, a latitude of a cheverel extension, adequate almost to the minde of him that will stretch it out, and few Ecclesiastical Judges would lose, what might be got by measuring. Now formerly, whilest the power of Sheriff, and Bishop went hand in hand together in the same Court, neither could much outstrip other: but but since they were severed, the Spiritual power far outwent its old mate, improving his own, by impairing the Secular Courts; and henceforward the Canon-law took the firmer footing in England; Date we from hence the squint-eies of the Clergie, whose sight (single before) was hereafter divided with double looks betwixt two objects at once; the Pope and the King, (to put him first whom they eyed most) acting hereafter more by forrain, then domestick interest.

Bishops jurisdictions first severed from the Sheriffs.

[a] See this cleared by Mr Selden in his notes on Eadmerus, pag. 167.

11. A learned pen makes a just complaint, that [b] Courts which should distribute peace, do themselves practice duels, whilest it is counted the part of a resolute Judge to enlarge the priviledge of his Court. A grievance most visible in contest, betwixt the Common, and the Canon Law; which, as if they were stars of so different an Horizon, that the elevation of the one necessitated the depression of the other, lie at catch, and wait advantages one against another. So that, whilest both might continue in a convenient and healthful habitude, if such envious corrivalitie were deposed, now alternately those Courts swell to a tympany, or waste to a consumption, as their Judges finde themselves, more, or less strength'ned with power, or befriended with favour. A mischief not to be remedied, till, either that mutual consent, or a predominant power to both, impartially state their jurisdictions, rightly seting down the land-marks thereof, and binding their proceedings not to exceed their bounds, which would both advance learning, and expedite the execution of Justice.

The contest betwixt Common and Canon Law, how onely to be reconciled.

[b] Lord Bacon in his advancement of Learning, pag. 463. Aphorisme 96.

12. To return to King William: As He conferred power on, so he confirmed profit to the Clergie. Witness his [c] Charter, granting them thorow-out England, tythes of calves, colts, lambs, milk, butter, cheese, woods, meadows, mills, &c. Which Charter is concluded ('tis the strong hem keeps all the cloth from raveling out) Qui decimam detinuerit, per justitiam Episcopi, & Regis (si necesse fuerit) ad redditionem [d] arguatur: who shall detain his tythes, by the power of the Bishop, and King (if need be) let him be argued into the payment thereof. And Kings arguments, we know, are unanswerable, as ab authoritate, carrying power and penalties with them. This Charter might seem to give the tenth loaf, of all the bread in the land, into the hands of the English Clergie. But the municipal laws, which were afterwards made, did so chip and pare this loaf, with their Modus decimandi, that in many places (Vicaridges especially) a small shiver of bread fals to the share of the Minister, not enough for his necessary maintenance.

King William his Charter to the Clergie.

[c] See it at large in Mr Selden of tythes, cap. 8. pag. 229.

[d] Others read it adigatur, Let him be compelled.

13. And here, to make a short, but needful digression, I finde in eminent Writers, two contrary characters of King William. Some make him an arrand Tyrant, ruling onely by the Magna Charta of his own will, oppressing all English without cause, or measure. No author need to be alledged for the avouching thereof, the thing being author for it self, being so notoriously known, and generally believed. Others make him to quit his title by Conquest, and hold the Crown, partly by Bequest from King Edward the Confessor, whose good laws he is said to confirm (Leges bonæ Regis Edvardi quas Gulielmus bastardus postea [e] confirmavit) and partly by compact with his people. Yea, the Chronicles of Lichfield make him to call a Parliament in effect; I mean, a Meeting of his Clergie and Nobility in a great Councel; where, as if he had turn'd perfect English-man, he conformed his practice to their ancient constitutions.

Two contrary characters of King William.

14. Should

Our endeavours to compass the difference.

14. Should I interpose between these opposite parties, to reconcile them; probably the blows from both sides would fall heavy on my charitable indiscretion. Yet thus far I will be bold to say, such confirmation of King Edward's law (if made by King William) probably was rather oral and verbal, then real and effectual. But if real, certainly it was not general, but limited to some particular place, as the Province of Kent, the English land of Goshen, which alone enjoyed the light of liberty, though rather gotten by them, then given unto them. But if any will contend, that this confirmation was general, they must confess it done in the later end of his Reign. King William, when yong, lov'd honor; when old, ease: when yong, to conquer; when old, to enjoy. Age will make all to stoop, as here it bowed him to a better compliance with his people. However, this his confirmation of King Edward's Laws, was not such as either gave general content to, or begat assured confidence in the English: perchance, because but a personal act, and but partially done, and no whit obligatory of his posterity. This made the English press so importunately (though in vain) to William Rufus, the King's son, and successor, for a re-confirmation of King Edward's Laws, which had been needless (as being the same with actum agere, or rather datum petere) had the former grant from King William his father been conceived sufficient for their security.

Anno Dom. 1067. Anno Regis Gul. Conq.

King William his bounty to Battle-Abby.

15. As for King William's particular bounty to Battle-Abby in Sussex, (which he founded) it bare better proportion to the dignity of the giver, then to the deserts of the receivers. For (besides those priviledges formerly [a] mentioned) he gave it all the land within a league of the site thereof. He ordered that no forreiner should be obtruded on their Abbey, but in every vacancy, one of their own Covent should be elected Abbot thereof; except (which heavens forbid) no fit person should be found therein for that preferment. Nor should the Abbot be forced to appear at any Synod, or meeting, except pleased of himself so to do. These, and many moe immunities he confirmed to that foundation, in such an imperious stile, as if therewith he meant to bluster all future Princes (and King Henry the eighth among the rest) into a perfect obedience unto his commands. Especially with that clause in his Charter, Nullus Successorum meorum violare præsumat. But dead King's Charters, though they have tongues to threaten, yet have no teeth to bite, especially when meeting with an equal after-power to rescind them.

15. 1081.

a In the first paragr. of this book.

His hard dealing with the Students at Oxford.

16. The more the pitty, that such drones, lazy Abby-lubbers went away with the honey, whilest the industrious Bees were almost starved. I mean, the Scholars of Oxford. For, at the coming in of the Conqueror, the Students in University-College (formerly founded by King Alfred) were maintained by pensions, yearly paid them out of the King's Exchequer: which provision was then conceived, both most honourable, as immediately depending on the Crown, and less troublesome, issuing out in ready coine, free from vexatious suits, casualties of Tenants, and other incumbrances. But now King William, who loved that the tide of wealth should flow into, but not ebb out of his coffers, detained, and denied their [b] exhibitions. Yea, the King pick'd a quarrel with them, because they sought to preserve, and propagate the English tongue, which the King designed to suppress, and to reduce all to the French Language. And yet the French speech was so far from final prevailing in this Kingdom, that it was fain at last to come to a composition with the English tongue, mixed together, as they remain at this day. Save that in termes of Law, Venarie, and Blazon, the French seemeth soly to command. The Scholars, thus deprived of their pensions, liv'd on the charity of [c] such as lov'd the continuance of their native tongue. Their Latin was then maintained by their English: though surely it was no small disturbance to their studies, meerly to depend for their subsistence, on the arbitrary alms of others.

17. Pass

Anno Regis Gul. Conq. | Anno Dom. 1067

17. Pass we now from King William unto Lanckfranck Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, next the King, then the most considerable person in our Ecclesiastical History. To Rome he went with Thomas, elect of York, and Remigius of Lincoln, all three for confirmation from the Pope in their preferment. Pope Alexander treated Lanckfranck so civilly, that a stranger, if beholding the passages betwixt them, haply might have mistook Lanckfranck for the Pope, and the Pope for the Petitioner. His Highness honoured him as his Master, cujus studio sumus in illis quæ scimus imbuti; by whose care (said he) we have been instructed in those things whereof we have knowledg.

Lanckfranck most kindley treated by the Pope.

18. Then Lanckfranck charged Thomas in the presence of the Pope, as canonically uncapable of that Arch-Bishoprick, because the son of a Priest. And yet by Lanckfrancks leave, no Canon can be produced then in force, to debar Priests sons from preferment, though some few years after in the Councel of Clermont such a prohibition was made. And therefore [a] Eadmerus, speaking of Lanckfranck, calumniatus est Thomam coram Papâ, in the proper acception of his words, speaks more truth then he was aware of, or probably did intend. But Lanckfranck, being a Privado to the Popes projects, and as well to the intentions, as the actions of the Church of Rome; might by a Prolepsis antedate this objection against Thomas, using it for the present as a rub to retard him, which some years after was constituted a legal obstacle, to exclude any Priests son from promotion. But, even when that Canon some years after was made, the Pope was not so cruel, as thereby fully, and finally to exclude all Priests sons from Church dignity, but onely to shut them out for a time, that they might stand at the door and knock, (I mean with the chink of their money) and at last bee let in when they had paid dear for a dispensation.

His charge against Thomas, elect of York.

19. Lanckfranck likewise charged Remigius, elect of Lincoln, as irregular, because guilty of Simony. Yet he did not tax him with a penny of money, either paid or contracted for, onely charged him that officio [b] emerat, by service, Simony he had purchased the place of King William; so that his officiousness to comply with the Kings pleasure, had made him injurious, and vexatious unto the people. Here all things were referred to Lanckfrancks own arbitration; whom the Pope, of an accuser made a Judg; so far as either to admit or exclude the aforesaid Prelates; affirming, that if any unworthiness crept into English preferment, he it charged on Lanckfranck his account, whom he made sole judg of mens merits to any promotion.

20. But all is well, that ends well; and so did this contest. Lanckfranck, having first given them a taste of his power, did afterwards give them a cast of his pitty, and favourably accepted them both into their places. Hence they all post homewards, where we leave Lanckfranck safely arrived, and soundly employed in variety of business.

Lanckfranck his return and imployment.

1. In asserting the superiority of his See above York.
2. In defending his Tenants, in what Dioces soever, from the visitations of their respective Bishops, which gave the first original to Peculiars.
3. In repairing his Church of Canterbury, lately much defaced with fire.
4. In casting out Secular Priests, and substituting Monks in their room.
5. Lastly, in recovering lands long detained from his See.

Nor was he affrighted with the heighth and greatness of Odo, Bishop of Bayeux (though half-brother to King William, and Earl of Kent) but wrestled a fair fall with him, in a legal trial, and cast him flat on his back, regaining many Lordships, which Odo had most unjustly invaded. Such as desire more of Lanckfranck his character, let them consult Eadmerus, a Monk of Canterbury, and and therefore prodigal in Lanckfrancks praise, an Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and great promoter of monastical life. Indeed there was a design, driven on by Walkeline, Bishop of Winchester (who had privately wrought the King to abet it) to reinduce Secular Priests into Monks places, till Lanckfranck, getting notice, defeated the plot; procuring, that all such Monks, whom he had first fastened in their Covents, were afterwards riveted therein by Papal authority.

Bishops Sees removed from villages to cities.

21. About this time a constitution was made, that Bishops should remove their Sees, from petty towns to populous places. This reason being rendred for their removal, Ne vilescerent Episcopalis dignitas, by their long living in so little villages. Such Bishops Churches could not properly be called Cathedrals, who sate not upon chairs, but low stools, so inconsiderably small were some places of their residences. A fair candle-stick, advantagiously set, in some sense may be said to give light to the candle it self; and Episcopal lustre will be the brighter, if placed in eminent Cities. Besides, Bishops having now gotten Canon-Law, and distinct Courts by themselves, much people repaired unto their Consistories, which conveniently could not be accommodated in little villages, but required bigger places for their better entertainment. In order to this command, the Bishop of Dorchester, near Oxford, removed to Lincolne; as somewhat before, Selsey was translated to Chichester; and Sherborne to Sarisbury; and, not long after, Thetford to Norwich. Now, as these Cities, to which they removed, being great before, grew greater afterwards: so those places which they left, Dorchester (and Selsey especially) decayed to contemptible villages, it faring with places, as with persons; the rich grow richer still, and the meaner are daily diminished, Wolstans simplicity saveth his Bishoprick.

22. As these Bishops accounted themselves well busied, in removing their Bishopricks: so some, I am sure, were ill imployed in endeavouring to remove a good Bishop, I mean Wolstan, from his Church of Worcester. As the Poets faign of Janus, that he had two faces, because living before, and after the flood: so this Wolstan may be charactered accordingly, made Bishop before, but continuing his place long after the Norman inundation. But, in what sense soever he may be said to have two faces, he had but one heart, and that a single and sincere one to God, and all goodness; yet his adversaries heaved at him, to cast him out of his Bishoprick (because an Englishman of the old stamp) but he sate safe, right-poised therein, with his own gravity and integrity. And, being urged to resign his staff and ring, (ensignes of his Episcopacy) he refused to surrender them to any man alive, but willingly offered them up at the Tomb of Edward the Confessor, from whom he received them. This his gratitude to his dead Patron, and candid simplicity in neglecting the pomp of his place, procured him much favour, and occasioned his peaceable confirmation in his Bishoprick.

The original of Secundum usum Sarum.

23. At this time several Liturgies were used in England, which caused confusion, and much disturbed mens devotions. Yea, which was worse, a brawle, yea, a battel happ'ned betwixt the English Monks of Glassenbury, and Thurstan, their Norman Abbot, in their very Church, obtruding a Service upon them, which they dislik'd. Unfit persons to fight (being by their profession men of peace) and unfitter the place for a quarrel. * Have ye not houses to eat and drink in? saith S^t Paul to the Corinthians, or despise ye the Church of God? Was there no other room in their Covent, for them to fall out, and fight in, but their Church alone? Here was an Holy war indeed, when Church-forms, candle-sticks, and Crucifixes, were used for shields, by the Monks, against the Abbot's armed-men, brought in against them. Nor was Holy-water onely, but much bloud spilled in the place; eight Monks being wounded, and * two slain (or if you will sacrificed) near the steps of the High Altar. But this accident, ill in it self, was then conceived good in the event thereof, because occasioning a settlement, and uniformity of Liturgie all over England. For hereupon Osmund, Bishop of Salisbury, devised that Ordinary, or form of Service, which hereafter was observed in the whole Realm: his Churches practice being a precedent, and the devotion therein a direction to all others. Hence forward the most ignorant Parish-Priest in England (though having no more Latin in all his treasury) yet understood the meaning of, Secundum usum Sarum, that all Service must be ordered, According to the course and custome of Salisbury Church.

24. I finde no Jews in England (no deviation I hope from Church-History, to touch at the Synagogue) before the Reign of the Conqueror, who [a] brought many from Roan in Normandy, and setled them in London, Norwich, Cambridge, Northampton, &c. In what capacity these Jews came over, I finde not; perchance as plunderers, to buy such oppressed English mens goods, which Christians would not meddle with. Sufficeth it us to know, that an invasion by Conquest (such as King William then made) is like an Inn entertaining all adventurers; and it may be these Jewish bankers assisted the Conquerour with their coin. These Jews (though forbidden to buy land in England) grew rich by usury (their consciences being so wide, that they were none at all) so that in the barest pasture (in which a Christian would starve) a Jew would grow fat, hee bites so close unto the ground. And ever bow down their backs, is part of Gods curse upon the Jews. And crook-back'd men, as they eye the earth, the center of wealth; so they quickly see (what straight persons pass by) and easily stoop to take up that they finde thereon; and therefore no wonder, if the Jewish nation, whose souls are bowed down with covetousness, quickly wax wealthy therewith. King William favoured them very much; and Rufus, his Son, much more; especially, if that speech reported of him be true, that he should swear by S^t Luke's face (his common oath) if [b] the Jews could overcom the Christians, he himself would become one of their sect.

25. Now was the time come of King Williams death, ending his dayes in Normandy. But see the unhappiness of all humane felicity; for, his breath, and his servants forsook him both together; the later leaving him, as if his body should bury it self. How many hundreds held land of him in Knights-service? whereas now, neither Knight, nor Esquire to attend him. At last, with much ado, his corps are brought in mean manner to be interred in Cane. As they were prepared for the earth, a private person forbids the burial, till satisfaction was made unto him, because the King had violently taken from him that ground, on which that Church was erected. Doth not Solomon say true, A living dog is better then a dead lion; when such a little curr durst snarle at the corps of a King, and a Conqueror? At last the Monks of Cane made a composition, and the body was buried. And, as it was long before this Kings corps could get peaceable possession of a grave: so since by a firm ejection he hath been outed of the same. When French souldiers [c] Anno Domini 1562. (amongst whom some English were mingled) under Chattillion conducting the remnant of those which escaped in the battel of Dreux, took the City of Cane, in his way (out of pretence, forsooth, to seek for some treasure supposed to be hid in his Tomb) most barbarously and cowardly brake up his coffin, and cast his bones out of the same.

Sept. 9. | 1087

26. William the Conquerour left three sons, Robert, William, and Henry: and, because hereditary sir-names were not yet fixed in families, they were thus denominated, and distinguished;

The three sons of the Conqueror, how denominated.

1. The eldest from his goods of fortune (to which cloaths are reduced) Robert Curthose, from the short hose he wore; not onely for fancy, but sometime for need, cutting his coat according to his cloath: his means, all his life long, being scant and necessitous.
2. The second from the goods of his body, viz. a ruddy complexion, William Rufus, or, Red. But, whether a lovely, and amiable; or ireful, and cholerick Red, the Reader on perusal of his life, is best able to decide. Anno Dom. 1087. Anno Regis Rul. 1.

3. The third from the goods of his minde, and his rich abilities of learning, Henry Beauclerke, or, the good scholar.

The middlemost of these, William Rufus, presuming on his brother Roberts absence in Normandy, and pretending his Father got the Crown by Conquest, which by will he bequeathed unto him (his eldest brother being then under a cloud of his Fathers displeasure) adventured to possess himself of the Kingdom.

King William Rufus crowned.

27. On the Twentie sixth of September, Lanckfranck, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, with good Wolstan, Bishop of Worcester, assisting him, Crowned Rufus King of England, though but his Fathers second son. And indeed, the known policy of the former, and the reputed piety of the latter, were the best supporters of his title. Jacob, we know (acted with a prophetical spirit) guiding his [a] hands wittingly, laid his right on Ephraim the yonger, and his left on Manasseth the elder brother: but, what warrant these Bishops had to invert, and transpose natures method, by preferring the yonger brother, before the elder, was best known to themselves. Under Lanckfranck he had his education, who [b] made him a Knight, though it had been more proper for his Tutors profession, yea, and more for his credit, and his Pupils profit, if he (as the instrument) had made him a good Christian.

[b] Mat. Paris pag. 14.

His covetousness and inconstancy.

28. He began very bountifully, but on another mans cost; not as a Donor, but a Dealer thereof, and Executor of his Fathers Will. To some Churches he gave [c] ten mark, to others six, to every country village five shillings, besides an hundred pound to every County, to be distributed among the poor. But afterward he proved most parcimonious, though no man more prodigal of never performed promises. Indeed Rehoboam, though simple, was honest, speaking to his Subjects, though foolishly, yet truly according to his intent, that his [d] finger should be heavier then his fathers loins: Whereas Rufus was false in his proceedings, who, on the imminence of any danger or distress (principally to secure himself against the claim of his brother Robert) instantly to oblige the English, promised them the releasing of their taxes, and the restoring of the English Laws: but, on the sinking of the present danger, his performance sunk accordingly; no letter of the English Laws restored, or more mention thereof, till the returning of the like State-storme, occasioned the reviving of his promise; and alternately, the clearing up of the one, deaded the performance of the other. 1088 Sept. 2.

His enriching himself by Church-livings.

29. This year died Lanckfranck, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury: after whose death, the King seised the profits of that See, into his own hand, and kept the Church vacant for some years; knowing, the emptiness of Bishopricks caused the fulness of his coffers. Thus Arch-Bishop Rufus, Bishop Rufus, Abbot Rufus (for so may he be called, as well as King Rufus; keeping at the same time the Arch-Bishoprick of Canterbury, the Bishopricks of Winchester, and Durham, and thirteen Abbies in his hand) brought a mass of money into his Exchequer. All places which he parted with, was upon present payment. Simon [e] Magus with his hands ful of money, would carry any thing from Simon Peter, with his [f] Silver and gold have I none. Yea, John Bishop of Wells, could not remove his seat to Bath, nisi [g] alto unguento manibus Regis delibatis, unless he had moist'ned the Kings hands with white ointment; though a less proportion, of a yellow colour, would have been more soveraign to the same use. And picking a quarrel with Remigius, Bishop of Lincolne, about the founding of his Cathedral, he forced him to buy his peace, at the price of a thousand marks. 1089. 3.

30. But

Anno Regis Gul. Ruf. 1. Anno Dom. 1093.

30. But in the mid'st of his mirth, King Rufus, coming to Gloceſter, fell deſperately ſick, and began to bethink himſelf of his ill-led life. As all aches, and wounds prick, and pain moſt the nearer it draweth to night; ſo, a guilty conſcience is moſt active to torment men, the nearer they conceive themſelves approaching to their death. Hereupon he reſolveth to reſtore all ill-gotten goods, releaſe all perſons unjuſtly impriſoned, and ſupply all empty places with able Paſtors. In purſuance hereof, he made Anſelme (the Abbot of Beck in Normandy) one of eminent learning, and holineſs of life, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury; which place he was hardly perſwaded, with much importunity, to accept. The firſt eminent act, of his Archiepiſcopal office, which we finde, was, when preaching at the Court on Aſh-wedneſday, he denied [a] Aſhes and Abſolution to all thoſe Courtiers, who affected effeminateneſs in their behaviour; eſpecially, in wearing their hair long, and kemb'd like women. A ſin, no doubt; for, whereas Tertullian calls the length of womens hair, Sarcinam ſuæ humilitatis, the ſame in men (ſo promiſcuouſly worn) may be called, Sarcina ſuæ ſuperbiæ.

His ſickneſs & reſolution of amendment.

[a] Eadmerus Novorum, lib. 1 pag. 23.

31. There paſſeth a memorable expreſſion of Anſelme's, cried up, and commended by ſome, for a maſter-piece of devotion; namely, That he had rather be in hell without ſin, then in heaven with ſin; which [b] others condemn as an unſavoury ſpeech, not according to Scripture-phraſe, as from one not ſufficiently acquainted with the juſtification of a Chriſtian man. Indeed, ſome high-flown expreſſions often knock at the door of blaſphemy, but yet not with any intention to enter in thereat; in which we are more to minde the ſenſe, then the ſound of the words. Amongſt thoſe may this of Anſelme's be ranked, uttered no doubt in a zealous deteſtation of ſin; yea, which charitably may be defended in the very letter thereof. For, Adam (we know) was ſome [c] while in Paradiſe (Heavens ſuburbs) after the eating of the forbidden-fruit, yet was ſenſible of no pleaſure therein, which made him hide himſelf, as proſecuted by his guilty conſcience: and ſome of the Ancients conceive, that Chriſt went locally to hell, yet no pain did ſeiſe on him there, ſeeing ſorrow can arreſt none, but at the ſuit of ſin going before.

Anſelmes expreſion queſtioned.

32. But, to leave Anſelme's words, let us come to his deeds. Who was ſcarce warm in his Arch-Biſhoprick, when the King ſent to him for a thouſand pound; which ſum, being ſo ſmall in it ſelf (Rufus uſually demanding more of leſs Biſhopricks) and that after his entrance on his See, free from any precontract, might have paſſed without the ſuſpicion of Simony, under the notion of a meer gratuity. However, Anſelme refuſed to pay it, becauſe he would avoid the appearance of evil. Others [d] ſay, that he freely ſent the King five hundred pounds, with this complement; that, though it was the firſt, it ſhould not be the laſt he would preſent to his Majeſty: which the King in choler refuſed, becauſe ſhort to the ſum he expected. Indeed, Rufus onely retained this, of all his Archiepiſcopal education (being bred under Lanckfranck, as is aforeſaid) that thereby he experimentally knew the ſweetneſs of Church-preferments; and in his bargain and ſale, ſet a rate upon them accordingly, being after his recovery from his ſickneſs, far more ſordid, and ſacrilegious then before.

Anſelme refuſeth to ſend King Rufus 1000. l.

33. Amongſt the many Simoniacal Prelates that ſwarmed in the land, Herbert Biſhop of Thetford, muſt not be forgottten; nick-named (or ſirnamed ſhall I ſay?) Loſeng, that is, the Flatterer; our old Engliſh word leaſing, for lying, retaines ſome affinity thereunto, and at this day we call an inſinuating fellow, a Glozing companion. Though the beſt perſwaſiveneſs of his flattery, conſiſted in down-right arguments of gold, and ſilver. For, guilty of the hereditary ſin of Simony (his father formerly having bought the Abby of Ramſey) he purchaſed the Biſhoprick of Thetford of the King. But afterward he poſted to Rome, confeſſed his fault, and was abſolved from the guilt thereof. Thus, as the leproſie of Naaman was waſhed away in Jordan, ſo that [e] his fleſh came again as the fleſh of a little childe, and he was clean: ſo this [e] 2 Kings 5. 14.

Biſhop was perſwaded, that all his Simoniacal corruption was cleanſed, in this his holy pilgrimage, conceiving himſelf henceforward to begin on a new account of integrity, eſpecially having, after his return, removed his Epiſcopal Seat from Thetford to Norwich, where he firſt founded the Cathedral.

Wolſtan Biſhop of Worceſter dieth.

34. Wolſtan, the venerable Biſhop of Worceſter, left this life. A Biſhop of the old edition, unacquainted with Lanckfranck's Italian additions; not faulty in his converſation, but Countrey, becauſe an Engliſhman borne. It was laid to his charge, that he could not ſpeak French (no eſſential quality in a Biſhop, as S^t Paul deſcribes him) ſure I am, he could ſpeak the language of Canaan, humble, holy, heavenly diſcourſe. A mortified man much macerating his body with faſting, and watching, if not overacting his part, and ſomewhat guilty of will-worſhip therein.

Duke Robert prepares for the Holy War.

35. About this time began the Holy War, which here we will not repeat, having formerly made an entire work thereof. Robert, Duke of Normandy, to fit himſelf for that voyage, ſold his Dukedom to King William Rufus for ten thouſand mark, ſay ſome; for ſix thouſand, ſix hundred, ſixty ſix pounds, that is, one mark leſs, ſay others; happly, abating the odd mark, to make up the rotundity of ſo facred, and myſtical a number. To pay this money, King Rufus laid a general, and grievous tax over all the Realm, extorting it with ſuch ſeverity, that the Monks were fain to ſell the Church-plate, and very Chalices, for diſcharging thereof. Wonder not, that the whole land ſhould bee impoveriſhed with the paying of ſo ſmall a ſum; for, a little wool is a great deal, when it muſt be taken from a new-ſhorne ſheep: ſo pilled and polled were all people before, with conſtant exactions. Such, whom his hard uſage forced beyond the ſeas, were recalled by his Proclamation; So that his heavy leavies would not ſuffer them to live here, and his hard Laws would not permit them to depart hence. And, when the Clergy complain'd unto him, to be eaſed of their burdens; I beſeech you (ſaid he) have ye not coffins of gold and ſilver for dead mens bones? intimating that the ſame treaſure might otherwiſe be better imployed.

Variance between the King and Anſelme.

36. The ſtreams of diſcord began now to ſwell high, betwixt the King and Arch-Biſhop Anſelme; flowing principally from this occaſion. At this time there were two Popes together, ſo that the Eagle with two heads, the Arms of the Empire, might now as properly have fitted the Papacy for the preſent. Of theſe, the one [Guibertus] I may call the Lay-Pope, becauſe made by Henry the Emperor; the other [Urban] the Clergy-Pope, choſen by the Conclave of Cardinals. Now, becauſe like unto like, King William ſided with the former, whileſt Anſelme as earneſtly adhered to Urban, in his affections, deſiring to receive his Pall from him, which the King refuſed to permit. Hereupon Anſelme appealed to his Pope, whereat King William was highly offended.

Their ſeveral pleadings, and preſent reconcilement.

37. But, becauſe none are able ſo emphatically to tell their ſtories, and plead their cauſes, as themſelves, take them in their own words;

The King Objected.

The cuſtome from my Father's time, hath been in England, that no perſon ſhould appeal to the Pope, without the Kings licenſe. He that breaketh the cuſtoms of my Realm, violateth the power, and Crown of my Kingdom. He that violateth, and taketh away my Crown, is a Traytor, and enemy againſt me.

Anſelme Anſwered.

The Lord hath diſcuſſed this queſtion. Give unto Ceſar the things that are Ceſars, and unto God the things that are Gods. In ſuch things as belong to the terrene dignities of temporal Princes, I will pay my obedience; but Chriſt ſaid, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, &c. Whoſe Vicar he ought to obey in ſpiritual matters, and the fetching of his Pall was of that nature.

At

Anno Regis Gul. Ruf. | Anno Dom. 1095

At laſt an expedient was found out, that Anſelme ſhould not want his Pall, nor fetch it himſelf from Rome, being by the King's conſent brought to him by Gualter, Pope Urban's Legate (whom the King at laſt was fain to acknowledg) and ſo all things for the preſent reconciled.

38. But the wound betwixt them was rather skinned over, then perfectly healed; and afterwards brake out again, the King taking occaſion of diſpleaſure at Anſelmes backwardneſs to aſſiſt him, in his expedition into Wales. Whereupon Anſelme deſired a ſecond journey to Rome, there to bemoan, and probably, to relieve himſelf by complaint to the Pope. But the King ſtopt his voyage; affirming, that Anſelme had led ſo pious a life, he need crave no abſolution at Rome; and was ſo well ſtored with learning, that he needed not to borrow any counſel there. Yea, ſaid the King, Urban had rather give place to the wiſdom of Anſelme, then Anſelme have need of Urban. In fine, after much conteſting, Anſelme ſecretly ſtole out of the Realm, and the King ſeized all his goods, and lands into his own coffers. Three years was he in exile, ſomtimes at Lions, ſometimes at Rome; welcome whereſoever he came, and very ſerviceable to the Church by his pious living, painfull preaching, learned writing, and ſolid diſputing, eſpecially in the general Councel of Bar, where he was very uſeful in confuting, and condemning the errours of the Greek-Church, about the Proceſſion of the Holy Spirit.

They diſagree again.

14. Ang. 2. | 1100

39. King Rufus was a hunting in New-Foreſt, which was made by King William, his Father; not ſo much out of pleaſure, or love of the game; as policy to clear, and ſecure to himſelf, a fair and large landing-place, for his forces out of Normandy, if occaſion did require. Here then was a great devaſtation of Towns, and Temples; the place being turned into a wilderneſs for Men, to make a Paradiſe for Deer. God ſeemed diſpleaſed hereat, for (amongſt other Tragedies of the Conquerors family, acted in this place) Rufus was here ſlain, by the glancing of an arrow ſhot by S^r Walter Tirrel. An unhappy name to the Kings of England; this man caſually, and another wilfully (S^r James Tirrel employed in the murthering of King Edward the fifth) having their hands in royal bloud. Now it is ſeaſonably remembred, that ſome yeers ſince, this King William had a deſperate diſeaſe, whereof he made but bad uſe, after his recovery; and therefore now, Divine Juſtice would not the ſecond time, ſend him the ſummons of a ſolemn viſitation by ſickneſs, but even ſurprized him by a ſudden, and unexpected death.

King Rufus his death.

40. Thus died King William Rufus, leaving no iſſue, and was buried (ſaith my [a] Author) at Wincheſter, multorum Procerum conventu, paucorum verò planctu; many Noble-men meeting, but few mourning at his funerals. Yet ſome, who grieved not for his death, grieved at the manner thereof; and of all mourners Anſelme, though in exile in France, expreſſed moſt cordial ſorrow at the news of his death. A valiant and proſperous Prince, but condemn'd by Hiſtorians for covetouſneſs, cruelty, and wantonneſs, though no woman by name is mentioned for his Concubine; probably, becauſe thrifty in his luſt, with mean, and obſcure perſons. But, let it be taken into ſerious conſideration, that no pen hath originally written the life of this King, but what was made by a Monkiſh pen-knife; and no wonder, if his picture ſeem bad, which was drawn by his enemy. And he may be ſuppoſed to fare the worſe, for his oppoſition to the Romiſh uſurpation; having this good quality, to ſuffer none but himſelf, to abuſe his Subjects, ſtoutly reſiſting all payments of the Popes impoſing. Yea, (as great an enemy as he was conceiv'd to the Church) he gave to the Monks called De Charitate, the great new Church of S^t Saviours in Bermondſey, with the Manor thereof, as alſo of Charlton in Kent.

His burial, and character. [a] John Brompton, pag. 997.

41. Henry Beauclarke, his brother, ſucceeded him in the Throne, one that croſſed the common Proverb, The greateſt Clerks are not the wiſeſt men, being one of the moſt profoundeſt Scholars, and moſt politick Princes in his generation. He was Crowned about four dayes after his brothers death.

Henry the firſt ſucceedeth Rufus, and is crowned.

death. At that time, the preſent providing of good ſwords, was accounted more eſſential to a Kings Coronation, then the long preparing of gay clothes. Such preparatory pomp as was uſed in after-ages at this Ceremony, was now conceived, not onely uſeleſs, but dangerous, ſpeed being ſafeſt to ſupply the vacancy of the Throne. To ingratiate himſelf to the Engliſh, he inſtantly, and actually repealed (for his brother William had put all the Land out of love, and liking of fair promiſes) the cruel Norman Laws. Laws written in bloud, made more in favour of Deer, then of Men; more to manifeſt the power, and pleaſure of the impoſer, then for the good, and protection of the Subject; wherein, ſometimes, mens miſchances were puniſhed, for their miſdeeds. Yea, in a manner King Henry gave eyes to the blind in winter-nights; I mean, light to them who formerly lived (though in their own houſes) in uncomfortable darkneſs, after eight a clock; when heretofore the Curfeu-bell did ring the knell of all the fire, and candle-light in Engliſh families. But now theſe rigorous Edicts were totally repealed; the good, and gentle Laws of Edward the Confeſſor generally revived; the late Kings extorting Publicanes (whereof Ranulf Flambard, Biſhop of Durham, the principal) cloſely impriſoned; the Court-corruption, by the Kings command, ſtudiouſly reformed; adultery (then grown common) with the loſs of virility, ſeverely puniſhed; Anſelme from exile ſpeedily recalled; after his return, by the King heartily welcomed; by the Clergie, ſolemnly and ceremoniouſly received; he to his Church; his lands, and goods to him fully reſtored; Engliſh and Normans lovingly reconciled; all intereſts, and perſons ſeemingly pleaſed; Robert, the Kings elder brother (though abſent in the Holy-Land) yet ſcarcely miſſed; and ſo this Century, with the firſt year of King Henrie's reign, ſeaſonably concluded.

Hen. I. 2. 1101

I. GRave Anſelme Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, eſpouſed and married Maud (daughter of Malcolme King of the Scots, and S^t Margaret his wife) to Henry King of England. Shee had been a profeſſed Votary, and was preſſed by the importunity of her parents and friends, for Politick ends, to this marriage; inſomuch as in the bitterneſs of her ſoul, (able to appale the writer hereof, ſeeing his ink out-black'd with her expreſsion) ſhe devoted the fruit of her body to the Devil, becauſe they would not permit her to perform her promiſe of Virginity. Thus [a] Matthew Paris. But the Reader reſerveth his other ear for the relation of Eadmerus, reporting this ſtory after a different, yea contrary manner, as followeth.

The Helliſh imprecation of Maud when married to King Henry.

[a] Hiſt Aug. in Hen. 1. anno 1101.

2. The aforeſaid Maud, when a Girle, lived under the tuition and correction of Chriſtian her Aunt, and Abbeſs of Wilton, at what time the Norman ſouldiers conquering the Kingdom, did much deſtroy, and more endanger virgins by their violence. Chriſtian therefore to preſerve this her Neece, clapt clapt a black cloath on her head, in imitation of a Nuns vail, which she unwillingly ware in the presence of her Aunt, but in her absence off it went, from above her head, to under her heels, so that in despightful manner, she used to tread and trample upon it. Yea, if Malcolme her father, chanced to behold her, wearing that mock-vail, with rage he would rend it off, cursing the causers of it, and avowing, that he intended her no votary, but a wife to Count Alan. Besides, two grave Arch-Deacons, sent down to Wilton to enquire into the matter reported, that for ought they could learn from the Nuns there, this Maud was never solemnly entered into their order. Hereupon a Councel was called of the English Clergy, wherein some grave men attested of their own knowledg, that at the Norman conquest, to avoid the fury of the souldiery, many maids out of fear, not affection; for protection, not piety; made a Cloyster their refuge, not their choice; were Nuns in their own defence, running their heads, (but without their hearts) into a vail. And in this case it was resolved by learned Lanckfranck, that such virgins were bound, by an extraordinary obligation above other women which is in effect, that they must be chaste wives, though they need not be constant maids. These things alledg'd and prov'd, Anselme pronounced the Nunship of Maud of none effect, and solemnly married her to King Henry. However, some infer the unlawfulness of this match, from the unhappiness of their children, all their issue male coming to untimely deaths. But sad events may sometimes be improved by mens censures, further then they were intended by Gods Justice; and it is more wisdom, seriously to observe them to the instructing of our selves, then rigidly to apply them to the condemning of others. The rather, because Maud the Empress, their sole surviving childe, seemed by her happiness to make reparation for the infelicity of all the rest.

A grand Synod of the Clergy and Laytie with the Constitutions thereof.

3. Next year a more solemn Synod was summoned by Anselme, with the Kings consent, held at Westminster; whereat, besides Bishops, were present at Anselmes request, from the King, the chief Lay-Lords of the Land; and this Reason rendred. Forasmuch as that whatsoever should be determined by the Authority of the said Councel, might be ratified, and observed by the joynt care and solicitousness of both estates. But whether the Lords were present, as bare spectators and witnesses to attest the fair Transaction of matters, (which some will conceive too little) or whether they had a power to vote therein (which others will adjudg too much) is not clearly delivered. Here we insert the constitutions of this Synod. And let none say, that it is vain to look after the Cobwebs, when the besom of Reformation hath swept them away; seeing the knowledg of them conduce much to the understanding of that Age. 1102 3.

c Eadmerus Hist. Novorum lib. 3. pag. 67. & 68.

1. That the [a] Heresie of Symony be severely punished, for which several Abbots were then and there deposed.
2. That Bishops undertake not the Office of secular Pleas, wearing an habit beseeming Religious Persons, and not be like Lay-men in their Garments; and that alwayes, and every where, they have honest persons witnesses of their Conversation.
3. That no Arch-Deaconries be let out to farm.
4. That all Arch-Deacons be Deacons.
5. That no Arch-Deacon, Priest, Deacon, or * Canon marry a wife, or retain one being married unto him: and that every sub-Deacon, who is not a Canon, if he have married after his Profession made of Chastity, be bound by the same Rule.

Anno Regis Hen. 1 3. Anno Dom. 1102.

Here what a grave Author, almost of the same Age, saith of this Constitution. [a] Hoc quibusdam mundissimum visum est, quibusdam periculosum, nè dum munditias viribus majores Sacerdotes appeterent, in immunditias horribiles ad Christiani nominis summum dedecus inciderent. And as Jordan wanting a Vent or Influx, (like other Rivers) into the Ocean, loseth its Current at last in a filthy lake, or dead sea of its own making: So it was to be feared, that these men, now debarr'd that remedy for their weakness, which God, who best knew the Constitution of his own Creatures, hath Provided, setled themselves in some unclean ways, and most mortal filthiness occasion by this prohibition.

a Henricus Huntingdon Historiarum lib. 7. pag. 217.

6. That a Priest so long as he keeps unlawful Conversation with a Woman, (understand his own Wife) is not legal, nor rightly celebrateth the Mass; nor is his Mass to be heard if he celebrate it.
7. That none be admitted to the Order of Sub-Deacon, or upwards, without the profession of Chastity.
8. That the Sons of Priests be not made heirs to the Church of their Fathers.
9. That no Clerks be Provosts or Proctors of Secular matters, or JUDGES IN BLOUD.

This is the reason saith the Appendix to [b] Harpsfield (reporting it no approving of his judgment) why Bishops being arraigned for their Lives, are not to be tried by their Peers, but by a jury of ordinary men; because debarred by their Canons to be Judges of Lay-Peers in like cases, and therefore it was conceiv'd unfitting that they should receive that hondur, which they could not return.

10. That Priests should not go to Publick Drinkings, nec ad * pinnas bibant, nor drink at Pins.

* Hence probably the Proverb. He is in a merry Pin.

This was a Dutch trick (but now used in England) of Artificial Drunkenness, out of a Cup marked with certain Pins, and he accounted the Man, who could nick the Pin, drinking even unto it; whereas to go above or beneath it, was a forfeiture.

11. That the Garments of Clergie-men be of one colour, and their Shooes according to order.

18. That Abbots make no Knights, and that they eat and sleep in the same house with their Monks, except some necessity forbid.

It appeareth it was the Ancient Custom of Abbots in this Age to make Knights. Thus [c] Brando the Abbot of St Edmunds-bury, Knighted Heward his Nephew, having first confessed his sins, and received absolution. Indeed in those dayes mens mindes were so possessed, that they thought nothing well and fortunately done, but what came from Church-men. Whereupon he that was to be made a Knight, first offered his sword upon the Altar, and after the Gospel read, the Priest put the sword first hallowed, upon the Knights neck with his [d] Benedictum, *and so having heard Mass again, and received the Sacrament, he became a lawful Knight. WAR now was begun, no wonder if Church-men made Knights: And that Age conceived that a Knights Sword dipt in Holy water was well tempered, and became true metal indeed: why Abbots were now prohibited to confer this honor, the cause is not rendred; whether because it made KNIGHT-WOOD too common, or that this Priviledg was reserved only for higher Prelates, such as Bishops and Arch-Bishops were, or that it was an incroachment upon the Royal dignity, it being as proper for Kings to ordain Priests, as for Abbots to dub Knights. This is most sure, that notwithstanding this Canon, [a] King Henry the first, some years after granted, and King John confirmed to the Abbot of Reading, the power of Knighting persons, with some cautions of their behaviour therein.

25. That parties akin to the Seventh Generation be not coupled in marriage; and that persons so coupled remain not in Marriage; and if any be privy to this Incest, and not declare it, let him know himself to be guilty of the same crime.

This brought much Grist to the Popes Mill for Dispensations. As secular Princes used to stop travellers on common Bridges, or at the entrance of Gates, not with intent finally to forbid their going further, but to receive Tole or Custom for their passing by: So the Pope prohibited these degrees in marriage, not absolutely to hinder such matches, but to receive large summes of money for his leave; after whose faculties obtained, if such marriage were against the Law of God, men did sin not with less guiltiness, but more Expences.

28. That none presume hereafter (what hitherto men used in England) to sell Men like bruite Beasts.

This Constitution, as all others, which concerned the Subjects Civil right, found not general obedience in the Kingdom. For the proceedings of the Canon Law were never wholly received into practice in the Land; but so as made subject in whatsoever touched temporals, to secular Laws and national Customs. And the Laytie, at pleasure, limited Canons in this behalf. Nor were such sales of servants, being mens proper goods, so [a] weakned with this prohibition, but that long after they remained legal according to the Laws of the Land.

29. That the sin of Sodometry, both in Clergie and Laytie, should be punished with heavy Censures.

Remarkable that the same Synod which forbad Priests Marriage, found it needful to punish Sodometry, an Italian Vice, beginning now to be naturaliz'd in England. For those who endeavour to make the way to heaven narrower then God hath made it, by prohibiting what he permits, do in event make the way to hell wider, occasioning the committing of such sins, which God hath forbidden. We may further observe, that the plaister now applied to the rotten sore of Sodometry, was too gentle, too narrow, and too little time laid on. Too gentle; for whereas the sin is conceived to deserve death, it was onely slubber'd over, that the party convict of this wickedness, if in Orders was admitted to no higher honour, and deposed from what he had, till restored again on his repentance. Too narrow, if it be true what one observes, that [b] MONKS (as neither meerly Lay nor Priests) were not threatned with this Curse, where all was hidden in Cloysters. Lastly, too little time laid on; for whereas at first it was constituted, that such Excommunication of Sodomites convicted, should solemnly be renewed every Lords Day; this short-liv'd Canon did die in the birth thereof, and Anselme himself [c] postponi concessit, suffered it to be omitted, on pretence that it put beastly thoughts into many mens mindes, whose corruption abused the punishment of sin in the provocation thereof; whilest others conceive this relaxation indulged, in favour to some great offenders, who hardened in Conscience, but tender in Credit, could not endure to be so solemnly, publickly, and frequently grated with the shame of the sin they had committed.

c Eadmerus ut prius.

So much for the Constitutions of that Synod, wherein though Canons were provided for Priests, Cap a Pe, from the shavnig to the shoes, yet not a syllable of their instructing the people and preaching Gods word unto them. We must not forget, that men guilty of Simony in the first Canon, are not taken in the Vulgar acception, for such as were promoted to their places by money, but in a new coyned sence of that word; for those who were advanced to their Dignities by investiture from the King, which gave occasion to the long and hot Broil, happening betwixt King Henry, and Anselme, which now we come to relate.

4 | 1103 | 4. The King commanded him to Consecrate such Bishops, as he lately had invested; namely, William of Winchester, Roger of Hereford, &c. which Anselme refused, because flatly against the Canon newly made in the Councel of Rome, by Pope Urban, that any who had their entrance, by the Authority of temporal Princes should be admitted to Bishopricks. Hereupon the King enjoyned Gerard Arch-Bishop of York to Consecrate them; who out of opposition to Anselme his Competitour, was as officious to comply with the Anselme refuseth to consecrate the Kings Bishops.

King, as the other was backward, hoping thereby to hitch his Church a degree the higher, by help of his Royal Favour. Here happened an unexpected accident: For William, Bishop of Winchester, refused Consecration from the Arch-Bishop of York, and resigned his staff and ring, back again to the King, as illegally from him. This discomposed all the rest. For whereas more then the moity of Ecclesiastical persons in England, were all in the same condemnation, as invested by the King, the very multitude of offenders would have excused the offence, if loyal to their own cause. Whereas now this defection of the Bishop of Winchester, so broke the ranks, and maimed their entireness, that their cause thereby was cast by their own confession, and so a party raised among them against themselves.

Anno Dom. 1105. Anno Regni Hen. I. 4.

Anselme sent to Rome.

5. Soon after, the King was contented that Anselme should go to Rome, to know the Popes pleasure herein. But one, none of the Conclave, without a propherical spirit, might easily have foretold the resolution of his Holiness herein: never to part with power, wherein (how injuriously soever) though but pretendedly possessed. Anselme, for his complyance with the Pope herein, is forbidden to return into England, while the King seiseth on his temporalities.

The King parts with his investing of Bishops.

6. However, not long after, by mediation of friends, they are reconciled; the King disclaiming his right of Investitures, a weak and emerous act, of so wise and valiant a Prince; whose Predecessors before the Conquest held this power (though some time loosely) in their own hands; and his Predecessors since the Conquest grasp'd it fast in their fist, in defiance of such Popes as would finger it from them. Whereas now he let it go out of his hand, whilest his Successors in vain, though with a long arme, reach't after it to recover it. And now Anselme, who formerly refused, consecrated all the Bishops of vacant Sees; amongst whom, Roger of Sarisbury was a prime person, first preferred to the Kings notice, because he began prayers quickly, and ended them speedily; for which quality he was commended as fittest for a Chaplain in the Camp, and was not unwelcome to the Court on the same account. 1106. 7.

Anselme forbids Priests marriage.

7. Anselme having devested the King of investing Bishops (one of the fairest robes in his ward-robe) did soon after deprive the Clergie of one half of themselves. For, in a solemn Synod he forbad Priests Marriage; wherein, as charitably we believe, his intentions pious and commendable, and patiently behold his pretences, specious and plausible: so we can not but pronounce his performance for the present, injurious and culpable, and the effects thereof for the future pernicious, and damnable. And here we will a little enlarge our selves on this subject of so high concernment. 1107 8.

8. It is confessed on all sides, that there is no expres in Scripture to prohibit Priests Marrriage. [a] Thomas, and [b] Scotus commonly cross (as if reason enough for the later to deny, because the former affirmed it) do both (such the strength of truth) agree herein. Onely Ecclesiastical Constitutions forbid them Marriage. And, though many Popes tampered hereat, none effectually did drive the nail to the head, till Hildebrand, alias Gregory the seventh (the better man the better deed) finally interdicted Priests Marriage. However his Constitutions, though observed in Italy and France, were not generally obeyed in England; till Anselme at last forbad Married Priests to officiate, or any Lay-people, under pain of censure, to be present at their Church-service.

Grounded on a double error.

9. Herein he proceeded on two erroneous principles. One, that all men have, or may have (if using the means) the gift of Continencie. Wherein they do not distinguish betwixt,

1. Common gifts, which God bestoweth on all his servants, Jude v. 3. Common salvation.

c 1 Cor. 7. 7. 2. Proper gifts, thus the [c] Apostle, when he had wished all like himself

Anno Regis Anni 8. Anno Dom. 1107 himself (that is, able to contain) he immediately addeth, But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

His other false supposition is, That Marriage is either inconsistent with, or at least impeditive to the purity of Priestly profession.

10. The falsness whereof appeareth by the precedent of Henoch, in whom met the threefold capacity of King, Priest, and Prophet. Yet his Marriage remitted not the reins of his Princely power, hindered not the performance of his Sacerdotal function, rebated not the edg of his Prophetical spirit; for, [a] He walked with God, and begat sons and daughters. He made not a prayer the less for having a childe the more: and let us be but alike holy with Enoch, and let others be more holy with Anselme.

Paramount holiness in a married person.

a Gen. 5. 22.

11. Wherefore when the [b] Apostle saith, He that is married careth for the things which are of this world, how he may please his wife, therein he describeth not that height of God-pleasing, which Marriage ought, and in it self may, and by Enoch was improved; but expresseth such faults which through humane corruption too commonly come to pass. Which are vita mariti, non matrimonii; uxoris, non uxoratus, flowing neither from the essence, nor from the exercise of Marriage, but onely from the depraved use thereof, which by Gods assistance, and mans best endeavours, may be rectified and amended.

St Paul expounded.

b 1 Cor. 7. 33.

12. It is therefore falsly charged on Marriage, quâ Marriage, that it is an hinderance to Hospitality; starving the poor to feed a family. It is confessed it would break Marriage, if cæteris paribus, she should offer to vie bounty with Virginity; onely she may equal Virginity in cheerfulness of her giving, and in the discreet choise of fit objects, whereon to bestow it. Yet give me leave to say, in a married family there be commonly most mouthes, and where most mouthes, there probably most bread is eaten, and where most bread is eaten, there certainly most crums fall beneath the table, so that the poor are feasted by those fragments. If any rejoyn, that single folke bestow their almes, not by crums, but whole loaves; the worst I wish is, that poor people may finde the truth thereof. Nor doth the having of children quâ children make men covetous, seeing Solomon saw a man, [c] who had neither childe nor brother, yet his eye was not satisfied with riches. On the other side, I finde two in one and the same [d] Chapter, professing they had enough, viz. Esau and Jacob, both of them married, both of them parents of many children.

And marriage defended.

d Gen. 33. 9. 11.

13. And here well may we wonder at the partiality of the Papists, over-exalting Marriage in the Laity, to a Sacrament; and too much depressing the same in Priests, as no better then refined fornication. Yea, some have made Virginity the corn, and Marriage the cockle: which is a wonder that they should be of several kindes, seeing Virginity is but the fruit, and Marriage the root thereof. But, amongst all the foul mouthes belibelling Marriage, one rayling Rythmer, of Anselmes age, bore away the bell (drinking surely of Styx instead of Helicon) and I am confident my translation is good enough for his bald verses.

Because he did part with Christ in his heart, at his marriage-conjunction.

Nor is it of spight, that this I indite, but out of pure love, I protest.

Where did this rayling Monk ever read, that God hated the wives of Priests? And, did not the Church of Rome, at this time, come under the character of that defection, described by the [a] Apostle? That in the latter times some should depart from the faith, forbidding to marry, &c.

[a] 1 Tim. 4. 1.

An ill evasion.

14. These endeavour (as they are deeply concerned) to wipe off from themselves this badge of Antichrist, by pleading that,

1. They forbid Marriage to } no man.
2. They force Priesthood on }

Onely they require of those who freely will enter into the Priesthood, to vow virginity, and command such to part with their wives, who were formerly entered into Orders.

Well stopped up.

15. All which is alledged by them but in vain, seeing marriage may be forbidden, either directly, or consequentially. For the first, none, well in their wits, consulting their credit, did ever point-blank forbid marriage to all people. Such would be held as, hostes humani generis, enemies of man-kinde, in their destructive doctrines. Nor did any ever absolutely (as it followeth in the same text) command all to abstain from meats. This were the way to empty the world of men, as the simple forbidding of marriage would fill it with bastards. And, although some silly Hereticks, as Tatian, Marcion, and Manichem, are said absolutely to forbid marriage, yet they never mounted high, nor spread broad, nor lasted long. Surely some more considerable mark is the aim of the Apostles reproof, even the Church of Rome, who by an oblique line, and consequentially, prohibit marriage to the Priests, a most considerable proportion of men within the pale of the Church.

Marriage-Bed may be forborn for a time, not totally forbidden.

[b] Joel 2. 11.

16. Notwithstanding the premisses, it is fit that the embraces of marriage should on some occasion for a time be forborn, for the advance of Piety; first, when private dalliance is to yield to publick dolefulness. [b] Let the Bridegroom go out of his chamber, and the Bride out of her closet. For though by the Levitical Law, one might not be forced to fight in the first year of his marriage, yet might he on just occasion, be pressed to fast on the first day thereof. It is not said, Let the Bridegroom go out of his Bridegroom-ship, but onely out of his Chamber; and that also with intention to return, when the solemnity of sorrow is over-past. Secondly, when such absence is bewixt them mutually agreed on, [c] Defraud ye not one another, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give your selves to fasting and prayer, and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency. Here indeed is an Interdiction of the marriage Bed, but it is Voluntary, by mutual consent of the parties; and Temporary, onely durante eorum beneplacito, not as the Popish Prohibition, Impulsive, by the power of others, and perpetual, to continue during their lives.

But, grant them never so good, excess is a venemous string, in the most wholsome flesh, fish, and fowl, and it was too great a quantity caused his surfeit. I finde him generally commended for temperance in his diet; onely his palat (his servant in all other meats) was commonly his master in this dish. Anno Regis Hen. 1 36. Anno Dom. 1135.

28. This Maud, I may call, Maud the fourth; yea, England had no Queen of another name since the Conquest;

1. Maud the first, Wife to King William the Conqueror.	3. Maud the third, Wife to King Stephen.
2. Maud the second, (Daughter to Malcolme King of Scots) Wife to King Henry the first.	4. Maud the fourth, Daughter to King Henry the first, and in right Queen of England.

Maud the fourth.

This last Maud was first married to Henry the fourth, Emperor of Germany, and after his death was constantly called The Empress, by the courtesie of Christendom, though married to Earl Geffery, her second husband. To her, all the Clergie, and Nobility had sworn fealty, in her father's life time.

Dec. 25. 29. William, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, notwithstanding his oath to Maud, solemnly crowned Stephen, and in the same act, shewed himself perjured to his God, disloyal to his Princess, and ingrateful to his Patroness, by whose special favour he had been preferred. The rest of the Bishops, to their shame, followed his example; dealing with oaths, as sea-men with the points in the Compass, saying them forwards and backwards. Indeed covetousness and pride prompted this disloyalty unto them, hoping to obtain of an Usurper, what they despaired to get from a lawful King. For, their modestie (and that little enough) in asking, was all Stephens measure in giving; resolving with himself for the present, to grant what should please them, and at leasure to perform what should please himself. Let him now get but the stump of a Crown, and with wise watering thereof, it would sprout afterwards. Hence was it that he granted the Bishops liberty to build, and hold many Castles; freedom in forests; investiture from the Pope; with many other immunities, which hitherto the Clergy never obtained. All things thus seemingly setled, yet great was the difference of judgments in the English, concerning King Stephen, which afterwards discovered themselves in the variety of mens practices.

The perjury of the Clergy.

30. Some acted vigorously for Stephen, conceiving possession of a Crown createth a right unto it. Where shall private persons (unable of themselves to trace the intricacies of Princes titles) fix their loyalty more safely, then on him whom success tendereth unto them for their Soveraign? God doth not now (as anciently) visibly, or audibly discover himself; we must therefore now only look, and listen, to what he sheweth, and saith by his voice, in the success of things, whereby alone he expresseth his pleasure, what he owneth or disclaimeth. This their judgment was crossed by others, who distinguished betwixt Heavens permission, and consent; God sometimes suffering them to have power to compel, to whom he never gave authority to command.

Variety of peoples opinions.

31. But some urged, that Stephen was declared lawful King by popular consent, which, at this time, could alone forme a Legal right to any in this Island. For Maud, Stephen's corrival, in vain pretended succession, seeing the Crown, since the Conquest, never observed a regular, but an uncertain and desultory motion. Nor was it directed to go on by the straight line of primogeniture, which leapt over the Conquerors eldest, to his second Son: Then, taking a new rise, from the eldest still surviving, to Henry his third Son. Here no chain of succession could be pleaded, where no two links followed in order. But others answered, that such popular election of Stephen had been of validity, if the electors had been at liberty; whereas they being pre-ingaged to Maud by a former oath, could not again dispose of those their votes, which formerly they had passed away.

Pro and Con for King Stephen.

A fadtid party with their oppofers.

32. Others conceived that the ſtain of Stephen his uſurpation in getting the Crown, was afterward ſcoured clean out by his long (more then eighteen years) enjoying thereof. For, ſuppoſe Providence for a time may winke, and connive, yet it cannot be conceived in ſo long a ſlumber; yea, aſleep; yea, a lethargie, as to permit one peaceably ſo long to poſſeſs a Throne, except heaven had particularly deſigned him for the ſame. To this others anſwered, that Stephen all that time rather poſſeſſed, then enjoyed the Crown (alarum'd all his life long by Maud, and her Son) ſo that he had as little quiet in, as right to the Kingdom. But, grant his poſſeſſion thereof never ſo peaceable, what at firſt was foundered in the foundation, could not be made firm by any height of ſuperſtructure thereupon. An error by continuance of time can never become a truth, but the more inveterate error.

A third with their's.

33. A third ſort maintained, that Subjects Loyaltie is founded on their Soveraigns protection, ſo that both ſinke together. Seeing therefore Maud was unable to afford her people protection, her people were bound to no longer allegiance. But this poſition was diſproved by ſuch, who borrowing allegiance onely on conſcience, make protection but the encouragement, not the cauſe thereof. They diſtinguiſhed alſo betwixt a Princes wilful deſerting his people, and his inability to protect them; not through his own default, but the forcible prevailing of others. Thus the conjugal tie is onely diſſolved by the parties voluntary uncleanneſs, and not by his, or her adventitious impotency to render due benevolence.

A fourth with their's.

34. A fourth party avouched, that Maud (though not actually, and openly, yet) tacitly, and interpretatively releaſed the Engliſh from their allegiance unto her. For what Prince can be preſumed ſo tyrannical, as to tie up people to the ſtrict termes of Loyaltie unto him, when the ſame is apparently deſtructive unto them, and no whit advantagious to himſelf? But others diſliked this poſition; for, where did any ſuch relaxation appear? It cancelleth not the obligation of a debtor, to fancy to himſelf an acquittance from his creditor, which cannot be produced.

Some act at, not for King Stephens commands.

35. Some acted at the commands, though not for the commands of King Stephen, namely in ſuch things wherein his injunctions concurred with equity, charity, and order, conſiſtent with the principles of publike utility, and ſelf-preſervation. Theſe, having the happineſs to be commanded by an Uſurper, to do that, which otherwiſe they would have done of themſelves, did not diſcover themſelves to act out of their own inclinations, whileſt it paſſed unſuſpected in the notion of their obedience to King Stephen. Thus many thouſands under the happy conduct (or at leaſtwiſe contrivance) of Thurſten, Arch-Biſhop of York, though in their hearts well affected to Maud her title, unanimouſly reſiſted David King of Scots, though he pretended recuperative armes in Queen Maud her behalf; under which ſpecious title, he barbarouſly committed abominable cruelties, till nettled therewith, both Stephaniſts, and Maudiſts joyntly bad him battle, and overthrew him, nigh Alerton in York-ſhire.

Politick patiences.

36. All generally bare the burdens, and no leſs politickly, then patiently, paied all taxes impoſed upon them. Recuſancy in this kinde had but armed King Stephen with a ſpecious pretence to take all from them, for refuſing to give a part. Nor ſcrupled they hereat, becauſe thereby they ſtrengthened his uſurpation againſt the rightful heir, becauſe done againſt their wills, and to prevent a greater miſchief; Mean time they had a reſervation of their loyaltie, and, erecting a throne in their hearts, with their prayers, and teares, mounted Queen Maud on the ſame.

37. Robert, Earl of Gloceſter (the Queens half-brother) may even make up a forme by himſelf, finding none other before, or after him of the ſame opinion. Who conditionally did homage to King Stephen, ſcilicet, ſi dignitatem ſuam ſibi ſervaret illibatam, namely, So long as he preſerved this Roberts dignity (for ſo I underſtand the Pronoune's reciprocation) to be inviolated.

Anno Regis Steph. | Anno Dom.

38. A few there were, whose reluctting consciences remonstrated against the least compliance with King Stephen; whose high loyalty to Maud, interpreted all passiveness under an Usurper, to be activity against the right heir. These even quitted their Lands in England to the tempest of times; and secretly conveyed themselves, with the most incorporeal of their estates (as occuping in the least room in their wastage over) into Normandy. Highly conscientious.

2. 1136. 39. The Clergie, perceiving that King Stephen performed little of his large promises unto them, were not formerly so forward in setting him up, but now more fierce in plucking him down, and sided effectually with Maud against him. An act, which the judicious behold, not as a crooked deed, bowing them from their last, but as an upright one, streightning them to their first, and best oath, made to this Maud in the life time of her father. But Stephen (resolved to hold with a strong, what he had got with a wrong hand) fell violently on the Bishops, who then were most powerful in the land (every prime one having, as a Cathedral for his devotion; so many manors for his profit, parks for his pleasure, and castles for his protection) and he uncastled Roger of Sarisbury, Alexander of Lincoln, and Nigellus of Ely, taking also a great mass of treasure from them. An honest revolt of the Clergie.

40. Most fiercely fell the fury of King Stephen on the Dean, and Canons of Pauls, for crossing him in the choice of their Bishop. For, he sent, and took their [a] Focarias, and cast them into London-Tower; where they continued many dayes, not without much scorn, and disgrace, till at last those Canons ransomed their liberty at a great rate. Canons of Pauls soundly paid.

[a] Rad. de Diceto in hunc annum.

41. What these Focariæ were, we conceive it no disgrace to confess our ignorance, the word not appearing in any Classical Author, and we must by degrees screw our selves into the sense thereof: What Focariæ were.

1. It signifieth some female persons, the gender of the word discovering so much.
2. They were near to the Canons, who had an high courtesie for them, as appears by procuring their liberty at so dear a price.
3. Yet the word speaks not the least relation of affinity, or consanguinity unto them.
4. All the light we can get in this Focariæ, is from some sparks of fire which we behold in the word, so as if these Jhees were nymphs of the chimney, or fire-makers to these Canons.

If so, surely they had their Holiday-clothes on, when sent to the Tower (Kitchin-stuff doth not use to be tried in that place) and were considerable (if not in themselves) in the affections of others. And now, well fare the heart of [b] Roger Hoveden, who plainly tels us, that these Focariæ were these Canons Concubines. See here the fruit of forbidding marriage to the Clergy, against the Law of God, and nature. What saith the Apostle? [c] It is better to marry then to burn; or, which is the same in effect, It is better to have a wife then a fire-maker.

4. Dec. 13. 1138 42. Albericus, Bishop of Hostia, came post from Rome, sent by Pope Innocent the second into England; called a Synod at Westminster, where eighteen Bishops and thirty Abbots met together. Here was concluded; That no Priest, Deacon, or sub-Deacon should hold a wife, or woman, within his house, under pain of degrading from his Christendom, and plain sending to hell. That no Priests son should claim any spiritual living by heritage. That none should take a Benefice of any Lay-man. That none were admitted to Cure which had not the letters of his Orders. That Priests should do no bodily labour: And, that their transubstantiated God should dwell but eight dayes in the box, for fear of worm-eating, moulding or stinking; with such like. A Synod at Westminster.

like. In this Synod, Theobald, Abbot of Becco, was chosen Arch-Bishop of Canterburie, in the place of William lately deceased. Anno Dom. 1138 Anno Regni Step. 7.

Henry of Winchester Englands Arch-Prelate.

43. The most considerable Clergy-man of England in this age, for birth, wealth, and learning, was Henry of Blois, Bishop of Winchester, and Brother to King Stephen. He was by the Pope made his Legate for Britaine, and outshined Theobald the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury. For, although Theobald just at this time was augmented with the title of Legatus natus (which from him was entailed on his successors in that See) yet this Henry of Blois, being for the present, Legatus factus, out-lustred the other as far, as an extraordinary Ambassador doth a Leger of the same Nation. In this Henry, two interests did meet, and contend; that of a Brother, and that of a Bishop; but the later clearly got the conquest, as may appear by the Councel he called at Winchester, wherein the King himself was summoned to appear. Yea, some make Stephen personally appearing therein (a dangerous president to plead the cause of the Crown, before a conventicle of his own subjects) so that to secure Rome of Supremacy in appeals, he suffered a Recovery thereof against his own person in a Court of Record looling of himself to save the Crown thereby unto himself. But William of Malmesbury present at the Councel (and therefore his testimony is to be preferred before others) mentions onely three parties in the place present there with their attendance: 1139. 5.

1.	2.	3.
Roger of Sarisbury with the rest of the Bishops, grievously complaining of their Castles taken from them.	Henry Bishop of Winchester, the Popes Legat, & President of the Councel; With Theobald Arch-Bishop of Canterbury pretending to umpire matters in a moderate way.	Hugh Arch-Bishop of Rhaus, and Aubery de Vere (ancester to the Ear of Oxford) as Advocate for King Stephen.

This Aubery de Vere seems learned in the Laws, being charactered by my[a] Author, homo causarum varietatibus exercitatus, a man well versed in the windings of causes.

a William Malmsbury hist. novel. lib. 2. pag. 182.

44. In this Synod, first the commission of Pope Innocent the second was read, impowring the said Henry Bishop of Winchester, with a Legative authority. Then the Legate made a Sermon; Latiariter, which is, as I conceive, in the Latin tongue. We finde not his text; But know this was the subject of his discourse, to inveigh against King Stephen depriving those Bishops of their Castles. Sermon ended, the Kings advocates or true subjects rather (many making them to speak only out of the dictates of their own Loyalty, & not to plead by deputation from the King) made his defence, that Bishops could not canonically hold Castles, and that the King had dispoyled them of their treasure, not as Episcopal persons, but as they were his Lay-offices, advised thereto by his own security. The Bishops returned much for themselves, and in fine, the Synod brake up without any extraordinary matter effected. For soon after came Queen Maud with her Navie and Armie out of Normandy, which turned debates into deeds, and consultations into actions. But we leave the readers to be satisfied about the alternation of success betwixt King Stephen and Maud to the Historians of our State. There may they read of Mauds hair strange escapes, when avoiding death by being believed dead (otherwise she had proved in her grave, if not pretended in a Coffin) when getting out in white Lynen, under the protection of Snow: I say, how afterwards both King Stephen and Robert Earl of Gloucester, were taken prisoners, and given in Exchange, the one for the 1140. 6. 1141. 7.

the liberty of the other; with many such memorable passages, the reader may stock himself from the pens of the civil Historians, the proper relators thereof.

45. It is strange to conceive how men could be at leasure in the troublesome Reign of King Stephen to build and endow so many Religious foundations. Except any will say, that men being (as mortal in peace) most dying in War, the devotions of those dayes (maintaining such deeds meritorious for their souls) made all in that Martial age most active in such employments. Not to speak of the Monastery of St Mary de pratis, founded by Robert Earl of Leicester, and many others of this time; the goodly Hospital of St Katharines nigh London, was founded by Maud, wife to King Stephen, though others assign the same to Ro. Bishop of Lincoln, as founder thereof. So stately was the Quire of this Hospital, that it was not much [a] inferiour to that of St Pauls in London, when taken down in the dayes of Queen Elizabeth, by Doctor Thomas Wilson the Master thereof, and Secretary of State.

Why plenty of Religious foundations in these Martiall dayes.

a Stows Survey of London pag. 117.

46. Yea, King Stephen himself was a very great founder. St Stephen was his tutelary Saint (though he never learned his usurpation from the patient example of that Martyr) whose name he bore, on whose day he was Crowned, to whose honor he erected St Stephens Chappel in Westminster, near the place where lately the Court of Request was kept. He built also the Cistertians Monastery in Feversham; with an Hospital near the West-gate in York. And, whereas formerly there were paid out of every plough-land in England, betwixt Trent and Edenburgh-frith, twenty four [b] Oat-sheaves for the Kings Hounds; Stephen converted this rent-charge to his new-built Hospital in York. A good deed no doubt; for, though it be unlawful to take the [c] childrens bread and to cast it unto the dogs; it is lawful to take the dogs bread, and to give it unto the children.

16. 1150. 47. The King, being desirous to settle Soveraignty on his Son Eustace, earnestly urged Theobald Arch-Bishop of Canterbury to Crown him. For, Stephen saw that fealty, barely sworn to Maud in her Fathers life time, was afterwards broken: and therefore (his own guilt making him the more suspicious) for the better assurance of his Sons succession, he would go one step farther, endeavouring to make him actual King in his own life time. But the Arch-Bishop stoutly refused, though proscribed for the same, and forced to flie the land, till after some time he was reconciled to the King.

The constancy of Theobald Arch. Bishop of Canterbury.

19. 1153. 48. Eustace the Kings Son died of a frenzie, as going to plunder the lands of Bury [d] Abby. A death untimely in reference to his youthful years, but timely and seasonably in relation to the good of the Land. If conjecture may be made from his turbulent spirit, coming to the Crown he would have added tyrannie to his usurpation. His Father Stephen begins now to consider, how he himself was old, his Son deceased, his Subjects wearied, his Land wasted with War: which considerations, improved by the endeavours of Theobald Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and Gods blessing on both, produced an agreement between King Stephen and Henry Duke of Normandy, the former holding the Crown for his life, and after his death settling the same on Henry, his adopted Son and Successor.

The seasonable death of Prince Eustace.

49. We have now gotten (to our great credit, and comfort, no doubt) an English-man Pope; namely, Nicholas Breakspear, alias Adrian the fourth. Born, saith my [e] Author, nigh Uxbridg in Middlesex, of the ancient and Martial family of the Breakspears; though [f] others make him no better then a bastard of an Abbot of St Albans. The Abbot of which Covent he confirmed the first in place, of all in England. If I miscount not, we never had but four Popes and a half (I mean Cardinal Pool, Pope elect) of our Nation. And yet of them, one too many (will the Papists say,) if Pope Joan (as some esteem her) were an English-woman. Yea, lately (the Elected following the plurality of the Electors) they have almost ingrossed the Papacy to the Italians. Our Adrian had but bad success, choaked to death with a flie flie in his throat. Thus any thing next nothing, be it but advantagiously planted, is big enough to batter mans life down to the ground.

Jeffery Monmouth defended.

50. Jeffery ap Arthur (commonly called from his native place, Jeffery of Monmouth) was now Bishop of S^t Asaph. He is the Welsh Herodotus, the father of ancient History, and fables; for, he who will have the first, must have the later. Polydore Virgil accuseth him of many falshoods (so hard it is to halt before a cripple) who, notwithstanding, by others is defended, because but a translator, and not the original reporter. For, a translator tells a lie in telling no lie, if wilfully varying from that copy, which he promiseth faithfully to render. And if he truly translates what he findes, his duty is done, and is to be charged no further. Otherwise the credit of the best translator may be crack'd, if himself become security for the truth of all, that he takes on trust from the pens of others.

The death of K. Stephen.

51. King Stephen ended his troublesome life. A Prince, who if he had come in by the door, the best room in the house had not been too good to entertain him. Whereas now the addition Usurper (affixed generally to his name) corrupts his valour into cruelty, devotion into hypocrisie, bounty into flattery, and design. Yet, be it known to all, though he lived an Usurper, he died a lawful King; for, what formerly he held from the rightful heir by violence, at his death he held under him by a mutual composition. He was buried with his Son, and Wife, at Feversham in Kent, in a Monastery of his own building. At the demolishing whereof, in the reign of King Henry the Eighth, some, to gain the lead wherein he was wrapp'd, cast his corps into the Sea. Thus Sacrilege will not onely feast on gold and silver, but (when sharp set) will feed on meaner metals.

a Stow in the end of his life.

Sobriquets what they were.

52. Henry the Second succeeded him, known by a triple sir-name, two personal and ending with himself, Fitz-Empress, and Shortmantle; the other hereditary, fetch'd from Jeffery his Father, and transmitted to his Posterity, Plantagenet, or * Plantaganest. This name was one of the Sobriquets, or penitential nick-names, which great persons about this time, posting to the Holy War in Palestine, either assumed to themselves, or had by the Pope, or their Confessors imposed upon them, purposely to disguise, and obscure their lustre therewith. See noe of the same kinde,

* Alias Plantagenist.

2. Grise-Gonelle, Graycoat.	7. La-Zouch, a Branch upon a stem.	12. Malduit, Ill taught.
3. Teste de Estoupe, Head of towe.	8. Houlet, a Sheephook.	13. Juvencas, Geffard, or Heifer.
4. Arbust, a Shrub.	9. Hapkin, an Hatchet.	14. Fitz de flaw, Son of a flail.
5. Martel, an Hammer.	10. Chapell, an Hood.	15. Plantagenist, Stalk of a Broom.

Thus these great persons accounted the penance of their pilgrimage, with the merit thereof, doubled, when passing for poor inconsiderable fellows, they denied their own places, and persons. But, be it reported to others, whether this be proper, and kindly evangelical self-denial, so often commended to the practice of Christians. However some of these by-names, assumed by their fanciful devotion, remained many years after to them, and theirs; amongst which Plantagenist was entailed on the Royal bloud of England.

K. Henry his character.

53. This King Henry, was wise, valiant, and generally fortunate. His faults were such as speak him Man, rather then a vitious one. Wisdom enough he had for his work, and work enough for his wisdom, being troubled in all his relations.

relations. His wife Queen Elianor brought a great portion, (fair Provinces in France) and a great stomach with her; so that it is questionable, whether her froward spirit more drave her Husband away from her chair, or Rosamunds fair face, more drew him to her wanton embraces. His Sons (having much of the Mother in them) grew up, as in Age, in obstinacy against him. His Subjects, but especially the Bishops, (being the greatest Castle-mongers in that Age) very stubborn and not easily to be ordered.

54. Mean time one may justly admire, that no mention in Authors is made of, nor provisions for Maud the Kings Mother, (surviving some years after her Son's Coronation) in whom during her life, lay the real right to the Crown. Yet say not King Henries policy was little in preferring, to take his Title from an Usurper by adoption, rather then from his own Mother, (the rightful heir) by succession, and his piety less, in not attending his Mothers death; but snatching the Scepter out of her hand, seeing no Writer ever chargeth him with the least degree of undutifulness unto her. Which leadeth us to believe that this Maud, worn out with age and afflictions, willingly waved the Crown, and reigned in her own contentment, in seeing her Son reign before her.

What became of Maud the Empress.

2. 1155. 55. Those who were most able to advise themselves, are most willing to be advised by others, as appeared by this politick Prince. Presently he chuseth a Privy Councel of Clergie and Temporalty, and refineth the Common Laws; Yea, towards the end of his Reign began the use of our Itinerant Judges. The platform hereof he fetch'd from France (where he had his education) and where Charles the Bald, some hundred of years before, had divided his Land into twelve parts, assigning several Judges for administration of Justice therein. Our Henry parcelled England into six Divisions, and appointed three Judges to every Circuit, annually to visit the same. Succeeding Kings, (though changing the limits) have kept the same number of Circuits, and let the skilful in Arithmetick cast it up, whether our Nation receiveth any loss, by the change of three Judges every year, according to Henry the second's Institution, into two Judges twice a year, as long since hath been accustomed.

The body of the Common-Law compiled.

2. 1156. 56. The Laws thus setled, King Henry cast his eye on the numerous Castles in England. As a good reason of State formerly perswaded the building, so a better pleaded now for the demolishing of them. William the Conqueror built most of them, and then put them into the custody of his Norman Lords, thereby to awe the English into obedience. But these Norman Lords in the next generation, by breathing in English ayre, and wedding with English wives, became so perfectly Anglized, and lovers of Liberty, that they would stand on their guard against the King, on any petty discontentment. If their Castles, (which were of proof against Bowes and Arrows, the Artillery of that Age) could but bear the brunt of a sudden assault, they were priviledged from any solemn Siege, by their meanness and multitude, as whose several beleguerings would not compensate the cost thereof. Thus as in foul bodies, the Physick in process of time groweth so friendly and familiar with the disease, that they at last side together, and both take part against Nature in the Patient; so here it came to pass, that these Castles intended for the quenching, in continuance of time occasioned the kindling of Rebellion. To prevent farther mischief, King Henry razed most of them to the ground, and secured the rest of greater consequence into the hands of his Confidents. If any ask, how these Castles belong to our Church-History; know, that Bishops of all in that Age, were the greatest Traders in such Fortifications.

Castles demolished.

57. Thomas Becket, born in London, and (though as yet but a Deacon) Arch-Deacon of Canterbury, Doctor of Canon-Law, bred in the Universities of Oxford, Paris, Bononia, was by the King made Lord Chancellor of England. During which his office, who braver then Becket? None in the Court wore more more costly clothes, mounted more stately steeds, made more sumptuous feasts, kept more jovial company, brake more merry jests, used more pleasant pastimes. In a word, he was so perfect a Lay-man, that his Parsonages of Bromfield, and St. Mary-hill in London, with other Ecclesiastical Cures, whereof he was Pastor, might even look all to themselves, he taking no care to discharge them. This is that Becket, whose mention is so much in English, and miracles so many in Popish writers. We will contract his acts in proportion to our History, remitting the Reader to be satisfied in the rest from other Authors. Anno Dom. 1158. Anno Regni Hen. 2. 4.

His great reformation being made Arch-Bishop of Canterbury.

58. Four years after, upon the death of Theobald, Becket was made by the King, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury. The first Englishman since the Conquest (and he but a mongrel, for his mother was a Syrian, the intercourse of the Holy-War in that age making matches betwixt many strangers) who was preferred to that place. And now (if the Monks their writing his life may be believed) followed in him a great and strange Metamorphosis. Instantly his cloaths were reformed to gravity, his diet reduced to necessity, his company confined to the Clergie, his expences contracted to frugality, his mirth retrenched to austerity; all his pastimes so devoured by his piety, that none could see the former Chancellor Becket, in the present Arch-Bishop Becket. Yea, they report, that his clothes were built three stories high; next his skin he was a Hermite, and wore sack-cloth; in the midd he had the habit of a Monk; and above all wore the garments of an Arch-Bishop. Now, that he might the more effectually attend his Archiepiscopal charge, he resigned his Chancellors place, whereat the King was not a little offended. It added to his anger, that his patience was daylie pressed, with the importunate petitions, of people complaining, that Becket injured them. Though, generally, he did but recover to his Church such possessions, as, by their covetousnes, and his predecessors connivence, had formerly been detained from it. 1162 1.

A stubborn defender of the vicious Clergy against secular Magistrates.

59. But, the main matter, incensing the King against him was, his stubborn defending the Clergie from the secular power: and particularly (what a great fire doth a small spark kindle?) that a Clerk, having killed and stolen a Deer, ought not to be brought before the Civil Magistrate for his punishment. Such impunities breeding impieties, turned the house of God into a den of thieves: many rapes, riots, robberies, murders, were then committed by the Clergie. If it be rendred as a reason of the viciousnes of Adonijah, that his father never said unto him, [a] Why doest thou so? No wonder if the Clergy of this age were guilty of great crimes, whom neither the King, nor his Judges, durst call to an account. And, seeing Ecclesiastical censures extend not to the taking away of life, or lim; such Clerks as were guilty of capital faults; were either altogether acquitted, or had onely penance inflicted upon them; a punishment far lighter then the offence did deserve. Indeed, it is most meet, in matters meerly Ecclesiastical (touching the Word and Sacraments) Clergy-men be onely answerable for their faults to their spiritual superiors, as most proper, and best able to discern and censure the same. And in cases criminal, it is unfit that Ministers should be summoned, before each proud, pettish, petulant, pragmatical, secular, under-officer. However, in such causes to be wholly exempted from civil power, is a priviledge, which with reason cannot be desired of them, nor with justice indulged unto them. Sure I am, Abiathar (though High-Priest) was convented before, and deposed by Solomon for his practising of treason. And St. Paul saith, [b] Let every soul be subject to the higher powers.

He incurs the Kings displeasure.

60. To retrench these enormities of the Clergy, the King called a Parliament at Clarendon, near Sarisbury (and not in Normandy, as Mr Fox will have it) intending with the consent of his great Councel, to confirm some severe Laws of his Grand-father King Henry the first. To these Laws, [c] sixteen in number, Becket, with the rest of the Bishops, consented and subscribed them. 1164 10.

But afterwards recanting his own act, renounced the same. Let not therefore the crime of inconstancy, be laid too heavily to the charge of Arch-Bishop Cranmer, first subscribing, then revoking popish articles presented unto him: seeing this his name-sake Thomas, and predecessor, Becket, without any stain to his Saintship, retracted his own act, upon pretence of better information. But so highly was Becket offended with himself for his subscription, that, in revenge, for some moneths, he suspended himself from all Divine Service (his pride, and laziness, both before, and after, suspended him from ever preaching) and would not be present thereat. Hereafter let none hope for more favour from this Arch-Bishop, then their fact may deserve; seeing he cannot rationally be expected to be courteous to others, who was so severe unto himself. The best was, in this his suspension, the knot was not tied so hard, as to hurt him; who, in case of necessity, as he had bound, so he could loose himself: though, for the more state of the matter, Pope Alexander * himself was pleased solemnly to assoil him from his suspension. Mean time Becket, both in his suspension, and absolution, most highly offended King Henry, who every day the more was alienated from, and incensed against him.

* Fox his Mon. see the letter at large, pag. 269.

61. During Beckets abode about Clarendon, he is reported every morning to have walk'd, from his lodging, some miles, to the Kings Palace. Where the ground (say they) called Beckets path, at this day presenteth it self to the eyes of the beholders (but most quick-sighted, if looking through Popish spectacles) with the grass, and grain growing thereon, in a different hew, and colour from the rest. A thing having in it more of report, then truth; yet more of truth then wonder: the discolourations of such veins of earth being common in grounds elsewhere, which never had the happiness of Becket his feet to go upon them.

The vanity of Beckets path.

62. But oh! If Becket's feet had left but the like impression in all the wayes he went, how easie had it been for all mens eyes, and particularly for our pen, to have track'd him in all his travels? Who, not long after, without the consent of the King, took Ship, sail'd into Flanders, thence travelled into the Southern parts of France, thence to Pontiniack, thence to Senes, abiding seven years in banishment. But, though he served an apprentiship in exile, he learned little humility thereby, onely altering his name (for his more safety) from Becket to Derman; but retaining all his old nature, remitting nothing of his rigid resolutions.

He flieth beyond Sea, without the Kings consent.

63. Now, to avoid idleness, Becket, in his banishment, variously employed himself. First, in making, and widening breaches, between Henry his native Soveraign, and Lewis the French King. Secondly, in writing many voluminous [a] letters of expostulation to Princes, and Prelates. Thirdly, in letting flie his heavy excommunications against the English Clergie; namely, against Roger, Arch-Bishop of York; Gilbert Poliot, Bishop of London (a learneder man then himself;) Joceline, Bishop of Sarisbury, and others. His chief quarrel with them, was their adherence to the King; and particularly, because the Arch-Bishop presumed to Crown Henry the King's Son (made joynt-King in the life of his Father) a priviledge which Becket claimed, as proper to himself alone. Fourthly, in receiving comfort from, and returning it to Pope Alexander at Beneventum in Italy. Sameness of affliction bred sympathy of affection betwixt them, both being banished; the Pope by Frederick Barbarossa, the Emperour, for his pride and insolency: as our Becket smarted for the same fault, from King Henry. Here also Becket solemnly resigned his Arch-Bishoprick to the Pope, as troubled in conscience, that he had formerly took it as illegally from the King, and the Pope again restored it to him, whereby all scruples in his minde were fully satisfied.

How employed in his banishment.

ſtill retained his temporals in his hand, on weighty conſiderations. Namely, to ſhow their diſtinct nature from the ſpirituals of the Arch-Biſhoprick, to which alone the Pope could reſtore him: Lay-lands being ſeparable from the ſame, as the favour of ſecular Princes: and Becket's bowed knee muſt own the Kings bountiful hand, before he could receive them. Returns as obſtinate as he went over.

65. Cœlum non animum. Travellers change climates, not conditions. Witneſs our Becket, ſtubborn he went over, ſtubborn he ſtaied, ſtubborn he return'd. Amongſt many things, which the King deſired, and he denied, he refuſed to reſtore the Excommunicated Biſhops, pretending he had no power (indeed he had no will) and that they were Excommunicate by his Holineſs. Yea, he, inſtead of recalling his old, added new Excommunications; and, that thunder which long before rumbled in his threatnings, now gave the crack upon all thoſe that detained his temporal revenues. [a] Roger Hoveden reports, that upon Chriſtmas-day (the better day the better deed) he Excommunicated Robert de Broc, becauſe the day before he had cut off one of his horſes tailes. Yea, he continued, and encreaſed his inſolence againſt the King and all his ſubjects.

He complained that never Soveraign kept ſuch lazy Subjects, and Servants, neither concern'd in their Kings credit, nor ſenſible of his favours conferred on them, to ſuffer a proud Prelate ſo ſaucily to affront him. Now, a low hollow, and a leſs clap with the hand, will ſet fierce doggs on worrying their prey. A quaternion of Courtiers being preſent; namely,

1. Sr Richard Breton, of which name (as I take it) a good family at this day is extant in Northampton-ſhire.
2. Sr Hugh Morvil of Kirk-Oſwald in Cumberland, where his [b] ſword wherewith he ſlew Becket, was kept a long time, in memorial of his fact. His family at this day extinct.
3. Sr William Tracey, whoſe heirs at this day flouriſh, in a worthy and worſhipful equipage, at Todington in Gloceſter-ſhire.
4. Sr Reginald Fitz-Urſe, [c] or, Beares-Sonne. His poſterity was afterwards men of great lands and Command, in the County of Monaghan in Ireland, being there called [d] Mac-Mahon, which in Iriſh ſignifieth the ſon of a bear.

Theſe four Knights, applying the Kings general reproof to themſelves, in their preproperous paſſions miſ-interpreted his complaint, not onely for Becket's legal condemnation, but alſo for their warrant for his execution. Preſently they poſt to Canterbury, where they finde Becket in a part of his Church (ſince called the Martyrdom) who, though warned of their coming, and adviſed to avoid them, would not decline them, ſo that he may ſeem to have more minde to be kill'd, then they had to kill him. Here happ'ned high expoſtulation, they requiring reſtitution of the Excommunicated Biſhops; whoſe peremptory demands, met with his pertinacious denials, as then not willing to take notice of Solomon his counſel, [e] A ſoft anſwer pacifieth wrath. Brauls breed blows, and all four falling upon him, with the help of the fifth, an officer of the Church, called Hugh, the ill-Clerk, each gave him a wound, though that with the ſword diſpatch'd him, which cut off his crown from the reſt of his head.

worthy the translating) one verse whereof, on each leaf of the door of Canterbury Quire, is yet legible in part;

Est sacer intra locus, venerabilis, atq; beatus, Præsul, ubi sanctus Thomas est * martyrizatus.

* William Somner in his Antiquities of Canterbury, pag. 166.

But, if he were no truer a martyr, then martyrizatus is true position, his memory might be much suspected. More did the Muses smile on the Author of the following verses,

Pro Christi Sponsa, Christi sub tempore, Christi
In Templo, Christi verus amator obit.
Quis moritur? Præsul. Cur? Pro grege. Qualiter? Ense.
Quando? Natali. Quis locus? Ara Dei.

For Christ his Spouse, in Christ's Church, at the tide
Of Christ his birth, Christ his true lover dy'd.
Who dies? A Priest. Why? For's flock. How? By th' sword.
When? At Christ's birth. Where? Altar of the Lord.

Here I understand not, how properly it can be said, that Becket died Pro grege, For his flock. Hee did not die for feeding his flock, for any fundamental point of Religion, or for defending his flock against the wolfe of any dangerous doctrine; but meerly he died for his flock; namely, that the sheep thereof (though ever so scabb'd) might not be dress'd with tarr, and other proper (but sharpe, and smarting) medicines. I mean, that the Clergie might not be punished by the secular power, for their criminal enormities. Sure I am, a learned, and moderate [a] writer of that age, passeth this character upon him, Quæ ab ipso acta sunt laudanda nequaquam censuerim, licet ex laudabili zelo processerint. Such things as were done by him, I conceive not at all to be praised, though they proceeded from a laudable zeal. But [b] Stapleton calls this his judgment, Audacis Monachi censura non tam politica, quàm planè ethnica, The censure of a bold Monk, not so much politick as heathenish. Should another add of Stapleton, that this his verdict is the unchristian censure of a proud and partial Jesuite; railing would but beget railing; and so it is better to remit all, to the day [c] of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God.

68. Now King Henry, though unable to revive Beacket, shewed as much sorrow himself, for his death, as a living man could express; and did the other as much honour, as a dead man could receive. First, searching after all his kinred (as most capable of his kindeness) he found out his two sisters. One Mary, a virgin, not inclinable to marry, whom he preferred Abbess of the rich Nunnery of Berking. His other nameless sister, being married to one of the Le Botelers, or Butlers, He transplanted with her husband, and children into [d] Ireland, conferring upon them high honours, and rich revenues; from whom the Earls of Ormond are at this day descended. He founded also the magnificent Abbey, called [e] Thomas-Court in Dublin (in memory of the said Thomas Becket, and expiation of his murther) beautifying the same with fair buildings, and enriching it with large possessions. Nor did onely the purse, but the person of King Henry do penance. Who walking some miles bare-foot, suffered himself to be whipped on the naked back by the Monks of Cantrbury. As for the four Knights, who murthered him, the Pope pardoned them, but conditionally, to spend the rest of their lives in the Holy war (where the King, as part of his penance enjoyned by the Pope, maintained two hundred men for one year, on his proper charges) to try, whether they could be as couragious in killing of Turks, as they had been cruel in murdering a Christian.

Becket after fifty years inshrined.

69. And now, being on this subject, once to dispatch Becket out of our way, just a Jubilee of years after his death, Stephen Langton, his mediate successor, removed his body from the Under-croft in Christ-Church, where first he was buried, and laid him at his own charge, in a most sumptuous shrine, at the East end of the Church. Here the [a] rust of the sword that killed him, was afterwards tendred to Pilgrims to kiss. Here many miracles were pretended to be wrought by this saint, in number [b] two hundred and seventy. They might well have been brought up to four hundred, and made as many as Baals lying Prophets: though even then, one Prophet of the Lord, one Micaiah, one true miracle were worth them all.

The blinde superstition of people.

70. It is almost incredible, what multitudes of people flock'd yearly to Canterbury (which City lived by Beckets death) especially on his Jubilee, or each fifty years after his enshrining. No fewer then an hundred [c] thousand (we finde it in words at length, and therefore a cipher is not mistaken) of English and forrainers repaired hither. And, though great the odds in hardness, between stones and flesh, there remains at this day in the marble, the prints of their superstition, who crept, and kneeled to his shrine. The revenues whereof by peoples offerings, amounted to more then six hundred pounds a year. And the same accomptant, when coming to set down, what then, and there was offered to Christ's, or the High-Altar, dispatcheth all with a blanke, Summo Altari nil. Yea, whereas before Beckets death, the Cathedral in Canterbury was called Christ's Church, it passed afterwards for the Church of S[t] Thomas; verifying therein the complaint of [d] Mary Magdalen, Sustulerunt Dominum, They have taken away the Lord. Though since, by the demolishing of Beckets shrine, the Church (and that justly) hath recovered his true and ancient name.

20. 1174. I. EVen amongst all the stripes given him since the death of Becket, none made deeper impression in King Henry's soul, then the undutifulness of Henry, his eldest Son, whom he made (the foolish act of a wise King) joynt-King with himself, in his life time. And, as the Father was indiscreet to put off so much of his apparel, before he went to bed: so the Son was more unnatural, in endeavouring to rend the rest from his back, and utterly to disrobe him of all Regal power. The Clergie were not wanting in their plentiful censures, to impute this mischance to the King, as a Divine punishment on Beckets death; that his natural Son should prove so undutiful to him, who himself himself had been so unmerciful to his spiritual father. But this rebellious childe pass'd not unpunished. For, as he honoured not his Father; so his dayes were few in the land which the Lord gave him. And, as he made little account of his own father, so English Authors make no reckoning of him in the Catalogue of Kings. Richard made Arch-Bishop of Canterbury.

2. But, before this Henries death, Richard, Prior of Dover, who divided Kent into three Arch-Deaconries, was made Arch-Bishop of Canterbury. Indeed the place was first profered to Robert, Abbot of Becco, in Normandy (Sequents of three, if he had accepted it [Anselme, Theobald, and this Robert] who, in the compass of seventy years, out of the same Abby were made Arch-Bishops of Canterbury) but he refused it, as ominous to succeed Becket in his Chair, lest he should succeed him in his Coffin; and preferr'd a whole skin before an holy Pall. But Richard accepting the place, is commended for a milde and moderate man, being all for accommodation, and his temper the best expedient betwixt the Pope and King; pleasing the former with presents, the latter with compliance. This made him connive at Jeffery Plantaginet his holding the Bishoprick of Lincoln, though uncanonicalness on uncanonicalness met in his person. For, first he was a bastard. Secondly, he was never in orders. Thirdly, he was under age; all which irregularities were answered in three words, The Kings Son. This was that Jeffery, who used to protest by the royaltie of the King, his Father, when a Itander by minded him to remember the honesty of his Mother.

The controversy betwixt Canterbury & York for precedency.

3. A Synod was call'd at Westminster, the Popes Legat being present thereat; on whose right hand sat Richard, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, as in his proper place. When, in springs Roger of York, and, finding Canterbury so seated, fairly sits him down on Canterburie's lap (a baby too big to be danced thereon) yea, Canterbury his servants dandled this lap-childe with a witness, who pluck'd him thence, and buffeted him to purpose. Hence began the brawl, which often happened betwixt the two Sees for precedency; though hitherto we have pass'd them over in silence, not conceiving our selves bound to trouble the Reader, every time those Arch-Bishops troubled themselves. And, though it matters as little to the Reader, as to the Writer, whether Roger beat Richard, or Richard beat Roger; yet, once for all, we will reckon up the arguments, which each See alledged for its precedencie. 1176. 22.

8. It is confidently [a] reported, that when Richard, Son and Successor to King Henry, approached his Fathers dead Corps, they bled afresh at the Nostrils; whence some collected him the cause of his death. But whilest natures Night-councellors (treading in the dark causes of hidden qualities) render the reason of the salleying forth of the bloud on such occasions, let the learned in the Laws decide how far such an accident may be improved for a legal evidence. For surely that Judg is no better then a Murderer, who condemneth one for Murder on that proof alone. However on the bleeding of the Fathers Nostrils, the Sons heart could not but bleed, as meeting there with a guilty Conscience. And therefore (according to the Divinity and Devotion of those dayes) to expiate his disobedience, he undertook with Philip Augustus, King of France, a long Voyage against Sultan Saladine, to recover CHRIST his grave, and the City of Jerusalem, from the Turks in Palestine.

An account of our design.

9. Having formerly written an whole Book of the Holy War, and particularly of King Richards atchievements therein, I intend here no repetition; Onely our design is to give a Catalogue of some of our English Nobility, who adventured their persons in the Holy War; and whose Male-Posterity is eminently extant at this day. I have known an excellent Musician, whom no Arguments could perswade to play, until hearing a Bungler scrape in the company, he snatch'd the Instrument out of his hand (in indignation that Musick should be so much abused) then tuned and played upon it himself. My project herein is, that giving in an imperfect list, of some few noble Families, who ingaged themselves in this service; It will so offend some eminent Artist (hitherto silent in this kinde) that out of disdain he will put himself upon so honourable a work, deserving a Gentleman who hath Lands, Learning and leisure to undertake so costly, intricate and large a subject for the honor of our Nation. And be it premised, that to prevent all cavils about precedency, first come, first serv'd; I shall Marshal them in no other method, but as in my studies I have met with the mention of them. 1190 1.

10. To begin with the place of my preſent habitation; one Hugh Nevil attended King Richard into the Holy War, and anciently lieth buried in a Marble Monument, in the Church of Waltham Abbey in Eſſex, whereof no remainders at this day. This Hugh Nevil being one of the Kings ſpecial familiars, ſlew a Lion in the Holy Land, firſt driving an arrow into his Breaſt, and then running him through with his ſword, on whom this Verſe was made,

But I cannot give credit to [c] his report, who conceiveth that the Atchievement of the man was tranſlated to his Maſter; And that on this occaſion King Richard the firſt got the name of Cordelion, or Lions Heart.

11. This Hugh Nevil gave the Manor of [d] Thorndon to Waltham Abby, and was Anceſter of the Noble and numerous Family of the Nevils; to which none in England equal, for Honor, Wealth and number, in the later end of King Henry the ſixth, though at this day the Lord Abergavenny be the only Baron thereof: He gave for his Armes a Croſs Saltire, or the Croſs of S[t] Andrew, probably aſſuming it in the Holy War. For though I confeſs this is not the proper Croſs of Hieruſalem, yet was it highly eſteemed of all thoſe who adventured thither; as may appear, in that all Knights-Templers make ſuch Saltire Croſs, with their Thwarted Leggs upon their Monuments.

Next amongſt the Royal Jurors (as I may term them) was Guarrin Fitz Girald, from whom are deſcended the Fitz Giralds in Ireland, (where their name is in ſome places Provincial) of whom the Earl of Kildare is chief. A memorial of their ſervice in Paleſtine is preſerved in their Armes, giving Argent a Croſs Saltire Gules. Here it muſt be remembred, that the valiant ſprightly Gentleman Hickman Lord Windſor is deſcended from the ſame [f] Male Anceſtors with the Fitz Giralds (as Robert Glover a moſt exquiſite Herald doth demonſtrate) though according to the faſhion of that age, altering his old, and aſſuming a new name from Windſor, the place of his office and Command. This Lord Windſor carrieth the Badg of his Service in his Arms, being eſſentially the ſame, with the Earl of Kildares, ſave that the colours are varied; the field Gules, and croſs Saltire Argent, betwixt twelve Croſſes croſſed, OR: Which Coat ſeemingly ſurfited, was conceived in that age, the more healthful for the ſame; the more Croſſed the more Bleſſed, being the Devotion of thoſe dayes.

15. At the siege of Acres or Ptolemais (the Grave General of the Christian Army) amongst many Worthies dying there within the compass of one year; I finde [a] Ingelram de Fiennes to be slain, from whom the Lord Viscount Say and Seal, and the Lord Dacres of the South derive their discent. But most visible are the remains of the Holy War in the atchievement of Theophilus Finnes, alias Clinton, Earl of Lincoln, giving in the lower parts of his shield (in a field Argent) six Crosses crossed Fitchee Sable, denoting the stability and firmness of his Ancestors in that service.

Radulphus De Alta ripa.

16. Also at the aforesaid Siege of Acres, Radulphus de Alta ripa, Arch-Deacon of Colchester ended his life. Now although because a Clergy-man, he could not then leave any lawful Issue behinde him. Yet we may be confident that the Ancient Family De Alta ripa or Dautry, still continuing in [b] Sussex were of his Alliance.

[b] Camd. Brit. ibid.

A mistake freely confest.

17. Before we leave the Siege of Acres, let me refresh the Reader with my innocent (and give me leave to say provable) mistake. I conceived the Noble Family of the Lord Dacres took their Sir-name from some service there performed, confirmed in my conjecture. 1. Because the name is written with a Local Tmesis, D'Acres. 2. Joan Daughter to Edward the first, King of England, is called D'Acres, because Born there. 3. They gave their Armes Gules three Scollops-shels Argent; Which Scollop-shels (I mean the nethermost of them, because most concave and capacious) smooth within, and artificially plated without, was oft times Cup and Dish to the Pilgrims in Palestine; and thereupon their Armes often charged therewith. Since suddenly all is vanished, when I found [c] Dacor, a Rivolet in Cumberland, so ancient, that it is mentioned by Bede himself, long before the Holy War was once dreamed of, which gave the name to Dacres Castle, as that (their prime seat) to that Family.

[c] Camd. Brit. in Cumberland pag. 776.

Cressant and Star why the Device of K. Richard the first, in his voyage to the Holy Land.

18. Before we go further, be it here observed, that when King Richard the first went into Palestine, he took up for his Device in his Ensign, a Cressant and a Star, but on what account men variously conjecture. Some conceive it done in affront to the Sultan Saladine, the Turk giving the Half Moon for his Armes; But this seems unlikely, both because a Cressant is not the posture of the Turkish Moon, and because this was a prepostrous method with a valiant man at his bare setting forth, who would rather first win, before wear the Armes of his Enemies; Others make a modest, yea Religious meaning thereof, interpreting himself and his souldiers by the Cressant and Star, expecting to be inlightened from above, by the beams of succes from the Sun of Divine Providence. Indeed it would trouble a wise man (but that a wise man will not be troubled therewith) to give a reason of King Richards fancy; it being almost as easie for him to foretel ours, as for us infallibly to interpret his design herein. However we may observe many of the principal persons which attended the King in this War, had their Shields be-Cressanted and be-Starred, in relation to this the Royal Device.

The Armes of the ancient Family of Minshull.

19. Thus Michael Minshul of Minshul in Cheshire, serving King Richard in this war, had not onely the Cressant and Star given him for his Armes, but since also that Family hath born for their Crest, two Lions paws holding a Cressant. And I have seen a Patent [d] lately, granted by the Lord Marshal, to a Knight [e] deriving himself from a yonger branch of that Family, assigning him for distinction, to change his Crest into the Sultan kneeling and holding a Cressant.

As also of the noble S. Johns and Sackvile.

20. And thus the Noble Family of Saint-John, (whereof the Earl of Bullingbrook, &c.) give for their Paternal Coat Argent two Stars Or on a Chief Gules. These Stars first give us a dim light to discover their Service in the Holy Land, who since are beholding for perfecter information, to one now scarce counted a Rimer, formerly admitted for a Poet, acquainting us with this, and another Noble Family adventuring in the Holy War, namely, the Sackvilles, still flourishing in the Right Honourable the Earl of Dorcet.

Yet the Armes or Creſt of the Sackviles give us not the leaſt intimation of the Holy War. And indeed no rational man can expect an univerſal conformity in ſo much variety of fancies, that all the Armes of the adventurers thither, ſhould ſpeake the ſame Language, or make ſome ſign of their ſervice therein.

3. 1192. 21. I finde [c] S[r] Frederick Tilney Knighted at Acres in the Holy Land, in the third year of King Richard the firſt; he was a man Magnæ ſtaturæ & potens corpore; Sixteen Knights in a direct line of that name ſucceeded in that Inheritance: Whoſe heir general was married to the Duke of Norfolk, whileſt a male branch (if not, which I fear, very lately extinct) flouriſhed ſince at Shelleigh in Suffolke.

22. When I look upon the ancient Armes of the Noble Family of the Villiers, wherein there is Pilgrim on Pilgrim, I mean five Scallops O R, on the Croſs of S[t] George; I preſently concluded, one of that Family attended King Richard in the Holy Land: But on better enquiry, I finde that this Family at their firſt coming into England, bare Sable three Cinquefoyles Argent; and that S[r] Nicholas de Villiers Knight, changed this [d] Coat in the Reign, not of Richard, but Edward the firſt, whom he valiantly followed in his Wars in the Holy Land, and elſewhere.

d Burton in his deſcription of Leiceſter-ſhire.

23. I will conclude with the Noble Family of Berkeley, then which none of England now eminently exiſting, was more redoubted in the Holy War. All know their diſcent from Harding (Son to the King of Denmark) whoſe Armes are ſaid to be Gules Three Daniſh Axes O R, or as others ſuppoſe with more probability, I conceive onely a plain Cheveron, though ſome three hundred years ſince, they have filled their Coat with Ten Croſſes Patte O R, in remembrance of the Atchievements of their Anceſtors in that ſervice. For I finde that Harding of England Landed at [e] Joppa, July the third, in the ſecond year of King Baldwin, with a Band of ſtout Souldiers, where he relieved the Chriſtians beſieged therein.

The Armes of the Berkeleys.
e Chronicon Jeruſalem, lib. 9. cap. 11.

24. But I have been too tedious, intending onely a ſhort Eſſay, and to be (let me call it) an honeſt Decoy, by entering on this ſubject, to draw others into the compleating thereof, during the whole extent of the Holy War. The beſt is, for the preſent we have had good leiſure, theſe Martial times affording but little Eccleſiaſtical matter. For at this preſent much of the Engliſh Church was in Paleſtine, where Baldwin, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, ended his life before the Siege of Acres; and where Hubert Walter, Biſhop of Sariſbury, was a moſt active Commander; beſides many moe of the eminent Clergie ingaged in that ſervice. Yet many did wiſh that one Clergy-man more had been there, (to keep him from doing miſchief at home) namely, William Longcamp, Biſhop of Elie, who plaied Rex in the Kings abſence: ſo intolerable a Tyrant was he, by abuſing the Royal Authority committed unto him. And it is a wonder, that he, being indeed a Norman born, but holding ſo many and great offices in this land, ſhould not be able to ſpeak one word of good [f] Engliſh, as the Engliſh were not willing to ſpeak one good word of him.

More Churchmen abroad then Churchbuſineſs at home.
f Goodwin in his catalogue of the Biſhop of Ely.

25. Such as draw up a parallel betwixt this William Longcampe, and Thomas Wolſey (afterward Arch-Biſhop of York) finde them to meet in many conformities. Firſt, in the lowneſs of their birth, the one the ſon of an Huſband-man band-man, the other of a Butcher. Secondly, in the greatneſs of their power, both being the Popes Legates, and their Kings principal Officers. Thirdly, height of their pride; Longcampe having fifteen hundred daylie attendants: Wolſey, though but a thouſand, equalizing that number with the nobility of his train. Fourthly, ſuddenneſs of their fall, and it is hard to ſay, which of the two lived more hated, or died leſs pitied. Anno Dom. 1192. Anno Regis Rich. prim. 5.

Longcampe & Wolſey paral. leſ'd.

Wolſey the beter of the two.

26. Yet to give Wolſey his due, he far exceeded the other. Longcampe is accuſed of covetouſneſs, promoting his baſe kindred, to the dammage and detriment of others: no ſuch thing charged on Wolſey. Longcampes activity moved in the narrow ſphear of Englands Dominions; whileſt Wolſey might be ſaid (in ſome ſort) to have held in his hand the ſcales of Chriſtendome. Up Emperor, down France; and ſo alternately, as he was pleaſed to caſt in his graines. Wolſey ſate at the ſterne more then twenty years, whileſt Longcampe's impolitick pride outed him of his place, in leſs then a quarter of the time. Laſtly, nothing remains of Longcampe, but the memory of his pride and pomp: whileſt Chriſt-Church in Oxford, and other ſtately edifices, are the laſting monuments of Wolſeys magnificence, to all poſterity.

Yet a word in excuſe of Longcamp. a Godwin ut prius.

27. But ſeeing it is juſt to ſettle mens memories, on their true bottom; Be it known, that one putteth in a good word in due ſeaſon, in the excuſe of Biſhop [a] Longcampe, haply not altogether ſo bad as the pens of Monks would perſwade us. It inraged them againſt him, becauſe Hugh Nonant Biſhop of Coventry and Liechfield, drave out Monks out of Coventry, and brought in Secular Prieſts in the room; which alteration he being not able of himſelf to effect, uſed the aſſiſtance of Longcampe Biſhop of Elie; ordering the ſame in a Synod called at London. And ſeeing Monks have no medium betwixt not loving and bitter hating, no wonder if for this cauſe they paid him their Invectives. But we have done with him, and are glad of ſo fair a riddance of him, on this account, that moſt of his miſdemeanors were by him committed, not quà Biſhop, but quà Vice-roy, and ſo more properly belonging to the civil Hiſtorian.

King Richard dearly Ranſomed.

28. King Richard in his return from Paleſtine, was taken priſoner by Leopold Duke of Auſtria, and detained by him in durance, with hard and un-Prince-like uſage. Whileſt the Engliſh Clergy endeavoured the utmoſt for his Enlargement. And at laſt when a fine certain was ſet upon him to be paid for his Ranſome; they with much ado in two years time diſburſed the ſame. 1193. 5

Why a ſmall ſum great in that age.

29. The ſumme was an hundred and fifty thouſand marks, to be paid, part to the Duke of Auſtria, part to Henry the ſixth, Sir-named the Sharpe, (Sure ſuch our Richard found him) Emperor of Germany. Some will wonder that the weight of ſuch a ſumme ſhould then ſway the back of the whole Kingdome, (putting many Churches to the ſale of their ſilver Chalices) having ſeen in our age one City in few dayes advance a larger proportion; But let ſuch conſider,

1. The money was never to return, not made over by Bils of Exchange, but ſent over in ſpecie, which made it ariſe the more heavily. For ſuch ſummes may be ſaid in ſome ſort to be but lent, not loſt (as to the Common-wealth) which are not exported, but ſpent therein in the circulation of Trading.
2. A third of ſilver went then more to make a marke then now adayes, witneſs their groats, worth our ſix pence in the intrinſick value.
3. Before trading to the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, ſome hundred and fifty years ſince, very little the ſilver of England, in compariſon to the Banks of Modern Merchants.

However Hubert, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, with much diligence perfected the work, and on his ranſom paid, King Richard returned into England.

8. 1198. 31. Hubert Walter, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, had almoſt finiſhed a fair Covent for Monks at Lambeth, begun by Baldwin his Predeceſſor. But inſtantly the Monks of Canterbury are all up in anger againſt him; they feared that in proceſs of time Lambeth would prove Canterbury (viz. the Principal place of the Arch-Biſhops reſidence) to the great impairing of their Priviledges; the vicinity of Lambeth to the Court encreaſed their jealouſie: And now they ply the Pope with Petitions, and with what makes Petitions to take effect in the Court of Rome; never content till they had obtained (contrary to the Kings and Arch-Biſhops deſire) that the Covent at Lambeth was utterly demoliſhed; many bemoaning the untimely end thereof, before it was ended, murdered, as one may ſay, by malitious emulation. Lambeth Covent, why demoliſhed.

9. 1199. 32. The death of King Richard is variouſly reported, but this relation generally received, that he loſt his life on this ſad occaſion. A Viſcount in France, ſubject to King Richard, having found a vaſt Treaſure, (hid probably by ſome Prince, the Kings Predeceſſor) ſent part thereof to King Richard, reſerving the reſt to himſelf; who could he have concealed all, had made no diſcovery, and had he ſent all, had got no diſpleaſure; whileſt hoping by this middle-way to pleaſure the King, and profit himſelf, he did neither. King Richard diſdaines to take part for a gift, where all was due; and blame him not, if having lately bled ſo much money, he deſired to fill his empty veines again. The Viſcount fled into Poitou, whither the King following, ſtraightly beſieged him. King Richard his death.

33. The Caſtle being reduced to diſtreſs, a Souldier ſhoots a poyſoned arrow, contrary to the Law of Armes, being a ſharp arrow, from a ſtrong bow, is poyſon enough of it ſelf, without any other addition. But thoſe Laws of Armes, are onely mutually obſerved in orderly Armies (if ſuch to be found) and ſuch Laws outlawed by extremity; when the half-famiſhed Souldier, rather for ſpight then hunger, will champ a bullet. The arrow hits King Richard in the eye, who died ſome dayes after on the anguiſh thereof, having firſt forgiven the ſouldier that wounded him. By a poyſoned arrow.

34. By Will he made a tripartite diviſion of his body, and our * Author takes upon him to render a reaſon thereof. His Heart he bequeathed to Roan, becauſe he had ever found that City hearty and cordial unto him: His Body to be buried at Fount-Everard, at his Fathers feet, in token of his ſorrow and ſubmiſſion, that he deſired to be as it were his Fathers Foot-ſtool: His The three-fold diviſion of his corps.

Others more charitably conceive them buried there, because conveniently not to be carried thence, whose corruption required speedy interment. Another Monk telleth us, that his Heart was grossitudine [a] præstans, gross for the greatness thereof; which is contrary to the received opinion, that that part is the least in a valiant man, and the heart of a Lion (this Richard we know was called Cure de Lion, or Lion-hearted) less then the heart of an Hare. A ſcratch betwixt the Monks of Canterbury widened into a dangerous wound.

2. But now we enter on one of the ſaddeſt Tragedies that ever was acted in England, occaſioned by the Monks of Canterbury, after the deceaſe of Hubert, about the election of a new Arch-Biſhop. O that their Monkiſh controverſies had been confined to a Cloyſter, or elſe ſo enjoyned a ſingle life, that their local diſcords might never have begotten any National diſſentions. Behold (ſaith the Apoſtle) how great a matter a little fire [a] kindleth, eſpecially after a long drought, when every thing it meets is Tinder for it. All things at home, (beſides forein concurrences) conſpired to inflame the difference: King John rather ſtubborn then valiant, was unwilling to loſe, yet unable to keep his right; the Nobility potent and factious; the Clergie looking at London, but rowing to Rome; carrying Italian hearts in Engliſh bodies: the Commons preſſed with preſent grievances, generally deſirous of change; conceiving any alteration muſt be for their advantage, barely becauſe an alteration. All improved the diſcord ſo long, till Normandy was loſt; England embroyl'd; the Crown thereof invaſſalled; the Kings perſon deſtroyed; his poſterity endanger'd; Foreiners fetch'd in to inſult, and Native Subjects made Slaves to their inſolencies.

Two Arch-Biſhops choſen by the Monks of Canterbury, & the Pope propoundeth a third.

3. The yonger of the Monks of Canterbury, in the night time, without the Kings knowledg or conſent, choſe Reginald their ſub-prior, to be Arch-Biſhop. The Seniors of their Covent, ſolemnly, at a Canonical hour, with the approbation, yea commendation of the King, choſe John Gray, Biſhop of Norwich for the place; and both ſides poſt to Rome for the Popes confirmation; he finding them violent in their wayes; to prevent further faction, adviſed them to pitch on a third man: Stephen Langton, born in England, but bred in France, lately Chancellor of the Univerſity of Paris, and ſithence made Cardinal of S^t Chryſogone. Which expedient, or middle way, though carrying a plauſible pretence of peace, would by the conſequence thereof improve the Popes power, by invading the undoubted priviledges of King John. The Monks ſoberly excuſed themſelves, that they durſt not proceed to an election without the Kings conſent; but affrighted at laſt with the high threats of his Holineſs, menacing them with Excommunication; Stephen Langton was choſen accordingly: One that wanted not ability for the place, but rather had too much, as King John conceived, having his high ſpirit in ſuſpition, that he would be hardly managed.

The Pope ſends two Letters of contrary tempers to the King.

4. Then two Letters were diſpatch'd from the Pope, to the King. The firſt had nothing of buſineſs, but complement, and four gold Rings with ſeveral ſtones; deſiring him rather to minde the myſterie, then value the worth of the preſent; wherein the Round form ſignified Eternity, their Square Number, Conſtancy, the green Smaragd, Faith, the clear Saphir, Hope, the red Granat, Charity, the bright Topaz, good works; How pretious theſe ſtones were in themſelves, is uncertain; moſt ſure it is they proved Dear to King John, who might beſhrow his own fingers, for ever wearing thoſe Rings, and, as my * Author ſaith, ſoon after, gemmæ commutatæ in gemitus. For in the ſecond Letter, the Pope recommended Stephen Langton to the Kings acceptance, cloſely couching threats in caſe he refuſed him.

King John returns, raiſing his voice to too high a note at firſt.

5. King John returned an anſwer full of ſtomach and animoſity, that this was an intolerable encroachment, on his Crown and Dignity, which he neither could nor would digeſt, to have a ſtranger, unknown unto him, bred in forrein parts, familiar with the French King his ſworn enemy, obtruded upon him for an Arch-Biſhop. He minded the Pope that he had plenty of Prelates in the Kingdome of England, ſufficiently provided in all kind of knowledge, ledge, and that he need not to go abroad to seek for judgement and justice, intimating an intended defection from Rome, in case he was wronged. Other passages were in his letter, which deserved memory, had they been as vigorously acted, as valiantly spoken. Whereas now, (because he foully failed at last) judicious ears hearken to his words no otherwise, then to the empty brags of impotent anger, and the vain evaporations of his discontentment. However, he began high, not onely banishing the Monks of Canterbury, for their contempt, out of his Kingdome, but also forbidding Stephen Langton, from once entring into England.

Three Bishops by command from the Pope Interdict the whole Kingdome.

6. Hereupon Pope Innocent, the third, employed three Bishops, William of London, Eustace of Ely, and Mauger of Worcester, to give the King a serious admonition, and upon his denial, or delaying, to receive Stephen Langton, for Arch-Bishop, to proceed to Interdict the Kingdome of all Ecclesiasticall service, saving Baptisme of Children, Confession, and the Eucharist, to the dying in case of necessity, which by them was performed accordingly. No sooner had they Interdicted the Kingdome; but with Joceline Bishop of Bath, and Giles of Hereford, they, as speedily, as secretly, got them out of the Land, like adventurous Empiricks, unwilling to wait the working of their desperate Physick: except any will compare them to fearfull Boyes, which at the first tryall set fire to their squibs, with their faces backwards, and make fast away from them: but the worst was, they must leave their lands, and considerable moveables in the kingdome behind them.

Englands sad case under Interdiction.

7. See now on a sudden the sad face of the English Church. A face without a tongue; no singing of service, no saying of Masse, no reading of Prayers; as for preaching of Sermons, the lazinesse, and ignorance of those times, had long before interdicted them: None need pity the living, (hearing the impatient complaints of Lovers, for whose marriage no licence could be procured) when he looks on the dead, [a] who were buried in ditches, like dogs, without any prayers said upon them. True, a well informed Christian knows full well, that a corps though cast in a bogge, shall not stick there at the day of judgement; thrown into a wood, shall then finde out the way; buried by the high wayes side, is in the ready Road to the Resurrection. In a word, that whersoever a body be put or plac'd, it will equally take the Alarum at the last Trumpet: Yet seeing these People beleeved that a Grave in consecrated ground, was a good step to Heaven, and were taught that prayers after their death were essentiall to their Salvation, it must needs put strange fears into the heads and hearts, both of such which deceased, and their friends which survived them. And although afterwards at the intreaty of Stephen Langton, the Pope indulged to conventuall [b] Churches to have Service once a Week: Yet Parish Churches, where the peoples need was as much, and number far more, of souls, as dear in Gods sight, were debar'd of that benefit.

Two grand effects wrought by this Interdiction.

8. Some Priests were well pleased that the Interdiction for a time should continue, as which would render their persons and places in more reputation, and procure a higher valuation of Holy mysteries. Yea, this fasting would be wholesome to some souls, who afterwards would feed on Divine Service with greater appetite. Hereby two Grand effects were generally produc'd in the Kingdom. One, a terrible impression made in mens mindes of the Popes Power, which they had often heard of, and now saw and felt, whose long arm could reach from Rome all over England, and lock the doors of all Churches there; an Emblem, that in like manner, he had, or might have bolted the Gates of Heaven against them. The second, an Alienation of the peoples hearts from King John, all being ready to complain; O cruell Tyrant over the souls of his Subjects, whose wilfulnesse depriveth them of the means of their salvation.

King John's innocence & the Popes injustice in these proceedings.

9. However, if things be well weighed, King John will appear meerly passive in this matter, suffering unjustly, because he would not willingly part with his undoubted right. Besides, suppose him guilty, what equity was it, that so many thousands in England, who in this particular case, might better answer to the name of Innocent, then his Holinesse himself, should be involved in his punishment: God indeed sometimes most justly punisheth subjects, for the defaults of their Soveraignes; as in the case of the plague, destroying the people for Davids numbring of them. But it appears in the [a] Text, that formerly they had been offenders, and guilty before God, as all men, at all times are. But seeing the English at this present, had not injured his Holinesse, by any personall offence against him, the Pope by Interdicting the whole Realme, discovered as much emptinesse of Charity, as plenitude of Power. But some will say, his bounty is to be praised, that he permitted the people some Sacraments, who might have denied them all, in rigour, and with as much right; yea, 'tis well he Interdicted not Ireland also, as a Country under King Johns Dominion deserving to smart, for the perversinesse of their Prince placed over it.

Anno Dom. 1207. Anno Regni Joh. 10.

King John by name excommunicated.

10. But after the continuance of this Interdiction, a year and upwards, the horrour thereof began to abate: Use made ease, and the weight was the lighter, born by many shoulders. Yea, the Pope perceived that King John would never be weary with his single share, in a generall Burden, and therefore proceeded Nominatim to excommunicate him. For now his Holinesse had his hand in, having about this time excommunicated Otho the German Emperour; and if the Imperiall Cedar, had so lately been blasted with his Thunderbolts, no wonder if the English Oak felt the same fire. He also Assoiled all English subjects from their Allegiance to King John, and gave not onely Licence, but Incouragement to any Forreigners to invade the land, so that it should not onely be no sinne in them, but an expiating of all their other sinnes to conquer England. Thus the Pope gave them a Title, and let their own swords by Knight-service get them a Tenure.

1209. 10.

Yet is blessed with good successe under the Popes curse.

11. Five years did King John lie under this sentence of Excommunication, in which time we find him more fortunate in his Martiall Affairs, then either before or after. For he made a successefull voyage into Ireland, (as greedy a Grave for English Corps, as a bottomlesse Bag for their Coin) and was very triumphant in a welsh Expedition, and stood on honourable termes in all Forraine Relations. For as he kept Ireland under his feet, and Wales under his elbow; so he shak't hands in fast friendship with Scotland, and kept France at arms end, without giving hitherto any considerable Advantage against him. The worst was, not daring to repose trust in his Subjects, he was forced to entertain Forainers, which caused his constant anxiety; as those neither stand sure, nor go safe, who trust more to a staffe, then they lean on their legs. Besides, to pay these Mercenary Souldiers, he imposed unconscionable Taxes, both on the English, (Clergy especially) and Jews in the Kingdom. One Jew there was of [b] Bristoll, vehemently suspected for wealth, though there was no cleer Evidence thereof against him, of whom the King demanded ten thousand Marks of silver, and upon his refusall, commanded, that every day a Tooth, with intolerable torture should be drawn out of his head; which being done seven severall times, on the eight day he confessed his wealth, and payed the fine demanded; who yeelding sooner, had sav'd his teeth, or stubborn longer, had spar'd his money; now having both his Purse, and his Jaw empty by the Bargain. Condemn we here mans cruelty, and admire heavens justice; for all these summes extorted from the Jews, by temporall Kings, are but paying their Arrerages to God, for a debt they can never satisfie, namely the crucifying of Christ.

The Prophesie of Peter of Wakefield against K. John.

12. About the same time, one Peter of Wakefield in Yorkshire a Hermit, prophesied that John should be King of England, no longer then next Ascension-day, after which solemn Festivall (on which Christ mounted on his glorious Throne, took possession of his heavenly Kingdom) this Opposer of Christ should no longer enjoy the English Diadem: And as some report, he foretold foretold that none of King Johns linage ſhould after him be crowned in the Kingdom. The King called this Prophet an [a] Idiot-Knave: which deſcription of him implying a contradiction: the King thus reconciled, pardoning him as an Idiot, and puniſhing him as a Knave, with impriſonment in Korf-Caſtle. The fetters of the prophet gave wings to his propheſie, and whereas the Kings neglecting it, might have puft this vain Prediction into wind, men began now to ſuſpect it of ſome ſolidity, becauſe deſerving a wiſe Princes notice and diſpleaſure. Farre and neer it was diſperſed over the whole Kingdom, it being [b] generally obſerved, that the Engliſh nation are moſt ſuperſtitious in beleeving ſuch reports, which cauſeth them to be more common here then in other Countries. For as the Receiver makes the Thief, ſo popular credulity occaſioneth this Propheticall vanity, and Brokers would not ſet ſuch baſe ware to ſale, but becauſe they are ſure to light on chapmen.

14. 1213. King Johns ſubmiſſion to the Pope.

13. Leave we the perſon of this Peter in a dark Dungeon, and his credit as yet in the Twilight, betwixt Prophet, and Impoſtor to behold the miſerable condition of King John, perplexed with the daily preparation of the French Kings Invaſion of England, aſſiſted by many Engliſh Male-contents, and all the baniſh'd Biſhops. Good Patriots, who rather then the fire of their Revenge ſhould want fuel, would burn their own Countrey which bred them. Hereupon King John having his ſoul battered without, with forrain fears, and foundred within by the falſeneſſe of his Subjects, ſunk on a ſudden beneath himſelf, to an act of unworthy ſubmiſſion, and ſubjection to the Pope. For on Aſcenſion Eve, May 15. being in the town of Dover, (ſtanding as it were on tip-toes, on the utmoſt edge, brink, and labell of that Land, which now he was about to ſurrender) King John by an Inſtrument, or Charter, ſealed and ſolemnly delivered in the preſence of many Prelates and Nobles, to Pandulphus the Popes Legat, granted to God, and the Church of Rome, the Apoſtles Peter and Paul, and to Pope Innocent the third, and his Succeſſours the whole Kingdom of England and Ireland. And took an Eſtate thereof back again, yeelding and paying yeerly to the Church of Rome, (over and above the Peter-pence) a thouſand Marks ſterling, viz. 700. for England, and 300. for Ireland. In the paſſing hereof, this ceremony is obſervable, that the Kings Inſtrument to the Pope was * ſealed with a ſeal of Gold, and the Popes to the King (which I have beheld and peruſed, remaining amongſt many rarities in the Earl of Arundels Library) was ſealed with a ſeal of Lead. Such bargains let them look for, who barter with his Holineſſe, alwayes to be loſers by the contract. Thy ſilver (ſaith the [c] Prophet) is become droſs: and here was the change of Glaucus, and Diomedes made, as in the ſequel of the Hiſtory will appear.

*Both Inſtruments for the preſent were but ſealed with Wax, and the next yeer ſolemnly emboſſed with mettall, in the preſence of Nicholas the Popes Legat.

c Iſai. 1. 22

14. Yet we find not that this Fee-farme of a thouſand Marks was ever paid, either by K. John, or by his Succeſſours, but that it is all runne on the ſcore, even unto this preſent day. Not that the Pope did remit it out of his free bounty, but for other Reaſons was rather contented to have them uſe his power therein. Perchance ſuſpecting the Engliſh Kings would refuſe to pay it, he accounted it more honour not to demand it, then to be denied it. Or it may be his Holineſs might conceive, that accepting of this money might colourably be extended to the cutting him off from all other profits he might gain in the kingdome. The truth is, he did ſcorn to take ſo poor a revenue per annum out of two kingdoms, but did rather endeavour to convert all the profits of both Lands, to his own uſe, as if he had been ſeiſed of all in Demeſnes.

The Rent never paid the Pope, nor demanded by him.

15. At the ſame time, King John on his knees ſurrendred the Crown of England into the hands of Pandulphus, and alſo preſented him with ſome money, as the earneſt of His ſubjection, which the proud Prelate trampled under his [d] feet. A geſture applauded by ſome, as ſhewing how much his Holineſſe (whom he perſonated) ſlighted worldly wealth, caring as little for King Johns coin, as his Predeceſſour Saint [e] Peter did for the money of Simon Magus. Others, and especially H. Arch-Biſhop of Dublin then preſent, were both grieved, and angry thereat, as an intolerable affront to the King: and there wanted not thoſe, who condemn'd his pride and hypocriſie, knowing Pandulphus to be a moſt greedy griper (as appeared by his unconſcionable oppreſſion, in the Biſhoprick of Norwich, which was afterwards beſtowed upon him.) And perchance he trampled on it, not as being money, but becauſe no greater ſumme thereof. Five dayes (namely Aſcenſion-day, and four dayes after) Pandulphus kept the Crown in his poſſeſſion, and then reſtored it to King John, again. A long eclipſe of Royall luſtre; and ſtrange it is, that no bold Monk in his blundring Chronicles, did not adventure to place King Innocent, with his five dayes reigne, in the Catalogue of Engliſh Kings, ſeeing they have written what amounts to as much in this matter. Anno Dom. 1213. Anno Regni Joh. 14.

Peter the prophet hanged, whether unjuſtly, diſputed.

16. Now all the diſpute was, whether Peter of Wakefield had acquitted himſelf a true prophet, or no: The Romiz'd faction were zealous in his behalf; John after that day not being King in the ſame ſenſe, and Soveraignty as before; not free, but feodary; not abſolute, but dependent on the Pope, whoſe Legate poſſeſs'd the Crown for the time being, ſo that his prediction was true, in that lawfull latitude juſtly allowed to all Propheſies. Others, becauſe the King was neither naturally, nor civilly dead, condemn'd him of forgery; for which, by the Kings command, he was dragg'd at the horſe-tail from Corf-Caſtle, and with his ſonne [a] hang'd in the Town of Wareham. A puniſhment not undeſerved, if he foretold (as ſome report) that none of the line, or linage of King John, ſhould after be crowned in England; of whoſe off-ſpring ſome ſhall flouriſh, in free and full power on the Engliſh Throne, when the Chair of Peſtilence ſhall be burnt to aſhes: and neither Triple-Crown left at Rome to be worne, nor any head there, which ſhall dare to wear it.

The Interdiction of England relaxed. 17. Next year the Interdiction was taken off of the Kingdom, and a generall Jubilee of joy all over the Land. Baniſh'd Biſhops being reſtored to their Sees; Service, and Sacraments being adminiſtred in the Church as before. But, ſmall reaſon had King John to rejoyce, being come out of Gods Bleſſing, (of whom, before he immediately held the Crown) into the warm Sunne, or rather, ſcorching-heat of the Popes protection, which proved little beneficiall unto him. 1214. 15.

The Popes Legate arbitrates the arrears betwixt the King and Clergy. 18. A brawl happened betwixt him, and the baniſhed Biſhops (now returned home) about ſatisfaction for their Arrears, and reparation of their damages, during the Interdiction; all which terme the King had retained their revenues in his hands. To moderate this matter, Nicolas, a Tuſculane Cardinal and Legat, was imployed by the Pope: who after many meetings, and Synods to audit their Accounts, reduced all at laſt to the groſs ſumme of fourty thouſand Marks, the reſtoring whereof by the King unto them, was thus divided into three payments.

1. Twelve thouſand Marks Pandulphus carried over with him into France, and delivered them to the Biſhops, before their return.
2. Fifteen thouſand were paid down at the late meeting in Reading.
3. For the thirteen thouſand remaining, they had the Kings Oath, Bond, and other Sureties.

But then in came the whole crie of the reſt of the Clergy, who ſtayed all the while in the Land, bringing in the Bills of their ſeverall ſufferings, and loſſes ſuſtained, occaſioned by the Interdiction. Yea, ſome had ſo much avarice, and little conſcience, they could have been contented, the Interdiction had ſtill remained, untill all the accidentall damages were repaired. But Cardinall Nicolas averred them to amount to an incredible ſumme, impoſſible to bee paid, and unreaſonable to be demanded; adding withall, that in generall grievances, private men may be glad, if the main be made good unto them, nor deſcending to petty particulars, which are to be caſt out of courſe, as inconſiderable in a common calamity. Hereupon, and on ſome other occaſi-ons, much grudging, and juſtling there was, betwixt Stephen, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, and the Legat, as one in his judgement, and carriage, too propitious, and partiall to the Kings cauſe.

19. The remnant of this Kings Reign, afforded little Eccleſiaſtical Story, but what is ſo complicated with the Intereſt of State, that it is more proper for the Chronicles of the Common-wealth. But this is the brief thereof. The Barons of England demanded of King John, to deſiſt from that arbitrary and tyrannical power he exerciſed; and to reſtore King Edwards Laws, which his great Grand-father King Henrie the firſt had confirmed to the Church and State, for the general good of his Subjects: yea, and which he himſelf, when lately abſolved from the ſentence of Excommunication by Stephen Arch-Biſhop of Canterburie, had ſolemnly promiſed to obſerve. But King John, though at the firſt he condeſcended to their requeſts, afterwards repented of his promiſe, and refuſed the performance thereof. Hereupon the Barons took up Armes againſt him, and called in Lewis Prince of France, ſon to Philip Auguſtus, to their aſſiſtance, promiſing him the Crown of England for his reward.

The Barons rebel againſt King John.

16. 1215.

20. Yet the Pope endeavoured what lay in his power, to diſſwade Prince Lewis from this deſign, to which at firſt he encouraged him, and now forbad him in vain. For, where a Crown is the Game hunted after, ſuch hounds are eaſier laid on, then either rated, or hollowed off. Yea, ambition had brought this Prince into this Dilemma; that, if he invaded England, he was accurſed by the Pope; if he invaded it not, forſworn of himſelf, having promiſed upon oath, by ſuch a time to be at London. Over comes Lewis into England, and there hath the principal learning of the Land, the Clergie; the ſtrength thereof, the Barons; the wealth of the ſame, the Londoners, to joyn with him: Who but ill requited King John, for his late bounty to their City, in firſt giving them a [a] Mayor for their governour. Gualo the Popes new Legat, ſent on purpoſe, beſtirr'd himſelf with Book, Bell, and Candle; Excommunicating the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, with all the Nobility oppoſing King John, now in protection of his Holineſs. But the commonneſs of theſe curſes, cauſed them to be contemned; ſo that they were a fright to few, a mock to many, and an hurt to none.

King John thus diſtreſſed, ſent a baſe, degenerous, and unchriſtian-like embaſſage, to Admiralius Murmelius a Mahometan King of Morocco, then very puiſſant, and poſſeſſing a great part of Spain: offering him, on condition he would ſend him ſuccour, to hold the Kingdome of England as a vaſſal from him, and to receive the Law [b] of Mahomet. The Moor, marvellouſly offended with his offer, told the Embaſſadors, that he lately had read Pauls Epiſtles, which for the matter liked him very well, ſave onely that Paul once renounced that faith wherein he was born, and the Jewiſh profeſſion. Wherefore he neglected King John, as devoid both of piety and policie, who would love his liberty, and diſclaim his Religion. A ſtrange tender, if true. Here, whileſt ſome alledg in behalf of King John, that caſes of extremity excuſe counſels of extremity (when liberty is not left to chuſe what is beſt, but to ſnatch what is next, neglecting future ſafety for preſent ſubſiſtence) we onely liſten to the ſaying of Solomon [c] Oppreſſion maketh a wiſe man mad. 23. It is hard to give the true character of this Kings conditions. For, we onely behold him through ſuch light, as the Friers his foes ſhow him in: who ſo hold the candle, that with the ſhaddow thereof they darken his virtues, and preſent onely his vices. Yea, and as if they had alſo poiſoned his memory, they cauſe his faults to ſwell to a prodigious greatneſs, making him with their pens more black in conditions, then the Morocco-King (whoſe aid he requeſted) could be in complexion. A murtherer of his Nephew Arthur; a defiler of the wives and daughters of his Nobles; ſacrilegious in the Church; profane in his diſcourſe; wilful in his private reſolutions; various in his publick promiſes; falſe in his faith to men, and wavering in his Religion to God. The favourableſt expreſſion of him falls from the pen of Roger Hoveden:

Perchance he had been eſteemed more pious, if more proſperous; it being an uſual (though uncharitable) error, to account miſchances to be miſdeeds. But we leave him quietly buried in Worceſter Church, and proceed in our ſtorie.

Henry the third under Tutors and Governors.

24. Henry, the third of that name, his Son, ſucceeded him, being but ten years old, and was Crowned at Gloceſter, by a moiety of the Nobility and Clergie, the reſt ſiding with the French Lewis. Now, what came not ſo well from the mouth of Abijah the ſon, concerning his father Reboboam, poſterity may, no leſs truly, and more properly pronounce of this Henry, even when a man, [e] He was but a childe, and tender-hearted. But, what ſtrength was wanting in the Ivie it ſelf, was ſupplied by the Oaks, his ſupporters, his Tutors and Governours; firſt, William Mareſhall, Earl of Pembroke, and after his death, Peter, Biſhop of Wincheſter. But, of theſe two Protectors ſucceſſively, a ſword-man, and a Church-man; the latter left the deeper impreſſion on this our King Henry, appearing more Religious then reſolute; devout then valiant. His Reign was not onely long for continuance, fifty ſix years, but alſo thick for remarkable mutations happening therein.

[e] 2 Chro. 16. 7.

Hen. 3. Obit. 2.

By what means King Henry ſo quickly recovered his Kingdom:

25. Within little more then a twelvemonth, he recovered the entire poſſeſſion of his Kingdom, many things concurring to expedite ſo great an alteration. Firſt, the inſolency of the French, diſobliging the Engliſh by their cruelty, and wantonneſs. Secondly, the inconſtancy of the Engliſh (if ſtarting loyalties return to its lawful Soveraign may be ſo termed) who, as for their own turns they call'd in Lewis, ſo for their turns they caſt him out. Thirdly, the innocence of Prince Henry, whoſe harmleſs age, as it attracted love to him on his own account, ſo he ſeemed alſo hereditarily to ſucceed to ſome pitty, as the Son of a ſuffering Father. Fourthly, the wiſdom and valor; counſel counſel and courage of William Earl of Pembroke, his Protector; who, having got the French Lewis out of his covert of the City of London, into the champion field, ſo maul'd him at the fatal battel of Lincoln, that ſoon after the ſaid Lewis was fain, by the colour of a compoſition, to qualifie his retreat (not to ſay his flight) into the honour of a departure. Laſtly, and chiefly, the Mercy of God to an injured Orphan, and his Juſtice that detained right, though late, yet at laſt, ſhould return to its proper owner.

Our principal deſign in writing this Kings life.

26. But it were not onely uncivil, but injurious for us to meddle with theſe matters, proper to the pens of the civil Hiſtorians. We ſhall therefore confine our ſelves principally to take notice in this Kings Reign, as of the unconſcionable extortions of the Court of Rome, on the one ſide, to the detriment of the King and Kingdom: ſo of the defence which the King, as well as he could, made againſt it. Defence, which, though too faint and feeble, fully to recover his right, from ſo potent oppreſſion; yet did this good, to continue his claim, and preſerve the title of his priviledges, until his Son, and Succeſſors, in after-ages, could more effectually reſcue the rights of their Crown, from Papal uſurpation.

Occaſions of the Popes intolerable extortions.

27. Indeed at this time many things imboldened the Pope (not over-baſhful of himſelf) to be the more buſie in the collecting of money. Firſt, the troubleſomneſs of the times, and beſt fiſhing for him in ſuch waters. Secondly, the ignorance of moſt, and the obnoxiouſneſs of ſome of the Engliſh Clergie. Now, ſuch as had weak heads, muſt finde ſtrong backs; and thoſe that led their lives looſe, durſt not carry their purſes tied, or grudg to pay dear for a connivence at their viciouſneſs. Thirdly, the minority of King Henry, and (which was worſe) his non-age after his full-age; ſuch was his weakneſs of ſpirit, and lowneſs of reſolution. Laſtly, the Pope conceiving that this King got his Crown under the countenance of his excommunicating his enemies, thought that either King Henrie's weakneſs could not ſee, or his goodneſs would winke at his intolerable extortions; which, how great ſoever, were but a large ſhiver of that loaf, which he had given into the Kings hand. Preſuming on the premiſſes, Gualo the Popes Legat, by his Inquiſitors throughout England, collected a vaſt ſumme of money of the Clergie, for their miſdemenours; Hugo Biſhop of Lincoln, paying no leſs for his ſhare, then a thouſand [a] marks ſterling to the Pope, and an hundred to this his Legat. Yet, when this Gualo departed, ſuch as hated his dwelling here, grieved at his going hence, becauſe fearing a worſe in his room, chuſing rather to be ſuck'd by full, then freſh flies; hoping that thoſe already gorg'd, would be afterwards leſs greedy.

A new deſign.

28. And being now to give the Reader a ſhort account of the long Reign of this King; I ſhall alter my proceedings, embracing a new courſe which hitherto I have not, nor hereafter ſhall venture upon. Wherein I hope the variation may be not onely pleaſant, but profitable to the Reader, as ſcientifical and ſatisfactory in it ſelf; namely, I will for the preſent leave off conſulting with the large and numerous Printed or Manuſcript Authors of that Age, and betake my ſelf only to the Tower-Records, all authentically atteſted under the hands of William Ryley Norroy, keeper of that pretious Treaſury.

Good Text, what ere the Comments.

29. When I have firſt exemplified them, I ſhall proceed to make ſuch obſervations upon them, as, according to my weakneſs, I conceive of greateſt concernment; being confident that few conſiderables in that Age (which was the criſis of Regal and Papal power in this Land) will eſcape our diſcovery herein.

4. 1220. Serenity in the State.

30. Onely I deſire a pardon for the premiſing of this Touch of State-matters. At this inſtant the Common-wealth had a great ſerenity, as lately cleared from ſuch active ſpirits, who nick-named the calme and quiet of Peace, a ſloth of Government. Such Falcatius de Brent, and and others, who had merited much in setting this Henry the third on the Throne; and it is dangerous when Subjects conferr too great benefits on their Sovereigns; for afterwards their mindes are onely made capable of receiving more reward, not doing more duty. These were offended, when such Lands and Castles, which by the heat of war had unjustly been given them, by Peace were justly took away from them, finding such uprightness in the King, that his Power of Protection, would not be made a wrong doer. But now the old stock of such male-contents, being either worne out with age, or ordered otherwise into Obedience, all things were in an universal tranquillity, within the first seven years of this Kings Reign.

Henrici 3. 7 — 1214

HEre we begin with the Kings Precept to the Sheriff of Buckinghamſhire, conſiderable for the Rarity thereof, though otherwiſe but a matter of private concernment.

A remarkable writ of the King to the Sheriff of Buckinghamshire.

Vic. Bucks. Precipimus tibi quod Emme de Pinkney ux. Laur. Pinkney, qui excommunicatus eſt, eo quod prædict. Emmam affectione maritali non tractavit, eid. Emme rationabil. Eſtoverz, invenias, donec idem Laur. Vir ſuus eam tanquam ſuam tractaverit.

To the high Sheriff of Buckinghamſhire. We command you concerning Emme de Pinkney, Wife of Laurence Pinkney, who is excommunicated, becauſe he did not uſe the foreſaid Emme with Affection befitting a Huſband, that you find for the ſaid Emme Eſtover in reaſonable proportion, untill the ſaid Laurence her Husband ſhall uſe her as becometh his Wife.

Of this Laurence Pinkney I can ſay nothing: onely I find his Family ancient, and Barons of [a] Weedon in Northamptonshire. It seemeth strange he should be excommunicated for not loving usage of his Wife, no Incontinencie appearing (proved against him:) except his carriage was Cruell in a high degree. By Estover, in our Forrest Towns, we only understand, A certain allowance of Wood; though the extent of the word be far larger, importing Nourishment, or maintenance in Meat and Cloth, as a learned [b] Lawyer hath observed. This it seems being denied by her husband, the King enjoyneth the Sheriff, that he should appoint the said Emme Pinkney reasonable Alimony, in proportion, no doubt, to her Portion and her Husbands estate. 1214 7

Cum etiam ſi adeptus eſſet prædictus Nicholaus poſſeſſionem terræ prædictæ, per aſſiſam prædictam, beneficium Peticionis Hæreditatis prædictis puellis plane ſuppeteret in Curia noſtra, per Breve de Recto; maxime cum per litteras de morte Anteceſſoris agatur de poſſeſſione, & non de proprietate, & ex officio veſtro in caſu propoſito nihil aliud ad vos pertinebat, niſi tantũ de ipſius Nicholai Legitimitate probationes admittere, & ipſum cum litteris veſtris Teſtimonialibus ad Iuſticiarios noſtros remittere. De conſilio igitur Magnatum & fidelium nobis aſſiſtentium, vobis mandamus firmiter injungentes, quatenus non obſtante appellatione præmiſſa, non differatis pro eo ſententiare, ipſum ad Iuſticiarios noſtros remittentes, cum litteris veſtris teſtimonialibus, ut eis de loquela poſtmodum agitata, poſtmodum poſſint ſecundum legem & conſuetudinem terræ noſtræ Hiberniæ Juſticiæ plenitudinem exhibere. Teſte Rege apud Gloceſter 19. die Novembris.

3. The ſumme of this Inſtrument is this. One Nicholas de Feld ſueing for a portion of ground detained from him by the Abbot of S^t. Thomas in Dublin, (founded and plentifully endowed in memory of Thomas Becket) had Baſtardy objected againſt him. The clearing hereof was by the Kings Iudges remitted to the Courts Eccleſiaſticall, where the ſaid Nicholas produced effectuall proofs for his Legitimation. But upon the appeal of two minor-daughters of the Father of the ſaid Nicholas, who never before appeared, and who (if wronged) had their remedy at Common-Law, by a VVrit of Right, the matter was by the Arch-biſhop of Dublin transferred to the Court of Rome.

The effect of the Inſtrument.

4. The King ſaith in this his Letter, that he did much admire thereat, and (though all Intereſts expreſſe themſelves to their own advantage) intimates the Act not uſuall. And whereas he ſaith, that the example would be pernicious; it ſeems, if this were a leading caſe, the Kings deſire was it ſhould have none to follow it, peremptorily injoyning the Arch-biſhop (notwithſtanding the aforeſaid Appeal to the Pope) to proceed to give Sentence on the behalf of the ſaid Nicholas; & not to derive the Kings undoubted right to a forreign Power.

Appeale to the Pope prohibited.

5. Indeed the Kings of England were ſo Creſt-fallen, or rather Crown-fallen in this Age, that the forbidding of ſuch an Appeal, appeareth in him a daring deed. Eſt aliquid prodire tenus; Eſſayes in ſuch nature were remarkable, conſidering the inundation of the Papall Power. Green Leaves in the depth of VVinter, may be more then full Flowers from the ſame root in the Spring. It ſeems ſome Royall Sap ſtill remained in the Engliſh Sceptre, that it durſt oppoſe the Pope in ſo high a degree.

The time makes it the more remarkable.

19 | 1235

6. In this year 1235. the CAURSINES firſt came into England, proving the Peſts of the Land, and Bane of the people therein. Theſe were Italians by Birth, terming themſelves the Pope's Merchants, driving no other Trade then Letting out money, great Banks whereof they brought over into England; differing little from the Iews, ſave that they were more mercileſs to their Debtours. Now becauſe the Pope's Legate was all for ready money, when any Tax by Levy, Commutation of Vows, Tenths, Diſpenſations, &c. were due to the Pope, from Prelate, Convents, Prieſts, or Lay perſons, theſe CAURSINES inſtantly furniſhed them with preſent Coin upon their ſolemn Bonds and Obligations: one form whereof we have inſerted.

Caurſines what they were.

Anno Dom. 1235 | Anno Regis Henrici 3. 19

To all that ſhall ſee the preſent Writing, Thomas the Prior & the Convent of Barnwell wiſh health in the Lord. Know that we have borrowed and received at London, for our ſelves, profitably to be expended for the Affaires of our Church, from Franciſco and Gregorio, for them and their Partners, Citizens and Merchants of Millain, a hundred and four Marks of lawfull Money Sterling, thirteen ſhillings four pence ſterling being counted to every Mark. Which ſaid one hundred and four Marks we promiſe to pay back on the Feaſt of S^t. Peter ad Vincula, being the firſt day of Auguſt, at the New Temple in London, in the year 1235. And if the ſaid money be not throughly paid, at the time and place aforeſaid, we bind our ſelves to pay to the foreſaid Merchants, or any one of them, or their certain Atturney, for every ten Marks, forborn two months, one Mark of money for recompence of the Damages, which the foreſaid Merchants may incur by the not-payment of the money unto them, ſo that both Principall, Damages, and Expences, as above expreſſed, with the Expences of one Merchant with his Horſe and Man, untill ſuch time as the aforeſaid money be fully ſatisfied. For Payment of Principal, Intereſt, Damages and Expences, we oblige our ſelves, and our Church and Succeſſours, and all our Goods, and the Goods of our Church, moveable or immoveable, Eccleſiaſticall, or Temporall, which we have, or ſhall have, whereſoever they ſhall be found, to the foreſaid Merchants, and their Heirs; and do recognize and acknowledge that we poſſeſſe and hold the ſame Goods from the ſaid Merchants by way of Courteſy, untill the Premiſes be fully ſatisfied. And we renounce for our ſelves, and Succeſſours, all help of CANON and CIVILL LAW, all Priviledges, and Clark-ſhip, the Epiſtle of S^t. Adrian, all Cuſtomes, Statutes, Lectures, Indulgences, Priviledges, obtained for the King of England, from the See Apoſtolick: as alſo we renounce the Beneſit of all Appeales, or Inhibition from the King of England, with all other Exceptions real or Perſonal, which may be objected againſt the Validity of this Inſtrument. All theſe things we promiſe faithfully to obſerve: In witneſſe whereof we have ſet to the Seal of our Convent. Dated at London, die quinto Elphegi, in the year of Grace 1235.

Sure bind, ſure find. Here were Cords enough to hold Sampſon himſelf, an order taken they ſhould never be cut or unti'd, the Debtour depriving himſelf of any relief, ſave by full payment.

Neceſſary obſervations.

7. It will not be amiſſe, to make ſome brief Notes on the former Obligation; it being better to write on it, then to be written in it, as the Debtour concerned therein.

One hundred and four Marks] the od four ſeem added for Intereſt.

Feaſt of S^t. Peter ad Vincula] The Popiſh Tradition ſaith that Eudoxia the Empreſs, Wife to Theodoſius the Younger, brought two great Chains, wherewith Herod impriſoned S^t. Peter, from Ieruſalem to Rome, where they are reported ſeen at this day, and a Solemn Feſtivall kept on the firſt of Auguſt (the quarter-pay-day of Romes Revenues) in Memoriall thereof. But the Name of LAMMAS hath put out S^t. Peter's Chains in our Engliſh Almanack.

New Temple at London] in Fleet-ſtreet, founded by the Knights Templers, and dedicated by Heraclius Patriarch of Ieruſalem 1185. Called New in relation to antient Temple, (leſſe and leſſe convenient) they had formerly in Oldburn.

And our certain Atturney;] Nuncius in the Latine, being one imployed to ſolicite their Suit.

All the Goods of our Church moveable and immoveable] Hence oftentimes they were forced to ſell their Chalices and Altar-plate, to pay the Bond, and ſecure the reſt of their Goods, for theſe Creditours.

CANON

Anno Regis Hen. 3. 19 | Anno Dom. 1235

CANON and CIVILL LAW] Common Law not mentioned herein, with which theſe CAURSINES, being Forrainers, would have nothing to do.

Epiſtle of S^t. Adrian] This ſeems to be ſome Indulgence granted by Pope Adrian, the fourth perchance; whereby Churches indicted found ſome favour againſt their Creditours.

Die quinto Elphegi] I am not Datary enough to underſtand this. I know Elphegus to be Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and Martyr, and his day kept the nineteenth of April: ſo that the money was borrowed but for three moneths; ſo ſoon did the Payment, or heavy Forfeiture in default thereof, return.

8. Theſe CAURSINES were generally hated for their Extorſions. Some will have them called CAURSINES quaſi CAUSA URSINI, ſo Beariſh and cruell in their cauſes: others, CAURSINI quaſi CORRASINI, from ſcraping all together. But theſe are but barbarous Alluſions, though beſt becoming ſuch baſe practiſes. Caurſines whence ſo called.

9. Mean time the CAURSINES cared not what they were called, being a-kin to the cunning Creature, which faireth beſt when curſed, and were indeed Lords of the Land according to Scripture rule, the Borrower is ſervant to the Lender. Many of the Laity, more of the Clergy and Convents, and the King himſelf, being deeply indebted unto them. Indeed Roger Black that Valiant, Learned, and Pious Biſhop of London, once excommunicated theſe CAURSINES for their Oppreſſion: but they appealing to the Pope (their good friend,) forced him, after much moleſtation, to deſiſt. Foxes hap and happineſſe.

10. Theſe CAURSINES were more commonly known by the Name of LOMBARDS, from Lombardy the place of their Nativity, in Italy. And although they deſerted England on the decaying of the Pope's power and profit therein; yet a double memoriall remaineth of them. One of their Habitation, in Lumbard-ſtreet in London: the other of their Imployment, A LOMBARD unto this day ſignifying a Bank for Vſury, or Pawns, ſtill continued in the Low-Countries and elſewhere. Caurſines and Lombards the ſame.

11. Mean time one may lawfully ſmile at the Pope's Hypocriſy, forbidding Vſury as a ſin ſo deteſtable under ſuch heavy penalties in his Canon Law, whilſt his own Inſtruments were the moſt unconſtionable Practiſers thereof without any controll. Deep Hypocriſy.

22 | 1238 12. Otho, Cardinal, Deacon of S^t. Nicholas, was ſent the Pope's Legate into England, and going to [a] Oxford, took up his Lodging in the Abbey of Oſney. To him the Scholars in Oxford ſent a Preſent of Victuals before dinner; and after dinner, came to tender their attendance unto him. The Porter being an Italian, demanded their buſineſs: who anſwered him, that they came to wait on the Lord Legate; promiſing themſelves a courteous Reception, having read in [b] Scripture, A man's gift maketh room for him: though here contrary to expectation they were not received. Call it not Clowniſhneſs in the Porter (becauſe bred in the Court of Rome;) but carefulneſſe for the ſafety of his Maſter. The Preſent of the Oxford Scholars to the Legate, a M. Paris in Anno 1238. Ran. Ciſtrenſis, l. ult. c. 34. & T. Walſingham in Hypodigm. Neuſtria. [b] Prov. 18. 16. Ill requited.

13. But whilſt the Porter held the Doore in a dubious poſture, betwixt open and ſhut, the Scholars forced their entrance. In this juncture of time, it unluckily happened that a poor Iriſh Prieſt begged an Almes, in whoſe face the Clark of the Kitchin caſt ſcalding-water taken out of the Caldron. A Welſh Clerk beholding this, bent his Bow (by this time the Scholars had got Weapons) and ſhot the Clark of the Kitchin ſtark dead on the place.

14. This Man thus killed, was much more then his plain place promiſed him to be, as no meaner then the Brother of the Legate himſelf; who being ſuſpicious (O how jealous is guiltineſſe!) that he might find Italy in England, and fearing to be poiſoned, appointed his Brother to over-ſee all food for his own eating. And now the three Nations of Iriſh, Welſh, and Engliſh, fell down-right on the Italians. The Legate fearing (as they came from the ſame The Legate's Brother kill'd by the Scholars of Oxford

Anno Dom. 1238 Anno Regis Henrici 3. 22

VVombe) to be sent to the same Grave with his Brother, secured himself fast locked up in the Tower of Osney Church, and there sat still and quiet, all attired in his Canonicall Cope.

The Legate flies to the King.

15. But he, it seems, trusted not so much to his Canonicall Cope, as the Sable Mantle of Night; under the Protection whereof he got out, with a Guide, to make his escape; not without danger of drowning in the dark, being five times to crosse the River then swelling with late rain, as much as the Scholars with anger. He made Fordes where he found none, all known passages being way-laid; and heard the Scholars following after, railing on, and calling him Vsurer, Simoniack, Deceiver of the Prince, Oppressour of the people, &c. whilst the Legate wisely turned his Tongue into Heeles, spurring with might and main to Abington, where the Court then lay. Hither he came being out of all breath and Patience; so that entring the King's presence, his Tears and Sighs were fain to relieve his Tongue, not able otherwise to expresse his Miseries: whom the King did most affectionatly compassionate.

Oxford in a sad condition.

16. And now Woe to the poor Clergy of Oxford, when both temporall and spirituall Armes are prepared against them. Next day the King sent the Earle Warren with Forces against them, and a double Commission, Eripere & arripere: to deliver the remainder of the Italians (little better then besieged in Osney Abbey) and to seize on the Scholars; of whom thirty, with one Otho Legista (forward it seems in the Fray against the Legate his Name-sake) were taken Prisoners, and sent like Felons, bound in Carts, to VValling ford-prison, and other places of Restraint.

Interdicted by the Legate

17. Nor was the Legate lazy the while, but summoning such Bishops as were neerest him, interdicted the Vniversity of Oxford, and excommunicated all such as were partakers in the Tumult; which were not the young fry of Scholars, but Clerks in Order, and many of them Beneficed, and now deprived of the profit of their Livings.

Who returns to London.

18. From Abington the Legate removed to London, lodging at Durham-house in the Strand: the King commanding the Major of London to keep him as the Apple of his eye, with watch and ward constantly about him. Hither he assembled the Bishops of the Land, to consider and consult about Reparation for so high an Affront.

The Bishops intercede for the University.

19. The Bishops pleaded hard for the Vniversity of Oxford (as being the place wherein most of them had their Education.) They alledged it was Secunda Ecclesia a second Church, being the Nursery of Learning and Religion. They pleaded also that the Churlishnesse of the Porter let in this sad Accident, increased by the Indiscretion of those in his own Family: adding also, that the Clerks of Oxford had deeply smarted, by their long Durance and Sufferings, for their fault therein.

All are reconciled.

20. Mollified with the Premisses, the Legate at last was over-intreated to pardon the Clergy of Oxford, on their solemn Submission; which was thus performed. They went from S^t. Paul's in London to Durham-house in the Strand, no short Italian, but an English long Mile, all on foot; the Bishops of England, for the more State of the Businesse, accompanying them, as partly accessary to their fault for pleading in their behalf. When they came to the Bishop of Carlile's (now VVorcester) house, the Scholars went the rest of their way bare-foot, sine Capis & Mantulis, which some understand, without Capes or Cloaks. And thus the great Legate at last was really reconciled unto them.

Bishops ancient Innes in London.

21. The mention of the house of the Bishop of Carlile, minds me how, anciently, every Bishop (as all principall Abbots) had a House belonging to their See (commonly called their Inne) for them to lodge in when their occasions summoned them to London. Not to mention those which still retain their Names, as VVinchester, Durham, Ely, &c. We will only observe such, which are swallowed up into other Houses, conceiving it charitable to rescue their Memory from Oblivion.

a Luke 16.9. A valiant offer.

22. Come we now to preſent the Reader with another offer of the Kings, (I fear it was not much more,) to repreſſe Papal oppreſſion.

25 1241 [b] Rex dilecto ſibi in Chriſto Archidiacono Glouc. Salutem. Significavimus, & etiam viva voce expoſuimus Magiſtro P. Rubeo, Nuncio Domini Papæ, quod non eſt intentionis noſtræ, nec etiam volumus aliquatenus ſuſtinere, quod vel viros Relligioſos vel Clericum aliquem ad contributionem faciendam ad opus Domini Papæ compellant. Et ideo vobis mandamus inhibentes diſtricte, ne ad mandatum ipſius Magiſtri Petri vel ſuorum, viros religioſos ſeu Clericos ad contributionem prædictam faciendam aliqua cenſura Eccleſiaſtica compellatis. Sciturí quod ſi ſecus egeritis, nos contra vos tanquam perturbatorem Pacis Eccleſiaſticæ, quam conſervare tenemur, modis quibus expedire viderimus, procedemus. Teſte Rege apud Glouc. 11. die Iunij.

The King to his beloved in Chriſt the Archdeacon of Gloceſter, Greeting. We have ſignified, & alſo by word of mouth have declared to Mr. P. Rubeus, Nuncio to the Lord the Pope, that it is not our intention, nor will we any wayes endure it, that they ſhall compell Religious Men, or any Clerk, to make a contribution, to ſupply the occaſions of the Lord the Pope. And therefore we command you, ſtrictly forbidding, that at the command of the ſame Mr. Peter, or any of his officers, you compel not any Religious Men, or Clerks, by any Eccleſiaſtical cenſures to make the aforeſaid Contribution. Knowing that if you do otherwiſe, we ſhall proceed againſt you, by means we ſhall think fit, as againſt the Diſturber of the Peace of the Church, which we are bound to preſerve. Witneſſe the King at Gloceſter, the 11. of Iune.

b Pat. 25. of Henry the third, mem. 6.

By the way, a Nuncio differed from a Legate, almoſt as a Lieger from an extraordinary Ambaſſadour; who though not ſo ample in his power, was as active in his progging, to advance the profit of the Pope his Maſter.

23. This Inſtrument acquainteth us with the Method uſed by him in mannaging his money matters. Such as refuſed to pay his demands, were proceeded againſt by Church Cenſures, ſuſpenſion, excommunication, &c. The cunning Italian (to decline the odium) imploying the Archdeacons to denounce the ſame in their reſpective Iuriſdictions. Yet this went under the notion of a voluntary contribution, as free as fire from Flint, forced with Steel and ſtrength out of it.

Spoken like a King.

24. Whereas the King counted himſelf bound to preſerve the Peace of the Church, the words well became his mouth. They ſeem to me to look like DEFENDER OF THE FAITH as yet but in the Bud, and which in due time might grow up to amount to as much. For though every Chriſtian in his calling muſt keep the peace of the Church; Kings have a coercive power over the diſturbers thereof.

Say and do, beſt.

25. This Royal reſolution, to reſiſt the oppreſſing of his Subjects, was good as propounded, better if performed. I find no viſible effect thereof: but we may believe, it made the Popes Mil go the ſlower, though it did not wholy hinder his grinding the faces of the Clergy. This Patent is dated from Gloceſter, more loved of King Henry then London it ſelf, as a ſtrong and loyal City, where he was firſt crowned, and afterwards did often reſide.

A Penſion given by the Pope to an Engliſh Earle.

26. Amongſt the thouſands of pounds which the Pope carried out of England, I meet onely with three hundred Marks yearly, which came back again as a private Boon, beſtowed on an Engliſh Knight, Sir Reginald Mohun, by Pope Innocent the fourth, then keeping his Court at Lyons in France. And becauſe theſe are veſtigia ſola retrorſum, it will not be amiſſe to inſert the whole Story thereof, as it is in an ancient French Manuſcript, pertaining to the Family of the Mohuns.

Quant Sire Reinalda voit Ceo faitz il paſſa a la Court de Rome que adonques fuiſt a Lions, purconfirmer & ratifer ſa novelle Abbay a grand honor de lui a touz joues & fuiſt en la Courte le deniergne en quareſme quant lenchaunce loffice del meſſe Lætare Ieruſalem al quen jour luſage de la Court eſte que la poiſtoille doa a plus valiant & a plus honorable home qui puit eſtre trovez en la deſte Courte une Roſe ou une floretta de fin or donquez ilz ſercherent tote le Courte entroverent Ceſti Reinald pur le plus noble de toute la Courte a oui le Pape Innocent donna Celle roſe ou floretta dor & la Papa lui Damanda quil home il fuiſt en ſon pais il reſpondi ſimple bacheleri, bean fitz fetz la pape Celle roſe ou floretta unquez ne fuiſt donez fors an Rois ou an Dukes an a Counteſe pour ceo nous voluns que vous ſons le Counte de Eſt Ceo eſt Somerſet Reinald reſpondi & Aiſi OSaincts piere ieo nuy dout le mom meinteyner lapos ſoille donques lui dona ducent mariz per annum receiver ſur Cantee ſaint Paule de Londres de ces deneires d'Engleterre pour ſon honor mainteyner de quen donna il reporta Bulles que enquore autent en plomps, &c. en ſemblement odue moltes dis aultres bulles confirmatione de ſa novelle Abbay de Newham a pres quen jour il porta la roſe ou floretta en les armes.

It is as needleſs, as difficult, to tranſlate this Bull verbatim, being of baſe, obſolete, and ill-pointed French; ſufficeth it, that this is the ſumme thereof. The Pope uſed on the Lords day called, Lætare Ieruſalem, ſolemnly to beſtow a conſecrated Roſe, on the moſt Honorable perſons, preſent at Maſſe with his Holineſſe. Enquiry being made, the Roſe was conferred on Sir Reginald Mohun, as the beſt extracted in the preſent Congregation.

But ſeeing that Roſe uſed alwayes to be given to Kings, Dukes, and Earles at leaſt (the loweſt form of Coronetted Nobility in that Age) his Holineſſe underſtanding the ſame Sir Reginald to be but a plain Knight Bachelour, created him the Earle of Eſt, that is, (ſaith this Bull) of Somerſet; and for the better ſupport of his Honour, he allowed him three hundred Marks out of the pence of England (underſtand the Peter-Pence) as the moſt certain Papal Revenue in the Land.

By this Bull the ſame Sir Reinald was made a Count Apoſtolick, whereby he had the Priviledges to appoint publick Notaries, and to legitimate Baſtards on ſome Conditions. King Henry the third was ſo far from excepting againſt this Act, that he highly honoured him. And yet Maſter Camden, ſometimes [a] acknowledgeth, ſometimes denieth [b] him for an Engliſh Earle. Now though the ſaid Sir Reginald did modeſtly decline the Pope's Honour for want of Maintenance, yet had he at that time no fewer then forty three Knights Fees held of his Caſtle of Dunſtar. I have nothing elſe to adde herein, ſave that the ancient Armes of the Mohuns, viz. a hand in a Maunch holding a Flower de luce (in that Age more faſhionable then a Roſe, in Heraldry) ſeems to relate to this occaſion; which their Family afterward changed into a Sable Croſſe, in the Atchievements in the Holy land, born at this day by the truely honourable the Lord Mohun, Baron of Oakehampton, as deſcended from this Family.

28. This year died Robert Grouthead, Biſhop of Lincoln, born at Stodebrook in Suffolk, Natalibus pudendis ſaith my [c] Authour, of Shamefull extraction, intimating ſuſpicion of Baſtardy: though the parents, rather then the child, have cauſed a bluſh thereat. He got his Surname from the greatneſs of his head, having large Stoage to receive, and ſtore of Braines to fill it: bred for a time in Oxford, then in France: a great and generall Scholar, (Bale reckoning up no fewer then two hundred books of his making) and a great oppoſer of the Popes oppreſſion, which now grew intolerable.

The death of Biſhop Grouthead.
c Biſhop Godwin in Catalogue of Linc. Biſh.

29. For it appeared by inquiſition made the laſt year, that the Eccleſiaſticall Revenues of Italians in England (whereof many were Boyes, more Blockheads, all Aliens) amounted per annum unto threeſcore and ten thouſand Marks: whereas the Kings Income at the ſame time was hardly [d] twenty thouſand. Biſhop Grouthead offended thereat, wrote Pope Innocent the fourth ſuch a Iuniper Letter, taxing him with extortion, and other vitious practices, that his Holineſs brake out into this expreſſion; What meaneth this doting old man, ſurdus & abſurdus, thus boldly to controll our actions? By Peter and Paul, did not our innate ingenuity reſtrain us, I would confound him, and make him a prodigie to the whole world. Is not the King of England our Vaſſall, yea our Slave, to imprijon and deſtroy what perſons we pleaſe to appoint?

30. The Pope being in this pelt, Ægidius a Spaniſh Cardinall thus interpoſed his gravitie. It is not expedient, my Lord, to uſe any harſhneſs to this Biſhop. We muſt confeſſe the truths which he ſaith. He is a holy man, of a more Religious life then any of us, yea Chriſtendome hath not his equall; a great Philoſopher, ſkilled in Latine and Greek, a conſtant reader in the Schools, Preacher in the Pulpit, lover of Chaſtity, and loather of Simony.

quenched by a Spaniſh Cardinall.

31. Thus the Pope took wit in his anger, and Grouthead eſcaped for the preſent: though Bale reporteth that he died excommunicate and deprived of his Biſhoprick. Popiſh [e] Authours confidently report a ſtrange viſion, or rather a paſſion of Pope Innocent the fourth, whom Grouthead (appearing after his death) ſo beat with many blows (it ſeems he had a heavy hand as well as a great head) that the Pope died thereof ſoon after. No wonder therefore if his ſucceſſours would not Canonize this Robert, who notwithſtanding was a Saint, though not in the Popes, yet in the peoples Calendar, many miracles being aſcribed unto him; and particularly, [f] that a ſweet oyl after his death iſſued out of his monument: which if falſe in the litterall, may be true in a myſticall meaning, Solomon obſerving that a good name is as oyntment poured out.

32. England began now to ſurfet of more then thirty yeares Peace and Plenty, which produced no better effects then ingratitude to God, and murmuring at their King. in Employment, cavilled at many errours in the Kings Government, being State-Donatists, maintaining, the perfection of a Common-wealth might, and ought to be attained. A thing easie in the Theory, impossible in the Practice, to conform the actions of mens corrupted natures to the exact Ideas in mens Imaginations.

Grounded on too much occasion.

33. Indeed they had too much matter whereon justly to ground their Discontents: partly because the King (distrusting his Natives) imployed so many French Forrainers in places of power and profit; partly because he had used such indirect courses to recruit his Treasuries, especially by annihilating all Patents granted in his Minority (though indeed he was never more in his Full-age then when in his Non-age, as guided then by the best counsell) and forcing his Subjects to take out new ones on what Terms his Officers pleased. In a word, an [a] Authour then living complaineth, that Justice was committed to men unjust, the Laws to such who themselves were Out-laws, and the keeping of the Peace to injurious people delighting in Discords.

34. After many contests betwixt the King and his Subjects (which the Reader may learn from the Historians of the State) four and twenty prime persons were chosen by Parliament to have the supreme inspection of the Land: which soon after (to make them the more cordiall) passed a decoction, and were reduced to three, and they three in effect contracted to one, Simon Mountfort, Earle of Leicester, the Kings Brother in Law: The King himself standing by as a Cypher, yet signifying as much as his ambitious Subjects did desire. These, to make sure work, bound him with his solemn Oath to submit himself to their new-modelled Government.

The Pope freely gives his curtesies for money.

35. Here the Pope (charitable to relieve all distressed Princes) interposed his power, absolving the King from that Oath, as unreasonable in it self, and forced upon him. His Holinesse was well paid for this great favour; the King hereafter conniving at his Horse-Leeches (Legates and Nuncioes) sucking the bloud of his Subjects with intolerable Taxations. Thus was it not altogether the Flexibility of King Henry, but partly the Flexion of his Condition, (I mean, the altering of his occasions) which made him sometimes withstand, and otherwhiles comply with the Popes extortion. Thus alwayes the Popes Curtesies are very dear; and the Storm it self is a better Shelter then the Bramble, fleecing such Sheep as fly under the shade thereof.

Sad case when the Royall Root is no better then a sucker

36. Mean time the King, having neither Coyn nor Credit, having pawn'd his Iewels, mortgag'd all his Land in France, and sold much of it in England, wanting wherewithall to subsist, lived on Abbeys and Prioreys; till his often coming and long staying there made what was welcome at the first, quickly to become wearisome. Though a Royall Guest, with often coming, his Royalty made not his Guestship the more accepted, but the notion of a Guest rendred his Royalty the lesse to be esteemed. Indeed his visits of Abbeys at first did wear the countenance of Devotion (on which account this King was very eminent:) but afterwards they appeared in their own likenesse, the dimmest eye seeing them to proceed from pure Necessity.

No part of Church-work.

37. Soon after began the Civill Warrs in England, with various success, sometimes the King, and sometimes the Barons getting the better: till at last an indifferent Peace was concluded for their mutuall good, as in the Historians of the Common-wealth doth plentifully appear.

Bettered by affliction.

38. The later part of the reigne of King Henry was not onely eminent in it self, but might be exemplary to others. He reformed first his own naturall errours, then the disorders in his Court, the Expence whereof he measured by the just rule of his proper Revenue. The rigour and corruption of his Iudges he examined, and redressed by strict commission, filled the seats of Iudgement and Counsell with men nobly born, sate himself daily in Counsell, and disposed affairs of most weight in his own person.

Charta Magna first fully practised.

39. And now the Charta Magna was very strictly observed, being made in the ninth year of this Kings reign, but the practice thereof much interrupted and and disturbed with Civill Wars, it is beheld by all judicious men as (like the aurea Bulla or golden Bull of Germany) the life of English Liberty, rescued by the bloud and valour of our Auncestours from Tyrannicall incroachment, giving the due bounds to Prerogative and Propriety, that neither should mutually intrench on the others lawfull Priviledges. And although some high Royallists look on it as the product of Subjects animosities, improving themselves on their Princes extremities; yet most certain it is, those Kings flourished the most both at home and abroad, who tyed themselves most conscientiously to the observation thereof.

40. Two Colledges in Oxford were founded in the Reign of this King: One, Bailiol Colledge, by Iohn Bailiol (and Dervorguill his Lady) of Bernards Castle in the Bishoprick of Durham, banisht into England, and Father of Bailiol King of Scotland. Wonder not that an Exile should build a Colledge, Charity being oftentimes most active in the afflicted, willingly giving to others a little of that little they have: witness the Macedonians, whose deep [a] poverty abounded to the riches of their Liberality.

Bailiol Colledge built by a banisht Prince.

41. True it is, the ancient revenues of this Colledge were not great, allowing but [b] eight pence a week for every Scholar therein of his Foundation (whereas Merton Colledge had twelve pence:) and yet, as [c] one casteth up, their ancient revenues amounted unto ninety nine pounds seventeen shillings & ten pence; which in that Age, I will assure you, was a considerable Summe, enough to make us suspect, that at this day they enjoy not all the Originall lands of their foundation.

Great revenues for that Age.

c Bri. Twine, antiq. Acad. Ox. in Appendice.

42. Indeed, I am informed that the aforesaid King Bailiol bestowed a large proportion of Land in Scotland on this his Fathers Foundation. The Master and Fellows whereof petitioned King Iames, (when the Marches of two Kingdomes were newly made the middle of one Monarchy) for the restitution of those Lands detained from them in the Civil Warres betwixt the two Crowns. The King, though an affectionate lover of Learning, would not have his Bounty injurious to any (save sometimes to himself;) and considering those Lands they desired, were long peaceably possessed with divers Owners, gave them notice to surcease their Suit. Thus not King Iames, but the infeacibility of the thing they petitioned for to be done with justice, gave the denyall to their Petition.

Endowed with more land then now it possesseth.

43. Being to present the Reader with the Catalogues of this, and other worthy Foundations in Oxford, I am sorry that I can onely build bare Walls, (erect empty Columns) and not fill them with any furniture: which the ingenuous Reader I trust will pardon, when he considers, first, that I am no Oxford-man; secondly, that Oxford is not that Oxford, wherewith ten years since I was acquainted. Wherefore I humbly request the Antiquaries of their respective Foundations (best skill'd in their own worthy Natives) to insert their own observations: which if they would return unto me against the next Edition of this work, if I live, & it be thought worthy thereof, God shall have the Glory, they the publick thanks, and the world the benefit of their contribution to my endeavours.

The Authours request to the learned in Oxford.

44. The Catalogue of Masters we have taken with an implicite faith, out of M[r]. Brian Twine (who may be presumed knowing in that subject) untill the year 1608. where his work doth determine. (Since which time we have supplyed them as well as we may, though too often at a losse for their Christian names.) If M[r]. Twine his Register be imperfect, yet he writes right who writes wrong, if following his Copy.

46. As for the Roll of Benefactours, I, who hope to have made the other Catalogues true, hope I have made this not true; upon desire and confidence that they have more then I have, or can reckon up, though following herein

Every man knows his own land better then either Ortelius or Mercator, though making the Maps of the whole world. And the members of respective Colledges must be more accurate in the particularities of their own Foundations, then the exactest Historian who shall write a generall description thereof.

Masters.	Bishops.	Benefactours.	Lear. wri.	Anno Dom.	Anno Regis Henrici 3.
	George Abbot, Arch. of Cant.	Sir Simon Bennet, who hath bequeathed good lands (after the decease of his Lady) to encrease the Fellows and Scholars.		1262	46
	John Bancroft, Bishop of Oxford.	Mr. Charles Greenwood, sometimes Fellow of this Colledge, and Proctour to the Vniversity, gave a thousand pounds to the building thereof.

So that at this present are maintained therein one Master, eight Fellows, one Bible-Clark: which with Servants, Commoners, and other Students, amount to the number of threescore and nine.

Iews damnable extortioners. a Claus. 22. of Hen. 3. memb. 9. in dorso.

52. Sure it is, at this time Oxford flourished with multitude of Students; King Henry conferring large favours upon them, and this amongst the rest. That no Iews [a] living at Oxford should receive of Scholars above two-pence a week interest for the loan of twenty shillings, that is eight shillings eight-pence for the interest of a pound in the year. Hereby we may guesse how miserably poor people in other places were oppressed by the Iews, where no restraint did limite their Usury; so that the Interest amounted to the half of the Principall.

A second priviledge.

53. Secondly, whereas it was complained of, That Iustice was obstructed, and Malefactours protected by the Citizens of Oxford, who being partiall to their own Corporation, connived at offenders who had done mischiefs to the Scholars: The King ordered, that hereafter, not onely the Citizens of Oxford, but also any Officers in the Vicinage should be imployed in the apprehending of such who offered any wrong to the Students in the University.

The third priviledge.

54. Lastly, he enjoyned the Bailiffs of Oxford solemnly to acquaint the Chancellour thereof, of those times when Bread and other Victualls were weighed and prized. But in case the Chancellour had timely notice thereof, & refused to be present thereat, then the Bailiffs notwithstanding his absence might proceed in the foresaid matters of weight and measure.

The submission of the Dean and Chapter of S. Asaph.

55. We will conclude this Section with this civil and humble submission of the Dean and Chapter of S^t. Asaph, sent to the King in the vacancy (as it seems) of their Bishoprick; though dislocated, and some yeares set back in the date thereof.

De recognitione Decani & Capit. de Sancto Asapho.

Universis Christi fidelibus ad quos presens scriptum pervenerit, Decanus & Capitulum de Sancto Asapho salutem in Domino. Consuetudini antique & dignitati quas Dominus Henricus illustris Rex Angl. & progenitores sui habuerunt in Ecclesia Anglicana, de petenda licentia eligendi vacantibus Episcopatuum Sedibus,

Anno Regis Hen. 3. 46 | Anno Domi. 1262

Sedibus, & de requirendo aſſenſu Regio poſt factam electionem, obviare nolentes; proteſtamur & recognoſcimus, nos, quotiens Eccleſia noſtra Paſtore vacaverit, ab illuſtri Domino Rege Angl. & Heredibus ſuis debere reverenter petere licentiam eligendi, & poſt electionem factam aſſenſum eorum requirere. Et ne ſuper hoc futuris temporibus dubitetur, preſenti ſcripto Sigilla noſtra fecimus apponi. Dat. apud Sanctum Aſaph. Anno Domini M°.cc.xlix°. in Craſtino Exaltationis Sanctæ Crucis.

The ſubſtance is this. That the Dean and Chapter promiſe to depend wholy on the Kings pleaſure in the choice of the next Elect: ſo that now Cathedralls began to learn good manners. Notwithſtanding the Pope uſually obtruded whom he pleaſed upon them. Say not that S^t. Aſaph was an inconſiderable Cathedrall, being at great Diſtance & of ſmall Revenue, which might make them more officious to comply with the King: ſeeing the pooreſt oft times prove the proudeſt, and peeviſheſt to their Superiours. But although this qualm of Loyalty took this Church for the preſent, we muſt confeſſe that generally, Chapters ask the Kings leave, as Widows do their Fathers to marry; as a Complement not requiſite thereunto: as conceiving it Civility to ask, but no Neceſſity to have his Approbation.

56. Two eminent Arch-biſhops of Canterbury ſucceſſively filled that See, during the moſt part of this Kings Reign. Firſt, Edmond, Treaſurer of Salisbury, born, ſay ſome, in London, and Chriſtened in the ſame Font with Thomas Becket. My * Authour makes him educated in Vniverſity Colledge in Oxford, a great Scholar, and lover of learned men, refuſing to conſecrate Richard VVendover Biſhop of Rocheſter, becauſe of his want of Sufficiency for ſuch a Function: hereupon he incurred the diſpleaſure of Otho the Popes Legate ſiding with VVendover (requiring no other Qualification ſave Money to make a Biſhop) & was inforced to undertake a dangerous and expenſive journey to Rome, to his great Damage, and greater Diſgrace, being caſt in his Cauſe, after the ſpending of a thouſand Marks therein.

Edmund Arch-biſhop of Cant.

* Godwine in Catalogue of Biſhops, pag. 139.

57. He took the boldneſſe to tell the Pope of his Extortion; though little thereby was amended. After his return he fell into the Kings diſpleaſure: ſo that overpowered with his Adverſaries, and circumvented with their malice, weary of his Native Country (the miſeries whereof he much bemoaned) he went into voluntary Baniſhment. He died and was buried in France: and ſix years after (which I aſſure you was very ſoon, and contrary to the modern Cuſtome) was Sainted by Pope Innocent the fourth: Whoſe Body Lewes the fourth King of France ſolemnly removed, and ſumptuouſly inſhrined.

Sainted after his death.

58. The other, Boniface by name, was onely eminent on the account of his high Extraction, as Uncle to the Queen, and ſon of Peter Earle of Savoy; a horrible ſcraper of money, generally hated, inſomuch that he went his Viſitation, having a Corſlet on under his Epiſcopall habit: which it ſeems was no more then needs, the Londoners being ſo exaſperated againſt him, that they threatned his Death, had not he ſecured himſelf by Flight. Only he is memorable to Poſterity for paying two and twenty thouſand Marks debt of his See (which his his Predeceſſours had contracted:) for building a fair Hall at Canterbury, and a ſtately Hoſpitall at Maidſtone, which it ſeems was indited and found guilty of, and executed for Superſtition at the diſſolution of Abbeys (when it was valued at above a hundred and fifty pounds of yearly Revenue) being aliened now to other uſes.

SECT. III.

TO WILLIAM ROBINSON OF The Inward-Temple, Esq;

SIR Edward Coke was wont to say, that he never knew a Divine meddle with a matter of Law, but that therein he committed some great errour, and discovered gross ignorance. I presume you Lawyers are better Divines, then we Divines are Lawyers; because indeed greater your concernment in your pretious soules, then ours in our poor estates. Having therefore just cause to suspect my own judgment in this Section, wherein so much of Law, I submit all to your Judgment to add, alter, expunge at pleasure; that if my weak endeavours shall appear worthy of a second Impression, they may come forth corrected with your Emendations.

Hen. 3 57. 1272.

1. QUiet King Henry the third, our English Nestor (not for depth of brains, but length of life) as who Reigned fifty six years, in which terme he buried all his Contemporary Princes in Christendom twice over. All the moneths in a year may in a manner be carved out of an April-day, Hot, cold, dry, moist, fair, foule weather, being oft presented therein. Such the character of this Kings life, certain onely in uncertainty. Sorrowful, successful, in plenty, in penury, in wealth, in want, Conquered, Conquerour.

The viracity of King Henry the third, and the variety of his life.

2. Yet the Sun of his life did not set in a cloud, but went down in full lustre; a good token that the next day would be fair, and his Successor prove fortunate. He died at S^t Edmunds-Bury, and though a merciful Prince ended his his dayes in a neceſſary act of juſtice, ſeverely puniſhing ſome Citizens of Norwich, for burning and pillaging the Priory therein. His corps were buried at Weſtminſter Church (founded and almoſt finiſhed by him) with great ſolemnity, though Prince Edward his Son, as beyond the Seas was not preſent thereat. Anno Dom. 1272. Anno Regis Hen. 3 57. Ed. 1. 1.

The advantages of abſent Prince Edward.

3. There cannot be a greater Temptation to Ambition to uſurpe a Crown, then when it findeth a vacancy on the Throne, and the true heir thereof abſent at a great diſtance. Such an advantage at this inſtant, had the Adverſaries of Prince Edward (not as yet returned from Paleſtine) to put in, if ſo minded, for the Kingdom of England. And ſtrange it was, that no Arrears of the former Rebellion were left, but all the reckonings thereof ſo fully diſcharged, that no Corrival did appear for the Crown; But a general concurrence of many things befriended Prince Edward herein.

1. His Father on his death-bed ſecured his Sons ſucceſſion, as much as might be, by ſwearing the Principal Peers unto him in his abſence.
2. The moſt active and dangerous Military men, the Prince had politickly carried away with him into Paleſtine.
3. Prince Edward his fame (preſent here in the abſence of his perſon) preſerved the Crown for him, as due to him, no leſs by deſert then deſcent.

The premiſſes meeting with the love and Loyalty of many Engliſh hearts, paved the way to Prince Edward his peaceable entrance without any oppoſition.

His atchievements againſt the Turks.

4. King Edward was a moſt worthy Prince, coming off with honour in all his atchievements againſt Turke, and Pope, and Jews, and Scots, and againſt whomſoever he encountred. For the Turks, he had lately made a voyage againſt them, which being largely related in our Holy War, we intend not here to repeat. Onely I will add, that this Forein expedition was politickly undertaken, to rid the Land of many Martialiſts, wherewith the late Barons wars had made it to abound. Theſe Spirits thus raiſed, though they could not preſently be conjured down, were ſafely removed into another room. The fierceſt Maſtiff-Dogs never fight one with another, whileſt they have either Bull or Bear before them to bait; the common foe imploying that fury, which otherwiſe would be active againſt thoſe of their own kinde. This diverſion of the Engliſh ſouldiery, gave a vent to their animoſities, which otherwiſe would have been mutually miſ-ſpent amongſt themſelves.

The Popes preſent power in England.

5. Great at this preſent was the Popes power in England, improving himſelf on the late tumultuous times, and the eaſineſs of King Henry his nature, inſomuch that within theſe laſt ſeven years ex plenitudine, (or rather ex abundantia & ſuperfluitate) poteſtatis, he had put in two Arch-Biſhops of Canterbury, Robert Kilwarby, and John Peccam, againſt the mindes of the Monks, who had legally choſen others. Probably the third time would have created a Right to the Pope; and his Holineſs hereafter preſcribe it as his juſt due, had not King Edward ſeaſonably prevented his encroachment, by moderating his power in England, as hereafter ſhall appear. Mean time we are called away on a welcome occaſion, to behold a grateful object; namely, the Foundation of one of the firſt and faireſt Colledges in Chriſtendom.

Merton Col. in Oxford founded.

6. For in this year Walter de Merton, Biſhop of Rocheſter and Chancellour of England, finiſhed the Colledg of his own name in Oxford. This Walter was born at Merton in Surrey, and at Maldon in that County had built a Colledg, which on ſecond thoughts (by Gods counſel no doubt) he removed to Oxford, as it ſeems for the more ſecurity; now if the Barons Wars, then (ſome 1274. 3.

fifteen years since) in height, and heat, were as it is probable, any motive of this Translation, it was one of the best effects which ever so bad a cause produced; For otherwise, if not removed to Oxford, certainly this Colledg had been swept away, as Rubbish of superstition, at the Dissolution of Abbies.

7. Amongst the many Manors which the first [a] Founder bestowed on this Colledg, one lay in the Parish of S^t Peters and West suburbe of Cambridg, beyond the Bridg; anciently called Pythagoras house, since Merton Hall. To this belongeth much good Land thereabout (as also the Mills at Grantchester mentioned in Chaucer) those of Merton Colledg keeping yearly a Court Baron here. Afterwards King Henry the sixth took away (for what default I finde not) this Manor from them, and bestowed it upon his own Foundation of Kings [b] Colledg in Cambridg. But his successor, Edward the fourth, restored it to Merton Colledg again. It seemeth equally admirable to me, that Holy King Henry the sixth, should do any wrong, or Harsh Edward the fourth, do any Right to the Muses, which maketh me to suspect that there is more in the matter then what is generally known, or doth publickly appear.

A Manor in Cambridg given thereunto.

a Brian Twyn Ant. Acad. Ox. p. 319.

b Caius Hist. Cant. Acad. p. 68.

8. S^r Henry Savill the most learned Warden of this Colledg, three hundred and more years after Mertons death, plucked down his old Tombe in Rochester Church (near the North wall, almost over against the Bishops Chair) and built a neat new Monument of Touch and Alabaster, whereon after a large inscription in Prose, this Epitaph was engraven.

Merton his Monument renewed.

Magne senex titulis, Musarum sede sacrata
Major, Mertonidum maxime progenie
Hæc tibi gratantes post sæcula sera nepotes
En votiva locant marmora sancte Parens.

And indeed malice it self cannot deny, that this Colledg (or little University rather) doth equal, if not exceed any one Foundation in Christendom, for the Famous men bred therein, as by the following Catalogue will appear.

Others may in due time, as D[r] Higgs, late Dean of Lichfield, D[r] Corbet, &c. And surely M[r] John Hales, formerly Greek Professor, will not envy Christian man-kinde, his Treasury of Learning; nor can conceive, that onely a Sermon (owned under his name) can satisfie the just expectation from him, of the Church and Common-wealth.

* The Original of Post-masters.

* There is a By-Foundation of Postmasters in this House, (a kinde of Colledg in the Colledg) and this Tradition goeth of their Original. Anciently there was over against Merton Colledg, a small un-endowed Hall, whose Scholars had had ſo run in arrears, that their oppoſite neighbours, out of charity took them into their Colledg, (then but nine in number) to wait on the Fellows. But ſince they are freed from any attendance and endowed with plentiful maintenance, Mr Willet being the firſt Benefactor unto them in that nature, whoſe good example hath provoked many to follow his liberality. Theſe moſt juſtly conceive themſelves much honoured, in that Biſhop Jewel was a poſtmaſter before removed hence to be Fellow of Corpus Chriſti Colledg. We take our farewell of this Houſe, when we have told it conſiſted lately (viz. 1635.) of one Warden, twenty one Fellows, fourteen [a] Scholars, beſides Officers and Servants, of the foundation, with other Students, the whole number being eighty.

Anno Regni Ed. 1. 3. Anno Domi 1274.

a The ſame I conceive with the Poſtmaſters.

9. Come we now to the Kings retrenching the Popes power, grown ſo exorbitant in England. A principal part whereof conſiſted in the multitude of Monaſteries, daylie increaſing in wealth, and all at the Popes abſolute devotion. If poſterity had continued at this rate, to build and endow Religious Houſes, all England would, in ſhort time, have turned one entire and continued Monaſtery; and the inhabitants thereof become either Friers, or Founders. Where then ſhould be any Souldiers to fight the Kings battles? Seamen to ſteer his ſhips? Husbandmen to plough the Kings land? or rather any land of his to be ploughed by husbandmen?

The Church ready to eat up the Common-wealth.

10. Beſides, though theſe Friers had a living-hand, to take and receive from any; they had Mortmaine, a dead-hand, to reſtore and return any profit to the King again. Yea, ſuch alienation of lands in Mortmaine, ſetled on Monaſteries (which as Corporations neither married nor died) afforded neither Wards, Marriages, Reliefs, nor Knights-ſervice, for the defence of the Realm; in a word, enriched their private coffers, impoveriſhed the publick Exchequer. It was not therefore ſuch a dead hand, which could feed ſo many living mouthes, as the King for his ſtate and ſafety muſt maintain. Wherefore for the future he reſtrain'd ſuch unlimited Donatives to Religious Houſes.

The miſchief of Mortmain to the Crown.

11. Ignorance makes many men miſtake meer tranſcripts for Originals. So here, the ſhort-ſighted vulgar ſort, beheld the Kings Act herein as new, ſtrange, and unprecedented, whereas indeed former times, and forein Princes had done the like on the ſame occaſion. Firſt, we finde ſome countenance for it in [a] Scripture, when Moſes by proclamation bounded the overflowing bounty of the people to the Tabernacle. And in the Primitive times, Theodoſius the Emperor (although moſt loving and favourable to the Clergie) made a Law of A Mortiſation or Mortmain, to moderate peoples bounty to the Church. Yet a great Father, Jerome by name, much diſliked this Act, as appears by his complaint to Nepotian of that Law; I am aſhamed to ſay it, the Prieſts of Idols, Stage-players, Coach-men, and common Harlots, are made capable of inheritance, and receive Legacies, only Miniſters of the Goſpel, and Monkes are barred by Law thus to do; and that not by Perſecutors, but by Chriſtian Princes. But that paſſionate Father comes off well at laſt; neither do I complain of the Law, but I am ſorry we have deſerved to have ſuch a Law made againſt us.

This Law not new but renewed.

a Exod 36.6.

12. [b] S[t] Ambroſe likewiſe expreſſeth much anger on the ſame occaſion, out of his general zeal for the Churches good. But, had the aforeſaid Fathers (men rather pious then politick; good Church-men, no States-men) ſeen the Monaſteries ſwollen in revenues from an inch in their dayes, to an ell (by peoples fondneſs, yea dotage, on the four ſorts of Friers) in King Edwards Reign, they would, no doubt, inſtead of reproving, have commended his, and the neighbouring Kings care for their Common-wealths.

Ambroſe angry with Mortmaine.
b In his 31. Epiſt.

13. For the like laws for limiting mens liberality, were lately made in Spain and France, and now at laſt followed by King Edward, according to the tenour enſuing;

The Statute of Mortmaine.

Where

Anno Dom. 1279 | Anno Regni Ed. 1. 7. Nov. 4

WHere of late it was provided, that religious men ſhould not enter into the fees of any without licence and will of the chief Lords of whom ſuch fees be holden immediately: And notwithſtanding ſuch religious men have entered as well into their own fees, as in the fees of other men, appropriating and buying them, and ſometime receiving them of the gift of others, whereby the ſervices that are due of ſuch fees, and which at the beginning were provided for defence of the Realme, are wrongfully withdrawn, and the chief Lords do leeſe their Eſcheats of the ſame; we therefore to the profit of our Realm intending to provide convenient remedy, by the advice of our Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other our ſubjects, being of our Councel, have provided, made, and ordained, That no perſon, Religious or other, whatſoever he be, that will buy or ſell any Lands or Tenements, or under the colour of Gift or Leaſe, or that will receive by reaſon of any other title, whatſoever it be, Lands or Tenements, or by any other Craft or Engine will preſume to appropriat to himſelf, under pain of forfeiture of the ſame, whereby ſuch Lands or Tenements may any wiſe come into Mortmaine. We have provided alſo, That if any perſon, religious or other, do preſume either by Craft or Engine, to offend againſt this Statute; it ſhall be lawful to Us and other chief Lords of the Fee, immediately to enter in the land ſo aliened, within a year from the time of their alienation, and to hold it in fee, and as Inheritance. And, if the chief Lord immediately be negligent, and will not enter into ſuch Fee within the year, then it ſhall be lawful to the next chief Lord immediate of the ſame Fee, to enter in the ſaid land within half a year next following, and to hold it as before is ſaid; and ſo every Lord immediate may enter into ſuch Land, if the next Lord be negligent in entering into the ſame Fee, as is aforeſaid. And, if all the chief Lords of ſuch Fees being of full age, within the four Seas, and out of priſon, be negligent or ſlack in this behalf, we immediately after the year accompliſhed, from the time that ſuch purchaſes, Gifts or Appropriations hap to be made, ſhall take ſuch tenements into our hand, and ſhall enfeoffe others therein, by certain Services to be done to Us, for the defence of our Realm, ſaving to the chief Lords of the ſame Fees, their Wardes and Eſcheats, and other Services thereunto due and accuſtomed. And therefore We command you, that ye cauſe the foreſaid Statute to be read before you, and from henceforth to be kept firmly and obſerved.

Witneſs my ſelf at Weſtminſter, &c.

Date we from this day, the acme or vertical height of Abbeys, which henceforward began to ſtand ſtill, & at laſt to decline. Formerly it was Endow Monaſteries who would, hereafter, who could, having firſt obtained licence from the King. Yet this Law did not ruine, but regulate, not deſtroy, but direct well grounded liberality, that bounty to ſome, might not be injury to others. Here I leave it to Lawyers by profeſſion, to ſhew how many years after, (viz. the eighteenth of of Edward the third) Prelates Impeached before the Kings Juſtices for purchaſing land in Mortmain, ſhall be diſmiſſed without further trouble, upon their producing a charter of licence, and proceſs thereupon made, by an Inqueſt, ad quod damnum, or, (in caſe that cannot be ſhewed) by making a convenient Fine for the ſame.

Yet in my minde, Gilbert Sellinger, his contemporary, and Biſhop of Chicheſter, had a far better Title, as commonly called, the Father of Orphans, and Comforter of the widdows.

Theſe, with many more Biſhops conſented (though ſome of them reſorbentes ſuam bilem as inwardly angry) to the paſſing, (or confirming) of the Statute of Mortmain. To make them ſome amends, the King not long after favourably ſtated, what cauſes ſhould be of ſpiritual cognizance.

13. 1285. 15. For a Parliament was called at Weſtminſter, eminent on this account, that it laid down the limits, and fixed the boundaries betwixt the Spiritual and Temporal Juriſdictions, Hitherto ſhall you come and no farther; though before and ſince, both powers have endeavoured to enlarge their own, and contract their Rivals authority. We will preſent firſt the Latin out of the Records, and then the Engliſh out of our printed Statutes, and make ſome neceſſary obſervations on both.

THE KING to his Judges ſendeth Greeting. Uſe your ſelf circumſpectly in al matters concerning the Biſhop of Norwich, & his Clergie, not puniſhing them, if they hold plea in Court Chriſtian, of ſuch things as be meerly ſpiritual, that is to wit of penance enjoyned for deadly ſin, as fornication, adultery, and ſuch like; for the which many times, corporal penance or pecuniary is enjoyned, ſpecially if a free man be convict of ſuch things.

Alſo if Prelates do puniſh for leaving Church-yards unciоſed, or for that the Church is uncovered, or not conveniently decked, in which caſes none other penance can be enjoyned but pecuniary.

Item, If a Parſon demand of his pariſhioners, oblations and tythes due and accuſtomed, or if any perſon plead againſt another for tythes, more or leſs, ſo that the fourth part of the value of the Benefice be not demanded.

Item, If a Parſon demand mortuaries in places where a mortuarie hath uſed to have been given.

Item, If a Prelate of a Church, or if a Patron demand a penſion due to themſelves, all ſuch demands are to be made in a Spiritual Court. And for laying violent hands on a Prieſt, cum,

cum, & in cauſa diffamationis conceſſum fuit aliàs, quod placitum inde teneatur in Curia Chriſtianitatis, cum non petatur pecunia, ſed agatur ad correctionem peccati, & ſimiliter pro fidei læſione. In omnibus prædictis caſibus habet judex Eccleſiaſticus cognoſcere regia prohibitione non obſtante.

and in cauſe of defamation, it hath been granted already, that it ſhall be tried in a Spiritual Court, when money is not demanded, but a thing done for puniſhment of ſin, and likewiſe for breaking an oath. In all caſes afore rehearſed, the Spiritual Judg ſhall have power to take knowledg notwithſtanding the Kings prohibition.

Anno Dom. 1285 | Anno Regis Ed. 1. 13.

Something muſt be premiſed about the validity of this writing, learned men much differing therein.

Some make it
1. Onely a conſtitutiou made by the Prelates themſelves; much too blame, if they cut not large pieces, being their own Carvers.
2. A meer writ iſſued out from the King to his Judges.
3. A ſolemn Act of Parliament, compleat in all the requiſites thereof.

* Mr Nath. Bacon in his Hiſt. Diſ. of the Government of England, lib. 1. pag. 233

Hear what * a Bacon (but neither Sr Nicolas, nor Sr Francis, the two Oracles of Law) writes in this caſe; A writing ſomewhat like a Grant of Liberties, which before times were in controverſie; and this Grant (if it may be ſo called) hath by continuance USURPED the name of a Statute, but in its own nature is no other then a Writ directed to the Judges. Preſently after he ſaith, It is therefore no Grant, nor Releaſe, but as it were a Covenant that the Clergie ſhould hold peaceable poſſeſſion of what they had, upon this ground. And in the next page more plainly; For my part therefore I ſhall not apprehend it of a higher nature then the Kings Writ, which in thoſe dayes WENT FORTH AT RANDOM.

Judg Cokes deciſion a Second part of his Inſtitut. pag. 487.

16. Come we now to the calme judgment of Sr Edward Cook, on whoſe deciſion we may ſafely rely; Though a ſome have ſaid that this was no Statute, but made by the Prelates themſelves; yet that this is an Act of Parliament, it is proved, not onely by our books, but alſo by an Act of Parliament.

17. The King to his Judges] Were it of concernment, it were not difficult to name the Prime Judges of England at this time:

Viz.
1. In the Kings, or Upper-Bench, either Ralph de Hengham, or (which is more probable) one Wymborne was Judge.
2. In the Common-Pleas, Thomas de Weyland, on that token that he was guilty of Bribery.
3. In the Exchequer, Adam de Stratton, as faulty as the former.

But by the Judges named in this Writ, (for, as this was an Act of Parliament, ſo was there a Writ alſo founded thereon, called Circumſpectè agatis) we underſtand ſome peculiar Commiſſioners diſpatch'd and employed on this particular buſineſs.

b Chronicon. Oſnienſe.

18. Concerning the Biſhop of Norwich] It is needleſs to tell the Reader, that William Middeton was Biſhop thereof at this time, b charactred to be, Vir in Jure Civili & Canonico peritiſſimus & elegantiſſimus. But Norwich is here put onely for example, which equally extended to all the Biſhops of the Realme.

Anno Regis Ed. I. 13. Anno Dom. 1285.

19. Si placitum tenuerint, if they hold plea] Placitum, a Plea ſo called, ſaith my [c] Author, per antiphraſin, quia non placet, none being pleaſed to go to Law ſave Barreters, who delight in brangling. But, what if it be called placitum, becauſe the Plaintife is pleaſed to ſubmit his right in queſtion to the pleaſure of the Court to decide it?

20. In Court Chriſtian] Theſe words are left out in Linwood his Conſtitutions, where all the reſt is regiſtred. And, where the recording thereof amongſt the Provincial Canons of Canterbury, gave the beſt countenance to their conjecture, who degrade this Act of Parliament into a meer Church-Conſtitution. It is called the Court Chriſtian, becauſe therein the Laws of Chriſt do, or ſhould bear the deciſive ſway, whileſt the Statutes of Secular Princes regulate the proceedings in other Courts.

21. Such things as be meerly ſpiritual] This furniſheth us with a neceſſary diſtinction of all matters;

Into { meerly and purely / mixtly and partly } ſpiritual.

Of the former we ſhall finde very few, meerly ſpiritual. For the Apoſtles ſometimes conceived, that the very diſtribution of Almes to the poor, had ſomething of worldly droſſineſs therein (called by them [d] ſerving of tables) as if onely the preaching of the word were a ſpiritual employment. Of the latter ſort many things are mixtly ſpiritual. For, ſeeing man conſiſts of two principles, ſoul and body, all his actions good or bad, as to the minde-moiety or ſoul-part thereof, muſt needs have at leaſt a glance of ſpiritual reflection. Here then the Quære will be in matters mixtly ſpiritual, whether the ſpirituality of them ſhall refine the reſt ſo as to exalt the ſame into Church-cogniſance; or the corporality, or earthlineſs of them, depreſs them ſo as to ſubject them to civil conſideration? the deciſion hereof dependeth on the practice and cuſtom of the Land, as will appear hereafter.

[d] Acts 6. 2.

22. For deadly ſin] Diſtinguiſh we here betwixt a ſin deadly to the ſoul, drawing damnation without repentance, and a deadly (commonly called a capital) crime, deſerving death by humane Laws. The former onely is here intended, the latter belonging wholly to the Common-Law. Nor did the puniſhment of every mortal ſin (to uſe the language of that age) belong to Church-men, ſeeing if ſo (as Linwood no leſs Learnedly, then modeſtly confeſſeth) Sic periret temporalis gladii juriſdictio, Thereby the power of the temporal ſword will wholly be taken away. Long ſince had Doctors-Commons eaten up all the Inns of Court, if all things reducible to deadly ſins had pertained to the Court-Chriſtian. And therefore the Caſuiſts themſelves do qualifie and confine theſe words of indefinite extent, to ſuch crimes, which de ſui naturâ ſpectant ad Forum Eccleſiaſticum.

23. As firſt fornication] Here, ſaith Linwood, thirteen caſes are in ſpecie recited, though I dare not reckon them up, fearing to make them (lying ſo confuſedly) moe or leſs. Fornication, that is (ſaith the Caſuiſt) Soluti cum ſoluta, the uncleanneſs of a looſe (underſtand unmarried) with a looſe perſon.

24. Adultery] Theſe two alone are ſpecified, becauſe lying in a middle diſtance, ſo the more conveniently to reach other ſins of this kinde, of higher or lower guilt;

1. Higher } as { Inceſt.
2. Lower } as { Soliciting a womans chaſtity.

If any ſay that Adultery doth not belong to the Court-Chriſtian, becauſe Chriſt himſelf himself would not punish an [a] adulteress taken in the act, waving it as an improper imployment. It is answered, that our Saviour appearing in privacy and poverty, and coming not to act but to suffer, not to judg but be judged, justly declined all judicial power. But we see afterward, how the Church of Corinth, by S^t Paul his command, proceeded against the incestuous person, and at this time Church-men cleanly carried the cognisance of such offences. I say at this time, it plainly appearing, that in the Conquerors time, Fornication and Adultery were punishable in the Kings Court, and the Leets especially, (by the name of LETHERWITE) and the fines of offenders assessed to the King, though now it meerly belonged to the Church. As for a Rape, being Adultery, or, at leastwise, fornication offered with violence, the Common-Law hath justly reserved to it self the trial and punishment thereof.

[a] John 8.4.11.

25. And such like] Here is an interpretative et-cætera inserted in the body of a Parliament Act (and a Writ grounded thereon) causing some differences about the Dimensions thereof. For, if these words, And such like, relate onely to the last foregoing, Fornication and Adultery, (in common construction most probable) then they onely fetch in such offences which have some tincture of Carnal uncleanness. But, if they also refer to the mediate preceding words, deadly sins, behold a troop cometh, beyond our power exactly to number them. And here Forein Casuists bring in a bundle of mortal sins, all grist for their own Mill, as of Church-cognisance; namely, Sacriledg, Usury, Heresie, Simony, Perjury, Fortune-telling, consulting Astrologers, Drunkenness, &c. But it matters not, how long and large their bills be from beyond the Seas, seeing our Common-Law brings their reckonings to a new account, defalking a great part of that measure, which they make to themselves in favour of Church-Jurisdiction.

26. For that the Church is uncovered] It belonged ever to the Priests, to provide for the decent reparation of Gods-House. Thus Jehoiada [b] was careful to amend the decayes of the Temple. But though it pertained to Church-men to see the thing done, yet several persons were to do it.

[b] 2 Chro. 24.

1. The Steeple with the Body of the Church, and all Chappels lying in common thereunto, are to be repaired at the joyn cost of the Parish.
2. Private Chappels wherein particular persons claim a propriety of sepulture at their own charges.
3. The Chauncel at the expence of the Parson.

However in all these, such respect is had to the custom of the place, time out of minde; that it often over-ruleth the premisses. Quære, Whether the Fences of the Church-yard be to be made on the Parish-charges, or on the purse of the several persons whose ground surroundeth it, or abutteth on the same.

* Oblations and Tythes] It is a question which I believe will never be decided to the contentment of both Parties, in what notion Tythes belong to the Court-Christian.

1. The Canonists maintaine,

That Originally and ex sua natura, they are of Ecclesiastical cognizance, as commonly avouched, and generally believed due, Jure Divino. Besides, such the near relation of the Church and its maintenance, that to part the oyl from the lamp were to destroy it. They produce also

2. The Common-Lawyers defend.

That Tythes in their own nature are a civil thing, and therefore by Britton (who being Bishop of Hereford, and learned in the Laws of this Realm, was best qualified for an unpartial Judg herein) omitted, when treating of what things the Church hath cognizance. They * affirm therefore that Tythes were annexed

* Bracton, lib. 5. fol. 401.

Anno Regis Ed. 1. 13. Anno Dom. 1285.

the Confeſſion in the Statute of the firſt of Richard the ſecond, That purſuit for Tythes ought, and of ancient time did pertain to the Spiritual Court.

annexed to the Spirituality. Thus they expound thoſe paſſages in Statutes of Tythes, anciently belonging to Court-Chriſtian, as intended by way of conceſſion, and not otherwiſe.

But the Canoniſts are too ſturdy to take that for a gift which they conceive is their due, leſt thanks alſo be expected from them for enjoying the ſame, and ſo we leave the queſtion where we found it.

27. Mortuary] Becauſe ſomething of hiſtory is folded up in this word, which may acquaint us with the practice of this age; we will enlarge a little hereon, and ſhew what a Mortuary was, when to be paid, by whom, to whom and in what conſideration.

1. A Mortuary [a] was the ſecond beſt quick cattel whereof the party died poſſeſſed. If he had but two in all (ſuch forſooth the charity of the Church) no Mortuary was due from him.
2. It was often bequeathed by the dying, but however alwayes payed by his Executors after his death, thence called a Mortuary or Corſe-preſent.
3. By whom. No woman under Covert-Baron was lyable to pay it (and by proportion no children unmarried, living under their Fathers tuition) but Widows, and all poſſeſſed of an Eſtate, were ſubject to the payment thereof.
4. To whom. It was paid to the Prieſt of the Pariſh where the party dying received the Sacrament (not where he repaired to prayers) and if his houſe at his death ſtood in two Pariſhes, the value of the Mortuary was to be divided betwixt them both.
5. It was given in lieu of ſmall or perſonal Tythes (Predial Tythes are too great to be caſually forgotten) which the party in his life-time had, though ignorance or negligence, not fully paid. But in caſe the aforeſaid Mortuary fell far ſhort of full ſatisfaction for ſuch omiſſions, Caſuiſts maintain the dying party obliged to a larger reſtitution.

[a] Linwood Conſtit. lib. 1. fol. 11. de Conſuetudine.

So much of Mortuaries, as they were generally paid at the preſent, until the time of Henry the ſixth, when learned Linwood wrote his Comment on that Conſtitution. How Mortuaries were after reduced to a new regulation by a Statute, in the twenty firſt of Henry the eighth, pertains not to our preſent purpoſe.

28. For laying violent hands on a Prieſt] The Eccleſiaſtical Judg might proceed ex officio, and pro ſalute animæ, puniſh the offender who offered violence to a Prieſt; but dammages on Action of Battery were onely recoverable at Common-Law: Note, that the arreſting of a Clergy-man by Proceſs of Law, is not to be counted a violence.

29. And in cauſe of Defamation] Where the matter defamatory is ſpiritual, as to call one Heretick, or Schiſmatick, &c. the plea lay in Court-Chriſtian. But defamations with mixture, any matter determinable in the Common-Law, as Thief, Murderer, &c. are to be traverſed therein.

30. Defamation it hath been granted] From this word granted, Common-Lawyers collect (let them alone to husband their own right) that originally defamations pertained not to the Court-Chriſtian. From the beginning it was not ſo, until the Common-Law by Acts of Parliament, granted and ſurrendred ſuch ſuits to the Spirituality.

31. Thus by this Act and Writ of Circumſpectè agatis, King Edward may ſeem like an expert Artiſt, to cleave an hair, betwixt the ſpiritual and temporal juriſdiction, allowing the premiſſes to the former, and leaving whatever is not ſpecified specified in this Act, to the Cognizance of the Common-Law, according to the known and common Maxime, Exceptio firmat regulam in non exceptis. However, for many years after there was constant heaving and shoving betwixt the two Courts. And, as there are certain lands in the Marches of England and Scotland (whilest distinct Kingdomes) termed Battable-grounds, which may give for their Motto, not, Dentur justiori, but, Dentur fortiori, for alway the strongest sword for the present possessed them: So in controversial cases to which Court they should belong; sometimes the Spirituality, sometimes the Temporality, alternately seized them into their Jurisdiction, as power and favour best befriended them. But generally the Clergie complained, that, as in the blending of liquors of several colours, few drops of red will give a tincture to a greater quantity of white, so the least mixture of Civil concernment in Religious matters, so discolourated the Christian candor and purity thereof, that they appeared in a temporal hue, and under that notion were challenged to the Common-Law. Said, when Courts that should be Judges, turn themselves Plaintiffs and Defendents, about the bounds of their Jurisdiction.

32. We long since mentioned the first coming in of the Jews into England (brought over by William the Conqueror) and now are come this year to their casting out of this Kingdome; having first premised some observables concerning their continuance therein. If hitherto we have not scattered our History with any discourse of the Jews, know it done by design: that as they were enjoyned by our Laws, to live alone in streets by themselves (not mixing in their dwellings with Christians) so we purposely singled out their story, and reserved it by it self, for this one entire relation thereof.

A transition to the entire story of our English Jews.

1290. 18.

33. They were scattered all over England. In Cambridg, Bury, Norwich, Lin, Stanford, Northampton, Lincoln, York, and, where not? But their principal aboad was in London, where they had their Arch-Synagogue at the North corner of the Old-Jury, as opening into Lothbury. After their expulsion, their Synagogue was turned into the Covent of the Friers of the Sack, or, De Penitentia Jesu; and after their suppression, it became successively the house, first of a Lord, then of a Merchant; since of any man for his money, being turned into a Tavern, with the sign of the [a] wind-mill. A proper sign to express the moveableness of that place, which with several gales of success, hath been turned about, from so many owners, and to so many uses.

Their principal residence in London.

[a] Stow his Survey of London, pag. 288.

34. As for the civil government of Jews in England, the King set over them one principal Officer, called the Justicer of the Jews, whose place in honor was next to the Baron of the Exchequer. His office was to be the Patron & Protector of the Jews in their just rights, to decide all suits betwixt Christians and them, and to keep the seal of the Jews their Corporation, with the keys of their Treasury; I conceive of such moneys as they paid as Tribute to the King: otherwise the Jews had age enough to keep the Keys of their own coffers themselves, and wit too much to trust them with others. S^r Robert de Hod, and S^r Philip Lovel (afterward Treasurer of England) men of signal Nobility, successively discharged this place. These Justicers often acted very high in defence of their Clients, the Jews; insomuch as I finde it [b] complained of by the English Clergy, as a great grievance; that, when a Jew was convented before the Ecclesiastical Judg, for his misdemeanours (as Sacriledg, violence offered to some Priest, adultery with a Christian woman, &c.) their own Justicer would interpose, and, by a Prohibition obtained from the King, obstruct all legal proceedings against such a Jew, as onely responsible in his own jurisdiction.

The Justicer of the Jews.

[b] Additamenta Matthæi Parisiensis p. 202.

35. In their spiritual government they were all under one Pontifex, or High Priest. We finde his name was Elias, who Anno 1234. had that office. He was also called the Presbyter of the Jews, whose place was usually confirmed at least, if not constituted by the King, who by his Patent granted the same, as may appear by this copie of King Johns, as followeth.

The High Priest, or Presbyter of the Jews.

I have transcribed this Patent the rather for the rarity thereof, it being a strange sight, to see a Christian Arch-Bishop date an Instrument for a Jewish Presbyter.

36. Their livelihood was all on Usury. One Verse in [b] Deuteronomy (with their Comment thereon) was more beneficial unto them, then all the Old Testament besides. Unto a stranger thou maiest lend upon usury, but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury. Now interpreting all strangers who (though neighbours at the next door) were not of their own nation, they became the universal Usurers of all England; and did our Kingdom this courtesie, that, because all hated the Jews for their Usury sake; all also hated Usury for the Jews sake, so that Christians generally disdained to be guilty thereof. Now, seeing there are two wayes to wealth, one long and sure, by saving at home; the other short, but not so certain (because probably it may meet with detection and punishment) by oppressing abroad, no wonder if the Jews, using both wayes, quickly arrived at vast estates.

Jews griping Usurers.

[b] Deut. 23. 20.

37. For, first for their fare, it was course in the quality, and yet slender in the quantity thereof. Insomuch, that they would, in a manner, make pottage of a flint. Swines-flesh indeed they would not eat, but dogs-meat they would; I mean, beef and mutton, so poor, and lean, that the refuse of all Christians, was the Jews choice in the Shambles. Clothes they wore so poor, and patch'd, beggars would not take them up to have them. Attendants they kept none, every one waiting on himself. No wonder then, if easily they did over-grow others in wealth, who basely did under-live themselves in all convenient accommodations. Nor were they less gripple in keeping, then greedy in catching of goods; who would as soon lose their fingers, as let go what they had clutched therein.

Their rapaciousness, and tenaciousness.

38. I was of the opinion (and perchance not without company in my mistake) that the Jews were not permitted to purchase Lands in England. I thought, onely the ground of their graves (generally buried without Cripplegate, in the Jews garden, on the West side of S^t Giles's Church-yard, now turned into Tenements in Red-cross-street) could be termed theirs. But since I am informed, that Benomy [c] Mittun, a Jew (as certainly many more besides him) was possessed of much Land, and many houses in several parishes in London. Surely their purchases were limited within some restrictions. But the Jews generally more fancied letting-out of money, then buying in of Land, as which made their estates less subject to discovery, more plentiful in their encreasing, and more portable in the removing thereof.

Jews might purchase houses.

[c] Stows Survey, pag. 288, and 289.

39. It was an usual punishment legally inflicted on these Jews, for their offences not capital, to Excommunicate them. Thus such Jews should be Excommunicated, who, contrary to the Laws, kept Christian-nurses [a] in their houses; or, who cast off that badg, or cognizance, which they ought to have worn over their upper garment, to be distinguished from Christians. Surely such Excommunication was no Ecclesiastical censure, needless to keep the Jews out of our Churches, who hated all coming into them. Rather it was a civil penalty (equivalent to the Universities discommoning a Townsman in Cambridg) whereby the Jews were debarred all commerce with Christians (worse to them then all the plagues of Egypt) and so the mart of their profit marred, dearer unto them then life it self. Anno Dom. 1290. Anno Regis Ed. 1. 18.

to

Jews unfortunate at feasts and frays.

40. Endless it were to reckon up the indignities offered unto these Jews, on occasion sometimes given, but oftner taken. Apprentices now adayes do not throw sticks at Cocks on Shrove-tuesday so commonly, as then on that day they used clubs on the Jews, if appearing out of their houses. A people equally unhappy at feasts, and at frays. For, whensoever the Christians at any revels made great entertainments, the Jews were made to pay the reckoning. And wheresoever any braule began, in London, it ended alwayes in the Old-Jury, with pillaging of the people therein. What good heart can without grief, recount the injuries offered to those, who once were the only people of God? These were they who preferred Barabbas, before Christ their Saviour, which Barabbas was a [b] robber, a raiser of [c] insurrection, and a murderer. And ever since that time, in all insurrections against them (when they desired, and sought safety, and deliverance) it hath been their constant portion to be robbed and murdered.

A sad Jewish Jubilee.

41. But the most terrible persecution fell upon them at the Coronation of King Richard the first, which, according to the Jewish computation was their Jubile; and then busie in the observance thereof, though (alas) they had not one merry day in the compass of the whole year. They were forbidden, for fear of their inchantments, to approach the Kings Coronation, upon heavy penalties denounced. Now, their curiosity was so far above their covetousness, or rather, their wilfulness so far above their curiosity herein, that, out of their old spirit of contradiction, some appeared there, which caused the killing of many, robbing of moe Jews in London. On the same account, within few dayes after (how quickly can cruelty ride post seven score and ten miles?) five hundred Jews besieged in a Tower at York, first beheaded their own wives and children, and then burnt themselves, to escape more cruel torments.

London-wall built with Jewish stones.
[d] Stows Survey of London, pag. 288.

42. In the seventeenth year of the Reign of King John, the Barons brake into the Jews houses, and rifled their coffers, and with the stone of their houses, repaired the gates, and [d] walls of London. Surely such stones must be presumed very hard, like the Jews, their owners, from whom they were taken, and yet they soon mouldred away with winde and weather. Indeed plundered-stone never make strong walls. And I impute it as a partial cause of the weakness of London-walls (which no enemy ever since assaulted, but he entered them) that a great part of them (enough to infect all the rest) was built with materials got by oppression.

Henry the third cruel to the Jews.
[e] Mat. Paris pag. 605.

43. But, of all our English Kings, none ground the Jews with exactions, like King Henry the third. Onely herein the Jews might, and did comfort themselves, that the English, his Native Subjects, also smarted soundly under his oppression. He not onely flead the skin, but raked the flesh, and scarrified the bones of all the Jews estates in England; ut vivere fastidirent, that it was irksome for them to live. [e] Gold he would receive of every Jewish man, or woman, alwayes with his own hand, but consigned other officers to receive the silver from them. One offensive act he wilfully did to their conscience, in giving them leave, at their own cost and charges, to build them a new Synagogue, and when they had finish'd it, He commanded them to dedicate it to the Virgin [f] Mary, whereby they utterly lost the use thereof; and afterwards the King gave it to be a Cell of S[t] Anthony of Vienna. A vexatious deed, meerly to despight them, who are (since their smarting for Idolatry in the captivity of Babylon) pertinacious worshippers of one God, and nothing more retardeth their converſion to Chriſtianity, then the ſcandal given daylie unto them, by the Popiſh Saint-ſhip to their images.

44. It may juſtly ſeem admirable, whence theſe Jews ſo often pillaged to their bare skins, ſo ſuddenly recruited themſelves with wealth. What I have heard affirmed of ſome ground in Gloceſter-ſhire, that in a kindly ſpring, bite it bare over night, next morning the graſs will be grown to hide a wande therein, is moſt certainly true in application to the Jews, ſo full and faſt did wealth flow in upon them. Let their eggs not onely be taken away, but their neſts be pluck'd down; yet within few years we ſhall finde them hatching a new brood of wealth therein. This made many ſuſpect them, for clipping and coyning of money. But, to leſſen the wonder of theſe Jews their ſpeedy recovery, know, that (beſides ſome of their inviſible hoardes eſcaping their plunderers hands) the Jews in other places (where the perſecution for the preſent) furniſhed them to ſet up trading again. Indeed commendable was the Jews charity to their own Country-men, ſave that neceſſity commanded them to love one another, being hated of all other nations.

The wonder of the Jews ſpeedy recruiting their eſtates.

45. To avoid theſe miſeries, they had but one ſhift (and, as uſed by ſome of them, it was but a ſhift indeed) to pretend themſelves Chriſtian Converts, and to tender themſelves to be baptized. To ſuch perſons, in a temporal reſpect, Baptiſm waſhed away all ſin; they being cleared and quitted from all ante-facts how hainous ſoever, by their entrance into Chriſtianity. Thus Anno 1259. Elias Biſcop, a London-Jew, charged with many horrible crimes; and, amongſt others, that with poiſoned drinke he had cauſed the death of many Engliſh Gentlemen, eſcaped all puniſhment by being baptized. For the farther encouragement of their converſion, King Henry the third erected a ſmall houſe in Chancery-Lane (where the office of the Rolls is now kept) for Convert-Jews to dwell in, allowing a daylie ſalary to them for their maintenance. It is to be feared many lived therein who were Jews inwardly, but not in the Apoſtles [a] acception thereof, in the ſpirit, but in the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men, but of God; but I mean ſuch, who ſtill retained the dregs of Judaiſme under the fained profeſſion of Chriſtianity. Sure I am, King Edward at this time was ſo incenſed againſt the Jewiſh Nation, that now he reſolved the total and final extirpation of them, and theirs, out of his Dominions.

46. Many miſdemeanours were laid to their charge, amongſt which theſe following were the principal. Firſt, Enchantments. This was an old ſin of the Jews, whereof the Prophets alwayes complained, [b] the multitude of thy ſorceries, and the great abundance of thine inchantments. And it ſeemes they ſtill retained their old wicked wont. Secondly, Poiſoning. To give the Jews their due, this was none of their faults, whileſt living in their own land, not meeting with the word in the whole Bible. It ſeems they learnt this ſin after their diſperſion in other Nations, and ſince are grown exquiſite in that art of wickedneſs. Thirdly, Clipping of money. Fourthly, Counterfeiting of Chriſtians hands and ſeals. Fifthly, Extortion. A Jew occaſioned a mutiny in London, by demanding from a poor Chriſtian, above two ſhillings for the uſe of twenty ſhillings for one week, being (by proportion) no leſs then five hundred and twenty pounds per annum for every hundred. Sxthly, Crucifying of the children of Chriſtians (to keep their hands in ure) always about Eaſter. So that the time pointed at their intents directly in deriſion of our Saviour. How ſufficiently theſe crimes were witneſſed againſt them, I know not. In ſuch caſes weak proofs are of proof againſt rich offenders. We may well believe, if their perſons were guilty of ſome of theſe faults, their eſtates were guilty of all the reſt.

money to use; which produced a petition from them to the King, that they might have leave to depart the Land; a request easily granted unto them: some will say it is all one in effect, whether one be starved or stabbed, death inevitably following from both, as here the Jews were famished, on the matter, out of England; usury being their meat and drink, without which they were unable longer to subsist: However this took off much from the Odium of the act, that they were not immediately, but only indirectly and consequentially banished the Realm, or rather permitted a free departure on their own petition for the same. As for the sad accident that some hundreds of them being purposely shipped out of a spightful design, in a leaking vessel, were all drowned in the Sea, if true, it cannot but command compassion in any Christian heart.

The King gets incredible wealth forfeited by the Jews.

48. It is hardly to be believed, what vast sums of wealth accrewed to the King, by this (call it ejection, or amotion, or) decession of the Jews. He allowed them only bare viaticum to bear their charges, and seised on all the rest of their estates. Insomuch, that now the King needed not to listen to the counsel of William Marsh, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and Treasurer of England (but therein speaking more like a Treasurer then a Bishop) advising him, if in necessity, to take all the plate and money of Churches [a] and Monasteries, therewith to pay his souldiers. The poor Jews durst not go into France (whence lately they had been solemnly banished) but generally disposed themselves in Germany, and Italy, especially in the Popes territories therein, where profit from Jews and Stews, much advance the constant revenues of his Holiness. 1293 21. 1294 22.

King Edward arbitrator betwixt Bailiol and Bruce.

49. King Edward having done with the Jews, began with the Scots, and effectually humbled them, and their country. This the occasion. Two Competitors appearing for the Crown of Scotland, [John Bailiol, and Robert Bruce] and, both referring their title to King Edward's decision, he adjudged the same to Bailiol, or rather to himself in Bailiol. For he enjoyned him to do homage unto him, and that hereafter the Scotish Crown should be held in fealty of the English. Bailiol, or his necessity rather (his person being in King Edward's power) accepted the condition, owning in England one above himself, that so he might be above all in Scotland. But, no sooner was he returned into his own Kingdom, and peaceably possessed thereof, but instantly in a Letter of defiance, he disclaimeth all former promises to King Edward, appealing to the Christian world, whether his own inforced obedience were more to be pitied, or King Edward's insolence (improving it self on a Princes present extremities) more to be condemned. 1295 23.

He proveth malleus Scotorum.

50. Offended hereat, King Edward advanceth into Scotland, with the forces he formerly intended for France. Power and policy make a good medly, and the one fareth the better for the other. King Edward to strengthen himself, thought fit to take in the title of Robert Bruce, (Bailiols corrival, hitherto living privately in Scotland) pretending to settle him in the Kingdom. Hereupon the Scots, to lessen their losses, and the English victories, [b] affirm, that in this expedition their own Country-men were chiefly conquered by their own Country-men, the Brucian party assisting the English. Sure it is that King Edward took Barwick, Dunbar, Sterling, Edenburgh, the Crown, Scepter, and (out of Scone) the Royal Chair, and prophetical Marble therein. And though commonly it be observed, that English valour hopefully budding and blossoming on this side of Edenburgh-Frith, is frost-bitten on the North thereof; yet our victorious Edward, crossing that sea, took Montross, and the best Counties thereabout. In a word, he conquered almost all the Garden of Scotland, and left the wilderness thereof to conquer it self. Then having setled Warren, Earl of Surrey, Vice-Roy thereof, and made all the Scotish Nobility (Doughty Douglas alone excepted, who was committed to prison for his singular recusancy) swear homage unto him, and taking John Bailiol captive along with him, he returned triumphantly into England. 1297 25.

2. Hereupon King Edward called a Councel of his Lords at Lincoln, where peruſing the contents of the Popes preſcript, he returned a large anſwer, wherein he endeavoured by evident reaſons, and ancient predceents, to prove his propriety in the Kingdom of Scotland. This was ſeconded by another from the Engliſh Peerage, ſubſcribed with all their hands, the whole [a] tenor whereof deſerves to be inſerted, but this paſſage muſt not be omitted, being directed to no meaner then his Holineſs himſelf.

> *Wherefore, after treaty had, and diligent deliberation of the contents of your foreſaid Letters, this was the common agreement, and conſent with one minde, and ſhall be without fail, in time to come, by Gods grace, that our foreſaid Lord the King ought by no means to anſwer in judgment in any caſe, or ſhould bring his foreſaid rights into doubt, nor ought not to ſend any Proctors or meſſengers to your preſence. The Pope perceived he had met with men, which underſtood themſelves, and that King Edward was no King John, to be frighted or flattered out of his Right, he therefore was loath to claſh his Keys againſt the others ſword, to trie which was made of the hardeſt mettal; but foreſeeing the Verdict would go againſt him, wiſely non-ſuited himſelf. Whereas had this unjuſt challenger, met with a timerous Defendant, it had been enough to have created an undeniable title to him and his ſucceſſors. The beſt is, Nullum tempus occurrit Papæ, no proceſs of time doth prejudice the Popes due; but whenſoever he pleaſeth to proſecute his right, Scotland lieth ſtill in the ſame place where it did before.

4. But the courage of King Edward moſt appeared in humbling and ordering Robert Wincelſey, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury. He was an inſolent man, hated even of the Clergie, becauſe, though their champion to preſerve them from Civil and Secular burdens, yet the Popes Broker, to reſerve them for his unconſcionable exactions, as if keeping Church-men to be wrong'd by none, but himſelf. others conceive him onely to have done this, presuming on the Kings noble disposition for pardon. But such must yield him a Traitor either to the Kings Crown, or to his own innocence by his unworthy acknowledging his offence. Thus that man who confesseth a debt, which he knows not due, hoping his Creditor will thereupon give him an acquittance, scarce deserveth pitty for his folly, if presently sent to prison for non-payment thereof. Then he called the King his Master, a terme, wherewith formerly his tongue was unacquainted, (whom neither by word or letter he would ever acknowledg under that notion) tendering himself to be disposed at his pleasure.

6. No, Quoth the King, I will not be both party and judg, and proceed against you as I might by the Common-Law of the Land. I bear more respect to your order, whereof you are as unworthy as of my favour: having formerly had experience of your malice in smaller matters, when you so rigorously used my Chaplains attending on me in their ordinary service beyond the Seas; so that though I sent my Letters unto you, you as lightly regarded what I wrot, as what they pleaded in their own behalf. Wincelsey having but one guard for all blows, persisted in his submission, desiring (a president unparallel'd) that the King would give him his blessing: No, said the King, it is more proper that you should give me your blessing. But, well, I will remit you to your own great Master the Pope, to deal with you according to your deserts. But the Arch-Bishop loath belike to go to Rome, and staying longer in England, then the Kings command, and (perchance) his own promise, lurk'd in a Covent, at Canterbury, till fourscore [b] Monks were by the Kings command thrust out of their places for relieving him out of their charity; and were not restored till the aforesaid Arch-Bishop was banished the Kingdom.

Whether done to procure reputation to the Justice of the Court of Rome; where, in publick causes, men, otherwise privately well deserving, should finde, no more favour there, then they brought innocence thither: Or becaus (which is most probable) the Pope loved the Arch-Bishoprick, better then the Arch-Bishop; and knew during his suspension, both to increase his profit, and improve his power in England, by such cunning Factors, as he imployed in the business; namely, William de Testa, and Peter Amaline, both strangers, to whom the Pope committed the sequestration of Canterbury, whilest the cause of Wincelsey did as yet depend undetermined.

Some sixty years since, Pandulph, an Italian, and Popes Legat (a perfect Artist in progging for money) being Bishop of Norwich, [c] pretending his Church to be in debt, obtained of his Holiness the first-fruits of vacant Benefices in Norfolk, and Suffolk, to discharge that engagement. This Grant to him, being but personal, local, and temporary, was improved by his Successors to a constant revenue; yea (covetousness being an apt Scholar, and profit an easie lesson) this example was followed by other English Bishops in their respective Dioceses. Behold here a piece of exemplary Justice. Who could have look'd for less (the illegality of these payments appearing) but that the Clergie should be eased of them? Whereas these forein Sequestrators did order, that generally throughout England, the first-fruits of all spiritual promotions falling void next, for three years should be paid over to the Popes Chamber at Rome; onely [d] Cathedral, and Conventual-Churches were excepted herein. Thus, excluding all influence of Divine Providence, and concluding 'twas Fortunes duty to favour them, at Sterling they bid the Scots battel, wherein ten thousand of our men are by our own Authors confessed to be slain. There fell the flowre of the English Nobility, the King with a few, hardly saving himself by flight. Thus, as Malleus Scotorum, the Hammer, or mauler of the Scots, is written on the Tomb of King Edward the first, in Westminster: Incus Scotorum, the Anvile of the Scots, might as properly be written on the Monument (had he any) of Edward the second.

The fatal defeat of the English in Scotland.

7. 1314 15. But leaving these fights, we proceed to other Polemical Digladiations, more proper for our Pen; namely, the disputes of SCHOOL-MEN, which in this Kings Reign were heightened to perfection; Formerly those were termed Scholastici, who in the Schools were Rethoricians, making therein Declamatory Orations. Such Exercises ceasing in this Age, the Terme was Translated to signifie those who busied themselves in Controversial Divinity, though some will have them so called, from Scolion a Commentary, their studies being generally nothing else then illustrations of the text of Peter Lombard, the Master of the Sentences. Take them here together at one view, intending to resume them again in their several Characters.

Anno Dom. 1314. Anno Regis Ed. 2. 7.

Besides, many other School-men of inferiour note, which we pass by in silence; Now we may safely dare all Christendome besides to shew so many Eminent School-Divines, bred within the compass of so few years; insomuch that it is a truth what a forrein [a] writer saith, Scholastica Theologia, ab Anglis, & in Anglia, sumpsit exordium, fecit incrementum, pervenit ad perfectionem. And although Italy falsly boasteth that Britain had her Christianity first from Rome; England may truly maintain, that from her (immediately by France) Italy first received her School-Divinity.

[a] Alexander Minutianus in Epistola.

16. Of these School-men, Alexander Hales goeth the first, Master to Thomas Aquinas, and Bonaventure, whose livery in some sort, the rest of the School-men may be said to wear, insisting in his foot-steps. At the command of Pope Innocent the fourth, he wrote the body of all School-Divinity in four Volumes. He was the first Franciscan who ever took the degree of Doctor in the University (who formerly counted the height of a degree inconsistent with the humility of their order) as appeareth by the close of his Epitaph.

Alex. Hales their Father and Founder.

Egenorum sit primus Doctor eorum.

So great an honorer of the Virgin Mary, that he never * denied such who sued to him in her name: As since our Mr Fox is said never to have denied any who begged of him for Jesus Christ.

* Pits descript. Ang.

17. Roger Bacon succeeds. O what a sin is it to be more learned then ones Neighbours in a barbarous age! being excellently skilled in the Mathematicks (a wonder-working Art, especially to ignorant eyes) he is accused for a Conjurer by Hieronymus de Esculo, Minister general of his Order, and afterwards Pope, by the name of Nicholas the fourth. The best is, this Hieronymus before he was a Pope was not Infallible, and therefore our Bacon might be scandalized by him; however he was committed to Prison at Rome, by Pope Clement the fourth, and remained in durance a considerable time, before his own innocence, with his friends endeavours, could procure his enlargement.

Bacon accused for a Conjurer.

18. For mine own part, I behold the name of Bacon in Oxford, not as of an Individual man, but Corporation of men; No single Cord, but a twisted Cable of many together. And as all the Acts of Strong men of that nature are attributed to an Hercules: All the predictions of Prophecying women to a Sibyll; So I conceive all the atchievements of the Oxonian Bacons in their liberal studies, are ascribed to ONE, as chief of the name. And this in effect is confessed by the most learned and ingenious Orator [b] of that University. Indeed we finde one Robert Bacon who died Anno, One thousand two hundred fourty eight, a Learned Doctor, and Trithemius stileth John Baconthorpe, plain Bacon, which addeth to the probability of the former assertion. However this confounding so many Bacons in one, hath caused Anticroniſmes in many Relations. For how could this Bacon ever be a reader of Philosophy in Brasen-Nose Colledg, Founded more then one Hundred years after his death; so that his Brasen head (so much spoken of, to speak) must make time past to be again, or else these inconsistences will not be reconciled. Except any will salve it with the Prolepsis of Brasen-Nose Hall, formerly in the place where the Colledg is now erected. I have done with the Oxford Bacons, only let me add, that those of Cambridg, Father and Son, Nicholas and Francis, the one of Bennet, and the other of Trinity Colledg, do hold [absit invidia] the Scales of desert, even against all of their name in all the world besides.

Many Bacons in one, make a confusion.

[b] Sir Isaac Wake in his Rex Platonicus, pag. 209, 210.

19. John Duns Scotus succeeds, who some will have called Scotus, ob [c] profundissimam dicendi obscuritatem, from his profound obscurity in writing: Indeed there was one Heracletus, to whom cognomen Scotinon [d] fecit orationis obscuritas, but others conceive him so called, either from Scotland his Country, or John Scott his father. Nor was he called Duns, as some will have Duns Scotus, why so called.

have it contractedly from Dominus, but from the place of his Nativity, though three Kingdoms earnestly engage to claim him for their Country-man.

England.	Scotland.	Ireland.
It is thus written at the end of his Manuscript works in Merton Colledg in Oxford, whereof he was Fellow; Explicit [a] Lectura Subtilis in Universitate Parisiensi Doctoris Joannis Duns, nati in quadam villula parochiæ de Emildon vocata Dunston, in Comitatu Northumbriæ, pertinente Domui Scholarium de Merton-hall in Oxonia.	Although John Scott dissembled himself an English-man, to finde the more favour in Merton Colledg, living in an age wherein cruel Wars betwixt England and Scotland; yet his Tomb erected at Colen is bold to tell the truth, whereon this Epitaph, [b] Scotia me genuit, Anglia susceptit, Gallia edocuit, Germania tenet. Besides, the very name of Scotus, avoweth him to be a Scotch-man.	He is called Joannes Dungs, by abbreviation for Dunensis, that is born at * Doune, an Episcopal See in Ireland, where Patricius, Dubricius, and S[t] Columba lie interred. And it is notoriously known to Criticks, that Scotus signifieth an Irish-man in the most ancient exception thereof.

Three Kingdoms lay claim to his birth.

b Arch-Bish. Spotswood in his History of the Church of Scotland.

* Hugh Cavel. in vita Scoti.

I doubt not but the Reader will give his verdict, that the very Scotiety of Scotus belongeth to England as his Native Country, who being born in Northumberland, which Kingdom in the Saxon Heptarchie extended from Humber to Edenburgh Frith; it was a facile mistake for Foreiners to write him a Scotch-man on his Monument. As for the name of Scotus, it is of no validity to prove him that Country-man; as a common-Sir-name amongst us, as some four years since, when the Scotch were injoyned to depart this Land, one M[r] English in London, was then the most considerable Merchant of the Scotch Nation. The sad manner of Scotus his death is sufficiently known, who being in a fit of a strong Apoplexie, was by the cruel kindness of his over-officious friends, buried whilest yet alive, and recovering in the grave, dashed out his brains against the Coffin, affording a large field to such wanton wits in their Epigrams, who could make sport to themselves on the sad accident of others.

20. I had almost over-seen John Baconthorpe, being so low in stature, as but one remove from a Dwarfe, of whom one saith, Ingenio [c] magnus, corpore parvus erat.

His wit was Tall, in body small.

Low, but learned Baconthorpe.

c Johannes Trissa Nemausensis in libro de viris illustribus.

Insomuch that Corpus non tulisset, quod ingenium protulit, his body could not bear the Books which his brain had brought forth. Coming to Rome (being sent for by the Pope) he was once hissed [d] at in a Publick Disputation, for the badness forsooth of his Latin and pronunciation; but indeed because he opposed the Popes power in dispencing with Marriages, contrary to the Law of God, whose [e] judgment was afterwards made use of by the defenders of the divorce of King Henry the eight.

Occam a ſtiff Imperialiſt.

21. William Occam ſided with Lewis of Bavaria againſt the Pope, maintaining the Temporal power above the Spiritual; he was fain to flie to the Emperour for his ſafety, ſaying unto him, Defende me gladio, & ego te defendam verbo.

Defend me with thy ſword, and I will defend thee with my word.

This Occam was Luthers chief (if not ſole) School-man, who had his works at his fingers end; loving him no doubt the better for his oppoſition to the Pope.

Holcots ſudden death.

22. Robert Holcot was not the meaneſt amongſt them, who died of the Plague at Northampton, juſt as he was reading his Lectures on the ſeventh of Eccleſiaſticus; wherein as many Canonical truths, as in any Apocrypha chapter; and although as yet in his publick reading he was not come to the laſt verſe thereof (ſo proper for mortality) wee may charitably believe he had ſeriouſly commented thereon, in his private meditations. Whatſoever thou takeſt in hand, remember the end, and thou ſhalt never do amiſs.

Bale deſcript. Brit. Cent. 5 fi. pag. 434.

23. Thomas Bradwardine bringeth up the rear, though in learning and piety (if not ſuperiour) equal to any of the reſt, witneſs his worthy book againſt Pelagianiſme, to aſſert the freeneſs of Gods grace in mans converſion, which he juſtly intituleth, De cauſa Dei, of Gods cauſe; for as God is a Second in every good cauſe, ſo he is a Principal in this, wherein his own honour is ſo nearly concerned. And though the Pſalmiſt ſaith, plead thine own cauſe O Lord; yet in this age (wherein Miracles are ceaſed) God pleadeth his cauſe, not in his Perſon, but by the proxie of the tongues, and pens, hands, and hearts, of his Servants. This Bradwardine was afterwards Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, and how highly eſteemed, let Chaucer * tell you.

The juſt praiſe of Tho. Bradwardine.

* In the Nuns Prieſts tale.

But I ne cannot boult it to the bren,
As can the holy Doctour S^t Auſtin,
Or Boece, or the Biſhop Bradwardin.

This teſtimony of Chaucer by the exact computation of time, written within forty years after Bradwardines death, which addeth much to his honour, that in ſo ſhort a time his memory was in the peaceable poſſeſſion of ſo general a veneration, as to be joyned in company with S^t Auguſtine and Boethius, two ſuch eminent perſons in their ſeveral capacities.

School-men buſied in needleſs difficulties.

24. The School-men principally imployed themſelves in knotty and thorny Queſtions of Controverſial Divinity; Indeed as ſuch who live in London, and like populous places, having but little ground for their foundations to build houſes on, may be ſaid to enlarge the bredth of their houſes in height (I mean increaſing their room in many ſtories one above another; ſo the School-men in this age, lacking the latitude of general learning and languages, thought to enlarge their active mindes by mounting up. So improving their ſmall bottom with towring Speculations, though ſome of things myſtical, that might not, more of things difficult, that could not, moſt of things curious that need not be known unto us.

Excuſes for their bad latin.

* Opus operatum

25. Their Latin is generally barbarous, counting any thing Eloquent that is Expreſſive, going the neareſt way to ſpeak their own Notions, though ſometimes treſpaſſing on Grammer, abuſing if not breaking * Priſcians head therein: Some impute this their bald and thred-bare language, to a deſign that no vermin of Equivocation ſhould be hid under the nap of their words; whileſt

Anno Regni Ed. 2. 7. Anno Dni. 1314

whileſt others aſcribe it to their want of change, and their poverty in learning, to procure better Expreſſions.

Their ſeveral diviſions in judgment.

26. Yet theſe School-men agreed not amongſt themſelves in their judgments. For Burley being Scholar to Scotus, ſerved him as Ariſtotle did Plato his Maſter, maintaining a contrary faction againſt him. Ocham his Scholar, father of the Nominals, oppoſed Scotus the founder of the Reals; which two factions divided the School-men betwixt them; Holcot being a Dominican, ſtiffly reſiſted the Franciſcans, about the conception of the Virgin Mary, which they would have without any original ſin. However the Papiſts, when preſſed that their Diviſions Mar their unitie, (a mark of the Church whereof they boaſt ſo much) evade it, by pleading that theſe poines are not de fide onely, in the out skirts of Religion, and never concluded in any Councel to be the Articles of faith.

All Oxford, moſt Merton Colledg.

27. All of theſe School-men were Oxford, moſt Merton Colledg men. As the ſetting up of an eminent Artiſt in any place of a City, draws Chapmen unto him to buy his wares, and Apprentices to learn his Occupation. So after Roger Bacon had begun School-Divinity in Merton Colledg, the whole Gang and Genius of that houſe ſucceſſively applied their ſtudies thereunto; and many repaired thither from all parts of the Land for inſtruction in that nature. Mean-time Cambridg men were not Idle, but otherwiſe imployed, more addicting themſelves to preaching, whereof though the world took not ſo much notice, poſitive Divinity not making ſo much noiſe as controverſial (where men ingage more earneſtneſs) yet might be more to Gods glory, and the ſaving of the ſouls of men.

Why School-Divinity not ſo uſed in Oxford, after this Age.

28. Some will wonder, ſeeing School-Divinity was ſo rife in Oxford in this Age, for ſome hundred years together (viz. from towards the end of Henries, to the end of Edwards Reign, both the third of their names) how the ſtudy thereof, ſhould ſink ſo ſodainly in that Univerſity, which afterwards produced not ſuch eminent men in that kinde. But hereof ſeveral reaſons may be aſſigned:

1. The Wars betwixt York and Lancaſter ſoon after began; a Controverſie indeed, which ſilenced School-velitations, Students being much diſheartened with thoſe martial diſcords.
2. Once in an Age the appetite of an Univerſity alters, as to its diet in learning, which formerly filled (not to ſay ſurfeited) with ſuch hard queſtions, for variety ſake, ſought out other imployments.
3. The ſparks of Scholars wits, in School-Divinity, went out for want of fuel in that ſubject, grown ſo trite and thred-bare, nothing could be, but what had been ſaid of the ſame before. Wherefore fine wits, found out other wayes to buſie themſelves.
4. Onely information of the brain, no benefit to the purſe, accrued by ſuch ſpeculations, which made others in after ages, to divert their ſtudies, à Quæſtionibus, ad Quæſtum, from Metaphyſical Quæries, to Caſe-divinity, as more gainful, and profitable; beſt inabling them for hearing Confeſſions, and proportioning Pennance accordingly.

Since the Reformation, School-Divinity in both the Univerſities, is not uſed (as anciently) for a ſole-profeſſion by it ſelf, to ingroſs all a mans life therein, but onely taken as a preparative quality to Divinity; Diſcreet men not drowning, but dipping their mindes in the ſtudy thereof.

The ſad diſtemper of England at this time.

28. Return we now to the Common-wealth which we left bad, and finde amended, as an old ſore without a plaiſter in cold weather; King Edward ward rather wilful then weak, (if wilfulness be not weakness, and sure the same effects are produced by both, ruin and destruction) slighted his Queens company, and such a Bed, if left (where Beauty without Grace) seldom standeth long empty. Queen Isabel blinded with fury, mistook the party who had wronged her, and revengeth her husbands faults on her own conscience, living incontinently with R. Mortimer; a man martial enough, and of much merit otherwise, save that an Harlot is a deep pit, therein invisibly to bury the best deserts. The two Spencers ruled all at pleasure; and the King was not more forward to bestow favours on them, as they free to deal affronts to others their superiours in birth and estate. Thus men of yesterday, have Pride too much to remember what they were the day before; and providence too little to fore-see what they may be to morrow. The Nobility (then petty Kings in their own Countreys) disdained such Mushrooms should insult over them; and all the Spencers insolencies being scored on the Kings account, no wonder if he (unable to discharge his own engagements) was broken by suretiship for others.

Anno Dom. 1314. Anno Regis Edw. 7.

King Edward accused for betraying his priviledges to the Pope.

29. I finde it charged on this King, that he suffered the Pope to encroach on the dignity of the Crown, to the great damage, and more dishonour of the Nation. Indeed his father left him a fair stake, and a winning hand, (had a good Gamester had the playing thereof) having recovered some of his priviledges from the Papal usurpation, which since it seems his Son had lost back again, though the particulars thereof in History do not so plainly appear. Onely it is plain, that to support himself, and supply his necessities, he complyed with the Clergy (a potent party in that age) favourably measuring out the causes of their cognizances; for although in the Reign of his Father, an hedg was made by an Act in that nature, betwixt the Spiritual and Temporal Courts; yet now a Ditch (an new act) was added to the former scene. So that hereafter (except wilfully) they could not mutually trespass on each others Jurisdictions.

Now

This Biſhop was one of high Birth and large Bounty, being ſaid to have expended a years revenews of his (this rich) Biſhoprick in the Solemnity of his inſtalement. He alſo founded Hart-Hall in Oxford. Who afterwards was barbarously murdered.

2. This worthy Bishop had an unworthy and untimely death some ten years after. For being Lord Treasurer, and left by the King in his absence, to govern, the (then mutinous) citty of London, the Citizens, (not without incouragement from the Queen) furiously fell upon him, and in Cheapside most barbarously butchered him, and then (as hoping to bury their murder with his body) hudled him obscurely into a hole. But afterward to make his Ghost some reparation and stop the clamour of the Clergy, the Queen ordered the removing and interring of his Body and his Brothers (a valiant Knight slain on the same account) in the Cathedral of Exeter. One would wonder this Bishop was not made a Martyr and Sainted in that Age, save that his suffering was of civill concernment, and not relating to Religion.

Sir William Petre his bounty

3. This House hath since found two eminent Benefactors, first, Sir William Petre (born of honest Parentage in Exeter) principal Secretary to four successive Kings and Queens. One who in tickish and turning times, did good to himself, (got a great estate) injurious to none, (that I ever heard, or read of) but courteous to many, and eminently to this Colledge, wherein he bestowed much building, and augmented it with eight Fellowships.

Dr Hackwel built this Chappel.

4. The other George Hackwel Doctor of Divinity, late Rector thereof, who though married, and having children, (must it not be a quick and large fountain, which besides filling a Pond, had such an overflowing stream?) bestowed more than one thousand pounds in building a beautiful Chappel. This is He who wrote the Learned and Religious Apologie for Divine Providence, proving that the World doth not decay. Many begin the reading thereof with much prejudice, but few end it, without full satisfaction, converted to the Authors Opinion, by his unanswerable Arguments.

Western men here most proper.

5. This Colledge consisteth chiefly of Cornish and Devonshire men, the Gentry, of which latter, Queen Elizabeth used to say, were Courtiers by their birth. And as these Western men do bear away the Bell for might and sleight in wrastling, so the Schollars here have alwayes acquitted themselves with credit in Palæstra literaria. The Rectors of this House anciently were annual, (therefore here omitted) fixed, but of latter years, to continue the term of their lives.

* I am informed that Dr. Prideaux in a Dedication to one of his Sermons, hath reckoned all the Worthy Writers of this house, but as yet I have not seen it.

Rectors.	Bishops.	Benefactors.	Learned Writers.
1 John Neale.		Edmund Stafford, Bishop of Exeter.	Judge DODDERIDGE.
2 Tho. Glasier.		Mr. John Piriam, Alderman of Exeter.	George Hackwell.
3 Tho. Holland.		Sir John Ackland Knight, expending (besides other Benefactions) 800. pound in building the Hall.	John Prideaux.
4 John Prideaux.	John Prideaux Bishop of Worcester.		Sir Simon Baskervil.
5 George Hackwel.	Tho. Winniff Bishop of Lincoln.		Dr. Velsain.
6 Conant.			Nath. {Carpenter Norrington.
			George Kendal.

So that lately therein were maintained, one Rector, twenty three Fellowes, a Bible-Clerk, two Pensioners, Servants, Commoners and other Students to the number of two hundred.

6. Clergy-

Anno Regis Ed. secun 9 | Anno Dom. 1316.

6. Clergy-men began now to complain, that the Lay-Judges entrenched on their Priviledges, and therefore they presented a Petition to the King in his Parliament at Lincolne, requesting the redresse of sixteen grievances. To most of them the King returned a satisfactory answer, and so qualified his denyals to the rest, that they could not but content any reasonable dispositi-on.

The Kings courteous answer to the Prelates complaints.

7. These Concessions of the King were digested into Laws, and are printed at large in the Statutes known by the title of Articuli Cleri. Whereon Sir Edward Coke in the second part of his Institutes, hath made no lesse learned then large Commentary. So that though the Law of circumspectè agatis had stated this difference; Yet it seems this Statute (as Circumspectius agatis) was conceived very requisite.

Made a Printed Statute under the title of Articuli Cleri.

8. Moreover, these Statutes did not so clearly decide the difference betwixt the Spiritual and Temporal Jurisdictions, but that many contests happened afterwards betwixt them, no longer ago then in the fift of King James, when the Doctors of the Commons under Richard Bancroft (Arch-Bishop of Canterbury their General) opposed the Judges about the indeterminable controversies of Prohibitions. Adde hereunto, that the Clergy claimed to themselves the most favourable interpretation of all Statutes in their own behalf, whilst the Temporal Judges (in the not sitting of Parliaments) challenged that priviledge to themselves.

Yet the controversie between the two Jurisdictions still continued.

17 | 1324

9. The most lasting Monument of the memory of wofull King Edward the second, was the building of Orial Colledge in Oxford. Indeed some make Him, and others Adam Brown his Almoner Founder thereof, and both perchance truly, the King allowing, his Almoner issuing money for the building and endowing thereof. Others will have it, that his Almoner perswaded him on consciencious Principles to this good work, pertinently alleadging and pressing this instance, to prove that the Kings nature not bad in it self, but too yielding to the impressions of others. Now whereas the other Alms of this King were perishing, as relieving only poor for the present, these, as more lasting, have done good to many Generations.

Orial Colledg built by King Ed. the 2.

10. I meet with no satisfactory reason of the name which some will have to contain something of Easterne∫ therein: So scituated comparatively to some more ancient Foundation. Others deduce it from Criolium an eminent room in * Monasteries, and I cannot but smile at such who will have O Royal, as a Pathetical admiration of Princely Magnificence.

Quere about the name thereof.

* M. Paris in vitis 23. Ab. 5 Albani p. 100. Kings nursing Fathers to this house.

11. However, I do not deny, but that the Kings of England have been very indulgent to this Foundation. For besides, King Edward the second the Founder thereof, his Son King Edward gave unto them the Hospital of Saint Bartholmews nigh Oxford, with Lands to maintain eight poor people, subject to the government of the Provost and Fellows of this Colledge. Besides, King James being informed of some Legal defects in this Foundation, granted them a new Corporation Cavill-proof against all exceptions.

12. This Colledge being much decayed, Anthony Blencow late Provost, bequeathed twelve hundred pounds to the new building of a Front thereof: Which being done, lest it should be a disgrace to the rest of the Fabrick, the whole Colledge is rebuilt in a most decent manner.

Lately rebuilded most decently.

So that lately were maintained therein, one Provost, eighteen Fellows, one Bible-Clerk, twelve Exibitioners, with Commoners and Colledge Officers amounted to one hundred and sixty.

War between the Queen and King.

13. Let us cast our eye on the Common-wealth only, as it is the Ring wherein the Diamond of the Church is contained, and that now full of Cracks, caused by the severall state-factions. The two Spencers ru'ed all things till the Queen and her Son (who politiquely had got leave to go beyond the Seas) returned into England with a Navy and Army landing in Suffolk; She denounceth open war against her Husband, unlesse he would presently conform to her desires.

Counter-proclamations, and counter-rumours.

14. The King proclaimed that a thousand pound should be given to Him that brought the head of Roger Mortimer. The Queen proclaimed (such who had the better purse may give the greater price) that whosoever brought the head of the young Spencer (it seems his Father was not so considerable) should have two thousand pounds. The Queens party gave out that the King of Prance had sent over a vast Army for her assistance, and the Kings side Arch-rumoured (who could raise reports easier then Armies) that the Pope had excommunicated all such who sides against him: now though both reports were false, they made true impressions of hope in such hearts as believed them.

of

15. Three wayes were presented to King Edward, Fight, Flight, and Concealment, the first he was unable to doe, having no effectuall Forces, only able for a time to defend the Castle of Bristol, till many of his Complices were taken therein: a Tower therein given out to be undermined) being indeed undermoniel with bribes to the defenders thereof. Here the elder Spencer was taken and executed. The King unable to fight,

16. Flight was no lesse unsafe then dishonourable. For his Kingdome being an Island, the Sea would quickly put a period thereunto. Indeed there was some thoughts of his flight into Ireland, which was no better then out of a dirty way, into a very Bogg, besides great the difficulty to recover the Sea, and greater to passe over it, all Ports and passages were so way-layed. And flee,

17. Concealment was at the last resolved on, not as the best; but only way of his security, for a time he lay hid amongst the Welsh (not able to help, but willing to pitty him as a Native of their Countrey) concealed in the Abby of Neath, till men are sent down with money (no such light as the flame of silver wherewith to discover a person enquired for) and soon after he was betrayed into their hands. The younger Spencer taken with him, is hung on a Gallows fifty foot high, and the promised two thousand pounds were duly payed, and equally parted betwixt severall persons imployed in his apprehension. After a short concealment is taken,

18. Many Persons of quality were sent down from the Parliament then sitting, to King Edward, to Kenelworth Castle, to move (alias to command) him to resign the Crown, which at last he sadly surrendred. Sir William Trussel a Lawyer of great [abused] abilities (being rather to make then finde a precedent in this kinde) improved his witts in the formalities thereof. Soon after, Prince Eward his Son is Crowned King, whose Father is now no more then plain Edward of Caernarvon, though his mother (whose title was Relative to, and a Derivative from her Husband the dethroned King) was now more Queen Isabel then ever before. Thus the degradation of a Knight (as some have informed me) extendeth not to his Wife, who by the courtesie of England, if once, is ever a Lady. King Edward resigneth his Crown.

19. Edward late King, with many Letters Solicited to be admitted into the Queens company. All in vain, she found embraces at a lesse distance, dearer unto her, preferring the society of a Lord, who, in effect, had deposed a King, before a King, who had deposed himself: She made many excuses of sickness, and indisposition to enjoy him. So easily can that Sex make plausible pretences, that they cannot, what they will not do. He is rejected by his own wife.

20. Roger Mortimer, whose lust and revenge was equally unsatiable, could not be quiet whilst King Edward was alive: he feared King Edward was might play an after game of affection in his Subjects, in order therefore to his death, he is removed from Kenelworth (where the Earl of Leicester his Keeper was suspected too, sympathising with his sorrow) unto Berkley Castle, where he was barbarously butchered, being struck into the Postern of his body with a hot spit, as it is generally reported. And cruelly murthered.

21. Nothing now remaineth in this Kings reign, save to take notice, how the Clergy (understand such who were Active (for Neuters, shall passe for none) stand affected in this great State-difference. I find not enough to call a number of the Bishops cordial to the King. For besides Walter Stapleton Bishop of Exeter (of whom before) only John Stratford Bishop of Winchester heartily adhered unto him, and yet this Stratford was imployed on a message from the Parliament to the King at Kenelworth, to perswade him to resign A brace of loyal Subjects.

Anno Dom. 1326 | Anno Regis Ed. secun. 19.

ſign the Crown, though having no other deſign, then the Kings ſafety therein. He hoped that in this tempeſt the caſting out of the Lading, would ſave the Hulke of the Ship, and the ſurrendring of the Scepter, ſecure the Kings perſon.

And a Loyal Prieſt-Chancelour.

22. With John Stratford let me couple Robert de Baldock (though no Biſhop, a Biſhops mate) as a Prieſt and Chancelour of England. This man unable to aſſiſt, reſolved to attend the King, and was taken with him in Wales. Hence was he brought up to London, and committed to Adam Tarleton Biſhop of Hereford. Here the ſhadow of Tarleton Miter, (if pleaſed to put forth his power) might have ſecured this his Gueſt-priſoner from any danger, whereas on the contrary, it is more then ſuſpicious that he gave a ſignall, to the tumultuous people to ſeize his perſon. For he was dragged to Newgate, and there payed his life for his Loyalty: yet was never heard to complain of the dearneſſe of his penyworth. If any violence was ſecretly offered unto his perſon, he might endure it the more patiently, having read, * that the Diſciple is not above his Maſter, nor the ſervant better then his Lord. This Baldock was a good Juſticer, nor charged in our Chronicles with any miſdemeanour, ſave faithfulneſſe to an unfortunate Maſter, and his Memory will travers his Innocence, as confeſſing the Fact, but denying any fault therein.

* St. Mat. 10. 24.

W. Reinolds unthankful to the King.

23. But we have more then a good number of ſuch Biſhops, which ungratefully ſided with the Queen, againſt her Husband, and their Soverain. Walter Reynolds Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury leads their Van, preferred to that See, at the Kings great importunity, and by the Pope his Power of Proviſion. On the ſame token that, a far better Man, Thomas Cobham by name, Deane of Salisbury, (ſo learned and pious a perſon, that he was generally called the good Clergy-man) legally elected by the Commons, was put by, by the Pope, to make room for this Reinolds. He afterwards complied with the Queen, (his new Miſtreſs) againſt his old Maſter, active to perform his deſires. This ſome ſeek in vain to excuſe, by pleaſing Her imperious ſpirit, and this Arch-Biſhops fearfulneſs, alleadging, that cowardlineſſe is rather a defect in nature, then default in Morality.

The nature of the Popes proviſions.

24. A word by the way of the nature of the Popes proviſions (lately mentioned) which now began to be a general grievance of our Nation. When any Biſhoprick, Abbots place, Dignity or good Living (Aquila non capit muſcas) was like to be void, the Pope (by a profitable Prolepſis to himſelf) prediſpoſed ſuch places to ſuch ſucceſſors as he pleaſed. By this deviſe he defeated (when ſo pleaſed) the Legal election of all Convents, and rightful preſentation of all Patrons. He took up Churches before they fell, yea, before they ever ſtumbled: I mean, whilſt as yet no ſuſpition of ſickneſſe, in Incumbents younger and healthier than his Holineſs himſelf. Yea, ſometimes no Act of Proviſion, was entered in ſcriptis in the Court, only the Pope was pleaſed to ſay by word of mouth, (and who durſt confute him?) he had done it. So that Incumbents to Livings, who otherwiſe had a rightful Title from their Patrons, were, (to purchaſe their peace) glad to buy of the Popes proviſions. Yea, his Holineſs ſold them aforehand to ſeveral perſons, ſo that not he who gave the firſt, but the moſt Money, carried away the preferment

Hen. Biſhop of Lincoln bad.

25. Next we take notice of Henry Burwaſh Biſhop of Lincoln, lately reſtored to the favour of King Edward, and by him lately eſteemed. Yet no ſooner did the Queen appear in the field, with an army, againſt him, but this Biſhop was the firſt, and forwardeſt, who publiquely repaired unto Her. This Burwaſh was he, who by meere might, againſt all right and reaſon, took in the Land of many poor people, (without making alſo the leaſt reparation) therewith to compleat his Park at Tinghurſt. Theſe wronged perſons, though ſeeing their own Bread, Beef, and Mutton, turned into the Biſhops Veniſon, durſt not conteſt with him who was Chancelour of England, though neither Law,

Anno Regis Ed. secun 18 | Anno Dom. 1326

Law, nor equity in this his Action; only they loaded him with curses and execrations. This mindeth me of a Modern accident, when, (some twenty years since) a Knight went about injuriously to inclose the Commons of a Town, and demanded of his Bailiffe what the railing in of the same would amount to; to whom his servant answered, that if he would take in the Commons, the Country would find him railings, as here they did this injurious Bishop. Otherwise let me say, that inclosures made without oppression, are a grand inriching both to private persons and to the Commonwealth.

Smile or frown.

26. Here let the Reader smile or frown, I am resolved to write what I find recorded in a * Grave Author, deriving it no doubt from good intelligence. This Bishop Burwash is said after his death, to have appeared to one of his former familiar friends, apparelled

* Godwin in the Bishop of Lincoln.

Like a Forester all in Green-a, with his Bow and Quiver of Arrows, and his Bugle horn hanging by his side: to him he complained that for the injuries done by him to poor, whilst living, he was now condemned to this penance, to be the Park-keeper of that place, which he so wrongfully had enclosed. He therefore desired him to repair to the Canons of Lincoln, and in his name to request them, that they would take order, that all hedges being cut down, and Ditches filled up, all might be reduced to their property, and the poor men be restored to their inheritance. It is added moreover, that one W. Batheler, was imployed by the Canons aforesaid, to see the premises performed, which was done accordingly.

A grave foolery.

27. This pretended Apparition seems inconsistent with the nature of Purgatory, as usually by Papists represented to people. Surely the smoake thereof would have footed his Green suit, and the Penance seems so slight and light for the offence, as having so much liberty and pleasure in a place of Command. Some Poets would have fancied him rather conceived himself turned Actæon-like, into a Deere, to be daily hunted by his own Hounds (guilt of Conscience) untill he made restitution. But it seems there be degrees in Purgatory, and the Bishop not in the Prison itself, but only within the Rules thereof, priviledged to go abroad, (whether on his Parol, or with his Keeper, uncertain) till he could procure Suffrages for his Plenary relaxation.

A Divell preaching.

28. Adam Tarlton Bishop of Hereford, is the last we will insist on, born in that City, where afterward he became Bishop, yet not honoured, but hated, and feared in the place of his Nativity. He was the grand Engineer, and contriver of all mischief against the King. Witnesse the Sermon preached by him at Oxford, before the Queen (then in hostile pursuit after her Husband) taking for this Text the words of the sick Son of the Shunamite) My head, my head. Here his wit and malice endeavoured to reape, what Gods Spirit did never intentionally sowe, and urged that a bad King (the distempered head of a State) is past Physick, or Chirurgery to be cured by Receits or Plaisters, but the only way is to cut it off from the Body.

And as bad writing.

29. His writing was worse then his Preaching: For when such Agents set to keep King Edward in Berkley Castle, were (by secret Order from R. Mortimer) commanded to kill him, they by letters addressed themselves for advice to this Bishop (then not far off at Hereford) craving his Counsel, what they should do, in so difficult and dangerous a matter. He returned unto them a Ridling Answer, altogether unpointed, which carried in it Life and Death, yea, Life or Death, as variously construed, resolved to be guided and governed wholy by his direction, not to dispute, but do what from him was recommended unto them, as knowing him able both in Conscience and Policy to advise them.

Life.

Anno Dom. 1326 Anno Regis Ed. secun. 19.

Life, and Death.

A strange apparition.

To kill King Edward you need not to fear it is good.

Life.	Death.
To kill King Edward you need not, to fear it is good.	To kill King Edward you need not to fear, it is good.

Arraigned for treason, he escapes the the first time.

30. This Adam Tarlton was afterwards accused of Treason, in the beginning of the reign of King Edward the third, and arraigned by the Kings Officers, when in the presence of the King, he thus boldly uttered himself,

My Lord the King, with all due respect unto your Majesty, I Adam, an humble Minister and member of the Church of God, and a consecrated Bishop, though unworthy, neither can, nor ought to answer unto so hard Questions, without the connivence, and consent of my Lord Arch-bishop of Canterbury, my immediate Judge under the Pope, and without the consent of other Bishops who are my Peers.

Three Arch-Bishops were there present in the place, Canterbury, York, and Dublin, by whose intercession, Tarlton escaped at that time.

Arraigned again, and protected by the Clergy.

31. Not long after, he was arraigned again at the Kings Beneh, the news whereof so startled the Clergie, that the foresaid Arch-Bishops erected their standards, I mean, set up their Crosses, and with ten Bishops more, attended with a numerous train of well-weaponed servants, advanced to the place of judicature. The Kings Officers frighted at the sight, fled away; leaving Tarlton the Prisoner alone at the Bar; whom the Arch-Bishops took home into their own custody, denouncing a curse on all such who should presume to lay violent hands upon him.

Cast the third time by a Lay-jury and proscribed.

32. The King offended hereat, caused a jury of Lay-men to be impannelled, and to enquire according to form of Law, into the actions of the Bishop of Hereford. This was a leading case, and the first time that ever Laymen passed their verdict on a Clergy-man. These Jurors found the Bishop guilty, whereupon the King presently seized on his Temporals, he proscribed the Bishop, and dispoiled him of all his moveables. However, afterwards he came off, and was reconciled to the King, and by the Pope made Bishop of Winchester, where he died, a thorow old man and blinded with age, many envying so quiet a death, to one who living had been so turbulent a person. But these things happened many years after.

King Edward the ſecond half-ſainted.

Anno Dom. 1326 | Anno Regn Ed. tertii 1.

King John Harding in the life of K. Ed. the second.

At Glouceſter entombed faire, and buried
Where ſome ſay God ſhewed for him great grace
Sith that time, with Miracles laudified
Oft times, in diverſe many caſe
As is written there, in that ſame place.
For which King Richard, called the ſecond
To tranſlate him was purpoſed whole and ſound.

It is much that one but a ſmall Saint whilſt alive, ſhould be ſo great an one when dead, as to be miraculouſly illuſtrious. But every man may believe his proportion.

A paire of Kings well matched.

2. Indeed great was the conformity betwixt this King Edward and that King Richard, both being ſecundi, the ſecond of their name: but not ſecundi, happy in their ſucceſſe. And had King Richard the ſecond known aforehand what caſualtie did attend him, no wonder if he ſecretly ſympathized with his condition. Both ſons of valiant and beloved Fathers, both of proper and amiable perſons. Both debauched by the ill Counſel of their diſſolute companions. Both depoſed from their Crowns. Both murdered, whilſt priſoners in a Clandeſtine (and as ſome report ſelf ſame) way of Cruelty.

King Edward not active in his fathers depoſing.

3. Ingenuous people are very loath to believe King Edward the third acceſſary to his Fathers death, otherwiſe then by accepting the Crown which he ſhould have refuſed, and antedating his own Soveraignty. Which may be excuſed by his tender years, thirteen as ſome, fifteen as others compute them. Nor is it a weak argument of his innocence with impartiall people, becauſe he reigned above fifty years, and lived to be a thorow old man. An happineſs promiſed by God to ſuch who are obedient to their Parents. Beſides, it is conſiderable, that this King having a numerous iſſue of active children of both Sexes none viſibly appear a croſſe untohim, for any notorious undutifulneſſe.

His admirable ſucceſſe in his wars.

4. The former part of this Kings reign affords but little Church-Hiſtory, as totally taken up with his atchievements in Scotland and France, where his ſucceſſe by Sea and Land was above beliefe and even to admiration. He conquered both before his face and behind his back, Whence he came and whither he went. North and South, the one in his perſon, the other by his ſubſtitutes in his abſence. Inſomuch that he got more then he knew what to do with, exhauſting the Land to man, the Cities which he had gained. Herein he ſtands without a parallel, that he had both the Kings he fought againſt, viz. John de Dalois of France, and David the King of Scotland his priſoners at one time, not taken by any cowardly ſurprize, but by fair fight in open field.

And humility.
* Others ſay in London Town.

5. It ſoundeth much to the commendation of his modeſty and moderation, that intending to found an Order of Knight-hood at his Caſtle of Windſor, where he had theſe two Royall priſoners. In the inſtitution thereof he neither had any inſolent relation to his own conqueſt, nor opprobrious reflection on his enemies captivity, but began the innocent Order of the Garter, unreferring to any of his former atchievements. But more hereof in due time.

England hitherto ignorant in curious Cloathing.

6. The King and State began now to grow ſenſible of the great gain he Netherlands got by our Engliſh Wool, in memory whereof the Duke of Burgundy not long after inſtituted the order of the Golden Fleece, wherein indeed the Fleece was ours, the Golden theirs, ſo vaſt their Emolument by the Trade of Clothing. Our King therefore reſolved, if poſſible to reduce the Trade to his his own Country, who as yet were ignorant of that Art, as knowing no more what to do with their Wool, then the sheep that weare it, as to any Artificiall and curious Drapery, their best Cloathes then being no better then Freezes, such their coursnesse for want of skill in their making. But soon after followed a great alteration, and we shall enlarge our selves in the manner thereof.

The Kings Agents tempt the Dutch apprentices.

7. The intercourse now being great betwixt the English and the Netherlands (increased of late since King Edward married the Daughter of the Earl of Hainalt) unsuspected Emissaries, were imployed by our King into those Countries, who wrought themselves into familiarity with such Dutchmen as were Absolute Masters of their Trade, but not Masters of themselves, as either Journeymen or Apprentices. These bemoaned the slavishnesse of these poore servants, whom their Masters used rather like Heathens then Christians, yea rather like Horses then Men. Early up and late in bed, and all day hard work, and harder fare (a few Herrings and mouldy Cheese) and all to inrich the Churles their Masters without any profit unto themselves.

To come over into England.

8. But oh how happy should they be if they would but come over into England, bringing their Mystery with them, which would provide their welcome in all places. Here they should feed on fatt Beef and Mutton, till nothing but their fulnesse should stint their stomacks: yea they should feed on the labours of their own hands, enjoying a proportionable profit of their pains to themselves, their beds should be good, and their bedfellows better; seeing the richest Yeomen in England would not disdain to marry their Daughters unto them, and such the English beauties, that the most envious Forreigners could not but commend them.

And obtain their desire.

9. Liberty is a Lesson quickly conn'd by heart, men having a principle within themselves to prompt them in case they forget it. Perswaded with the premises, many Dutch servants leave their Masters and make over for England. Their departure thence (being pickt here and there) made no sensible vacuity, but their meeting here altogether amounted to a considerable fulnes. With themselves, they brought over their Trade and their Tools, namely, such which could not [as yet] be so conveniently made in England.

Their welcome reception.

10. Happy the Yeomans House into which one of these Dutchmen did enter, bringing industry and wealth along with them. Such who came in strangers within their doors, soon after went out Bridegrooms, and returned Son in laws, having married the Daughters of their Landlords who first entertained them. Yea, those Yeomen in whose houses they harboured, soon proceeded Gentlemen, gaining great estates to themselves, arms and worship to their estates.

The King politickly disperseth the Dutch.

11. The King having gotten this Treasury of Forreigners, thought not fit to continue them all in one place, lest on discontent they might imbrace a generall resolution to return, but bestowed them thorow all the parts of the Land, that Cloathing thereby might be the better dispersed. Here I say nothing of the Colony of old Dutch, who frighted out of their own Country with an Inundation, about the reign of King Henry the first, (possibly before that Nation had attained the cunning of Cloath-making) were seated only in Pembroke-shire. This new Generation of Dutch was now sprinkled every where, so that England (in relation, I mean to her own Counties) may bespeak these Inmates in the language of the Poet, though generally (where left to their own choice) they preferred a Maritime Habitation.

Quæ regio in terris vestri non plena laboris?

I am informed that a prime Dutch Cloth-maker in Glocestershire, had the Sirname of Webb given him by King Edward there: a Family still famous for their manufacture, Observe we here that mid-England, Northamptonshire, Lincolnshire, and Cambridge, having most of Wool, have least of cloathing therein.

Fullers earth a precious commodity.

12. Here the Dutchmen found Fullers earth, a precious Treasure, whereof England hath (if not more) better then all Christendom besides: a great Commodity of the Quorum to the making of good Cloath, so that Nature may seem to point out our land for the Staple of Drapery, if the idleness of her inhabitants be not the only hinderance thereof. This Fullers Earth is clean contrary to our Jesuites, who are needlesse Drugs, yet still staying here though daily commanded to depart, whilst Fullers earth, a precious ware is daily scowred hence, though by law forbidden to to be transported.

13. And now was the English Wool improved to the highest profit, passing through so many hands, every one having a fleece of the Fleece, Sorters, Kembers, Carders, Spinsters, Weavers, Fullers, Dyers, Pressers, Packers, and these Manifactures have been heightned to a higher perfection since the cruelty of the Duke de Alva drove over more Dutch into England. But enough of this subject, which let none condemn for a deviation from Church-history; First, because it would not grieve one to goe a little out of the way, if the way be good, as this digression is for the credit and profit of our Country. Secondly, it reductively belongeth to the Church-History, seeing many poore people both young and old, formerly charging the parishes (as appeared by the accounts of the Church Officers) were hereby enabled to maintain themselves.

The Popes Italian Usurers turn Merchants.

14. The extortion of the Pope being now somewhat abated in England, the Caursines or Lumbards, formerly the money Merchants of his Holinesse, and the grand Usurers of England, did not drive so full a Trade as before. Whereupon they betake themselves to other Merchandize, and began to store England with forraign commodities, but at unreasonable rates, whilst England it self had as yet but little and bad shipping, and those lesse imployed.

But at last are prohibited by the King.

15. But now King Edward, to prevent the ingrossing of Trade into the hand of Forreigners, and to restore the same to his native Subjects, took order, that these Aliens should no longer prey on the Radical moisture of this Land, but began to cherish Navigation in his own Subjects, and gave a check to such Commodities which Forreiners did import as in ancient Poems

He made a Statute for Lombards in this Land,
That they should in no wise take on hand
Here to inhabit, here to charge and discharge,
But forty dayes no more time had they large,
This good King by wit of such appreise
Kept his Merchants and the sea from mischiefe.

Liber de custodia Maris extant, in Hacluits voyages, book 1. p. 191

But this was a work of time to perform, and took not full effect to the end of this Kings reign, yea the Lombards were not totally routed till the reign of King Richard the third.

16. About this time the Clergie were very bountifull in contributing to the Kings necessities, in proportion to their Benefices. Hereupon a survey was exactly taken of all their Glebeland, and the same (fairly ingrossed in parchment) was returned into the Exchequer, where it remaineth at this day, and is the most usefull Record for Clergie men, (and also for Impropriators as under their claim) to recover their right. Many a straggling Acre, wandring out of the way, had long since by Sacrilegious Guides been seduced into the possession of false owners, had not this Record directed them at last to their true proprietary.

A survey made of the Clergies Glebeland

17. The worst is, whilst some Dioceses in this Terrier were exactly done, and remain fairly legible at this day, others were so slightly slubbered over that (though kept with equall carefulnesse) they are useless in effect, as not to be read. Thus I was informed, from a Clerk in that Office *lately deceased, who when Living, was older and as able as any therein. And thus Manuscripts (like those men who wrote them) though starting with their equals, hold not all out to the same length, their humidum radicale, (their inke I mean) not lasting alike in all Originals.

Partly useless by ill engrossing.

* Walt. Hillam.

18. It was now generally complained of as a grand grievance, that the Clergie engrossed all places of Judicature in the Land. Nothing was left to Lay-men, but either military commands, as General, Admiral, &c. or such Judges places as concerned only the very letter of the Common Law: and those also scarcely reserved to the Students thereof. As for Embassies into forraine parts, Noblemen were imployed therein, when expence, not experience was required thereunto, and Ceremony the substance of the service: otherwise when any difficulty in civil-law, then Clergy-men were ever entertained. The Lord Chancellor was ever a Bishop,* (as if against Equity to imploy any other therein) yea, that Court generally appeared as a Synod of Divines, where the Clerks were Clerks, as generally in Orders. The same was also true of the Lord Treasurer and Barons of the Exchequer.

Clergie-men engrosse all offices.

* Against mistake.

19. Some imputed this to the pragmaticalnesse of the Clergie, active to insinuate themselves into all employment, how improper soever to their profession. Others ascribed it to the Kings necessities; The war engrossing the maine of his men of merit; so that he was necessitated to make use of Clergie-men. Others attributed it to the Kings election (no way weak in head or hand, plotting or performing) finding such the fittest to serve him; who being single persons, and having no design to raise a family, were as knowing as any in the Mysteries of money,* and safest to be entrusted therein. But more hereof hereafter.

Severall opinions of the causes thereof.

Queens nursing Mothers to this Colledge.

22. Now according to the care and desire of the founder. The Queens of England have ever been Nursing Mothers to this Foundation. O what advantage they have when lying in the bosoms of their Royall Consorts, by whom they cannot be denyed what is equall; and of whom they will not desire what is otherwise. Thus Queen Philippa obtained of her Husband King Edward the third, the Hospital of St. Julians in Southampton, commonly called Gods House. Queen Elizabeth, wife to King Edward the Fourth procured of him the Priory of Sherbourn in Hampshire, and Queen Mary by her intercession prevailed with King Charles for the perpetual Patronage of certain Benefices in the same County.

Queen Elizabeths singular bounty.

23. Nor let not our Virgin Queen be forgotten, as in effect Refoundresse of this from the third year of her reign, being informed that the Title of the Foundation thereof, with the lands thereunto belonging, were in question, and subject to eviction; by Act of Parliament conferred a sure Estate of the same.

This Colledg parted between two Arch-bishops. * Ex Rot. Parl. Henrici quarti anno 13. a Tho. Arundel. b Henry Bowet.

24. I meet in the Records of the Tower Rolls, with a passage concerning this Colledg, and though I do not perfectly understand, I will exemplifie it.

And * a little after, upon divers matters moved between the said Arch-bishop, and the Arch-Bishop b of York, upon certain priviledges pretended by the said Arch-Bishop of York in the Colledge called QUEEN-HALL in the University of Oxford. The said Arch-Bishop of Canterbury in presence of the King and of the Lords promised, that if the said Arch-Bishop of York could sufficiently show any Priviledge, or specially of Record, wherefore the said Arch-Bishop of Canterbury ought not to use his Visitation of the said Colledge, he would then abstain. Saving to himself alwaies the Visitation of the said Schollars abiding in the said Colledge, according to the judgement and decrees, made and given by K. Richard the second, and by our Lord K. Henry that now is, as in the * Record thereof made, thereof more plainly is declared.

* See this recorded at larg in the next Book, p. 164.

It seems hereby (so far as I can apprehend) this Colledge was so parted betwixt the two Metropolitans, that the dead Moity, viz. the Lands and Revenues) thereof belonged to the inspection of the Arch-Bishop of York, whilst the living half, namely the Schollars (especially in matters concerning their Religion) pertained to the Visitation of the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury.

25. In the mean time the Pope was not idle, but laid about him for his own profit. Knowing King Edward could not attend two things at once. And therefore whilest he was busied about his wars in France, his Holinesse bestirred him in England, cropping the flowers of the best Livings in their bud before they were blown. Yea in a manner he may be said to seethe the Kid in the Mothers milk. So that before Livings were actually void, He provisionally pre-provided Incumbents for them, and those generally Aliens and his own Countreymen.

The Pope makes use of the Kings absence.

15 1343 26. Though late, the King got leisure to look on his own Land, where he found a strange alteration, for as France lately was made English by his Valour, England was now turned Italian by the Popes Covetousnesse. In prevention therefore of future mischief, this Statute of Provision was made: whereby such forestalling of Livings to Forrainers was forbidden.

The Statute of provisions reasonably made.

27. Our Authors assign another accidentall cause of the Kings displeasure with the Pope, namely, That when his Holinesse created twelve Cardinals at the request of the King of France, He denied to make one at the desire of this King of England. Surely it was not reasonable in proportion, that his Holinesse giving the whole dozen to the King of France, might allow the advantage to the King of England. However betwixt both, this statute was made to the great enriching of the Kingdom, and contentment of the Subjects therein.

Mans anger worketh Gods pleasure.

28. Yet this Law, of Provisions (as all others) did not at the first making meet with present and perfect obedience. The Papal party did struggle for a time, till at last they were patient per-force finding the Kings power predominant. True it is, this grievance did continue, and was complained of, all this, and most of the next Kings Reign, till the Statute of præmunire was made made, which clinted the naile which now was driven in. So that afterwards the Land was cleared from the incumbrance of such Provisions. Anno Dom. 1345. Anno Regis Ed. tertii 15.

Papal power in England declines.

29. A good Author tells us, Habent Imperia sues Terminos, huc cùm venerint, sistunt, retrocedunt, ruunt. Empyres have their bounds, whither when they come, they stand still, they go back, they fall down. This is true in respect to the Papal power in England. It went forward untill the Statute of Mort-maine was made in the reign of King Edward the first, It went backward slowly when this Statute of provisions, swiftly when this Statute of Præmunire was made. It fell down when the Papacy was abolished in the reign of King Henry the eighth.

The Pope takes wit in his anger.

30. Three years after the statute against the Popes Provisions was made, the King presented unto him Thomas Hatlife to be Bishop of Durham, one who was the Kings Secretary, and when this is, all is said that can be, in his commendation, as utterly devoid of all other Episcopal qualifications. However the Pope confirmed him without any dispute or delay; and being demanded why he consented to the preferment of so worthlesse a person, he answered, that rebus sic stantibus, if the King of England had presented an Ass unto him, he would have confirmed him in the Bishoprick. Indeed as yet his Holiness was in hope, that either the K. would revoke the foresaid statute, or else moderate the execution thereof. 1346 21

The institution of the Knights of the Garter.

31. This year, Authors generally agree (some few making it later, viz. after John K. of France was taken prisoner) K. Edward instituted the Order of the Garter, consisting of 1350 25

1. One Chief Guardian, or Soveraign, being the King of England.

2. Five and twenty Knights, whereof the first set were termed Founders, and their Successors ever since called Fellows or Companions of the Order.

3. Fourteen Canons resident being Secular Priests.

4. Thirteen Vicars, or Chorel Priests.

5. Twelve Military Gentlemen of the meaner sort decayed in age, and estate, commonly called the poor Knights of Winsor.

6. One Prelate of the Garter, being alwaies the Bishop of Wincheſter.

7. One Chancelour thereof, being antiently the Bishop of Salisbury (in whose Dioceſſe Winsor is) but lately a Lay-Person. The truly Honourable and well experienced Statesman and Traveller Sir Thomas Row (if I mistake not) was the last Chancelour of the Garter.

8. One Register, being alwaies the Dean of Winsor.

9. One Usher, who is one of the Ushers of the King his Chamber) called the Black Rod.

10. A chief Herald added for the more Solemnitie by K. Henry the 5. and called Garter.

This Order the K. founded within his Castle of Winsor, to the honour of Almighty God, and the blessed Virgin Mary, and of the glorious Martyr St. George, and to the exaltation of the holy Catholick Faith.

The qualification of these Knights

32. Four Essentials are requisite in the Persons Eligible into this Order, that they be Gentlemen of Name and Arms by Fathers and Mothers side, for three descents. Secondly, that he be without spot or foule reproach, understand it not convicted of Heresie, or attainted of Treason. Thirdly, that he have a competent estate to maintain the dignity of the Order. Fourthly, that he never fled in the day of battle, his Soveraign Lord or his Lieutenant in being in the field.

Their habits.

33. Their habiliments are either ordinary, as a Blew Ribbon with the picture of St. George appendent, and the Sun in his Glory on the left shoulder of their Cloak) added as some say by King Charles) being for their daily wearing; or extraordinary, as their Collar of S. S. their Purple Mantle, their Gown, Kirtle, Chaperon, and chiefly their Garter. This being made of Blew is with, Hony Soit qui male pense in Golden Letters, enchased with precious stones, fastened with a Buckle of Gold, and worn on the left leg of the Fellows of this Order.

Their Oath.

34. They take an Oath, that to their power, during the time that they are Fellows of the Order, they shall defend the honour, quarrel, rights, and Lordships of their Soveraign, that they shall endeavour to preserve the honour of the Order, and without fraud or Covin, well observe the Statutes thereof. This is taken absolutely by the Natives of this Kingdom, but by Forrainers relatively, and in part, with their reference to some former Order.

Other Rites they are bound to observe.

35. They oblige themselves, first, to be personally present, (without a just cause specified to, and accepted by the Soveraign or his Deputy) at Winsor on the Festival of St. George. Secondly, that if coming within two miles of that place, (except hindered by some some important business) they repair thither, put on their Mantles, (lying constantly Liegers there) proceed to the Chappel and there make their Offering. Thirdly, that they be never openly seen without their GEORGE's, which they shall neither engage, alien, sell, nor give away on any necessity whatsoever. Lastly, that they take order their Garter at their death, be safely and solemnly sent back to the Soveraign, to confer the same on one to succeed him in the Order.

Anno Regni Ed. tertii 26. Anno Dom. 1350

Order how voided.

36. I have done when I have told that their places may be vacated, on three occasions. First by death, which layeth this (as all other) honour in the dust. Secondly, by deprivation on the persons misdemeanour or want of the foresaid qualifications. Thirdly, by cession, or surrender, when a Forraign Prince (entreth into enmity with this Crown) is pleased to send his Garter back again.

Excesse in apparel restrained.

37. Excesse in Apparel began now to be great in England, which made the State take order to retrench it. Some had a project, that mens Cloathes might be their signs to shew their Birth, Degree, or Estate, so that the quality of an unknown person might at the first sight be expounded by his Apparrel. But this was soon let fall as impossible. Statesmen in all Ages (notwithstanding their several laws to the contrary) being fain to connive at mens Riot in this kind, which maintaineth more poor people than their charity. However, the ensuing passage must not be omitted.

40. 'And besides this, the King commands, and requires all the Prelates 'there assembled, that in respect of the great danger and damage, which per- 'haps might happen to the Realm and Church of England, by reason of this war, 'in case his Adversary should enter the Kingdom to destroy and subvert the 'same, that they will put to their aid in defence of the Kingdom, and cause 'their Subjects to be arraied, aswell themselves, and their religious men, 'as Parsons, Vicars, and other men of holy Church whatsoever, to abate the ma- 'lice of his Enemies, in case they should enter the Kingdom, which Prelates 'granted to do, this in aid and defence of the Realm and holy Church. And 'so the Parliament ended.

More feared then hurt.

Here we see, In hostes publicos omnes homo miles, none are dispenced with, to oppose an invading enemy. But where were these Forraign Foes, France, and Scotland, being now both of them ordered into a defensive posture, whose invasion was expected? Possibly these dangers were represented thorough State-Multiplying Glasses, to quicken the care, and continue the Taxes on the English Nation.

A petition against Clergy mens imployment in Secular places.

41. The Lords and Commons in Parliament began now to find themselves much agrieved, that the Clergy ingrossed all Secular Offices, and thereupon presented the insuing Petition to the King, according to this effect insisting only in the substance thereof.

Anno Dom. 1379. Anno Regis Ed. tertii 43.

The Answer (in effect) a denial.

43. To this Petition the King returned, that he would ordain upon this point as it shall best seem to him by the advice of his good Councel. He therefore who considereth the present power of the Clergy, at the Council-Table, will not wonder, if all things remained in their former Condition, till the Nobility began more openly to favour John Wickliff his Opinions, which the next Book, God willing, shall relate.

Simon Mepham Arch-Bishop of Canterbury.

44. We will close this with a Catalogue of the Arch-Bishops of Canterbury, Contemporary with King Edward the third, and begin with Simon Mepham made Arch-Bishop in the first year of his reign, so that the Crown and the Mitre may seem in some sort to have started together, only here was the odds, the King was a young, (yea, scarce a) man, whereas the Arch-Bishop was well stricken in years. Hence their difference in holding out, the King surviving, to see him buried and six more (whereof four Simons inclusively) heart-broken as they say with grief. For when John Grandison Bishop of Exeter (making much noise with his Name, but more with his Activity) refused to be visited by him, (the Pope siding with the Bishop) Mepham so resented it, that it cost him his life.

John Stratford his successor.

45. John Stratford was the second, Consecrated first Bishop of Winchester on the Lords day, whereon it was solemnly sung, many are the afflictions of the Righteous, whereof he was very apprehensive then, and more afterwards, when his own experience had proved a Comment thereon. Yet this might comfort him, whilst living, and make others honour his memory, that a good Conscience without any great crime, generally caused his molestation. For under King Edward the second, he suffered for being too loyall a Subject, (siding with the King against the Queen and her Son) and under King Edward the third, he was molested for being too faithfull a Patriot, namely, in pittying his poor Countreymens taxations, for which he was accused for correspondency with the French, and complying with the Pope, (Pope and King of France then blowing in one Trumpet) whereat King Edward was highly incensed.

His last his best dayes.

46. However Stratford did but say what thousands thought, viz. that a peace with France was for the profit of England, especially as proffered upon such honourable conditions. This the Arch-Bishop was zealous for, upon a threefold accompt, First, of Pietie, to save the effusion of more Christian blood. Secondly, of Policie, suspecting successe, that the tide might turn, and what was suddenly gotten, might be as suddenly lost. Thirdly, on Charity, sympathizing with the sad condition of his fellow Subjects, groaning under the burthen of Taxes to maintain an unnecessary war. For England sent over her wealth into France, to pay their victorious Souldiers, and received back again honour in exchange, whereby our Nation became exceeding proud, and exceeding poor. However the end (aswell as the beginning of the Psalm) was verified of this Arch-Bishop, the Lord delivereth them out of all, dying in great honour and good esteem with the King, a strong argument of his former innocence.

Tho. Bradwar-dine the third Arch-Bishop.

47. The third was Tho. Bradwardine, whose election was little lesse then miraculous. For Commonly the King refused whom the Monks chose: the

A Pope

Anno Regis Ed. tertii 45 | Anno Dom. 1370.

Pope rejected whom the Monks and King did elect, whereas all interests met in the choise of Bradwardine. Yea, which was more, the Pope as yet not knowing that the Monks and the King had pre-elected him, of his own accord (as by supernaturall instinct) appointed Bradwardine for that place, who little thought thereon. Thus Omne tulit punctum, and no wonder, seeing he mingled his profitable Doctrines with a sweet and amiable conversation: indeed he was skilled in School Learning, which one properly calleth Spinosa Theologia, and though some will say, can figgs grow on thorns, yet his thorny Divinity produced much sweet devotion.

Camden in Eliz.

48. He was Confessor to King Edward the third, whose miraculous victories in France, some impute more to this mans devout prayers: Then either to the Policy or Prowess of the English Nation He died before he was inthronized few moneths after his consecration, though now advanced on a more Glorious and durable Throne in Heaven, where he hath received the Crown from God, who here defended the * Cause of God. I behold him as the most pious man who from Anselm (not to say Augustine) to Cranmer, sat on that Seat. And a better St. Thomas (though not sainted by the Pope) then one of his predecessors commonly so called.

The best Arch-Bishop of that See.

* He wrote de Causa Dei.

49. Simon Islip was the fourth, a parcimonious (but no avaricious) man, thrifty whilst living, therefore clandestinely Inthronized, and when dead, secretly interred without any solemnity: Yet his frugality may be excused (if not commended herein) because he reserved his estate for good uses, founding Canterbury Colledge in Oxford: Thus * generally Bishops founders of many Colledges therein, denominated them either from that Saint to whom they were dedicated, or from their See, (as Exeter, Canterbury, Durham, Lincoln) putting thereby a civil obligation on their Successors to be (as Visitors, so) Benefactors thereunto. This Canterbury Colledge is now swallowed up in Christ Church, which is no single Star as other Colledges, but a Constellation of many put together.

Simon Islip next Arch-Bishop.

Excipe Merton Colledge.

50. Simon Langham is the fifth, much merriting by his munificence to Westminster Abbie. He was made Cardinal of St. Praxes, and by the Pope Bishop of Preneste in Italy, with a facultie to hold as many Ecclesiasticall preferments as he could get. Hereupon he resigned his Arch-Bishoprick of Canterbury, lived for a time at Avenion in France, and there buried (according to his own directions) in a temporary Tombe, in a Religious house of his own, till three years after removed to Westminster. William Whitlesee succeeded him, famous for freeing the University of Oxford, from the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Lincoln, formerly the Diocesan thereof. As for Simon Sudbury, the last Arch-bishop of Canterbury, in the reign of King Edward the third, of him, God willing, hereafter.

Langham, Witlesee, and Sudbury.

The end of the third Book.

Anno Dom. 1270.

Pope related when the King died, wherein all interests meet in the choice of Archbishops. Yet, which was more, the Pope as yet knowing that the Monks had pre-elected him, of his own accord (as by former was said) appointed Reader to perform this office, who little thought thereon. That Court was a wonder, hoping he might lead his predecessor's life, and was unwilling to be misled in Scholastic Learning, which more properly befalls Priests; and though some will say, the Pope grew an Enemy produced much fewer devotion.

Charles in Italy.

43. He was Confessor to King Edward the third, whose miraculous visions in France, some impute more to this man's devout prayers: They either to the Piety or Poverty of the Royal Nation. He had before he was inducted few months after his election, thereby advanced on a more glorious and durable Throne in Heaven, where he both received the Crown from God, who bore defended the Church of Christ; behold him as the most pious man who from Adam (not to say Abel) was Crown, far on that Seat. And a Letter to Adam (though not finished by the Pope) then one of his predecessors commonly so called.

He had Archbishop Peckham.

Simon Up was the fourth, a Provincial (but two years) man, thrifty whilst living, therefore clandestinely deceased and when dead, decently interred without any solemnity. Yet his frugality may be excused, if not commended herein, because he reserved his estate for good uses, founding Canterbury College in Oxford: Thus [illegible] many Colledges therein, devoured then either from that cause to whom they were dedicated, or from their Founders, (as [illegible] Canterbury College) punishing their civil oblivion on their Executors to be [illegible] Before the reason. This Canterbury College is now swallowed up in [illegible], which is no single one as other Colledges, but a Confluence of many put together.

Archbishop Reynolds.

50. Simon Langham is the fifth, much unwilling, by his unskilfulness to undermine Nobles. He was made Cardinal of St. Praxed, and by the Pope Bishop of Praneste in Italy, with a facultie to hold as many Ecclesiastical preferments as he could get. Thereupon he refused his Archbishoprick of Canterbury, lived for a time at Avignon in France, and there united (according to his own direction) in a temporary Tombe in a Religious house of his own, till three years after removed to Westminster. Where worthy Succeeded him, famous for feeding the Queen by of Queen the Justification of the Bishop of Ely with Dinner a thereof. As for Simon Canterbury, the last Arch-bishop of Canterbury, in the reign of King Edward the third, of him, God willing, hereafter.

WE read in * Holy-writ, when the Iſraelites fled before the Philiſtines, who ſpoiled a field of Barley, how Eleazar the Son of Dodo, made them pay dear for their Treſpaſs, ſo ſtopping them in the full ſpeed of their Conqueſt, that he ſaved Iſrael by a great Deliverance.

* 1 Chro. 11. 13.

Inſpired Truths need not the Security of humane Hiſtory, to paſſe them into our Beliefe. However, other writers afford Examples, how one man, in a manner, hath routed a whole Army, and turned the flight of his party, into an unexpected Victory.

George Buchanan Schol. Hiſt. b. 6. p. 55.

Thus the * Chronicles inform us, that when the Scots fled from the Danes (at a place called Long-Carty) one Hay an Husbandman, then at Plough (with his two Sons) ſnatching the Yoak into his hand (it is the man makes the weapons, not the weapons the man) not onely ſtopped the Enemies further purſuit, but beat them back with a great Overthrow. Whoſe valour, King Keneth the ſecond, (ſeven hundred years ſince) rewarded, with as much ground of the beſt in Scotland, as a Falcon flew over at one flight before it did take a ſtand. And the memory hereof is continued in your Armes, who doth carry a Chronicle in your Coat, Creſt, and Supporters.

Let none quarrel at your Supporters, being two men holding each an Yoak in his hand, ſeeing they are the Supporters general of all mankinde, Solomon (being himſelf a King) obſerving that the King himſelf is maintained by husbandry. Beſides, thoſe Yokes procured the Scotch Liberty, who otherwiſe had been miſerably enſlaved to the Daniſh Inſolence. And if the bearing of armes were ſo ancient amongſt the Jews, as the

Rabbies

Rabbies will have it, it is proportionably probable that the Poſterity of Shamgar gave the * GOAD for the Heredicary Enſigns of their Family. * Judg 3.31.

Nor muſt your Motto be forgotten, CONSCIENTIA MILLE SCUTA, A good Conſcience is a thouſand ſhields, and every one of proof againſt the greateſt peril. May your Honour therefore be careful to preſerve it, ſeeing loſe the Shield, and loſe the Field, ſo great the concernment thereof.

No Family in Chriſtendome hath been Ennobled on a more Honourable Occaſion, hath flouriſhed for longer continuance, or been preſerved in a more miraculous manner.

It is * reported of the Romane FABII, no leſs numerous then valiant (three hundred and ſixty Patritians flouriſhing of them at once) they were all ſlain in one Battle, one onely excepted, who being under Age to bear Armes, was preſerved alive. * Titus Livius libro 2do.

A greater Fatality befell your Family, in a fight at Duplin-Caſtle (in the Reign of our Edward the firſt) when the whole Houſhold of * HAYES was finally extirpated, and not one of them viſible in the whole World. Onely it hapned that the Chief of them left his Wife at home big with Childe, from whom your Name is recruited, all ſpringing as it were from a dead Root, and thence deriving a Poſtume Pedigree. * Camd. This

This puts me in hopes, that God who ſo ſtrangely preſerved your Name in Scotland, will not ſuffer it ſo ſoon to be extinct in England, but give you Poſterity by your Noble Conſort, when it ſhall ſeem ſeaſonable to his own will and pleaſure.

All that I will add is this, that ſeeing your Honour beareth three ſmaller Shields, or In-Eſcutchions, in your Armes, the ſhaddow of the leaſt of them, with its favourable reflection, is ſufficient effectually to protect and defend the weak endeavours of

THE CHVRCH-HISTORY OF BRITAINE.

BOOK IV.

Ed. 3. 45. 1371. 1. THE Romaniſts obſerve, that ſeveral advantages concurred to the ſpeedy propagation of Wicliffs opinions, as namely, the decrepit age of Edward the third, and infancy of Richard his ſucceſſor, being but a childe, as his Grand-father was twice a childe, ſo that the reines of Authority were let looſe. Secondly, the attractive nature of Novelty, drawing followers unto it. Thirdly, the enmity which John of Gaunt bare unto the Clergie, which made him, out of oppoſition to favour the Doctrine and perſon of Wicliffe. Laſtly, the envy which the [a] Pope had contracted by his exactions and collations of Eccleſiaſtical benefices. We deny not theſe helps were inſtrumentally active in their ſeveral degrees, but muſt attribute the main to Divine providence, bleſſing the Goſpel, and to the nature of truth it ſelf, which though for a time, violently ſuppreſs'd, will ſeaſonably make its own free, and clear paſſage into the world.

Several cauſes of the ſpeedy ſpreading of Wicliffs Doctrine.

[a] Harpsfeld in his Hiſtoria Wicliffiana ca. 1.

2. And here we will acquaint the Reader, that being to write the Hiſtory of Wicliffe, I intend neither to deny, diſſemble, defend, or excuſe any of his faults. We have this treaſure (ſaith the [b] Apoſtle) in earthen veſſels; and he that ſhall endeavour to prove a pitcher of clay, to be a pot of gold, will take great pains to ſmall purpoſe. Yea, ſhould I be over-officious to retain my ſelf, to plead for wicliffs faults, that glorious Saint would ſooner chide then thank me, unwilling that in favour of him, truth ſhould ſuffer prejudice. He was a man, and ſo ſubject to errour, living in a dark Age, more obnoxious to ſtumble, vex'd with oppoſition, which makes men reel into violence; and therefore it is unreasonable, that the constitution and temper of his positive opinions, should be guessed by his Polemical Heat, when he was chafed in disputation. But besides all these, envy hath falsly fathered many foul aspersions upon him.

Wicliffe guilty of many errours.

The learning of Wicliffe.

a Camd Brit. in the Bishoprick of Durham.

b Baleus Cent. 6. numero. 1.

3. We can give no account of Wicliffs parentage, birth-place, or infancy, onely we finde an ancient [a] family of the Wicliffs in the Bishoprick of Durham, since by match united to the Brakenburies, persons of great quality in those parts. As for this our Wicliffe, history at the very first meets with him a Man, and full grown, yea, Graduate of [b] Merton Colledg in Oxford. The fruitfull soil of his natural parts, he had industriously improved by acquired learning, not onely skill'd in the fashionable Arts of that Age, and in that abstruse, crabbed divinity, all whose fruit is thornes: but also well versed in the Scriptures; a rare accomplishment in those dayes. His publique Acts in the Schools, he kept with great approbation, though the Eccho of his popular applause sounded the Alarum to awaken the envy of his adversaries against him.

Wicliffe accused for ambition and discontent.

c Harpsfield hist. Wicliffiana cap. 1.

4. He is charged by the Papists, as if discontent first put him upon his opinions. For having usurped the [c] Headships of Canterbury Colledg, (founded by Simon Islep, since like a tributary brook, swallowed up in the wastnes of Christ-Church) after a long suit, he was ejected by sentence from the Pope, because by the Statutes, onely a Monk was capable of the place. Others add, that the loss of the Bishoprick of Worcester which he desired, incensed him to revenge himself by innovations; and can true doctrine be the fruit, where ambition and discontent hath been the root thereof? Yet such may know, that God often sanctifies mans weakness to his own glory; and that wise Architect makes of the crookedness of mens conditions, streight beams in his own building, to raise his own honour upon them. Besides, these things are barely said, without other evidence; and if his foes affirming be a proof, why should not his friends denial thereof be a sufficient refutation? Out of the same mint of malice another story is coyned against him, how Wicliffe being once gravell'd in publique disputation, preferring rather to say nonsense, then nothing, was forc'd to affirm, that an [d] accident was a substance. Yet methinks, if the story were true, such as defend the doctrine of accidents subsisting in the sacrament without a substance, might have invented some charitable qualification of his paradox, seing those that defend falshoods, ought to be good fellows and help one another.

d Idem ibidem.

The employment of Wicliff in Oxford.

e Nehemiah 4. 17.

5. Seven years Wicliffe lived in Oxford, in some tolerable quiet, having a Professours place, and a cure of soules. On the week dayes in the Schools proving to the learned what he meant to preach; and on the Lords day preaching in the Pulpit, to the vulgar, what he had proved before. Not unlike those builders in the second Temple, holding a [e] Sword in one hand, and a Trowell in the other: his disputing making his preaching to be strong, and his preaching making his disputations to be plain. His speculative positions against the Reall Presence in the Eucharist, did offend and distaste, but his practical Tenents against Purgatory, and Pilgrimages, did enrage and bemadd his adversaries: so woundable is the dragon, under the left wing, when pinched in point of profit. Hereupon they so prevailed with Simon Sudbury, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, that wicliffe was silenced, and deprived of his benefice. Notwithstanding all which, he wanted nothing secretly, supplied by invisible persons, and he felt many a gift from a hand that he did not behold.

Difference in the number of Wicliffs opinions.

6. Here it will be seasonable to give in a List of wicliffes Opinions, though we meet with much variety in the accounting of them.

1. Pope

Anno Regis Ed. 3. 46. Anno Dom. 1371

1. Pope [a] Gregory the eleventh, observed eighteen principal Errours in his Books, and Wicliffe is charged with the same [b] number, in the Convocation at Lambeth.
2. Thomas [c] Arundel, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, in a Synod held at Preaching-Friers, in London, condemned three and twenty of his Opinions; the ten first for heretical, and the thirteen last for erroneous.
3. In the Councel at Constance, [d] five and fourty Articles of false Doctrines were exhibited against Wicliffe, then lately deceased.
4. Thomas Waldensis computeth fourscore Errours in him.
5. John [e] Lucke, Doctor of Divinity in Oxford, brings up the account to two hundred sixty six.

Lastly, and above all, John [f] Cocleus (it is fit that the latest Edition should be the largest) swells them up to full three hundred and three.

a Harpsfield in Hist. Wiclifiana, p. 684.
b Fox Martyr. p. 398.
c Idem. p. 401.
d Idem p. 414.
e Harpsfield Hist. Wicliffe, pag 669.
f In historia Hussitarum in Prolog. Tomi primi.

Wonder not at this difference, as if Wicliffe's Opinions, were like the Stones on Salisbury-plain, falsely reported, that no two can count them alike. The variety ariseth, first, because some count onely his primitive Tenets, which are breeders, and others reckon all the yong frie of Consequences derived from them. Secondly, some are more industrious to seek, perverse to collect, captious to expound, malicious to deduce far distant Consequences; excellent at the inflaming of a Reckoning, quick to discover an infant or Embrio-errour, which others over-look. Thirdly, it is probable, that in process of time, Wicliffe might delate himself in supplemental and additional Opinions, more then he at first maintained: and it is possible that the Tenents of his followers in after ages might be falsely fathered upon him. We will tie our selves to no strict number or method, but take them as we finde them, out of his greatest adversary, with exact Quotation of the Tome, Book, Article, and Chapter, where they are Reported.

Thomas Waldensis accuseth Wicliffe to have maintained these dangerous heretical Opinions.

Of The Pope.

To.	Bo.	Art	Chap.
4	2	1	1	1. That it is blasphemy to call any Head of the Church save Christ alone.
1	2	3	39	2. That the election of the Pope by Cardinals, is a device of the devil.
1	2	1	2	3. That those are Hereticks, which say that Peter had more power then the other Apostles.
1	2	1	4	4. That James, Bishop of Jerusalem, was preferred before Peter.
1	2	3	41	5. That Rome is not the Seat in which Christ's Vicar doth reside.
1	2	3	35	6. That the Pope, if he doth not imitate Christ and Peter in his life, and manners; is not to be called the Successour of Peter.

To.	Bo.	Art.	Chap.		Anno Dom.	Anno Regis
1	2	3	38	7. That the Imperial and Kingly authority are above the Papal Power.	1371.	Ed. 3. 45.
1	2	3	48	8. That the doctrine of the infallibility of the Church of Rome, in matters of faith, is the greateſt blaſphemy of Antichriſt.
1	2	3	54	9. That he often calleth the Pope Antichriſt.
1	2	3	32	10. That Chriſt mean't the Pope, by the * abomination of Deſolation, ſtanding in the holy place.

* Mat. 24. 15.

OF POPISH PRELATES.

1	2	2	16	11. That from the words, and works, and [a] ſilence of Prelates in Preaching, it ſeemeth probable, that they are Devils incarnate.
1	2	3	57	12. That Biſhops Benedictions, Confirmations, Conſecrations of Churches, Chalices, &c. be but tricks to get money.

[a] Ex verbo, opere, & taciturnitate Prælatorum.

OF PRIESTS.

1	2	3	71	13. That plain Deacons and Prieſts may preach without licence of Pope or Biſhop.
1	2	3	60	14. That in the time of the Apoſtles, there were onely two Orders, namely, Prieſts and Deacons, and that a Biſhop doth not differ from a Prieſt.
3			68	15. That it is lawful for Lay-men to abſolve no leſs, then for the Prieſts.
2			128	16. That it is lawful for Clergy-men to marry.
			61	17. That Prieſts of bad life, ceaſe any longer to be [b] Prieſts.

[b] Waldenſis in ſeveral places of his book.

OF THE CHURCH.

1	2		8	18. That he defined the Church to conſiſt, onely of perſons predeſtinated.
1	2	1	12	19. That he divideth the Church into theſe three members, Clergy-men, Souldiers, and Labourers.
1	4	3	37	20. That the Church was not endowed with any immoveable poſſeſſions, before Conſtantine the great.
1	4	3	16 / 41	21. That it is no Sacriledg to take away things, conſecrated to the Church.
3			143	22. That all beautiful building of Churches, is blameworthy, and ſavours of hypocriſie.

OF TYTHES.

1	2	3	65	23. That Pariſhioners by him were exhorted, not to pay Tythes to Prieſts of diſſolute life.
1	2	3	64	24. That Tythes are pure almes, and that Paſtours ought not to exact them by Eccleſiaſtical cenſures.

OF THE SCRIPTURE.

1	2	2	23	25. That wiſe men leave that as Impertinent, which is not plainly expreſſed in Scripture.
1	2	2	26	26. That he ſlighted the authority of General Councels.

OF

Anno Regis Ed. 3. 46.	Anno Dom. 1372.	To.	Bo.	Art	Chap.
						OF HERETICKS.
		2			81	27. That he called all Writers since the thousandth year of Christ, Hereticks.
						OF PRAYER.
		3			23 25	28. That men are not bound to the observation of Vigils, or Canonical houres.
		3			11	29. That it is vain for Lay-men to bargain with Priests for their prayers.
		3			21	30. That to binde men to set and prescript forms of Prayers, doth derogate from that liberty God hath given them.
		3			8	31. That to depress the benefit of other mens purchased Prayers, he recommended all men, to hope, and trust in their own righteousness.
						OF ALMES.
		1	2	3	71	32. That we ought not to do any Alms to a sinner, whilest we know him to be so.
						OF THE SACRAMENTS.
		3			45 46	33. That Chrisme, and other such ceremonies are not to be used in Baptisme.
		2			99	34. That those are fools, and presumptuous, which affirm, such infants not to be saved, which dye without Baptisme: and also, That he denied, that all sins are abolished in Baptisme.
		2			108
		2			98	35. That Baptisme doth not confer, but onely signifie grace, which was given before.
		2			26	36. That in the Sacrament of the Alter, the Host is not to be worshipped, and such as adore it are Idolaters.
						37. That the substance of bread and wine, still remain [a] in the Sacrament.
		2			55	38. That God could not, though he would, make his body to be at the same time, in several places.
		1			109	39. That the Sacrament of Confirmation is not much necessary to salvation.
		3			147	40. That Confession, to a man truly contrite, is superfluous, used by Antichrist, to know the secrets, and gain the wealth of others.
		2			130	41. That that is no due Marriage, which is contracted, without hope of having children.
		2			163	42. That extreme Unction is needless, and no Sacrament.
						OF ORDERS.
		2	2	2	15	43. That Religious Sects confound the unity of Christs Church, who instituted but one order of serving him.

[a] This is scattered in several places of his book.

44. That

To.	Bo.	Art	Chap.		Anno Dom. 1372.	Anno Regis Edw. 3. 45
2			109	44. That he denied all sacred initiations into Orders, as leaving no character behinde them.
3			91	45. That Vowing of Virginity is a Doctrine of Devils.
				OF SAINTS.
3			130	46. That such Christians, who do worship Saints, border on Idolatry.
3			133	47. That it is needless to adorn the shrines of Saints, or to go in Pilgrimage to them.
3			124 125	48. That miracles conceived done at Saints shrines, may be delusions of the Devil.
3			115	49. That Saints prayers (either here, or in heaven) are onely effectual for such as are good.
				OF THE KING.
1	2	3	79	50. That it is lawful in Causes Ecclesiastical, and matters of faith, after the Bishops sentence, to appeal to the secular Prince.
1	3	1	81	51. That Dominion over the creature is founded in grace.
1	3	3	83	52. That God devesteth him of all right who abuseth his power.
				OF CHRIST.
1	2	3	43	53. That Christ was a man, even in those three dayes, wherein his body did lie in the grave.
1	2	3	44	54. That the Humanity of Christ being separated, is to be worshipped with that adoration which is called LATRIA.
1	1	3	44	55. That Christ is the Humanity by him assumed.
				OF GOD.
2			160	56. That God loved David and Peter as dearly, when they grievously sinned, as he doth now when they are possessed of glory.
1	2	3	82	57. That God giveth no good things to his enemies.
2			135	58. That God is not more willing to reward the good, then to punish the wicked.
				59. That all things [a] come to pass by fatal necessity.
1	1	1	13	60. That God could not make the world otherwise then it is made.
1	1	1	10	61. That God cannot do any thing, which he doth not do.
				62. That God cannot make that something should return into nothing.

[a] Waldenſis in ſeveral places laieth this to his charge.

Much pitty that Wicliffs own books are loſt.

7. Here the ingenuous Reader muſt acknowledg, that many of theſe opinions are truths, at this day publickly profeſſed in the Proteſtant Church. For the reſt, what pitty is it that we want Wicliffe's works, to hear him ſpeak in his own behalf. Were they all extant, therein we might read the occaſion, intention, intention, and connexion of what he ſpake; together with the limitations, reſtrictions, diſtinctions, qualifications, of what he maintained. There we might ſee, what was the overplus of his paſſion, and what the juſt meaſure of his judgment. Many phraſes, heretical in ſound, would appear orthodox in ſenſe. Yea, ſome of his poyſonous paſſages, dreſs'd with due caution, would prove not onely wholſome, but cordial truths; many of his expreſſions wanting, not granum ponderis, but ſalis, no weight of truth, but ſome grains of diſcretion. But now alas! of the [a] two hundred books, which he wrote, being burnt, not a tittle is left, and we are fain to [b] borrow the bare titles of them from his adverſaries; from whom alſo theſe his opinions are extracted, who winnow his works, [c] as Satan did Peter, not to finde the corn, but the chaff therein. And how candid ſome Papiſts are in interpreting the meaning of Proteſtants, appears by that cunning [d] Chymiſt, who hath diſtilled the ſpirits of Turciſme, out of the books of Calvin himſelf.

Anno Regis Ed. 3. 45. Anno Dom. 1371.

50. 1376 8. Now a Synod was called by Simon Sudbury, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, at Paul's in London (the Parliament then ſitting at Weſtminſter) whither Wicliffe was ſummoned to appear; who came accordingly, but in a poſture and equipage different from expectation. Four Fryers were to aſſiſt; the Lord Piercy to uſher; John, Duke of Lancaſter, to accompany him. Theſe Lords their enmity with the Prelates, was all Wicliffes acquaintance with them; whoſe eyes did countenance, hands ſupport, and tongues encourage him, bidding him to dread nothing, nor to ſhrinke at the company of the Biſhops; for, they are all unlearned (ſaid they) in reſpect of you. Great was the concourſe of people; as in populous places, when a new ſight is to be ſeen, there never lack lookers on: and to ſee this man-baiting, all people of all kindes flock'd together.

Wicliff appears before the Synod in Saint Pauls.

9. The Lord Piercy, Lord Marſhal of England, had much ado to break thorow the croud in the Church; ſo that the buſtle he kept with the people, highly offended the Biſhop of London, as profaning the place, and diſturbing the Aſſembly. Whereon followed a fierce contention betwixt them; and leſt their interlocutions ſhould hinder the intireneſs of our diſcourſe, take them verbatim in a Dialogue, omitting onely their mutual railing; which, as it little became perſons of honour to bring; ſo it was flat againſt the profeſſion of a Biſhop to return; who, by the Apoſtles [e] precept, muſt be patient, not a brawler.

The brawle betwixt the Biſhop, and the Lords in the Church.

e 1 Tim. 3. 3.

Biſh. Courtney. Lord Piercy, if I had known before hand, what maiſteries you would have kept in the Church, I would have ſtopt you out from coming hither.

Duke of Lancaſt. He ſhall keep ſuch maſteries here, though you ſay nay.

Lord Piercy. Wicliffe, ſit down, for, you have many things to anſwer to, and you need to repoſe your ſelf on a ſoft ſeat.

Biſh. Courtney. It is unreaſonable, that one, cited before his Ordinary, ſhould ſit down during his anſwer. He muſt, and ſhall ſtand.

Duke of Lancaſt. The Lord Piercy his motion for Wicliffe is but reaſonable. And as for you my Lord Biſhop, who are grown ſo proud, and arrogant, I will bring down the pride, not of you alone, but of all the Prelacy in England.

Biſh. Courtney. Do your worſt Sir.

Duke of Lancaſt. Thou beareſt thy ſelf ſo brag upon thy [f] parents, which ſhall not be able to help thee; they ſhall have enough to do to help themſelves.

f His Father Hugh Courtney Earl of Devon-ſhire.

Biſh. Courtney. My confidence is not in my Parents, nor in any man elſe, but onely in God in whom I truſt, by whoſe aſſiſtance I will be bold to ſpeak the truth.

Duke

Anno Dom. 1376. Anno Regis Ed. 3. 50.

Duke of Lancaſt. Rather then I will take theſe words at his hands, I'de pluck the Biſhop by the hair out of the [a] Church.

[a] Fox Martyr. pag. 393. & Harpsfield in Hiſt. Wicliffiana cap. 5. pag. 683.

Theſe laſt words, though but ſoftly whiſpered by the Duke, in the ear of one next unto him, were notwithſtanding over-heard by the Londoners; who, inraged that ſuch an affront ſhould be offered to their Biſhop, fell furiouſly on the Lords, who were fain to depart for the preſent, and for a while by flight, and ſecreſie to ſecure themſelves; whileſt, what outrages were offered to the Dukes palace, and his ſervants, Hiſtorians of the State do relate.

Why the Arch-Biſhop and Wicliffe ſilent the while.

10. Wonder not that two perſons, moſt concerned to be vocal, were wholly mute at this meeting; namely, Simon the Arch-Biſhop, and Wieliffe, himſelf. The former (rather acted, then active in this buſineſs) ſeeing the brawl happened in the Cathedral of London, left the Biſhop thereof to meddle, whoſe ſtout ſtomach, and high birth, made him the meeter match to undertake ſuch noble adverſaries. As for wicliffe, well might the Client be ſilent, whileſt ſuch Councel pleaded for him. And the Biſhops found themſelves in a dangerous Dilemma about him; it being no pity to permit, nor policy to puniſh, one protected with ſuch potent patrons. Yea, in the iſſue of this Synod, they onely commanded him to forbear hereafter, from preaching, or writing his doctrine; and, how far he promiſed conformity to their injunctions, doth not appear.

Wicliffs opinions marvellouſly ſpread, and why.

11. In all this Synod, though wicliffe made but a dumb ſhew, rather ſeen then heard, yet the noiſe of his ſucceſs ſounded all over the Kingdom. For, when a ſuſpected perſon is ſolemnly ſummoned, and diſmiſſed without cenſure; vulgar apprehenſions, not onely infer his innocence, but alſo conclude, either the ignorance, or injuſtice of his adverſaries. In publique aſſemblies, if the weaker party can ſo ſubſiſt, as not to be conquered, it conquers in reputation, and a drawn battel is accounted a victory on that ſide. If Wicliffe was guilty, why not puniſhed? if guiltleſs, why ſilenced? And it much advantaged the propagating of his opinions, that at this very time happened a dangerous diſcord at Rome, long laſting, for above fourty years, and fiercely followed; begun betwixt Urban the 6th, and Clement the 7th. One living at Rome, the other reſiding at Avignon. Thus Peters Chair was like to be broken, betwixt two ſitting down at once. Let Wicliffe alone to improve this advantage; pleading, that now the Romiſh Church, having two, had no legal head; that this monſtrous apparition prefaged the ſhort life thereof; and theſe two Anti-Popes, made up one Anti-Chriſt. In a word, there was opened unto him a great door of utterance, made out of that crack, or cleft, which then happened in this ſeaſonable ſchiſme at Rome.

The death & character of King Edward the third.

12. Edward, the third of that name, ended his life, having reigned a Jubilee, ful fifty years. A Prince no leſs ſucceſful, then valiant; like an Amphibion, He was equally active on water, and land. Witneſs his naval-victory nigh Sluce, and land-conqueſt at Chreſce, Poictiers, and elſewhere. Yet his atchievements in France, were more for the credit, then commodity; honour, then profit of England. For, though the fair Provinces, he Conquered therein, ſeem'd fat enough to be ſtewed in their own liquor; I mean, rich enough to maintain themſelves; yet we finde them to have ſuck'd up much of our Engliſh ſauce, to have drain'd the money, and men of this land to defend them. This made King Edward, to endeavour to his power, to preſerve his people from Popiſh extortions, as knowing, that his own taxes did burthen, and the addition of thoſe other would break the backs of his Subjects. He was himſelf not unlearned, and a great favourer of learned men; Colledges ſpringing by paires out of his marriage-bed; namely, Kings-Hall, founded by himſelf in Cambridg; and Queens-Colledg, by Philippa his wife in Oxford. He lived almoſt to the age, and altogether to the infirmities of King David, but had not, with him, a virgin-Abiſhag, a virgin-Concubine, to heat him: 1377 51.

him: but (which is worse) in his decrepit age, kept Alice Pierce, a noted strumpet, to his own disgrace, and his peoples disprofit. For, she (like a bad tenant, which, holding an expiring lease without impeachment of waste, cares not what spoil he maketh thereon) sensible of what tickliſh termes she stood on, snatch'd all she could rape and rend, unto her self. In a word, the bad beginning of this King, on the murder of his Father, must be charged on his Mothers, and Mortimers account. The failings at his end may be partly excused, by the infirmities of his age; the rather because whilest he was himself, he was like himself; and, whilest master of his own actions, he appeared worthy of all commendations. Richard the second, his Grand-childe by Edward the Black Prince, succeeded him, being about twelve years of age, and lived under his Mothers and Uncle's tuition.

13. A Parliament was called at Westminster, wherein old bandying betwixt the Laity, and the Clergie. The former moving, [a] That no officer of the Holy Church should take pecuniary sums, more or less, of the people, for correction of sins, but onely injoyn them spiritual penance, which would be more pleasing to God, and profitable to the soul of the offender. The Clergie stickled hereat, for, by this craft they got their gain; and, no greater penance can be laid on them, then the forbidding them to impose money-penance on others. But here the King interpos'd, That Prelates should proceed therein as formerly, according to the laws of the Holy Church, and not otherwise. Yea, many things passed in this Parliament in favour of the Clergie; as that, That all Prelates and Clerks shall from henceforth commence their suits against purveyers and buyers disturbing them (though not by way of crime) by actions of trespass, and recover treble damages. Also, That any of the Kings Ministers, arresting people of the Holy Church in doing Divine Service, shall have imprisonment, and thereof be raunsomed at the Kings will, and make gree to the parties so arrested.

14. About this time Wicliffe was summoned personally to appear before Simon, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and the rest of the Bishops, in his Chappel at Lambeth. He came accordingly, and now all expected he should be devoured, being brought into the Lions Den. When, in comes a Gentle-man, and Courtier, one [b] Lewis Clifford, on the very day of examination, commanding them, not to proceed to any definitive sentence against the said Wicliffe. Never before was the Bishops served with such a prohibition: all agreed, the messenger durst not be so stout, with a Mandamus in his mouth, but because back'd with the power of the Prince that imployed him. The Bishops struck with a panick fear, proceeded no farther; the rather because the messenger so rudely rushed into the Chappel, and the person of this John Wicliffe was so saved from heavie censure, as was once the doctrine of his [c] godly name-sake, for they feared the people. Onely the Arch-Bishop summoned a Synod at London, himself preaching at the opening thereof. We finde nothing of his Sermon, but his Text was excellent, Watch and pray. Four constitutions he made therein, [d] three whereof concerned Confession, grown now much into discredit, and disuse, by Wicliffs doctrine, and therefore conceived more needfull, to press the strict observation thereof.

Wicliff wonderfully preserved from prosecution.

15. In the Parliament, kept at Gloceſter this same year, the Commons complained, that many Clergy-men, under the notion of Sylva cædua, lop-wood, took tythes even of timber it self: Requesting, that, in such cases, prohibitions might be granted, to stop the proceedings of the Court-Christian. It was moved also, that Sylva cædua (though formerly accounted wood above twentie years old) might hereafter be declared that, which was above the growth of [e] ten years, and the same to be made free from tythes. But this took no effect, the King remitting things to their ancient course. To cry quits with the Commons in their complaints, the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury enveigh'd as bitterly, of the Franchises infringed, of the Abby-Church of Westminster: wherein Robert de Hanley, Esquire, with a servant of that Church, were both despightfully, and horridly slain therein, at the high Sanctuaries shrewdly shaken.

16. Some of the Lords rejoyned on their parts, that such sanctuaries were abused by the Clergie, to protect people from the payment of their due debts; the aforesaid Hanlay being slain in a quarrel on that occasion. And, whereas upon the oathes, and examination of certain Doctors in Divinity, Canon, and Civil Law, it appeared, that immunity in the Holy Church were onely to be given to such, who, upon crime, were to lose life or limb, the same was now extended to priviledg people, in actions of account, to the prejudice of the creditor. They added moreover, that neither God himself (saving his perfection) nor the Pope (saving his Holiness) nor any Lay-Prince could grant such priviledg to the Church: and the Church, which should be the favourer of vertue, and justice, [a] ought not to accept the same, if granted. The Bishops desired a day to give in their answer, which was granted them: but I finde not this harsh string touch'd again all this Parliament; haply for fear, but to make bad musick thereon. Complaints were also made against the extortion of Bishops Clerks; who, when they should take but [b] eight pence, for the probate of a Will, they now exacted greater summes then ever before: to which, as to other abuses, some general reformation was promised.

Aliens debarred from holding benefices.

17. In the next Parliament called at Westminster, one of the greatest grievances of the Land was redressed, namely, foreiners holding of Ecclesiastical benefices. For, at this time the Church of England might say with Israel, * Our inheritance is turned to strangers, our houses to aliens. Many Italians, who knew no more English, then the difference between a teston and a a shilling, a golden noble and an angel in receiving their rents, had the fattest livings in England by the Pope collated upon them. Yea, many great [c] Cardinals, resident at Rome (those hinges of the Church must be greased with English revenues) were possessed of the best Prebends, and Parsonages in the Land, whence many mischiefs did ensue. First, they never preached in their Parishes: Of such shepheards it could not properly be said, that, he [d] leaveth the sheep, and fleeth; who (though taking the title of shepheard upon them) never saw their flock, nor set foot on English ground. Secondly, no hospitality was kept for relief of the poor: except they could fill their bellies on the hard names of their Pastours, which they could not pronounce; Lord Cardinal of Agrifolio, Lord Cardinal de S^t Angelo, Lord Cardinal Veverino, &c. Yea, the Italians genrally farmed out their places to Proctors, their own Country-men; who, instead of filling the bellies, grinded the faces of poor people: So that, what betwixt the Italian hospitality, which none could ever see; and the Latin Service, which none could understand: the poor English were ill fed, and worse taught. Thirdly, the wealth of the Land leak'd out into forein Countries, to the much impoverishing of the Common-wealth. It was high time therefore for the King, and Parliament, to take notice thereof; who now enacted, that no aliens should hereafter hold any such preferments, nor any send over unto them, the revenues of such Benefices. As in the Printed Statutes more largely doth appear. 1379 3.

The Rebellion of Wat Tyler, and Jack Straw.

18. Whiles at this time Clergy and Laity cast durt each in others faces, and neither washed their own: to punish both, burst forth the dangerous rebellion of Wat Tiler, and Jack Straw, with thousands of their cursed company. These all were pure Levellers (inflamed by the abused eloquence of one John Ball, an excommunicated Priest) who, maintaining, that no Gentry was Jure Divino, and all equal by nature,

When Adam delv'd, and Eve span,

endeavoured

endeavoured the aboliſhing of all civil, and ſpiritual degrees, and diſtinctions. Yea, they deſired to level mens parts, as well as their purſes; and, that none ſhould be either wealthier, or wiſer then his fellows; projected the general deſtruction of all, that wore a pen-and-ink-horn about them, or could write, or read. To effect this deſign, they pretended the peoples liberty, and the Princes honour: and, finding it difficult to deſtroy the King, but by the King, they advanced the name, to pluck down the thing ſignified thereby; crying up, that, all was for King Richard. They ſeemed alſo to be much for Reformation; which cloak they wore, to warme themſelves therewith, when naked, and firſt ſetting-up; but afterwards caſt it off in the heat of their ſucceſs, as not onely uſeleſs, but burdenſome unto them.

19. As the Philiſtines [a] came out in three companies, to deſtroy all the ſwords and Smiths in Iſrael: ſo this rabble of Rebells, making it ſelf tripartite, endeavoured the rooting out of all pen-knives, and all appearance of learning. One in Kent, under the aforeſaid Wat, and John: the ſecond in Suffolk; the third under John Littſtarre, a Dier in Norfolke. The former of theſe is deſcribed in the Latin verſes of John Gower, Prince of Poets in his time; of whom we will beſtow the following tranſlation.

The rabble divided into three compapanies.

a 1 Sam. 13. 17.

Watte vocat, cui Thome venit, neq́, Symme retardat, Betteq́, Gibbe ſimul Hykke venire jubent.
Colle furit, quem Gibbe juvat nocumenta parantes,
Cum quibus ad damnum Wille coire vovet.
Grigge rapit, dum Dawe ſtrepit, comes eſt quibus Hobbe,
Lorkin & in medio non minor eſſe putat.
Hudde ferit, quos Judde terit, dum Tebbe juvatur,
Jakke domoſque viros vellit, & enſe necat.

Tom comes, thereat, when call'd by Wat, and Simm as forward we finde, Bet calls as quick, to Gibb, and to Hykk, that neither would tarry behinde.
Gibb, a good whelp of that litter, doth help mad Coll more miſchief to do,
And Will he doth vow, the time is come now, he'l joyn with their company too.
Davie complains, whiles Grigg gets the gaines, and Hobb with them doth partake, Lorkin aloud, in the midſt of the croud, conceiveth as deep is his ſtake.
Hudde doth ſpoil, whom Judde doth foile, and Tebb lends his helping hand,
But Jack, the mad patch, men and houſes doth ſnatch, and kills all at his command.

Oh the methodical deſcription of a confuſion! How doth Wat lead the front, and Jack bring up the rere? (For, confuſion it ſelf would be inſtantly confounded, if ſome ſeeming ſuperiority were not owned amongſt them.) All men without ſir-names (Tiler was but the addition of his trade, and Straw, a mock-name, aſſumed by himſelf; though Jack Straw would have been John of Gold, had this treaſon took effect) ſo obſcure they were, and inconſiderable. And, as they had no ſir-names, they deſerved no Chriſtian-names, for their heatheniſh cruelties: though, to get them a name, they endeavoured to build this their Babel of a general confuſion.

20. Many,

Anno Dom. 1380. Anno Regis Ric. 2. 4.

The barbarous outrages by them committed.

20. Many, and heinous were the outrages by them committed; especially, after they had poſſeſſed themſelves of London. All ſhops, and cellers were broken open; and they now ruſſled in ſilk, formerly ratling in leather; now ſoked themſelves in wine, who were acquainted but with water before. The Savoy in the Strand, being the Palace of John Duke of Lancaſter, was plundered: ſo was the Hoſpital of S^t John's; and S^r Robert Hales, Lord Prior therein, and Treaſurer of England, ſlain. But, as their ſpight, was the keeneſt at, ſo the ſpoil the greateſt on the Law; well knowing, that, while the banks thereof ſtood fully in force, the deluge of their intended Anarchy, could not freely overflow. They ranſack'd the Temple, not onely deſtroying many preſent Pleas, written between party and party, (as if it would accord Plaintife and Defendant, to ſend them both joyntly to the fire) but alſo aboliſhed many ancient Records, to the loſs of Learning, and irrecoverable prejudice of poſterity. The Church fared as ill as the Temple; and Simon Sudbury, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, after many indignities offered him, was at laſt by them beheaded on Tower-Hill, patiently ending his life, and dying a State-Martyr. But moſt fiercely fell their fury on the Dutch in London (offended, be-like, with them for ingroſſing of Trade) and theſe words, bread and cheeſe, were their neck-verſe, or Shibboleth, to diſtinguiſh them; all pronouncing broad and cauſe, being preſently put to death. Of all people, onely ſome [a] Franciſcan Friers found favour in their ſight, whom they intended to preſerve. What quality, to us occult, commended them to their mercy? Was it becauſe they were the moſt ignorant of other Friers, and ſo the likeſt to themſelves? But, perchance, theſe Rebells (if demanded) were as unable to render a reaſon, why they ſpared theſe, as why they ſpoiled others; being equally irrational in their kindneſſes, as in in their cruelties.

Judas & Wat Tyler paralleſ'd.

21. When I read that paſſage of Judas in the Counſel of [b] Gamaliel, it ſeemeth to me plainly to deſcribe the riſing, increaſe, and ruine of theſe Rebels;

b Acts 5. 37.

1. Riſing. There roſe up Judas of Galilee in the dayes of the taxing: ſo Tiler appeared, and this rebellion was cauſed by poll-money, heavily impoſed by the King, and the arrears thereof more cruelly exacted by his Courtiers that farmed it. And pitty it is, ſo foul a rebellion could pretend ſo fair an occaſion, for the extenuating thereof.

2. Encreaſe. And drew away much people after him: ſo the ſnow-ball encreaſed here. John [c] Gower telleth us in his paralel of the martyring of Simon Sudbury, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, with Thomas Becket, his predeceſſour.

c In his book call'ed Vox Clamantis, lib. 1. cap. 14.

Quatuor in mortem ſpirarunt fœdera Thomæ;
Simonis & centum mille dedere necem.

But four conſpir'd Thomas his bloud to ſpill; Whiles hundred thouſands Simon help to kill.

Nor was this any poetical Hyperbole, but an hiſtorical truth, if the ſeveral numbers of their three armies were ſumm'd up together.

3. Ruine. He alſo periſhed, and all, even as many as obeyed him, were diſperſed: ſo here, no ſooner was Wat Tiler, their General (as I may terme him) kill'd by valiant Wallworth, the Lord Mayor of of London, and his assistance (for it was John [a] Cavendish, Esquire, that dispatch'd him with a mortal wound) in Smithfield; and Jack Straw, their Lieutenant-General, legally [b] beheaded (too brave a death for so base a fellow) but all the rest mouldered away, and vanished.

a Weavers funeral Monuments, p. 693.
b Stow Survey of London, pag. 55.

In memory of S[r] William Wallworths valour, the Armes of London, formerly a plain Cross, were augmented with the addition of a Dagger, to make the coat in all points compleat. Happy, when the Cross (as first there in place) directeth the Dagger, and when the Dagger defendeth the Cross: when Religion sanctifieth power, and power supporteth Religion.

22. But, Alanus Copus (for, he it is, whose Ecclesiastical History of England, goes under the name of Harpsfield) heavily chargeth all this rebellion on the account of Wicliffe's doctrine. Whose scholars (saith [c] he) to promote their Masters opinions, stirred up this deadly, and damnable sedition, and sounded the first trumpet thereunto. Adding moreover, that Wicliffe's tenet, that, Dominion is founded in grace: and, that a King guilty of mortal sin, is no longer Lord of any thing, was Cos hujus seditionis, The whet-stone of this sedition. But, to what lyer the whet-stone doth properly belong, will presently appear.

Cope chargeth all this rebellion on Wicliffs doctrine.
c In his Histo. Wicliffiana, cap. 12.

23. It is no news for the best of Gods children, to be slandered in this kinde. Jeremy was [d] traduced, Thou fallest away to the Caldeans. S[t] Paul was [e] accused, we have found this man a pestilent fellow, a mover of sedition. Yea, our Saviour himself was [f] charged, that, He made himself a King, and was a traytor to Cæsar. But, as these were foul, and false aspersions: so will this appear, if we consider,

His malicious slander confuted.
d Jer. 37. 13:
e Acts 24. 5.
f John 19. 12.

1. When John Ball was executed at S[t] Albans, and Jack Straw at London, not the least compliance with Wicliffe, or his doctrine, is either charged on them, or confessed by them.
2. No wilde beast will prey on his own kinde. Now, it is certainly known, that John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster was the principal Patron, and supporter of Wicliffe, whose life they sought to destroy, and whose Palace in the Strand they pillaged.
3. Wicliffe himself came within the compass of their destructive principles, designing the death of all, who wore a pen and ink. And, that Wicliffe had both pen and ink, Cope himself doth know, and the Court of Rome, with shame and sorrow will confess.
4. Wicliffe lived some years after, and died peaceably possessed of the Living of Lutterworth in Leicester-shire. Surely, had he been reputed the inflamer of this rebellion, the wisdom of the King, and Councel, would have taken another order with him.
5. Amongst the articles laid to the charge of Wicliffe, and his followers, in this Kings Reign, examined at Oxford, and elsewhere, not a tittle of this rebellion is pressed upon them. Which their malicious adversaries would not have omitted, if in any hope to make good that accusation against them.
6. Whereas it is charged on Wicliffe, that he held, that, Dominion was founded in grace, which occasioned this rebellion; we know this, that Hus, his scholar, though he did hold, that a King, being in mortal sin, was onely called a King æquivoca denominatione; yet the same Hus confesseth (to use his own [h] words) Ipsum Deum approbare hujusmodi Regem, quoad esse Principem exterius, That God himself allows such a King to be a Prince in all outward matters. So that, leaving him to Divine Justice, he never dreamt g See his confession at large in Stows Survey of London, p. 54.

dreamt of any reſiſtance, or rebellion to be made againſt him. Anno Dom. 1380. Anno Regis Ric. 2. 4.

7. The modern Proteſtants (heirs, ſay the Papiſts to Wicliffe's doctrine) ſo far abominate theſe Rebels their levelling, and ignorant principles, that they are known, both to maintain diſtances of people, and to have been the reſtorers of loſt, yea, the revivers of dead learning, and languages: How had the Mathematicks meaſured their own grave? Greek turn'd barbariſme? Hebrew (as it readeth) gone backward, never to return again, had not Proteſtant Criticks, with vaſt pains and expence, preſerved them?

8. It is more ſuſpicious, that this rebellion came out of the Franciſcan Covent, becauſe ſome of theſe, belike, were the rebels white-boyes; and (as is afore mentioned) to be ſpared in a general deſtruction.

In a word. I wonder, how many ingenuous Papiſts can charge Wicliffe of rebellion, in maintaining, Dominion to be founded in grace; when the Grandees of their own Religion, Aquine, Cajetane, Bellarmine, Suarez, maintain, that Dominion is ſo founded in grace [in the Pope,] that a King, by him excommunicate, may lawfully be depoſed, and murdered.

Arch-Biſhop Courtney perſecutes the Wicliffians.

24. William Courtney, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, (in the place of Simon Sudbury lately ſlain) made cruel Canons in a Synod at London, againſt the maintainers of Wicliffe his opinions. And I wonder that in Linwoods Conſtitutions, no mention at all of any Canons made by this Arch-Biſhop, who ſate above ten years in the See. As for the heavy perſecution which ſoon after he raiſed againſt Robert Rug, Thomas Britwell, Nicholas Herford, Philip Ripington, &c. nothing can be added to what Mr Fox hath rel ated. 1382 6.

Wicliff his miraculous deliverance.

25. In my minde it amounteth to little leſs then a Miracle, that during this ſtorme on his Diſciples, Wicliffe their Maſter ſhould live in quiet: Strange that he was not drowned in ſo ſtrong a ſtream as ran againſt him; whoſe ſafety (under Gods providence) is not ſo much to be aſcribed to his own ſtrength in ſwimming, as to ſuch as held him up by the Chin; the greatneſs of his Noble ſupporters. About this time he ended his Tranſlation of the Bible into Engliſh, (a fair Copy whereof in Queens Colledg in Oxford, and two more in the Univerſity Library) done no doubt in the moſt Expreſſive language of thoſe dayes, though ſounding uncouth to our ears, The Knave of Jeſus Chriſt, for Servant; Acts 8. And Philip Baptized the Gelding, for Eunuch; ſo much our tongue is improved in our age. As for the report of Polydor Virgil, making him to flye out of England in the time of Edward the third, Et in magno pretio apud Bohemos fuiſſe, and to have been of high eſteem amongſt the Bohemians: It is true of Wicliffe's Writings, but not of his Perſon, who never departed his Native Countrey.

His quiet death.

a Leland. ex cronico teneriſis Moniſteriali

26. Not long after, therein he ended his life, at his cure at Lutterworth in Leiceſter-ſhire, of the Palſey. But the phraſe may be juſtified in the large acception of the word, for a witneſs of the truth: Beſides, the body of Wicliffe was Martyred as to ſhame, though not to pain, (as far as his adverſaries cruelty could extend) being taken up and burnt many years after his death, as God willing we ſhall ſhew hereafter. 1384 8.

Paſs we now from his Orchard of grown Trees, to his Nurſery of Grafts, the Colledge at Wincheſter, which few years after the ſame Biſhop finiſhed; not much inferiour to the former for building and endowments, as wherein he eſtabliſhed One Warden, Ten Fellows, Two School-maſters, and Seventy Scholars, with Officers, and Servants, which are all maintained at his charge; out of which School he ordained ſhould be choſen the beſt Scholars alwayes to ſupply the vacant places of the Fellows of this Colledg.

A Colledg at Wincheſter built alſo by Biſh. Wickam.

31. As his Charity, ſo his Faith (he that provideth not for his houſe is worſe then an Infidel) appeared in this his Foundation; ordering that his own Kinſmen ſhould be preferred before others. Let their parents therefore but provide for their Nurſing when Infants, their breeding when Children, and he hath took order for their careful teaching at Wincheſter when youth; liberal living at Oxford when men; and comfortable ſubſiſtance in their reduced age, in thoſe many and good patronages he hath conferred on the Colledg. And truly as theſe his Kindred have been happy in him, ſo Wickam hath been happy in his Kindred; many of them meriting the beſt preferment, without any advantage of his relation. And as this Wickam was the firſt in that kinde ſo provident for his Kindred, his practice hath ſince been precedential to ſome other Colledges, as the Statutes of this houſe are generally a direction to other later foundations. To take our leave of this Biſhop, whoſoever conſiders the vaſt buildings, and rich endowments made by this Prelate (beſides his expence in repairing the Cathedral at Wincheſter) will conclude ſuch atcheivements unpoſſible for a Subject, until he reflect on his vaſt Offices of preferments, being Biſhop of Wincheſter, Rector of S[t] Martins Le Grand, holding

Good Laws in due season.

32. Lately the Popes usurpation was grown so great, in intrenching on the Crown, that there was an absolute necessity, seasonably to retrench his usurpation. For albeit the Kings of England were as absolute in their demeans, their Prelacy and Clergie as learned, their Nobility as valiant and prudent, prudent, their Commons as free and wealthy, as any in Christendom; Yet had not some Laws of Provision now been made, England had long since been turned part of S^t Peters Patrimony in demeans: Yea, the Scepter wrested out of their Kings hands, her Prelates made the Popes Chaplains and Clerks, Nobility his servants and vassals, Commons his slaves and villaines, had not some seasonable Statutes of Manumission been enacted.

Anno Regis Ric. 2 16. Anno Dom. 1393

33. For now came the Parliament wherein the Statute was enacted, which mauled the Papal power in England. Some former Laws had pared the Popes nailes to the quick, but this cut off his fingers, in effect, so that hereafter his hands could not grasp and hold such vast summes of money as before. This is called the Statute of PREMUNIRE; and let not the Reader grudg the reading thereof, which gave such a blow to the Church of Rome, that it never recovered it self in this Land, but dayly decayed till its finall destruction.

The Maul-Popes Statute of premunire.

WHereas the Commons of the Realm in this present Parliament, have sued to our redoubted Lord the King, grievously complaining, that whereas the said our Lord the King and all his liege people, ought of right, and of old time were wont to sue in the Kings Court, to recover their Presentments to Churches, Prebends, and other benefices of holy Church, to the which they had right to present, the Conisance of Plea of which Presentment belongeth onely to the Kings Court, of the old right of his Crown, used and approved in the time of all his Progenitors, Kings of England: And when judgment shall be given in the same Court upon such a Plea and Presentment, the Arch-Bishops, Bishops, and other Spiritual persons, which have Institution of such Benefices, within their jurisdictions, be bound and have made Execution of such Judgments by the Kings commandements of all the time aforesaid, without interruption, (for another Lay person cannot make such execution) and also be bound of right to make execution of many other of the Kings commandements, of which right the Crown of England hath been peaceably seised, as well in the time of our said Lord the King, that now is, as in the time of all his Progenitors till this day. But now of late divers Processes be made by the Bishop of Rome, and censures of Excommunication upon certain Bishops of England, because they have made execution of such commandements, to the open disherison of the said Crown, and destruction of our said Lord the King, his Law, and all his Realm, if remedie be not provided. And also it is said, and a common clamor is made, that the said Bishop of Rome hath ordained, and purposed to translate some Prelates of the same Realm, some out of the Realm, and some from one Bishoprick into another within the same Realme, without the Kings assent and knowledg, and without the as- ſent of the Prelates, which ſo ſhall be tranſlated, which Prelates be much profitable and neceſſary to our ſaid Lord the King, and to all his Realme: By which tranſlations (if they ſhould be ſuffered) the Statutes of the Realm ſhould be defeated, and made void, and his ſaid liege Sages of his Councel without his aſſent, and againſt his will, carried away and gotten out of his Realm, and the ſubſtance and treaſure of the Realm, ſhall be carried away, and ſo the Realm deſtitute as well of Councel, as of ſubſtance, to the final deſtruction of the ſame Realm. And ſo the Crown of England which hath been ſo free at all times, that it hath been in no earthly ſubjection, but immediately ſubject to God in all things, touching the realitie of the ſame Crown, and to none other, ſhould be ſubmitted to the Pope, & the Laws & Statutes of the Realm by him defeated, & avoided at his will, in the perpetual deſtruction of the Soveraigntie of the King, our Lord, his Crown, his Regalitie, & of all his Realm, which God defend.

And moreover the Commons aforeſaid ſay, that the things ſo attempted be clearly againſt the Kings Crown and Regality, uſed and approved of the time of all his Progenitors. Wherefore they, and all the liege Commons of the ſame Realm, will ſtand with our ſaid Lord the King, and his ſaid Crown, and his Regalitie, in the caſes aforeſaid, and in all other caſes attempted againſt him, his Crown, and his Regalitie, in all points, to live and to die. And moreover they pray the King, and him require by way of juſtice, that he would examin all the Lords in Parliament, as well Spiritual as Temporal, ſeverally, and all the States of the Parliament, how they think of the caſes aforeſaid, which be ſo openly againſt the Kings Crown, and in derogation of his Regalitie, and how they will ſtand in the ſame caſes with our Lord the King, in upholding the rights of the ſaid Crown, and Regalitie. Wherenpon the Lords Temporal ſo demanded, have anſwered everie one by himſelf, that the caſes aforeſaid be clearly in derogation of the Kings Crown, and of his Regalitie, as it is well known, and hath been of a long time known, and that they will be with the ſame Crown, and Regalitie, in theſe caſes eſpecially, and in all other caſes which ſhall be attempted againſt the ſame Crown and Regality, in all points with all their power. And moreover it was demanded of the Lords Spiritual there being, and the procurators of others being abſent their adviſe and will, in all theſe caſes, which Lords, that is to ſay, the Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates being in the ſaid Parliament, ſeverally examined, making proteſtations, that it is not their minde to denie nor affirm, that the Biſhop of Rome may not Excommunicate Biſhops, nor that he may make tranſlation of that if any Execution of Proceſſes, made in the Kings Court (as before) be made by any, and cenſures of Excommunication to be made againſt any Biſhops of England, or any other of the Kings liege people, for that they have made execution of ſuch commandments, and that if any executions of ſuch tranſlations be made of any Prelates of the ſame Realm, which Prelates be very profitable and neceſſarie to our ſaid Lord the King, and to his ſaid Realm, or that the ſage people of his Councel without his aſſent, and againſt his will, be removed and carried out of the Realm, ſo that the ſubſtance and treaſure of the Realm may be conſumed, that the ſame is againſt the King and his Crown, as it is contained in the petition before named. And likewiſe the ſame procurators every one by himſelf, examined upon the ſaid matters, have anſwered and ſaid in the name, and for their Lords as the ſaid Biſhops have ſaid and anſwered, and that the ſaid Lords Spiritual will, and ought to be with the King in theſe caſes, in lawfully maintaining of his Crown, and in all other caſes touching his Crown, and his Regalitie, as they be bound by their Liegeance. Whereupon our ſaid Lord the King, by the aſſent aforeſaid, and at the requeſt of his ſaid Commons, hath ordained and eſtabliſhed, that if any purchaſe, or purſue, or cauſe to be purchaſed or purſued in the Court of Rome, or elſewhere, any ſuch tranſlations, proceſſes ſentences of Excommunications, Bulls, Inſtruments, or any other things whatſoever, which touch the King, againſt him, his Crown and his Regalitie, or his Realm, as is aforeſaid; and they which bring within the Realm, or them receive, or make thereof notification, or any other execution whatſoever within the ſame Realm or without, that they, their notaries, procurators, maintainers, abbettors, fautors, and councellors, ſhall be put out of the Kings protection, and their Lands, and Tenements, Goods, and Chattels, forfeit to our Lord the King: and that they be attached by their bodies, if they may be found, and brought before the King and his Councel, there to anſwer to the caſes aforeſaid, or that proceſs be made againſt them, by Præmunire facias, in manner as it is ordained in other Statutes of Proviſors: and other which do ſue in any other Court in derogation of the Regality of our Lord the King.

43. Something of the occaſion, name, and uſe of this Statute; the firſt is notoriouſly known from the Papal encroachments on the Crown. No Biſhoprick, Abathie, Dignitie, or Rectorie, of value in England was likely to fall, but a ſucceſſour in reverſion was by the Popes proviſions, fore-appointed for the ſame. To make ſure work, rather then they would adventure to take take the place at the first rebound, they would catch it before it light on the ground. This was imputed to the Popes abundance, yea superfluity of care, nè detur vacuum in the Church; and rather then a Widow Benefice should mourn it self to death, a second husband had his License for marriage before the former was deceased. But great parishes, where small the profit, and numerous the people; and where indeed greatest care ought to be had of their soules, were past by in the Popes Bulls. His Holiness making no provisions for those Livings, which Livings had no provisions for his Holiness. Anno Dom. 1392. Anno Regis Ric. 2. 16.

Why called Præmunire.

35. Some will have it called Præmunire, from fencing or fortifying the Regal power from forain assaults; as indeed this was one of the best bulwarks and sconces of Soveraignty. Others that Præmunire signifieth the Crown fortified before the making of this Statute, as fixing no new force therein, but onely declaring a precedent, and forgoing just right and due thereof. Others conceive the word [Præmonere] turned by corruption of barbarous transcribers, interpreters, and pronouncers into Præmunire. Others alledg the figure of the effect for the cause, and the common Proverb, Præmonitus, Præmunitus. Most sure it is that Præmunire facias, are operative words, in the form of the Writ grounded on the Statute, which may give denomination to the whole.

Popes covetousness odious to the Clergy.

36. It may seem strange such a Statute could pass in Parliament, where almost sixty Spiritual Barons, (Bishops and Abbots) Voted according to Papal Interest; except any will say, that such who formerly had much of a Pope in their bellies, had now more of Patriots in their breast, being weary of Romes exactions. Indeed no man in place of power or profit, loves to behold himself buried alive, by seeing his successour assigned unto him, which caused all Clergy-men to hate such superinductions, and many friends to the Pope, were foes to his proceedings therein.

The Popes Letter against this Statute.

37. This Law angred all the veines in the heart of his Holiness, the Statute of Mortmain put him into a sweat, but this into the fit of a fever. The former concerned him onely mediately in the Abbies his darlings, this touched him in his person; and how cholerick he was, will appear by the following Letter, here inserted (though written some fifty years after) to make the story entire.

The Original of this Bill was in the Study of Sir Nichol. Bacon, L. Chancellor, whence the Arch-Bish. of Armagh had this his Copy, from which that of S^r Robert Cottons is derived.

Sed revereantur aliquando illi qui ſic contumaciter & ſuperbè Eccleſiam Dei contemnent, & Sedis Apoſtolicæ authoritatem, nè ſuper ipſos eveniat juſta punitio ex Chriſti judicio, qui eam inſtituit, & fundavit: Caveant nè tot cumulatis offenſis Deum irritent, ad ultionem & tarditatem ſupplicii gravitate compenſent. Non videbatur eis ſatis offendiſſe Deum Statuta condendo contra vicarium ejus, contra Eccleſiam & Eccleſiæ caput, niſi pertinaciter perſeverantes in malo propoſito, in Nuntium Apoſtolicum violentas manus injicerent? Quod non dubitamus tuæ Excellentiæ, quæ Eccleſiæ, & regni honorem diligit diſplicere, & certi ſumus quod ſi fuiſſes in Anglia, pro tua naturali prudentia, & pro fide, & devotione, quam geres erga nos, & Eccleſiam Dei illos incurrere in hunc furorem nullatenus permiſiſſes. Datum Romæ apud Sanctos Apoſtolos, VI Kal. Junii Pontificatus noſtri Anno 12mo.

Give Winners leave to laugh, and Loſers to ſpeak, or elſe both will take leave to themſelves; The leſs the Pope could bite, the more he roared, and as it appears by his language, he was highly offended thereat. This penal Statute as a Rod was for many years laid upon the desk, or rather lock'd up in the cupboard. No great viſible uſe being made thereof, until the Reign of King Hen. 8. whereof hereafter.

38. Since the Reformation, the profeſſors of the Common-Law have taken much advantage out of this Statute, threatning therewith ſuch as are active in the Eccleſiaſtical juriſdictions, as if their dealings tended to be the diſheriſon of the Crown. A weapon wherewith they have rather flouriſhed then ſtruck, it being ſuſpicious, that that appearing ſword is but all Hilt, whoſe Blade was near drawn out, as this charge hath never been driven home againſt them; but herein let us hearken to the Learned judgment of Sr Thomas Smith, Secretary of State, who well knew the intereſt of his Soveraign therein. More ſcar'd then hurt.

39. Becauſe the Court, [a] which is called Curia Chriſtianitatis, is yet taken for an extern and foraign Court, and differeth from the Politie and manner of Government of the Realm, and is another Court (as appeareth by the Act and Writ of Præmunire, then Curia Regis aut Reginæ; yet at this preſent this Court as well as others, hath her force, power, authority, rule, and juriſdiction from the Royal Majeſty, and the Crown of England, and from no other foreign Potentate or power, under God; which being granted (as indeed it is true) it may now appear by ſome reaſon, that the firſt Statute of Præmunire, whereof I have ſpoken, hath now no place in England, ſeeing there is no pleading alibi quam in Curia Regis ac Reginæ. All I will add of this Statute is this; That it hath had the hard hap not to be honoured with ſo many Readings therein, as other Statutes. Perhaps becauſe not bringing in πεϱιϰάλλιτα, in proportion to the pains which muſt be laied out thereon; and therefore I would invite ſome ingenious in our Common-Law, (and with ſuch no doubt it aboundeth) to beſtow their learned endeavours thereon, to their own honour, and advancement of the truth in ſo noble a ſubject.

Take it faults and all.

41. We have here exemplified this Abjuration juſt according to the Originals, with all the faults, and Pſeudographie thereof. For I remember in my time an under-Clerk at Court, threatned to be called before the Green-Cloath for an Innovation from former Bills, though onely writing Sinapi with an S. contrary to the common cuſtom of the Clerks of the Kitchin, formerly writing of it with a C. ſo wedded are ſome men to old orders, and ſo dangerous in their judgment is the leaſt deviation from them.

42. The Arch-Biſhop of York mentioned therein, was Tho. Arundell then Chancellour of England, and in all probability this Inſtrument was Dated at York. For I finde, that at this very time Tho. Arundell, to humble the Londoners (then reputed diſaffected to the King) removed the Termes and [a] Courts to York, where they continued for ſome ſhort time, and then returned to their ancient courſe. Whereas he is enjoyned point-blank to worſhip Images, it ſeemeth that the modern nice diſtinction of worſhipping of Saints in Images, was not yet in faſhion. It appeareth herein that Relaps after Abjuration, was not as yet (as afterwards) puniſhable with death, but onely with forfeiture of goods to the Crown.

23. 1397

43. This year a Godly, Learned, and Aged Servant of God ended his dayes, viz. John de Treviſa, a Gentleman of an ancient [b] Family, (bearing Gules, a Garbe, OR) born at Crocadon in Cornwall, a Secular Prieſt, and Vicar of Berkeley; a painful and faithful Tranſlator of many and great Books into Engliſh, as Policronicon, written by Ranulphus of Cheſter, Bartholomeus de rerum proprietatibus, &c. But his maſter-piece was the Tranſlating of the Old and New Teſtament, juſtifying his act herein by the example of Bede, who turned the Goſpel of S[t] John in Engliſh.

44. I know not which more to admire, his ability, that he could, his courage, that he durſt, or his induſtry that he did perform ſo difficult and dangerous a task, having no other commiſſion, then the [c] command of his Patron, Thomas Lord Berkeley. Which Lord, (as the ſaid [d] Treviſa obſerveth) had the Apocalyps in Latin and French (then generally underſtood by the better ſort as well as Engliſh) written on the roof and walls of his Chappel at Berkeley; and which not long ſince, (viz. Anno 1622.) ſo remained, as not much defaced. 45. It may ſeem a Miracle, that the Biſhops being thus buſie in perſecuting Gods ſervants, and Treviſa ſo obnoxious to their fury, for this Tranſlation, that he lived and died without any moleſtation. Yet was he a known enemy to Monkery, witneſs that, (among many other) of his Speeches, that he had read how Chriſt had [e] ſent Apoſtles and Prieſts into the world, but never any Monks or begging Friers. But whether it was out of reverence to his own aged gravity, or reſpect to his Patrons greatneſs, he died full of honour, quiet, and age, little leſs then ninety years old. 47. His Father was a Vintner in London; and I have heard his Armes quarell'd at, being Argent and Gules ſtrangely contrived, and hard to be blazon'd. Some more wits have made it the daſhing of white and red wine (the parents of our ordinary Claret) as nicking his fathers profeſſion. But, were Chaucer alive, he would juſtifie his own Armes in the face of all his oppoſers, being not ſo devoted to the Muſes, but he was alſo a ſon of Mars. He was the Prince of Engliſh Poets; married the daughter of Pain Roëc, King of Armes in France, and ſiſter to the Wife of John of Gaunt, King of Caſtile. Anno Dom. 1399. Anno Regis Ric. 2 23.

He refined our Engliſh tongue.

48. He was a great Refiner, and Illuminer of our Engliſh tongue (and, if he left it ſo bad, how much worſe did he finde it?) witneſs Leland thus praiſing him,

Prædicat Algerum meritò Florentia Dantem,
Italia & numeros tota Petrarche tuos.
Anglia Chaucerum veneratur noſtra Poëtam,
Cui veneres debet patria lingua ſuas.

Of Alger Dants, Florence doth juſtly boaſt;
Of Petrarch brags all the Italian coaſt.
England doth Poet Chaucer reverence,
To whom our language ows its eloquence.

a In his reſtitution of decaied intelligence, p. 203.

Indeed Verſtegan, a learned [a] Antiquary, condemns him, for ſpoiling the purity of the Engliſh tongue, by the mixture of ſo many French and Latin words. But, he who mingles wine with water, though he deſtroies the nature of water, improves the quality thereof.

A great enemy to Friers.

49. I finde this Chaucer fined in the Temple two ſhillings, for ſtriking a Franciſcan Frier in Fleet-ſtreet, and it ſeems his hands ever after itched to be revenged, and have his penniworths out of them, ſo tickling Religious-Orders with his tales, and yet ſo pinching them with his truths, that Friers in reading his books, know not how to diſpoſe their faces betwixt crying and laughing. He lies buried in the South-Iſle of St Peters, Weſtminſter, and ſince hath got the company of Spencer and Drayton (a pair-royal of Poets) enough (almoſt) to make paſſengers feet to move metrically, who go over the place, where ſo much Poetical duſt is interred.

A ſhort quiet in the Church

50. Since the Abjuration laſt exemplified, we meet in this Kings Reign no more perſecution from the Biſhops. We impute this not to their pity, but other imployment, now buſie in making their applications to the new King, on the change of government, King Richard being now depoſed.

The character of King Rich. the ſecond.

51. He was one of a goodly perſon, of a nature neither good nor bad, but according to his company, which commonly were of the more vicious. His infancy was educated under ſeveral Lord Protectours ſucceſſively, under whom his intellectuals thrived, as babes battle with many nurſes, commonly the worſe for the change. At laſt he grew up to full age, and empty minde, judicious onely in pleaſure, giving himſelf over to all licentiouſneſs.

Conſpired againſt by Hen. the fourth.

52. As King Richard was too weak to govern; ſo Henry Duke of Lancaſter, his Couſin-germane, was too wilful to be governed. Taking advantage therefore of the Kings abſence in Ireland, he combined with other of the diſcontented Nobility, and draws up Articles againſt him; ſome true, ſome falſe, ſome both; as wherein truth brought the matter, and malice made the meaſure. Many miſdemeanors (mo misfortunes) are laid to his charge. Murdering the Nobility, advancing of worthleſs Minions, ſale of juſtice, oppreſſion of all people with unconſcionable taxations. For, ſuch

Princes

Anno Regis Hen. 4 1. Anno Dom. 1399

Princes as carry a forke in one hand, muſt bear a rake in the other; and muſt covetouſly ſcrape to maintain, what they cauſleſly ſcatter.

And reſigneth the Crown.

53. Looſneſs brings men into ſtreights at laſt, as King Richard may be an inſtance thereof. Returning into England, he is reduced to this doleful Dilemma; either voluntarily, by reſigning, to depoſe himſelf; or violently, by detruſion, to be depoſed by others. His miſery, and his enemies ambition admit of no expedient. Yea, in all this Act his little judgment ſtood onely a looker-on, whileſt his fear did what was to be done, directed by the force of others. In hopes of life he ſolemnly reſigneth the Crown, but all in vain. For, cruel thieves ſeldom rob, but they alſo kill; and King Henry his Succeſſour could not meet with a ſoft pillow, ſo long as the other wore a warm head. Whereupon, not long after, King Richard was barbarouſly murdered at Pomfret-Caſtle. But of theſe tranſactions, the Reader may ſatisfie himſelf at large, out of our civil Hiſtorians.

The baſeneſs of the diſloyal Clergy.

54. Onely we will add, that the Clergy were the firſt that led this dance of diſloyaltie. Thomas Arundel, now Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, in the room of William Courtney deceaſed, made a Sermon on Samuels words, Vir dominabitur populo. He ſhewed himſelf a Satyriſt in the former, a Paraſite in the later part of his Sermon, a Traitor in both. He aggravated the childiſh weakneſs of King Richard, & his inability to govern; magnifying the parts and perfections of Henry, Duke of Lancaſter. But, by the Arch-Biſhops leave, grant Richard either deſervedly depoſed, or naturally dead without iſſue, the right to the Crown lay not in this Henry, but in ~~Edmund~~ Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, deſcended, by his mother Philippa, from Lionel, Duke of Clarence, elder ſon to Edward the third. This the Arch-Biſhop did willingly conceal. Thus in all State-alterations, be they never ſo bad, the Pulpit will be of the ſame wood with the Councel-board. And thus ambitious Clergymen abuſe the ſilver trumpets of the Sanctuary; who, reverſing them, and putting the wrong end into their mouthes, make, what was appointed to ſound Religon, to ſignifie Rebellion.

The couragious conſcience of the Biſhop of Carlile.

55. But whileſt all other Churches in England rung congratulatory peales to King Henry his Happineſs, one jarring bell almoſt marr'd the melody of all the reſt, even Thomas Merks, Biſhop of Carlile. For, when the Lords in Parliament, not content to Depoſe King Richard, were deviſing more miſchief againſt him, up ſteps the aforeſaid Biſhop, formerly Chaplain to the King, and expreſſeth himſelf as followeth:

a Biſhop Godwin in the Biſhops of Carlile.

> "There is no man preſent, worthy to paſs his ſentence on ſo a great "a King, as to whom they have obeyed as their lawful Prince, full "two and twenty years. This is the part of Traitors, Cut-throats, "and Thieves. None is ſo wicked, none ſo vile, who, though he be "charged with a manifeſt crime, we ſhould think to condemn, be"fore we heard him. And you, do ye account it equal to paſs ſen"tence on a King anointed, and Crowned, giving him no leave to "defend himſelf? How unjuſt is this! But let us conſider the matter "it ſelf. I ſay, nay openly affirm, that Henry, Duke of Lancaſter "(whom you are pleaſed to call your King) hath moſt unjuſtly ſpoiled "Richard, as well his Soveraign as ours, of his Kingdom.

More would he have ſpoken, when the Lord Marſhal enjoyned him ſilence, for ſpeaking too much Truth, in ſo dangerous a time. Since, it ſeems ſome Hiſtorians have made up what more he would have ſaid, ſpinning theſe his Heads into a very large Oration, though tedious to none, ſave thoſe of the Lancaſtrian faction.

Innocency the beſt Armour.

56. Here, if ever, did the Proverb take effect, Truth may be blam'd, but cannot be ſham'd, for although the reſt of the Biſhops, being guilty themſelves, condemned him, as diſcovering more Covent-devotion (who originally was a Monk of Weſtminſter) then Court-diſcretion, in diſſenting from his Brethren;

Anno Dom. 1400. Anno Regni Ric. 2.

Yet generally he was beheld as Loyalties a Confeſſor, ſpeaking what became his calling, in diſcharge of his conſcience. Yea, for the preſent, ſuch the reverence to his integrity, no puniſhment was impoſed upon him.

Activity will be tampering.

57. Merks was conceived in the judgment of moſt moderate men, abundantly to have ſatisfied his conſcience with his ſpeech in Parliament. But how hard is it to ſtop an active ſoul in its full ſpeed? He thought himſelf bound, not onely to ſpeak, but do, yea, and ſuffer too, (if called thereunto) for his Soveraign. This moved him to engage with Henry Hot-ſpur, and other diſcontented Lords, againſt King Henry, on whoſe defeat this Biſhop was taken priſoner, and judicially arraigned for high Treaſon.

A Biſhop not triable by his Peers.

58. This is one of the cleareſt diſtinguiſhing characters, betwixt the Temporal, and Spiritual Lords; that the former are to be tried per pares, by their Peers, being Barons of the Realm; the later are by Law and cuſtome allowed a Trial onely by a Jury of able and ſubſtantial perſons. Such [a] men found Biſhop Merks guilty of Treaſon, for which he was condemned and ſent priſoner to St Albans.

[a] Mr Selden, in a late ſmall Treatiſe of Parliaments.

A ſeaſonable expedient.

59. The King would gladly have had a fair riddance of this Biſhop, whom he could not with credit keep here, nor ſend hence. As to deprive him of life it was dangerous in thoſe dayes, when ſome Sacredneſs was believed inherent in Epiſcopal perſons. Here his Holineſs helpt the King with an handſom expedient, to ſalve all matters, by removing Merks to be Biſhop of [b] Samos in Grecia. I finde three Grecian Iſlands of the ſame name, and a critick [c] complaineth they are often confounded. The beſt is, it is not much material, of which of them Merks was made Biſhop, having onely a Title (to ſterve in ſtate) without a penny profit thereby. But before his tranſlation was compleated, he was tranſlated into another world.

SECT. II.

TO Sir GERRARD NAPIER OF Dorcet-ſhire, BARONET.

I Have read that a Statute was made to retrench the number of great mens keeping their Reteiners, in the Reign of King Hen. 7th; and that politickly done in thoſe mutinous times, to prevent Commotions, leſt ſome popular perſon ſhould raiſe a little Army, under the covert of his great Attendance.

A Law improved to Rigor, though certainly (as all other penal Statutes intended but to terrour) inſomuch that the Earl of Oxford (more meriting of King Hen. 7th then any other ſubject) was even * delivered to the Kings Atturney, and (as report ſaith) Fined fifteen thouſand Marks for exceeding the proportion legally allowed.

* Lord Verulam in his Life, p. 211.

I confeſs we live in as dangerous dayes, and affording as great jealouſies as thoſe: But I have cauſe to be right glad (as deeply concerned therein) that though a Statute hath forbidden many to depend on one, none hath prohibited one to depend on many Patrons: But any Author of a Book may multiply them Sance-number, as driving on no hurtful deſign, but onely the protection of his own endeavours.

On this account I tender theſe my Labours unto you, knowing the very Name of NAPIER acceptable to all Scholars, ever ſince the Learned Laird of Marchiſtowne (no ſtranger to your blood, as I am informed) by his Log-arithmes, contracted the pains (and ſo by conſequence prolonged the time and life) of all imployed in Numeration.

Hen 4 10. 1408.

1. King Henry being conſcious that he had got and did keep the Crown by a bad Title, counted it his wiſeſt way, to comply with the Clergie, whoſe preſent power was not onely uſeful, but needful for him. To gain their favour, he lately enacted bloudy Laws, for the extirpation of poor Chriſtians, under the falſe notion of Hereticks, [a] condemning them to be burnt. A torment unheard of in ſuch caſes till that time: and yet it appeareth, that the Pope, in this Age, was not poſſeſt of ſo full power in England (whatſoever the Catholicks pretend;) but that this politick Prince kept the reins, though looſe, in his own hand. For in this [b] time it was reſolved, that the Popes Collector, though he had the Popes Bull for that purpoſe, had no juriſdiction within this Realm; and a Statute 2. of Hen. 4. c. 15.

King Henry bloudy againſt poor Chriſtians, yet aſſerts his Regal power againſt the Popes encroachments.

b 1 Henry 4th, fol. 19.

and that the Arch-Bishops and Bishops of England, were the Spiritual Judges in the Kings behalf. As it was also [a] enacted, if any person of Religion, obtained of the Bishop of Rome, to be exempt from obedience, regular or ordinary, he was in a premunire. Yea, this very Statute, which gave power to a Bishop in his Diocess to condemn an Heretick, plainly proveth, that the King by consent of Parliament directed the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Court, in cases of Heresie; so that the Pope, even in matters of Spiritual cognizance, had no power over the lives of English subjects.

[a] Statute 2 Hen. 4. cap. 3.

2. The first on whom this cruel Law was hanselled, was William Sautre, formerly parish Priest of S[t] Margaret, in the town of Lin, but since of S[t] Osith in the City of London. This was he, whose Faith fought the first Duell with Fire it self, and overcame it. Abel was the first Martyr of men, S[t] Stephen the first of Christian men; S[t] Alban the first of British Christians, and this Sautre the first of English Protestants, as by Prolepsis I may terme them. Scriveners use with gaudy flourishes to deck and garnish the initial characters of Copies, which superfluous pains may be sparred by us, in adorning this leading letter in the pattern of patience, seeing it is conspicuous enough in its self, died red with its own blood. Some charge this Sautre with fear and fickleness, because formerly he had abjured those Articles, (for which afterwards he died) before the Bishop of Norwich. But let those who severely censure him, for once denying the truth, and do know, who it was that denied his Master thrice, take heed they do not as bad a deed more then four times themselves. May Sautre's final Constancy be as surely practised by men, as his former Cowardliness no doubt is pardoned by God. Eight Errours were laid to his charge in order as followeth.

William Sautre the protomartyr of English protestants.

1. Imprimis, He saith that he will not worship the Cross, on which Christ suffered, but onely Christ that suffered upon the Cross.
2. Item, That he would sooner worship a temporal King, then the aforesaid wooden Cross.
3. Item, That he would rather worship the bodies of the Saints, then the very Cross of Christ, on which he hung if it were before him.
4. Item, That he would rather worship a man truly contrite, then the Cross of Christ.
5. Item, That he is bound rather to worship a man, that is predestinate, then an Angel of God.
6. Item, That if any man would visit the Monuments of Peter and Paul, or go on Pilgrimage to the Tomb of S[t] Thomas, or any whither else, for the obtaining of any temporal benefit, he is not bound to keep his vow, but may distribute the expences of his vow upon the almes of the poor.
7. Item, That every Priest and Deacon is more bound to preach the word of God, then to say the Canonical houres.
8. Item, That after the pronouncing of the Sacramental words of the body of Christ, the bread remaineth of the same nature, that it was before, neither doth it cease to be bread.

Thomas Arundel, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, solemnly pronounceth Sautre an heretick convicted.

3. These were the opinions, wherewith Sautre is charged in their own Registers, which if read with that favour, which not charity but justice allows of course to humane frailty, will be found not so hainous, as to deserve Fire and Fagot, seeing his expressions are rather indiscreet, then his positions damnable. But Thomas Arundel Arch-Bishop of Canterbury; before whom Sautre was convented, in the Convocation, at S[t] Pauls in London, principally pinched pinched him, with the laſt, about Tranſubſtantiation in the Sacrament. Thus their cruelty made Gods Table a Snare to his ſervants: when their other Nets broke, this held; what they pretended a Sacrifice for the living and dead, proved, indeed, the cauſe of the ſacrificing of many innocents, and cavils about the corporal preſence, was the moſt compendious way to diſpatch them: for the denial whereof, the aforeſaid Arch-Biſhop ſolemnly pronounced Sautre an Heretick convicted.

Anno Regis Hen. 4 10. Anno Dom. 1408

Sautres indiſcreet denying of himſelf.

4. Here happened a paſſage in Sautre, which I muſt not omit; which either I do not underſtand, or cannot approve in him. For being demanded whether or no, he had formerly abjured theſe opinions he denied the ſame, whereas, his formal abjuration of them, the laſt year, before the Biſhop of Norwich, was produced in preſence; an action utterly inconſiſtent with Chriſtian ſincerity, to deny his own deed; except any will ſay that he was not bound to accuſe himſelf, and to confeſs in that Court, (what he had done elſewhere) to his own prejudice. Thus offenders, which formerly have confeſſed their fact, in their private examinations before a Juſtice of Peace, yet plead not Guilty, when they are brought before the Aſſizes, accounting themſelves innocent, in that Court, till, by the verdict of the Jury, they are proved otherwiſe. However I am rather inclined to ſuſpect my ignorance, then condemn his innocence, conceiving there is more on his ſide, then appeareth in his behalf.

Sautre by a ſecond ſentence is adjudged to be degraded and depoſed.

5. The Reader I preſume will pardon our largeneſs, (which we will recompence, with brevity in the reſt) in relating the proceedings againſt this firſt Martyr, who being, as I may ſay, the eldeſt, and the Heir in our Hiſtory, may juſtly challenge a double portion thereof. Yea, the Arch-Biſhop, who in his condemnation did not follow, but make a preſident therein, was very punctual and ceremonious in his proceedings, that he might ſet the fairer copie, for the direction of poſterity; and that the formality of his exemplary juſtice, might, for the terrour of others, take the deeper impreſſion in all, that did ſee it, or ſhould hear thereof. And now his former abjuration plainly appearing, Arundel, by a ſecond ſentence, adjudged him relapſed into Hereſie, and incorrigible, and therefore to be degraded and depoſed.

The order of his degradation.

6. For leſt Prieſt-hood ſhould ſuffer in the perſon of Sautre, (and all the Clergie preſent, out of a religious ſympathie, were tender of the honour of their own profeſſion) he was there ſolemnly degraded in order as followeth.

From the order of	1. Prieſt.	By taking from him	1. The Patin, Chalice, and plucking the Chaſule from his back.
	2. Deacon.		2. The New Teſtament and the Stole.
	3. Sub-Deacon.		3. The Alb, and the Maniple.
	4. Acolyte.		4. The Candleſtick, Taper, Urceolum.
	5. Exorciſt.		5. The Book of Conjurations.
	6. Reader.		6. The Book of Church-Legends.
	7. Sexton.		7. The Key of the Church door and Surphee.

How many ſteps are required to climb up to the top of Popiſh Prieſt-hood! but, as when a building is taken down, one would little think, ſo much timber and ſtone, had concurred thereunto, until he ſees the ſeveral parcels thereof, lie in ruinous heaps; ſo it is almoſt incredible, how many trinkets muſt be had to compleat a Prieſt? but that here we behold them ſolemnly taken aſunder in Sautres degradation. And now he no longer Prieſt, but plain Layman, with the tonſure, on his crown raſed away, was delivered to the Secular power, with this complement, worth the noting: Beſeeching the Secular Court, that that they would receive favourably the said William unto them thus recommitted. But who can excuse their double-dealing herein from deep hypocrisie, seeing the Bishops, at the same time, (for all their fair language) ceased not to call upon the King, to bring him to speedy execution. Anno Dom. 1408. Anno Regis Hen. 4 10.

The Kings warrant for the burning of Sautre.

7. Hereupon the King in Parliament issued out his warrant to the Major and Sheriffs of London, that the said William being in their custody, should be brought forth into some publick or open place, within the liberty of the City, and there really to be [a] burned to the great horrour of his offence, and manifest example of other Christians; which was performed accordingly. Thus died this worthy man; and though we be as far from adoring his Reliques, as such adoration is from true Religion, yet we cannot but be sensible of the value of such a Saint: Nor can we mention his memory, without paying an honourable respect thereunto. His death strook a terrour into those of his party, who hereafter were glad to enjoy their conscience in private, without publick professing the same. So that now the ship of Christ tost'd with the tempest of persecution, had all her sailes took down; yea, her mast cut close to the deck, and without making any visible shew, was fain to lie poor and private, till this storm was over-past'd: the Arch-Bishop Arundel being most furious and cruel, in detecting and suppressing all suspected of piety.

a Fox Martyr. pag. 477. out of whom the effect of this story is taken.

A surfeit of Synods in Arch Bishop Arundels time.

8. Synods of the Clergie were never so frequent before or since, as in his time, when scarce a year escaped without a Synod called, or continued therein. Most of these were but Ecclesiastical meetings for secular money. Hereupon, a covetous ignorant Priest, guilty of no Greek, made this derivation of the word Synodus (far fatch'd in it self, but coming close to him) from Crumena sine nodo, because at such assemblies, the purse ought ever to be open, without knots tied thereon, ready to disburse such summes, as should be demanded. Indeed the Clergie now contributed much money to the King, having learned the Maxime commended in the Comedian, [b] Pecuniam in loco negligere maxumum interdum est lucrum. And perceiving on what tickliſh termes their state stood, were forced to part with a great proportion thereof to secure the rest, the [c] Parliament now shrewdly pushing at their temporal possessions. For, although in the first year of King Henry, the Earls of Northumberland and Westmerland came from him to the Clergie with a complement, that the King onely [d] desired their prayers, and none of their money (Kingdoms have their honey-moon, when new Princes are married unto them) yet how much afterwards he received from them, the ensuing draught of Synods summoned in his dayes doth present.

We will not avouch these all the conventions of the Clergie in this Kings Reign, (who had many subordinate meetings in reference to their own occasions) but these of most publick concernment. Know this also, that it was a great invitation (not to say an inforcement) to make them the more bountiful in their contributions to the King, because their leaders were suspicious of a design now first set on foot, in opposition to all Religious Houses (as then termed) to essay their overthrow. Which project now, as a Pioneer, onely wrought beneath ground, yet not so insensibly, but that the Church-Statists got a discovery thereof, and in prevention, were very satisfying to the Kings Pecuniary desires. Insomuch, that it was in effect but ask and have, such their compliance to all purposes and intents. The rather because this King had appeared so zealous to arm the Bishops, with terrible Laws, against the poor naked Lollards, as then they were nick-named.

It was moved in Parliament, that no Welch-man, Biſhop or other, be Juſtice, Chamberlain, Chancellor, Treaſurer, Sheriff, Conſtable of a Caſtle, Receiver, Eſcheator, Coroner, or chief Foreſter, or other Officer whatſoever, or * Keeper of Records, or Lieutenant in the ſaid Offices, in any part of Wales, or of Councel to any Engliſh Lord, notwithſtanding any Patent made to the contrary. Cum clauſula non obſtante, Licet Wallicus natus. A ſevere motion againſt the Welch.

* Ex rot. Par. in turr. Lond. in hoc anno.

11. It was anſwered; that the King willeth it except the Biſhops, and for them and others, which he hath found good and loyal lieges towards him, our ſaid Lord the King will be adviſed by the adviſe of his Councel. Moderated by the King.

12. Such as wonder why the Parliament was ſo incenſed againſt the Welch, (ſeeing Henry Prince of Wales, was their own Country-man born at Monmouth) may conſider, how now, or very lately, Owen Glendowre, a Welch Robber, (advanced by the multitude of his followers into the reputation of a General) had made much ſpoil in Wales. Now commendable was the King's charity, who would not return a national miſchief for a perſonal injury, ſeeing no man can chuſe the place of his Nativity, though he may bemoan and hate the bad practiſes of his own Nation. The cauſe of his anger.

13. The Kings courteous exception for the Welch Biſhops, putteth us upon a neceſſay enquiry, who and what they were, placed in Sees at this time. The Quaternion of welch Bps. who and what at this time.

The Petition of the Lords and Commons to the King against Lollards.

14. Sir John Tiptoff (made afterwards Earl of Worcester) put up a Petition to the Parliament, touching Lollards, which wrought ſo on the Lords, that they joyned in a Petition to the King, according to the Tenour following. Anno Dom. 1411. Anno Regni Henr. 14.

To our moſt redoubted and gracious Soveraign the King.

YOur humble * Son, HENRY PRINCE OF WALES, and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in this preſent Parliament, humbly ſhew, That the Church of England hath been, and now is, endowed with temporal poſſeſſions, by the gifts and grants as well of your Royal Progenitours, as by the Anceſters of the ſaid Lords Temporal, to maintain Divine Service, keep Hoſpitality, &c. to the Honour of God, and the ſouls health of your Progenitors, and the ſaid Lords Temporal.

* Contracted by my ſelf (exactly keeping the words) out of the Original.

Yet now of late, ſome, at the inſtigation of the Enemy, againſt the foreſaid Church and Prelates, have as well in publick Sermons, as in Conventicles, and ſecret places called Schools, ſtirred and moved the people of your Kingdom to take away the ſaid temporal Poſſeſſions from the ſaid Prelates, with which, they are as rightly endowed, as it hath been, or might be, beſt adviſed or imagined, by the Laws and Cuſtomes of your Kingdom, and of which they are as ſurely poſſeſſed, as the Lords Temporal are of their inheritances.

Wherefore in caſe that this evil purpoſe be not reſiſted by your Royal Majeſtie, it is very likely that in proceſs of time, they will alſo excite the people of your Kingdom, for to take away from the ſaid Lords Temporal, their poſſeſſions and heritages, ſo to make them common to the open commotion of your people.

There be alſo others, who publiſh, and cauſe to be publiſhed evilly, and falſly among the people of your Kingdom, that Richard late King of England, (who is gone to God, and on whoſe ſoul, God thorow his Grace have mercy) is ſtill alive. And ſome have writ and publiſhed divers falſe pretended prophecies to the people; diſturbing them, who would to their power live peaceably, Serve God, and faithfully ſubmit and obey you their Liege Lord.

Wherefore may it pleaſe your Royal Majeſtie in maintenance of the honour of God, conſervation of the Laws of the holy Church, as alſo in the preſervation of the eſtate of You, your Children, and the Lords aforesaid, and for the quiet of all your Kingdom, to ordain by a Statute, in the present Parliament, by the assent of the Lords aforesaid, and the Commons of your Kingdom, that in case any man or woman, of what estate or condition they be, preach, publish, or maintain, hold, use, or exercise, any Schools, if any Sect or Doctrine hereafter against the Catholick faith, either preach, publish, maintain, or write a schedule, whereby the people may be moved to take away the Temporal Possessions of the aforesaid Prelates, or preach, and publish, that Richard late King, who is dead, should still be in full life, or that the Fool in Scotland is that King Richard who is dead; or that publish or write, any pretended Prophesies to the commotion of your people.

That they and every of them, be taken, and put in Prison, without being delivered in Bail, or otherwise, except by good and sufficient mainprise, to be taken before the Chancellour of England, &c.

15. See we here the Policy of the Clergie, who had gained Prince Henry (set as a Transcendent by himself in the Petition) to their side, entring his Youth against the poor Wicklivites, and this Earnest engaged him to the greater Antipathy, against them, when possest of the Crown.

The Prince made a party against Wicklivites.

16. Observe also the Subtilty of the Clergie in this medley Petition, interweaving their own interest with the Kings, and endeavouring to possess him, that all the Adversaries to their Superstitions, were Enemies also and Traytors to his Majesty.

Complication of Royal and Prelatical interest.

17. Now as Conventicles were the Name of disgrace cast on, Schools was the terme of Credit owned by, the Wicklevists for the place of their meeting. Whether because [f] the School of Tyrannus, wherein S[t] Paul disputed, was conceived by them Senior in Scripture to any material Church; Or that their teaching therein was not in intire discourses, but admitted (as in the Schools) of interlocutory opposition on occasion.

Wicklivists their Schools,

18. By Lollards all know the Wicklivites are meant, so called from [h] Walter Lollardus one of their Teachers in Germany; (and not as the [i] Monk alluded, quasi lolia in arâ Domini) flourishing many years before Wickliffe, and much consenting with him in judgment. As for the word Lollard retained in our Statutes since the Reformation, it seems now as a generical name, to signifie such who in their opinions oppose the setled Religion of the Land, in which sense, the modern Sheriffs are bound by their Oath to suppress them.

Lollards why so called.

19. The Parenthesis concerning King Richard [Who is gone to God, and on whose Soul God through his Grace have Mercy] is according to the Doctrine of that Age. For they held all in Purgatory, gone to God, because assisted in due time of their happiness; yet so that the suffrages of the Living were profitable for them. Nor feared they to offend King Henry by their charitable presumption of the final happy estate of King Richard his professed Enemy, knowing he cared not where King Richard was, so be it, not living and sitting on the English Throne.

A charitable parenthesis.

20. As for the report of King Richards being still alive, it is strange any should believe it; if it be true, that his Corps for some dayes, were at London exposed expos'd to open view: understand it done at distance, lest coming too near, might discover some violence offered on his person. It is probable that the obscurity of his burial (huddled into his grave at Langley in Hertford-shire) gave the lustre to the report, that he was still alive, believed of those who desired it. Anno Dom. 1412. Anno Regis Hen. quinti. 14.

No Woman Lollard Martyr.

21. Whereas this Law against Lollards, extended to Women, though many of the weaker Sex, were in trouble upon that account; Yet on my best enquiry, I never found any one put to death. Anna Ascough being the first, who in the reign of King Henry the Eight, was burnt for her Religion.

22. A [g] Scotch Writer tels us, that King Richard fled disguised into Scotland, discovered himself to, and was honourably entertained by Robert the King thereof. Adding that Richard who would no more of the world, gave himself wholly to Contemplation, liv'd, dy'd, and bury'd at Sterling, possibly some Mimick might personate him there, and is the FOOL mentioned in this Petition.

Cruel persecution.

23. Hereupon it was, that the poor Lollards were prosecuted, with such cruelty, that the prisons were full of them; many forced to abjure, and such who refused, used without mercy, as in Mr Fox is largely related.

Arch-Bishop Arundel going to Visit Oxford.

24. Thomas Arundel, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, came to Oxford, with a pompous train, accompanied with many persons of Honour, and particularly with his Nephew, Thomas Fitz-Allen, Earl of Arundell; His intent was juridically to Visit the University, expecting to be solemnly met, and sumptuously entertained, according to his place and dignity.

Is resisted by the Chancellour.

25. But see the spite of it, Richard Courtney, the Chancellor of Oxford, (whom by his Sir-name and high Spirit, I should guess descended from the Earls of Devonshire) with Benedict Brent, and John Birch, the two Proctors, denied the Arch-Bishop entrance into the University under the notion of a Visitor, though as a Stranger, great Prelate, and Privy Counceller, all welcome was provided for him and his Retinue. Arundell was angry with the affront, and finding force both useless (the Scholars siding with the Chancellor) and inconsistent with his gravity, was fain fairly to retreat, re infectâ, to London; the rather because the Chancellour had submitted the cause in controversie to the hearing and determining of his Majestie.

The King determines the cause for the Arch-Bishop.

26. King Henry at the joynt instance of both parties, summoned them to Lambeth, to hear and determine the controversie; the Chancellour of Oxford produceth an Army of large Bulls of the Pope: Arch-Bishop Arundell brought forth one Champian, viz. An Instrument in the Reign of King Richard the second, wherein the King adjudged all their Papall Priviledges void, as granted to the dammage of the Crown, and much occasioning the increase of Lollards; not that it was so done intentionally by his Holiness (for who can suspect the Pope turn Lollard?) but accidentally it came to pass, that the University of Oxford freed from Archiepiscopal Visitation, by vertue of those Bulls, the Wicklewists therein escaped from Consistorian censure. Hereupon King Henry pronounced sentence on the Arch-Bishops side, as by the ensuing Instrument will plainly appear. Feb. 9. Friday.

Concordat cum Originali,

GULIELMUS RYLEY.

Afterwards the King confirmed the ſame, with the conſent of the Lords and Commons in Parliament, as in the Tower Rouls doth plainly appear.

The effect of the Statute of Præmunire.

27. See we here the grand difference, betwixt the Popes power in England, before and after the Statute of Præmunire. Before it, his actus fori was authentical, and his Bulls received next to Canonical Scripture. Since, that Statute hath broken off their beſt Seals, wherein they croſſe the Royall Power; and in all things elſe, they enter into England mannerly with, good King by your leave Sir, or elſe they were no better then ſo much waſte Parchment.

Farwell to K. Henry the fourth.

28. This doth acquaint us with a perfect Character of King Henry the fourth, who though curteous, was not ſervial to the Pope. And * Sr Edward Cook accounteth this his Oxford action (though unwilling to tranſcribe the Inſtrument for the tediouſneſs thereof) a noble act of Kingly power in that Age, and ſo we take our farwell of King Henry the fourth, not obſerved (as all Engliſh Kings before and after him) to have erected and endowed any one intire houſe of Religion, as firſt or ſole Founder thereof, though a great Benefactor to the Abby of Leiceſter, and Colledg of Fotheringhey in Northamptonſhire; his Picture is not ſo well known by his Head as his Hood, which he weareth upon it in an antick faſhion peculiar to himſelf.

The death of T. Arundel.

30. I had almoſt forgotten, that juſt a moneth before the death of King Henry the Fourth, Thomas Arundel, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury expired; famiſhed to death, not for want of food, but a throat to ſwallow it, ſuch the ſwelling therein, that he could neither ſpeak nor eat for ſome dayes. I may ſafely report, what others obſerve, how he, who by his cruel Canons, forbad the food to the ſoul, and had pronounced ſentence of condemnation, on ſo many innocents, was now both ſtarv'd, and ſtrick dumb together. Henry Chichely ſucceeded him in the place, whoſe mean birth interrupted the Chain of Noble Arch-Biſhops, his two predeceſſors and ſucceſſors, being Earls ſons by their extraction.

The Clergie jealous of King Henries activity.

31. The Prelates and Abbots eſpecially, began now to have the active ſoul of King Henry in ſuſpition; For working heads are not ſo willing to follow old wayes, as well-pleaſed to find out new ones. Such a reſtleſs ſoul, muſt be ſent out of harms-way: If that the Clergie found not this King ſome work abroad, 1414 1.

he would make them new work at home. Had his humor happen'd to ſide with the Lollards, Henry the fifth would have ſaved King Henry the Eight much pains in demoliſhing of Monaſteries.

32. Hereupon the Clergie cunningly gave vent to his Activity, by divertting it, on a long warre upon the French, where his Victories are loudly ſounded forth by our State Hiſtorians. A warre of more credit then profit to England in this Kings Reigne, draining the Men and Money thereof. Thus Victorious Bayes bear onely barren Berries (no whit good for food, and very little for Phyſick) whilſt the Peaceable Olive drops down that precious liquor, making the face of man to ſhine therewith. Beſides, what this King Henry gained, his Son as quickly loſt in France. Thus though the Providence of Nature hath priviledged Iſlanders by their entire poſition to ſecure themſelves, yet are they unhappy in long keeping their acquiſitions on the Continent.

Divert it on a war in France.

33 Now began the Tragedy of Sir John Oldcaſtle, ſo largely handled in Mr. Fox, that his pains hath given Poſterity a Writ of Eaſe herein. He was a vigorous Knight, whoſe Martiall Activity, wrought him into the affections of Jone [f] Dᵉ la Pole Baroneſſe of Cobham, the Lord whereof he became, (ſed quære, whether an Actuall Baron) by her Marriage.

The ſad ſtory of Sir John Oldcaſtle.

f Camd. Brit. in Kent.

34. As for the Opinions of this Sir John Oldcaſtle, they plainly appear in his Belief, which he drew up with his own hand, and preſented it firſt to the King, then to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, wherein ſome things are rather courſely then falſelie ſpoken. He knew to ſpeak in the Language of the Schools (ſo were the meetings of the Wicklivists called) but not ſcholaſtically; and I believe he was the firſt that coyned, and laſt that uſed the diſtinction of the Church Militant, divided into Prieſt-hood, Knight-hood, and Commons, which had no great harm therein, as he explained it. As for * Perſons his charging him with Anabaptiſtical Tenets, it is pitty that the words of a plain meaning man ſhould be put on the Wrack of a Jeſuites malice, to extort by deduction what never was intended therein.

His belief.

* In his 3 converſion.

35. But a worſe accuſation is charged on his Memory, that he was not onely guilty of Hereſie but Treaſon. But by the way, it appeareth that Lolardiſme then counted Hereſie was made Treaſon by Statute, and on that account Hereſie and Treaſon, ſignifie no more then Hereſie, and then Hereſie according to the abuſive language of that Age was the beſt ſerving of God in thoſe dayes. But beſides this, a very formal Treaſon is laid to this Lords account in manner following.

He is charged of Treaſon.

It is laid to his charge, that though not preſent in the perſon with his Councel, he encouraged an Army of Rebels, no fewer then twenty thouſand, which in the dark thickets (expounded in our Age into plain paſture) of S^t Giles Fields nigh London, intended to ſeize on the Kings Perſon, and his two Brothers, the Dukes of Bedford and Gloceſter. Of this numerous Army, thirty ſix are ſaid to be hang'd and burnt, though the Names of three are onely known, and S^r Roger Acton Knight, the onely perſon of quality named in the deſign.

36. For mine own part, I muſt confeſs my ſelf ſo loſt in the Intricacies of theſe Relations, that I know not what to aſſent to. On the one ſide, I am loath to load the Lord Cobhams memory with cauſleſs crimes, knowing the perfect hatred the Clergie in that Age bear'd unto him, and all that look'd towards the reformation in Religion. Beſides, that 20000 men ſhould be brought into the field, and no place aſſigned whence they were to be raiſed, or where muſtered, is clog'd with much improbability. The rather becauſe onely the three perſons, as is aforeſaid, are mentioned by name of ſo vaſt a number.

The Author intricated.

37. On

Anno Dom. 1414. Anno Regis Hen. quint. 2.

Leaveth all to the last day.

37. On the other side, I am much startled with the Evidence that appeareth against him. Indeed I am little moved with what T. Walsingham writes, (whom all later Authors follow, as a flock the Belweather) knowing him a Benedictine Monk of S^t Albanes, bowed by interest to partiality; but the Records of the Tower, and Acts of Parliament therein, wherein he was solemnly condemned for a Traitor as well as Heretick, challenge belief. For with what confidence, can any private person, promise credit from Posterity to his own Writings, if such publick Monuments, be not by him entertained for authentical: Let M^r Fox therefore, be this Lord Cobhams Compurgator, I dare not; and if my hand were put on the Bible, I should take it back again. Yet so, that, as I will not acquit, I will not condemn him, but leave all to the last day of the * Revelation of the righteous judgment of God.

* Rom. 2.5.

The Lord Cobham taken in Wales.

38. This is most true, that the Lord Cobham made his escape out of the Tower, wherein he was imprisoned; fled into Wales, here he lived four years, being at last discovered, and taken, by the Lord Powis. Yet so, that it cost some blows and bloud to apprehend him, till a Woman at last with a Stool broke the Lord Cobham's Leggs, whereby being lame he was brought up to London in a Horse-litter.

His double death.

39. At last he was drawn upon a hurdle to the Gallows, his Death as his Crime being double, hang'd and burn'd, for Traitor and Heretick. Hence some have deduced the Etymologie of Tyburne, from Ty and burne, the necks of offending persons being ty'd thereunto, whose leggs and lower parts were consumed in the flame.

Unjustly made the Buffoon in playes.

40. Stage-Poets have themselves been very bold with, and others very merry at, the Memory of S^r John Oldcastle, whom they have fancied a boon Companion, a jovial Royster, and yet a Coward to boot, contrary to the credit of all Chronicles, owning him a Martial man of merit. The best is, S^r John Falstaffe, hath relieved the Memory of S^r John Oldcastle, and of late is substituted Buffoone in his place, but it matters as little what petulant Poets, as what malicious Papists have written against him.

Lincolne Col. founded.

41. Richard Fleming Doctor of Divinity, designed by the Pope Arch-Bishop of York, but (to please King Henry the fifth) contented with the Bishoprick of Lincoln, about this time founded a Colledg, named Lincoln-Colledg in Oxford. It fared the worse because he died before it was fully finished, and the best Guardian to an Orphan-foundation comes far short of the Father thereof. Yet was this House happy in two bountiful Benefactors, Thomas Beckington Bishop of Bath and Wells, who (according to the ingenuity of that Age) hath left his Memory in a Beacon with a Tun on the Walls, and Thomas Rotherham Arch-Bishop of York, adding five Fellowships thereunto.

This is that Pont whose Faith many distrust, for his violent writing against † Wickliff, but whose Charity more may dislike, for his malice to this innocent Colledg, except it was, that he foresaw it would produce in time, worthy Champions of the Truth, Opposers of his erroneous Opinions, as indeed it hath, though I be unable to give a particular Catalogue of them.

43. Indeed I could much desire (were it in my power) to express my service to this foundation, acknowledging my self for a quarter of a year in these troublesome times (though no member of) a dweller in it. I will not complain of the dearness of this University, where seventeen weeks cost me more then seventeen yeers in Cambridge (even all that I had) but shall pray that the students therein be never hereafter disturbed upon the like occasion.

Bishop of Lincoln builds them a new Chappel.

43. We must not forget John Williams, Bishop of Lincolne, bred in Cambridge, related only to this House as Visitor thereof. Here finding the Chappel, (built by John Forrest Dean of Wells in the Reign of King Henry the sixt) old, little, and inconvenient, he erected a far fairer Fabrick in the room thereof. He had a good Precedent of a Cambridge man's bountie to this House, even Thomas Rotherham Fellow of Kings Colledge, and Master of Pembrooke Hall therein, whom Bishop Williams succeeded, as in the Bishoprick of Lincolne, and the Archbishoprick of Yorke, so in his Liberality to this Foundation.

The death and character of King Henry the fift.

9 Aug. 31. 1422 44. On the last of August, King Henry the fifth ended his life, in France; one of a strong and active body, neither shrinking in cold, nor sloathfull in heat, going commonly with his head uncovered, the wearing of Armour was no more cumbersome unto him then a Cloak. He never shrunk at a wound, nor turned away his Nose for ill savour; nor closed his eyes for smoak or dust; in Diet none lesse dainty, or more moderate: his sleep very short, but sound, fortunate in fight, and commendable in all his Actions, verifying the Proverb, that an ill Youth, may make a good Man. The Nunnery of Sion was built and endowed by him; and a Colledge was by him intended in Oxford, had not death prevented him.

Q. Katherine married again.

45. As for Katherine de Valois, Daughter to Charles the sixth King of France, widdow of King Henry, she was afterward married to, and had issue by, Owen ap Tudor a noble welchman, and her body lies at this day, unburied in a loose Coffin at Westminster, lately shew'd to such as desire it, and there dependeth a story thereon.

Anno Dom. 1422. Anno Regni Hen. sexti 1.

But never buried.

a Philip Comineus.

46. There was an old prophesie among the English (observedby [a] forrainers to be the greatest Prophecy-mongers, and whilst the Devil knows their diet, they shall never want a dish to please the Palate) that an English Prince born at Winsor, should be unfortunate in losing what his Father had acquired. Whereupon King Henry forbad Queen Katherine, (big with Childe) to be delivered there; who out of the corrupt principle, Nitimur in vetitum, and affecting her Father, before her Husband, was there brought to bed of King Henry the sixt, in whose Reign the fair victories woven by his Fathers valour, were by Cowardise, Carelesness, and Contentions, unraveled to nothing.

By her own desire.

b Speed Chron. p. 661.

47. Report, the greatest (though not the truest) Author avoucheth, that sensible of her fault in disobeying her Husband, it was her own [b] desire and pleasure, that her body should never be buried. If so, it is pitty but that a Woman, (especially a Queen) should have her will therein. Whose dust doth preach a Sermon of duty to Feminine, and of Mortality to all Beholders.

Alii aliter.

c Stows survey of London p. 507.

48. But this story is told otherwise by other authors, namely, that she was [c] buried neer her Husband King Henry the fift, under a fair Tombe, where she hath a large Epitaph, and continued in her grave some years, untill King Henry the Seventh laying the foundation of a new Chappel, caused her Corps to be taken up; but why the said Henry, being her Great Grand-Child, did not order it to be re-interred, is not recorded; if done by casualty and neglect very strange, and stranger if out of designe.

The Parliament appoint the Kings Councellors.

49. In the minority of King Henry the sixt, as his Uncle, John Duke of Bedford, managed martial matters beyond the seas; so his other Uncle, Humphery Duke of Gloucester, was chosen his Protector at home, to whom the Parliament then sitting appointed a select number of privy Councellors, wherein, only such as were spiritual persons fall under our observation.

1. Henry Chichley Archbishop of Canterbury.
2. John Kempe Bishop of London.
3. Henry Beauford Bishop of Winchest. lately made Lord Cardinal.
4. John Wackaring Bishop of Norwich, privie seal.
5. Philip Morgan, Bishop of Worcester.
6. Nic. Bubwith Bishop of Bath and Wels, Lord Treasurer.

So strong a party had the Clergie in that Age, in the privie Councel, that they could carry all matters at their own pleasure.

A strict law for the Irish Clergy.

50. It was ordered in Parliament, that all Irishmen living in either University, should procure their Testimonials, from the Lord Lievetenant or Justice of Ireland, as also finde sureties for their good behaviour, during their remaining therein. They were also forbidden to take upon them, the Principality of any Hall or House, in either University, but that they remain under the discipline of others. 1423. 2.

Wickliff quietly buried 41. years.

51. Hitherto the Corpse of John Wickliffe had quietly slept in his grave, about one and fourty years after his death, till his body was reduced to bones, and his bones almost to dust. For though the Earth in the Chancel of Lutterworth in Leicester-shire, where he was interred, hath not so quick a digestion with the Earth of Acheldama, to consume Flesh in twenty foure houres, yet such the appetite thereof, and all other English graves, to leave small reversions of a body after so many years. 1428. 6.

52. But

Anno Regis Hen. sixt. 6. Anno Dom. 1428.

52. But now such the Spleen of the Council of Constance, as they not only cursed his Memorie, as dying an obstinate Heretick, but ordered that his bones (with this charitable caution, if it may be discerned from the bodies of other faithfull people) to be taken out of the ground and thrown farre off, from any Christian buriall. Ordered to be ungraved for a Heretick.

53. In obedience hereunto Richard Fleming Bishop of Lincolne, Dioceſan of Lutterworth, ſent his Officers (Vultures with a quick ſight ſcent at a dead Carcaſe) to ungrave him accordingly. To Lutterworth they come, Sumner, Commiſſarie, Official, Chancellour, Proctors, Doctors, and the Servants (ſo that the Remnant of the body would not hold out a bone, amongſt ſo many hands) take, what was left, out of the grave, and burnt them to aſhes, and caſt them into Swift a Neighbouring Brook running hard by. Thus this Brook hath convey'd his aſhes into Avon; Avon into Severn; Severn into the narrow Seas; they, into the main Ocean. And thus the Aſhes of Wickliff are the Emblem of his Doctrine, which now, is diſperſed all the World over. His aſhes burnt and drown'd.

54. I know not whether the Vulgar Tradition be worth Remembrance, that the Brook into which Wickliff his Aſhes were powred, never ſince overflowed the Banks. Were this true (as ſome deny it) as ſilly is the inference of Papiſts attributing this to Divine Providence, expreſſing it ſelf pleaſed with ſuch ſeverity on a Heretick, as ſimple the collection of ſome Proteſtants, making it an effect of Wickliff his ſanctity. Such Topical accidents are good for Friend and Foe, as they may be bowed to both; but in effect good to neither, ſeeing no ſolid Judgement will build where bare fancy hath laid Foundation. None can drive a naile of wax.

55. It is of more conſequence to obſerve the differences betwixt Authors, ſome making the Council of Conſtance to paſſe this ſentence of condemnation as Maſter Fox doth, inſerting (but by miſtake) the Hiſtory thereof, in the Reign of King Richard the ſecond, which happened many years after. But more truly it is aſcribed to the Council of Sienna, except for ſureneſſe both of them joyned in the ſame cruell edict. Difference betwixt Authors,

56. Here I cannot omit what I read in a * Popiſh Manuſcript (but very lately printed) about the ſubject of our preſent diſcourſe. Wickliffe traduced.

57. 'The firſt unclean BEAST that ever paſſed thorow *Oxonford (I 'mean Wickliff by Name) afterwards chewed the Cud and was ſuf- 'ficiently reconciled to the Roman faith, as appears by his Recanta- 'tion, Living and Dying conformable to the holy Catholick 'Church.

* Hall in the life of Biſhop Fiſher, p. 33.

* O! the wit.

58. It is ſtrange that this Popiſh Prieſt alone, ſhould light on his Recantation, which, I believe, no other eyes, before or ſince, did behold. Beſides, if, (as he ſaith) Wickliff was ſufficiently reconciled to the Roman Faith, why was not Rome ſufficiently reconciled to him? uſing ſuch crueltie unto him ſo many years after his death. Cold incouragement, for any to become Romiſt's Converts, if (notwithſtanding their reconciliation) the bodies muſt be burnt ſo many years after their death.

59. But though Wickliff had no Tombe, he had an Epitaph, ſuch as it was, which a Monk afforded him, and that it was no worſe, thank his want, not of malice, but invention, not finding out worſe expreſſions. A Monk's charity to Wickliffe.

A conditional privy Councill.

59. Henry Beaufort Bishop of Winchester, Cardinal Sancti Eusebij, but commonly called, Cardinal of England, was by consent of Parliament made one of the Kings Council, with this condition, that he should make a * Protestation to absent himself from the Council, when any matters were to be treated betwixt the King and Pope, being jealous belike, that his Papal would prevaile over his Royall interest. The Cardinal took the Protestation, and promised to perform it.

Priviledge of Convocation.

60. The Clergy complained in Parliament to the King, that their Servants which came with them to Convocations, were often arrested, to their great damage, and they prayed that they might have the same Priviledge, which the Peeres and Commons of the Kingdom have, which are called to Parliament, which was granted accordingly.

Want of Grammar Schooles complained of.

61. Great at this time was the want of Grammar Schools, and the abuse of them that were even in London it self; for they were no better then Monopolize, it being penall for any (to prevent the growth of Wickliviſm) to put their Children to private Teachers; hence was it that some hundreds were compelled to go to the same School, where, to use the words of the Records, the Masters waxen rich in money, and learners poor in cunning.

Whereupon this grievance was complained on in Parliament by four eminent Ministers in London, viz.

C

Mr. { William Lichfield Parson of All-Hallow's the More.
Gilbert, Parson of St. Andrews Holbern.
John Cote, Parson of St. Peter's Cornhill.
John Neele, Master of the House of St. Thomas Acre's, and Parson of Colchirch.

To these it was granted by the Advice of the Ordinary, or Archbishop of Canterbury to erect five Schools (Neele the last named having a double licence for two places) in their respective Parishes, which are fitly called the five vowels of London, which Mute in a manner before, began now to speak and pronounce the Latine Tongue. Know that the house St. Thomas Acres was, where Mercers Chappel standeth at this day.

Elianour Dutchess of Gloucester commended by Mr Fox for a Confessor.

About this time the Lady Eleanor Cobham, so called from the Lord Cobham her Father, (otherwise Elianour Plantagenet by her Husband) was married unto Humphrey the Kings Uncle Duke of Gloucester. She was it seems a great Savourer and Favourer of Wickliffe his Opinions, and for such Mr. Fox hath ever a good word in store. Insomuch that he maketh this Lady a Confessor, Sr. Roger Only, (alias Bolingbroke) her Chaplain, a Martyr, assigning in his Kalender, the eleventh and twelfth of February for the dayes of their commemoration. 1433 11.

Made Traitor by A. C.

But Alanus Copus, (namely Harpsfield under his name) falls foul on Mr. Fox for making Sr. Roger a Martyr, who was a Traitor, and Elianour this Dutchess a Confessor, who by the consent of our Croniclers Robert Fabian, Edward Hall, &c. was condemned (after solemn penance and carrying a Taper barefoot at Pauls Crosse) to perpetuall banishment, for plotting with Only his Chaplain, (an abominable Necromancer) and three others by witch-witchcraft to destroy the King, so to derive the Crown to her Husband, as the next heir in the Line of Lancaster. But Cope-Harpsfield pincheth the Fox the hardest, for making Margaret Jourdman (the witch of Eye) a Martyr, who was justly burnt for her witchraft. Other small errors we omit, whereof he accuseth him.

In answer hereunto, Mr. Fox makes a threefold return, ingeniously confessing part of the charge, flatly denying part, and fairly excusing the rest. He confesseth, and take it in his own words, that the former Edition of his Acts and Monuments, was [a] HASTILY RASHED up at the present in such shortnesse of time, (fourteen moneths, as I remember, too small a term for so great a Task) that it betraied him to many mistakes, as when he calleth Sir Roger Only a Knight, who was a Priest by his profession. Adding moreover, that had he thought no [b] imperfections had passed his former Edition, he would have taken in hand a second recognition thereof.

Mr. Fox His ingenious confession.

[a] First Volum. Pag. 920.

[b] Pag. 921.

He flatly denyeth that his Martyr-making of Margaret Jourdman the Witch of Eye,

His flat denial.

> I here (saith) professe, confesse and ascertain, both you (Cope-Harpsfield He meaneth) and all English men both present, and all posterity hereafter to come, that Margaret Jourdman I never spake of, never thought of, never dreamed of, nor did ever hear of, before you named her in your Book your self. So farre it is off that I, either with my will, or against my will, made any Martyr of Her.

He excuseth the aforesaid Dutchess Elianour, alledging ten Conjectures (as he calleth them) in her vindication.

His ten Conjectures in behalf of the Dutchess.

1. Sir Roger Only took it upon his death, that He and the Lady were innocent of those things for which they were condemned.

2. It was usuall for the Clergie in that Age, to load those who were of Wickliffe his perswasion (such this Dutchess) with no lesse false then foule aspersions.

3. Sir Roger Only wrote two Books, (mentioned by [c] Bale) the one of his own innocency, the other Contra vulgi Superstitiones. It is not therefore probable he should be so silly a Necromancer, who had professedly confuted popular Superstitions.

[c] As in his 8th Cent. cap. 4.

4. The Accusation of this Dutches beganne not untill after the Grudges betwixt the Duke her Husband, and the Cardinall * of Winchester, about the year 1440.

* I see not how this is much materiall in her defence.

5. It is not probable if the Dutchess intended such Treason against the Kings life, (as to consume him by burning a wax candle) that she would impart a plot of such privacy to four persons, viz. Sir Roger, Margaret Jourdman, Mr. Thomas Southwell, and John Hume; seeing five, may keep counsell, if four be away.

6. So hainous a treason against the Kings person, if plainly proved, would have been more severely punished, with death no doubt of all privy thereunto. Whereas this Lady escaped with Exile, and John Hume had his life pardoned; which being so foule a fact, would not have been forgiven, if clearly testified against Him.

7. She is accused in our Chronicles, (Harding, Polycronicon, &c.) for working Sorcery and Inchantments AGAINST the Church and the King. Now how can Inchantments be made AGAINST the Church, which is a Collective Body, consisting of a Multitude of Christians? and reader in my my weak opinion this Conjecture carrieth some weight with it. Balaam himself can tell us, There is no Sorcery against Jacob, nor Southsaying against Israel. If any interpret Against the Church, that is, the Laws and Canons of the Church, the Sence is harsh and unusual. This rendreth it suspicious that her Inchantments against the Church, was only her disliking and distasting the errours and Superstitions thereof.

Num. 23. 23.

8. This Witch of Eye (saith Fabian) lived neer Winchester, a Presumption (as Mr. Fox conjecture th) that the Cardinall of Winchester had a hand in packing this accusation.

9. Polydore Virgil maketh no mention thereof, otherwise sufficiently quicksighted in matters of this nature.

10. Why may not this be false, as well as that King Richard the third, his accusing of Iane Shore for bewitching of his withered arm.

These conjectures are not Substantial enough severally to subsist of themselves, yet may they be able to stand in complication (in the whole Sheaf, though not as single Arrows) and conduce not a little towards the clearing of her innocence.

23. A moderate way.

For my own part, it is past my Skill to scour out stains, inlayed in the memory of one diseased more then two hundred years agoe. I see her credit stands condemned, by the generality of Writers; and as it is above the power of the present Age, to pardon it, so it is against all pitty, crueltie to execute the same, some after-evidences appearing with glimmering light in her vindication. Let her Memory therefore be reprieved till the day of Judgement, when it is possible, that this Lady, bearing here, the indignation of God for her sins, may in due time have her cause pleaded, and judgement executed for her, and her righteousnesse be brought into light. Sure I am she fared no whit the better, for her sirname of Cobham, odious to the Clergy of that Age on the account of Sir John Oldcastle Lord Cobham, though these two were nothing of kin. The best is she left no issue to be ashamed of her faults, if she were guilty, the best evidences of whose innocence are in the Manuscript Books of J. Leyland, which as yet I have not had the happinesse to behold.

e Micah 7. 9.

The meanest Bishop above the mightiest Abbot.

At this time William Heiworth sat Bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, being translated thither from being Abbot of St. Albans. Wonder not that he should leave the richest Abbey of England (where he took place of all of his Order) and exchange it for a middle-sized Bishoprick. For first, even those who most admire the holinesse and perfection of Monastical life, do grant the Episcopal Function above it in all Spirituall respects. Secondly, in Temporal Considerations the poorest Bishop was better (and might be more beneficial to his Kindred) than the richest Abbot, seeing he by will might bequeath his estate to his Heirs, which no Abbot, (incapable in his own person of any Propriety) could legally do, whose goods belonged to his Convent in common.

Litchfield's Cathedral.

This Bishop Heiworth deserved not ill of his Cathedral Church of Litchfield. Indeed the body of the Church was built by Roger de Clinton Bishop thereof, in the reign of King Henry the first, who increased the number of the Prebends, and surrounded Litchfield with a ditch, bestowing much cost on the invisible Castle, which now is vanished out of sight. Afterwards Walter de Langton his successour in the reign of King Edward the first was a most munificent Benefactor thereunto, laying the foundation of the Chappel of the Virgin Mary, and (though dying before it was finished) bequeathing a sufficient summe of money for the finishing thereof. He also fenced the Close of the Church about with a high wall, and deep ditch, adorning it with two beautifull gates, the fairer on the west, the lesser on the South side thereof. He expended no lesse then two thousand pound in beautifying the shrine of Saint Chad his predecessor.

65. But now in the time of the aforesaid William Heyworth, the Cathedral of Litchfield was in the verticall height thereof, being (though not augmented in the essentials) beautified in the Ornamentals thereof. Indeed the West front thereof is a stately Fabrick, adorned with exquisite imagerie, which I suspect our age is so far from being able to imitate the workmanship, that it understandeth not the Historie thereof. The neatest Pile in England.

66. Surely what Charles the fifth is said to have said of the Citie of Florence, that it is pittie it should be set in save only on Holy-dayes; as also that it was fit that so fair a Citie should have a Case and Cover for it to keep it from wind and weather, so, in some sort, this Fabrick may seem to deserve a shelter to secure it. Charles the fifth of Florence.

67. But alas it is now in a pittifull case indeed, almost beaten down to the ground in our civil dissensions. Now lest the Church should follow the Castle; I mean, quite vanish out of view, I have at the cost of my worthy friend here exemplified the Portraiture thereof: and am glad to hear it to be the design of ingenious persons to preserve ancient Churches in the like nature, (whereof many are done in this, and more expected in the next part of Monasticon) seeing when their substance is gone, their verie shadows will be acceptable to posteritie. An ingenious design.

68. The Commons in Parliament complained to the King, that whereas they had sold great wood of twenty years growth and upwards, to their own great profit, and in aid to the King in his wars and shipping, the Parsons and Vicars impleaded such Merchants as bought this Timber, for the Tithes thereof, whereby their estates were much damnified, the King and Kingdome disserved. A grievance complained on.

69. They also complained, that when such Merchants troubled in the Courts Christian addressed themselves for remedy to the Chancery, and moved therein for a Prohibition, which in such cases is to be granted unto them, by vertue of a Statute made in the forty fift year of King Edward the third, yet such a writ of Prohibition and attachment, was against all law and right denyed them. Wherefore they humbly desired the King to ordaine by authority of the present Parliament, that such, who shall find themselves grieved, may hereafter have such writs of Prohibition and upon that Attachments aswell in the Chancery as in the Kings and Common-Bench at their choice. * And that the said Writs of Prohibition and Attachment issuing out of the said Benches, have the said force and effects, as the Original writs of Prohibition and Attachment so issuing out of the Chancery of our Lord the King. With great earnestnesse.

 Ex Archivis in Tur. Londin. undecimo Hen. sexti.*

70. To this it was returned, the King will be advised, the civilest expression of a Denial. However we may observe that for a full hundred years (viz. from the middle of King Edward the third, to and after this time) no one Parliament passed wherein this Grievance was not complained on. So that an Acorn might become an Oake, and good Timber in the term, wherein this molestation for the Tithes of wood, (under the pretence of Silva Cedua) did continue. But it seems it was well Ordered at last, finding future Parliaments not complaining thereof. Yet not fully redressed.

71. At this time William Linwood finished his industrious and usefull work of his Constitutions. He was bred in Cambridge, first Schollar of Gonvile, then Fellow of Pembroke-Hall. His younger years he spent in the studie of the Laws, whereby he gained much wealth, and more reputation. Afterwards (quitting his practice) he betook himself to the Court, and became Keeper of the Privie-Seale unto King Henry the fifth, who employed him on a long and important Embassy into Spain and Portugal. William Linwood his Constitutions set forth.

72. Linwood being no less skilful in Civil than Canon Law, performed the place with such exemplarie industrie and judgement, that had not the Kings suddain death prevented it, he had been highly advanced in the Commonwealth. Afterwards he reassumed his Officials place of Canterburie, and then at spare houres collected and digested the Constitutions of the fourteen latter First imployed Embassador into Portugal.

TO Mr THOMAS RICH, [Late] of LONDON, Eſquire.

GReat is the praiſe S. Paul * gives to Gaius, ſtiling him his hoſt, and of the whole Church. Surely the Church then was very little, or Gaius his houſe very large. Now Hoſts commonly are Corpulent perſons, but Gaius not ſo, it being more then ſuſpicious that he was afflicted with a faint and feeble body, as may be collected from the words of † S. John, I wiſh that thou maiſt proſper and be in health, even as thy ſoul proſpereth. * Rom. 16. 23. † 3 John 2.

You are Sir the Entertainer-general of good men; many a poor Miniſter will never be wholly Sequeſtred, whileſt you are living, whoſe Charity is like to the winde which cannot be ſeen, but may be felt: And God hath dealt with you more bountifully then with Gaius, bleſſing you in all dimentions of Soul, Body, and Eſtate; and my prayers ſhall never be wanting for the continuance and increaſe thereof.

Hen. 6 12. 1434. I. THis year began the ſmart and active Councel of Baſil, to which our Ambaſſadours were to repreſent both their Soveraign, and the Engliſh Nation; where they were received with honour and reſpect, the reputation of King Henry his Holineſs adding much to their credit; Foraigners there being very inquiſitive of them, to be ſatisfied in the particulars of his devotion, which by them was repreſented much to their Maſters advantage. But it is worth our pains to peruſe the Commiſſion they carried with them. Engliſh Ambaſſadors ſent to Baſil.

THe King to all whom &c. Greeting. [a] Know that according to the Decrees of [the late] Council of Conſtance, the preſent Council of Baſil is actually celebrated under the Moſt Holy Father, Lord Eugenius the fourth Pope. We being often inſtigated to be preſent at the ſame Councel, not onely on the behalf of the ſame Councel, by their Orators, eſpecially diſpatched to us, for that purpoſe, but alſo by the Letters Apoſtolical and Imperial, and the Letters of very many other Fathers of the Holy Mother Church, and of Secular Printes. And we deſiring to be preſent thereat, to the praiſe of God, proſperity of the Holy Mother Church, and her deſired Honour, and chiefly for the exaltation of the Catholick Faith, being on juſt reaſon hindred with many and ſeveral occaſions, cannot (as we would) be perſonally preſent thereat. Wherefore by theſe preſents we conſtitute, make, and depute, the venerable Fathers, Robert Biſhop of London, Philip Biſhop of [b] Liſieux, John Biſhop of Rocheſter, John Biſhop of Baieux, & Bernard Biſhop of Aix, and our moſt dear Couſin Edmund Earl of Morton, our beloved Nicolas Abbot of Glaſto, William Abbot of S^t Maries in York, and William Prior of Norwich, and our beloved and truſty Henry Broumflete, Knight, M^r Thomas Broun Doctor of Laws Dean of Sarum, John Colluelle, Knight, M^r Peter Fitz-Maurice D. D. and M^r Nicholas David Arch-Deacon of Conſtance, & Licentiat in both Laws, our Ambaſſadours, Orators, true and undoubted Proctors, Actors, Factors, and ſpecial Meſſengers; Giving, and we give to them, and the greater part of them, Power and Command, as well general, as ſpecial, in our Name, and for Us, to be preſent in the ſame Councel, to treat, debate, and conclude as well of theſe things which may concern the ſupport of the Orthodox Faith, the Pacification of Kings and Princes, as alſo upon either a perpetual Peace, or elſe a Ceſſation from War, betwixt Us and Charles of France our Adverſary. Impowring them alſo to treat, commune, and appoint, moreover to conſent, and if need be, diſſent, in thoſe things which ſhall happen there to be eſtabliſhed and ordained according to the deliberations of the aforeſaid Councel. Promiſing, and we do promiſe, on good faith, that whatſoever ſhall be acted, done, or managed, in the premiſſes, and every one of them by our aforeſaid Ambaſſadors, Orators, and Proctors, or the greater part of them, we ſhall have and account for ratified, welcome, and firm for ever. And when we ſhall be certified of and upon the ſame, we ſhall care to command the due execution, ſo far as appertaineth to Us, and a Chriſtian Prince. In witneſs whereof, We have made theſe our Letters Patent.

* Habiturum in M. S.

Given under our Great Seal, being our witneſs, in our Palace at Weſtminſter, July 10.

So eminent an Inſtrument of ſo great importance muſt not paſs without ſome of our obſervations thereupon.

2. The Councel of Baſil is ſaid to be aſſembled according to the Decrees of the late Councel of Conſtance, wherein it was conſtituted, that within ſo many years a General Councel ſhould be called. For ſeeing the Church was ſubject to contract Ruſt in Doctrine and manners, frequency of Councels, was conceived the beſt way to ſcoure the ſame. But the Pope lately hath willingly forgotten this Canon, no General Councel being called ſince that of Trent, wherein all the Power and profit of the Pope was ſecured under the Notion of Articles of the Faith: ſince which time his Holineſs thought it not ſafe to tamper with a new Councel, as which might impair, but could not improve his condition.

Why the Pope declines general Councels in our age.

3. See we here fourteen Ambaſſadours ſent to Baſil, Biſhops 5. Earl 1. (not that he was to vote in the Councel, but onely behold the tranſactions thereof) Abbots 2. Prior 1. Knights 2. Doctor in Divinity 1. Doctors of Law 2. all Intereſts being in them repreſented; When therefore we read in Roger Hoveden and [a] others, ad generale Concilium Domini Papæ, quatuor Epiſcopi de Anglia tantùm Romam mittendi ſunt, onely four Engliſh Biſhops are to be ſent to Rome to a general Councel of the Pope; underſtand it, that ſuch a number is ſufficient. England needed to ſend but ſo many, though, if pleaſed, might ſend more, confined by no other command ſave the Kings free diſcretion. And ſeeing Baſil was little above the half way to Rome, the journey being ſhorter, the more meſſengers were imployed.

England muſt ſend four, might ſend more Biſhops to a general Councel.
[a] Simon Dunelmen.

4. The three French Biſhops ſent by the King, ſpeak the great Command, which King Henry as yet had in France, eſpecially (if as I take it) by Aquenſis, Aix be mentioned, ſcited in the furthermoſt parts of Provence, though even now the Engliſh power in France was a waining.

Engliſh power in France.

Langdon the learned Bishop of Rochester.

5. John, Bishop of Rochester, here mentioned, was John Langdon, intruded by the Pope into that Bishoprick, to the apparent prejudice of the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury. For the Bishop of Rochester was accounted Canterburies Chaplain, to whom he owed his Spirituals, and Temporals as his Patron, and founder; though now the Pope, contrary to the Arch-Bishops will and right forced this Langdon into the place. But indeed he was a learned man (dying this year in his Embassie at Basil) and deserved far better preferment then the poor Bishoprick of Rochester. But yet as some observe of Taylors, that they make the largest garments, when they have the least cloath allowed them; so the poor Bishoprick of Rochester, hath fared better then many richer Sees, seeing Sacriledg would never feed on so bare a pasture.

Precedents for precedency.

6. Observe the Method in the Nomination of these Commissioners, wherein no wonder if the Bishops precede so great an Earl; was it not fit that reverend Fathers should be placed before a dear Cousin? besides the employment being of Church concernment, Spiritual persons carried it clear in the race of dignity. More strange it is to finde herein a Knight [Henry Broomflete] put before a Doctor of both Laws, and yet John Colevil, another Knight placed after the same Doctor. I confess the contest very ancient about priority betwixt a Knight and a Doctor of Law, ever since the comparison which [a] Tully made betwixt Lucius Murena, a Knight of Rome, and Pub. Sulpitius a Lawyer, either of them standing for the Consulship. Though now in England the precedency of the Knight be indubitable, since preferment is taken from Civil Law, and the professors thereof shut up, as it were, in a narrow corner of their own faculty. But we leave the Critical Decision thereof, to his [b] pen who hath wrot a just Tract of the Glory (in truth of the Vanity) of this world, and exactly stated this particular, with all the circumstances thereof.

a In orat. pro. Murena.

b Chassanæus la gloria mundi. lib. 9.

A charitable and no impolitick offer.

7. Whereas the King impowreth those his Commissioners to meddle in the point of his right of the Realm of France, with King Charles his competitor, submitting his Title to be discussed in the Councel, it carrieth with it a confidence of his own right, and charitable desire to save the effusion of Christian Bloud; But this was not Councel, but Camp-work; and we meet not with the mention hereof once touched on in this great Assembly. However, so wary was King Henry (or rather his Councel) as not absolutely to tie up his title, to the decision of this Councel, but to give his Commissioners a negative voice, in case they see cause to dissent.

A contest betwixt the English and Castilians about precedency.

8. The general History of the Church reporteth the Acts of this Councel, how they deposed Pope Eugenius, and substituted Felix in his room; for which, and other decisions therein, Rome beholds this Councel but with bad eyes unto this day. We will onely meddle with a difference therein, which concerned our own Nation. The Orators of several Kings began to take their places, according to their birth-rights; dating their age from their Nations first receiving of Christianity. Here arose the controversie of course, about precedency, betwixt the English and Castile Ambassadours: the former alledging Britaines conversion by Joseph of Arimathea; which Alphonsus Garsias de Sancta Maria, Dean of Compostella and Segovia, Doctor of Law, and Ambassadour for Castile, with a Speech [c] more tedious then his name and titles, much endeavoured to disprove, and his arguments may be reduced to these four heads:

c Ex Schedis Cottonianis.

1. First, he denied Josephs arrival in Britaine, and imposed the proof thereof on the English who affirmed it, challenging them to produce any authentick Record for the same.
2. Secondly, he urged probability to the contrary, out of the Golden Legend, or Flores Sanctorum, where it is reported, how Titus, taking taking Jeruſalem, cauſed a thick wall to be digged thorow, and therein found an aged man, who confeſſed himſelf to be Joſeph of Arimathea, there impriſoned by the Jews for burying of Chriſt; and that ever ſince he had been fed with meat from heaven. Hence he inferred, that if Joſeph were in durance all this while in the wall, he could not, as the Engliſh pretended, come over into Britain to plant the Goſpel.

Anno Regis Hen. 6 12. Anno Dom. 1434

3. Thirdly, grant that Joſeph, after his enlargement by Titus, preached in Britain, which muſt needs be after the year of our Lord, ſeventy and two, Spain long before had received the Goſpel by the preaching of James the Apoſtle.

4. Fourthly, Be it granted, that Joſeph did preach in England, it was but in a corner thereof, the grand body of Britain remaining pagan many hundred years after.

Theſe arguments he uttered with ſuch an affected gravity, as if he could have made the matter the more by pronouncing the words the longer.

9. The Engliſh eaſily anſwered theſe exceptions, proving James to be ſlaughtered at Jeruſalem by [a] Herod, before his pretended preaching in Spain: ſeeing their own Country-man, and an [b] Arch-Biſhop of Toledo confeſſeth as much. They produced many ancient teſtimonies for the preaching of Joſeph in Britain, the fond fable of his being kept in a wall being beneath confutation, as atteſted onely by a worthleſs Author, Jacobus de Voragine. Their allegation, that Britain was but partially converted, by his preaching, was but impertinent to the preſent purpoſe; the point controverted not being of the univerſality, but the antiquity of firſt receiving the Chriſtian Faith. Beſides, neither James, nor any other Diſciple, ever converted a Kingdom totally, and entirely to Chriſtianity. However, nothing was concluded in this controverſie, alwayes agitated, never decided.

The Engliſh their anſwer.

Laſtly, betwixt England and Spain, in the Councel of Baſil, though therein nothing concluded; thoſe politick Prelates accounting it better to keep both Princes in hope by diſcuſſing, then to put one into anger by deciding it. Yea, they loved to ſet up this controverſie (as that of the precedence of Cambridg and Oxford in Engliſh Parliaments) out of deſign, ſometimes to delay time; ſometimes by ſtarting it, to ſtop, and divert more dangerous diſputes.

Know Reader, I was promiſed by my reſpected friend, Dr Jeremy Taylor, (late Fellow of this houſe) well known to the world by his worth, a Catalogue of the Eminent Scholars thereof; but it ſeems the Preſs, (like Time and Tide) ſtaying for no man, I have not been ſo happy ſeaſonably to receive it.

A tart jeer ſoberly returned.

11. Six years did this Arch-Biſhop ſurvive the firſt Founding of this Colledg. He was a worthy man in his generation, had not his vaſſalage to the Pope (the epidemical diſeaſe of thoſe dayes) ingaged him in cruelty againſt the poor profeſſors of the truth. Moſt of the Synods, called by him toward the latter end of his life, effected onely the advance of money, the Clergy being very deſirous to buy off the penalty of a Præmunire (ſo pernicious to their proceedings) but could not compleatly compaſs the ſame. I have nothing elſe to obſerve of Arch-Biſhip Chichely, ſave the common tradition, how King Henry the ſixth, acted herein by ſome miſoclere-Courtiers (otherwiſe in himſelf friend enough to Church-men) ſent this Arch-Biſhop, for a New-years-gift, a ſhred-pie indeed, as containing pieces of cloath and ſtuff, of ſeveral ſorts and colours, in jeer, becauſe his father was a Taylor at Higham-Ferrars in Northampton-ſhire. 12. This good precedent of the Arch-Bishops bounty, may be presumed a spur to the speed of the Kings liberality; who soon after Founded Eaton Colledg, incorporate by the name of Præpositi & Collegii Regalis Col. Beatæ Mariæ de Eaton juxta Winsor. It seemeth these words Beatæ Mariæ, are so necessary, that being left out in a Lease (wherein all the other Titles of the Foundation were inserted at large) the said [a] Lease was adjudged void for that omission. But know, this verdict passed in Queen Maries dayes, when Regina Maria made the mention of Beatæ Mariæ, so essential thereunto.

Indeed it was high time some School should be founded, considering how low Grammer-Learning ran then in the Land, as may appear by the following Verses made for King Henry the Founder; as good no doubt as the generality of that Age did afford, though (scarce deserving Translation) so that the worst scholar in Eaton Colledg that can make a Verse, can make a better.

Edmund Beaufort, Duke of Somerset, / Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York.	William Delapole, Duke of Suffolk. / John Holland, Duke of Exeter.
Humphrey Plantagenet, Duke of Gloceſter, / Henry Beaufort Cardinal, Biſhop of Wincheſter.	Humphrey Stafford, Duke of Buckingham. / Richard Nevill, Earl of Warwick.

Humphrey Plantagenet, Duke of Gloceſter, / William Delapole, Duke of Suffolk, / Richard Nevil, Earl of Warwick.

Betwixt the three laſt there was as it were a battel Royal in this Cockpit, each of them hating and oppoſing another. In all theſe conteſts their ambition was above their covetouſneſs; it being every ones endeavour not ſo much to raiſe and advance himſelf, as ruine and depreſs his adverſary.

17. Two of the aforeſaid principal perſons left the world this year, and in the ſame moneth. First, Humphrey Duke of Gloceſter, Brother to King Henry the fifth; Uncle and Gardian to King Henry the ſixth: A great Houſe-keeper. Hoſpitality being ſo common in that Age, none were commended for the keeping, but condemned for the neglecting thereof: He was much oppoſed by Queen Margaret (who would have none rule the King her husband, ſave her ſelf) and accuſed of a trecherous deſign; inſomuch that at a packt Parliament at Bury, he was condemned of high Treaſon, and found dead in his bed; not without rank ſuſpicion of cruel practiſes upon his perſon. The death of Humphry Duke of Gloceſter.

18. His death is ſuſpended betwixt Legal execution and murder; and his memory pendulous betwixt Malefactor and Martyr. However the latter hath moſt prevailed in mens belief, and the Good Duke of Gloceſter is commonly his character: But it is proper for ſome Oxford man to write his juſt Vindication. A Manuel in aſſerting his memory being but proportionable for him, who gave to their Library ſo many and pretious voluminous Manuſcripts. As for thoſe, who chewing their meat with their feet, whileſt they walk in the body of S^t Pauls, are commonly ſaid to Dine with Duke Humphrey; the ſaying is as far from truth as they from dinner, even twenty miles off: ſeeing this Duke was buried in S^t Albans, to which Church he was a great Benefactor. A fit work for a good pen.

19. The ſame Moneth with the Duke of Gloceſter, died Henry Beaufort, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Cardinal; One of high diſcent, high ſpirit, and high preferments; hardly to be equalled by Cardinal Wolſey (otherwiſe but a pigmy to him in birth) for wealth and magnificence. He lent King Henry the 5^th at once twenty thouſand pounds, who pawned his Crown unto him. He built the fair Hoſpital of S^t Croſs, near Wincheſter; and although Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, was no grand Benefactor thereunto, in proportion to his own wealth (commonly called the Rich Cardinal) or the practiſes of his predeceſſours, Wickham, and Wainefleet. The death of the rich Cardinal.

20. The Biſhops * aſſembled in Parliament, laboured the recalling of the Act of Præmunire, and no wonder if gall'd horſes would willingly caſt off their ſaddles, but belike they found that ſtatute girt too cloſe unto them. The Lords and Commons ſtickling ſtoutly for the continuance thereof. And becauſe this is the laſt time we ſhall have occaſion to mention this Statute, and therefore muſt take our farewell thereof; it will not be amiſs to inſert the enſuing paſſage, as relating to the preſent ſubject, though it happened many years after. * The Clergie move in vain againſt the Statute of Præmunire.

An eminent instance in Ireland, of a priest indicted on the Statute of Præmunire.

21. One [a] Robert Lalor, Priest, a Native of Ireland, to whom the Pope had given the titulary Bishoprick of Kilmore, and made him Vicar-general of the See Apostolick, within the Arch-Bishoprick of Dublin, &c. boldly and securely executed his pretended jurisdiction for many years, was indicted at Dublin, in Hillary Terme, Quarto Jacobi, upon this Statute of Præmunire, made two hundred years before, being the sixteenth of Richard the second. His Majesties learned Councel did wisely forbear to proceed against him upon any latter Law (whereof plenty in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth) because Recusants (swarming in that Kingdome) might have their judgments convinced. That long before King Henry the eighth banished the Usurpation of the Pope, The King, Lords and Commons in England (though for the most part of the Romish Religion) made strict Laws for the maintenance of the Crown against any foraign Invasion. Whereupon after the party indicted had pleaded at large for himself, The Jury departed from the Bar, and returning within half an hour, found the prisoner guilty of the contempts whereof he was indicted; whereupon the Sollicitor General moved the Court to proceed to judgment, and [b] Sr Dominick Sarsfield (one of the Justices of his Majesties chief Pleas) gave judgment according to the form of the Statute, whereupon the Endictment was framed. Hence it plainly appears, that such Misdemeanours of Papists are punishable at this day, by vertue of those Ancient Statutes, without any relation to such as were enacted since the Reformation. Cade & Straw like and unlike.

22 About this time Jack Cade raised his Rebellion, like and unlike to the former commotion of Jack Straw. Like, first because Jacks both, I mean, insolent, impudent, domineering Clowns. Secondly, Both of them were Kentish by their extractions. Thirdly, both of them pressed upon London, and there principally plaied their pranks. Fourthly, both of them after they had troubled the Land for a short time, were justly slain, and their numerous rabble routed and dispersed. In other remarkables, Cade differed from Jack Straw. First, Straw defied all Nobility and Learning, vowing and endeavouring their ruine and extirpation, whilest Cade pretended himself to be the Lord Mortimer, and next heir to the Crown, and no design against Learning is charged on his account. Lastly, Straws Rebellion is (though most falsly) fathered by Popish writers on Wicliff and his adherents, to have occasioned (at leastwise connived at) his commotion; but I never met yet with any Romanists accusing the Lollards (as they term them) for having any hand in Cades Rebellion. 1450 28.

The wars begin betwixt York and Lancaster.

23. Now began the broyls to break out betwixt the two houses of Lancaster and York, so mutually heightened, that scarce a County betwixt York (the place whence generally their Armies started) and London, (the Goal they both aimed to win) but a set Battle hath been fought therein, and if any one Shire lieth fallow in this kinde, the next afforded a double crop in that nature, (besides other Counties in the Marches of Wales) as by the ensuing Catalogue will appear. 1455. 34.

Besides many other Skirmishes, (corrivals with Battles) so that such who consider the bloud lost therein, would admire England had any left. And such as observe how much it had left, would wonder it had any lost, such still the populousness thereof.

But these things the Reader may best inform himself of, out of the State-Historians, and particularly out of that Noble Italian Author (elegantly and expressively translated by the Earl of Monmouth) who hath written a large Volume, to the great credit of our English Nation, of the wars betwixt York and Lancaster. So that I could heartily wish that some English man, in requital of his courtesie, would write the Italian discords betwixt the Guelphes and Guibelines, 1459 37.

Magdalen College in Oxford Founded by Bishop Wainfleet.

24. It was much, that in the middest of so many miseries of Civil Wars, William, sir-named Patin, from his Parents; but Wainefleet from the place of his nativity, now Bishop of Wincheſter, should Found the fair Colledg, Dedicated to Mary Magdalen, in Oxford, for One President, Fourty Fellows, Thirty Demies, Four Chaplains, Eight Clerks, and Sixteen Choristers, which number can never be increased. But though this Foundation cannot be made broader or longer (admit of more members) yet may it be made deeper, and is capable of Benefactours charity to augment the maintenance of the aforesaid number. This William Wainefleet first Founded Magdalen-Hall hard by (as Scriveners use to try their pens on a small piece of paper, before they begin what they fairly intend to write) and afterwards undertook and finished this far more stately piece of Architecture. For whoso observeth the magnificence of the structure, the numerousness of the Corporation, the largeness of their endowments, and the mutual concinnity of all parts amongst themselves therein, may possibly finde out a College which may exceed it in some, but hardly any that will equal it in all accommodations. Where nothing is wanting for health and pleasure, except some will say, that Mary Maudlin weepeth too much,, and the walks sometimes too wet and moist from the depressed situation thereof.

The many Worthies bred therein.

25. Nor hath this House been less fruitfull then any with famous persons, and it is observable that there is scarce a Bishoprick in England, to which this College hath not afforded one Prelate at the least (doubling her files in some places) as by the ensuing Catalogue will appear.

Edward the fourth gaineth the Crown by Conquest.

26. King Henry being Conquered in a fatal Battle at Touton in Nottingham-shire, fled with his Queen into Scotland; and to make himself the more welcome, resigned Berwick to the King thereof. Edward, Duke of Yorke, his Adversary, Reigned in his stead by the name of Edward the fourth, who, next to God and his own right, had just cause to thank Richard Nevil, Earl of Warwick for his Crown. This was that Nevil, who for Extraction, Estate, Alliance, Dependents, Wisdom, Valour, Success, and Popularity, was superiour to any English Subject since the Conquest. Peoples love he chiefly purchased by his Hospitality, keeping so open an House, that he was most welcome who brought the best stomach with him; the Earl charitably believing, that all who were men of teeth, were men of Armes. Any that looked like a man, might have in his house a full half yard of roast meat; namely, so much as he could strike through and carry away with his [a] Dagger; The Bear was his Crest, and it may be truly said, that when the Bear roared, the Lions of the Forest trembled, the Kings of England themselves being at his disposal. 1461 1.

[a] Stows Annals, pag. 421.

Why little Church-Hist. in this Kings Reign.

27. This Kings Reign affordeth very little Church-Storie, and therefore Mr Fox (whose industrie would have found out Church-matter, if above ground) is fein to fill it up with foreign passages, or domestick relations of our civil differences. Indeed now the sound of all bells in the steeples was drowned with the noise of Drums and Trumpets: And yet this good was done by the Civil wars, it diverted the Prelates from troubling the Lollards; so that this very storme was a shelter to those poor souls, and the heat of these intestine enmities, cooled the persecution against them.

Synod priviledges broken and repaired.

[b] Antiq. Brit. pag. 293.

28. Thomas Bourchier, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, kept a Synod of his Clergie at London, when Geoffery Longbrocke, a member thereof (as Proctor for Peter Courtney, Arch-Deacon of Exeter) was at the suite of Simon Nottingham, arrested by the Bailiffs of the Lord Major, complaint being made hereof to the Convocation, they sent the Prior of Canterbury to the Major and Sheriffs, to restore the aforesaid Geoffery to his liberty, threatning them else with Excommunication; to prevent which the party was released. The Parliament sitting at the same time, bestowed many priviledges on the Clergie. As for the other Synods in this Kings Reign, being six, as I account them, little more then granting of Subsidies was propounded and concluded therein. 1462 2.

King Henry returned routed and imprisoned.

29. King Henry returned out of Scotland, furnished with sufficient forces from James the third, to recover his Crown, had success befriended him. But King Edward marched against him in person (one means of his being so fortunate in his fights, seeing in peace the master his eye maketh the fat horse, as the Princes in war the valiant horse-rider) totally defeated, took, and imprisoned him in the Tower. Here whilest Church-men observe how tender-eyed the charity, States-men admire how blinde the policy of that Age, in keeping King Henry alive. No such sure Prison for a Captive King, as a Grave, whose life (though in restraint) is a fair mark for the full aim of male-contents to practice his enlargement. As here it fell out in King Henry, who either slighted for his simplicity, that he could do no mischief, or reverenced for his sanctity, that he should suffer no ill, was preserved alive, and reserved thereby to be a future trouble to King Edward, who, though valiant to repel, was not wise to foresee dangers, and now conceiving himself secure, was viciously disposed, and given over to too much licenciousness. 1463 3.

The Earl of Warwick takes just distaste at King Edward.

30. Richard Nevil, Earl of Warwick, is sent over into France to obtain the Lady Bona (Daughter to the Duke of Savoy) Wife to King Edward. So powerful a spokesman could not but speed, and all things are concluded, save 1465 5.

the meeting of the Parties and a Prieſt to marry them. Mean time King Edward marrieth the Lady Elizabeth Grey, , the firſt Engliſh King who ſince the Conqueſt wedded his Subject; I might alſo add, and the firſt that match'd with a Widow, ſeeing Elinor, Wife to King Henry the ſecond, divorced from Lewis the yonger, King of France, was properly neither maid, nor widow. Warwick ſtormeth hereat, that he had taken ſo much pains about nothing, highly ſenſible of the affront, ſeeing a potent Arme is not to be employed about a ſleeveleſs errand. He reſolves revenge, and becauſe he could not make her Queen whom he deſired, he would make him King whom he pleaſed.

8. 1468

31. Take hereof this curſory account: After many bloudy battles, King Edward was taken Priſoner at Wolney in Warwick-ſhire, and committed by the Earl of Warwick, to the cuſtody of his Brother George Nevil, Arch-Biſhop of York. Henry is brought out of the Tower, ſhall I call him the ſixth or the ſeventh, becauſe dead, (though not in Law, in dignity, and once Depoſed) he is now reſtored again to wear the Royal Robes, not ſo much as his own garments, but as the Livery the Earl of Warwick his liberality. However he acted a very ſhort part of Soveraignty, wherein he revenged not any perſonal wrongs offered unto him in his reſtraint. For one who thruſt him into the ſide with a ſword, when he was Priſoner in the Tower, was afterwards pardoned by him, when reſtored to his former dignity.

King Edward taken priſoner, and King Henry enlarged.

32. Mean time the Arch-Biſhop allowed King Edward liberty to ride abroad and follow his pleaſure; now a careleſs Keeper giveth his Priſoner a warning, and ſheweth him a way to make his eſcape. King Edward followeth his hawking ſo long, that he taketh his own flight at laſt. Over he gets beyond the Seas to his Brother in law Charles, Duke of Burgundie, by whom he was ſupplied, to the proportion of a competent ſubſiſtence; but not enabled for the recovering of a Crown. However he returned into England, landed in the North, marched to York, deſired to be received therein, as into the place whence he received his Title, but in no other notion then a Subject to King Henry, taking the Sacrament on the truth thereof; but having gotten the City as Duke, he kept it as King, contrary to his oath, for which his Children, are conceived to fare no whit the better.

Edward eſcaped, flieth beyond ſea, and returneth.

33. Let the State-Hiſtorians inform you with what various changes K. Edward made hence into the South, and at laſt near Barnet, bid battle to, and defeated the Earl of Warwick, ſlain with his Brother the Marqueſs Montague on the place. Learn alſo from them how King Henry was cruelly put to death, and his Son and Queen Margaret ſoon after overthrown at Tewxbury. For when a Royal Family is once falling, all things conduce to expedite their deſtruction. Henceforward King Edward (ſaving the differences of his own, with his wives Kindred) paſſed the remnant of his dayes in much peace, plenty, and pleaſure.

10. 1470

Recovereth the Crown by Conqueſt.

34. In moſt of the Battles we may obſerve, it was the word general of the weaker ſide, for London, for London, as the moſt martial thrift to Conquer a Kingdom in a City. For ſuch whoſe neceſſities can allow their Armies but little time to ſtay, do burn day light in pelting againſt petty Towns in the out skirts of a Land, eſpecially if all other humane hopes be in one deſperate puſh. Hence was it that ſo many Battles were fought about Barnet and St Albans (the Cock-pit of War) the lines of all Armies drawn from the circumference of the Land, being the cloſer together, the nearer they approched London, the Center in Trade and Wealth, though not in exact poſition thereof.

the former not content to cry up the dignity of their own Order, but caſt contempt on the reſt of the Clergie. But theſe bold Beggers met with as bold ſayers nay, I mean, theſe Mendicants found their matches in the Secular Prieſts, effectually humbling their pride herein. For it was beheld as a moſt peſtiferous doctrine, the Friers ſo heightning the perfection of begging, that according to their principles all the Prieſthood and Prelacy in the Land, yea, by conſequence the Pope himſelf did fall ſhort of the ſanctity of their Order. Yet hard was it for them to perſwade his Holineſs to quit Peters Patrimony, and betake himſelf to poverty, although a Fryer (Thomas Holden by name) did not bluſh to preach at Pauls Croſs, that [a] Chriſt himſelf (as firſt Founder of their Society) was a Beggar, a manifeſt untruth, and eaſily confuted out of Scripture.

36. For vaſt the difference betwixt begging, and taking what the bounty of others doth freely confer, as our Saviour did from ſuch who [b] miniſtred unto him of their ſubſtance. We never read him begging any thing, ſave when from the [c] woman of Samaria, he asked water, a creature ſo common and needful, that it was againſt the law of nature to deny it him. Nor is it probable he was a Mendicant, who was rated in the Publicans Tole-Book, and paid Tribute unto [d] Cæſar: Not to ſay that he was ſo far from begging, that it was his cuſtom (eſpecially about the time of the Paſſeover) to relieve others, and Judas his Purſe-bearer was his Almoner to diſtribute to the poor.

A prodigious feaſt at an Arch-Biſhops inſtallation.

Never had England at once two Arch-Biſhops of ſo high extraction as at this time, namely, Thomas Bourchier, Son of Henry Earl of Eſſex; and George Nevil, Brother to the Great Earl of Warwick. The latter is famous for a prodigious Feaſt, wherein, whoſo noteth the number and quality of the Gueſts, (all the Nobility, moſt of the prime Clergie, many of the Great Gentry) will wonder where he got meat for ſo many mouthes, whileſt ſuch, who number the diſhes thereof, will more admire where he got mouthes for ſo much meat. But ſee the Bill of fare.

King Edward preacheth his own Funeral Sermon.

42. King Edward foreseeing his approaching death (who, by intemperance in his diet, in some sort, digg'd his grave with his own teeth) caused his own, and Wives kindred (sadly privy to the grudges betwixt them) to waite on him when he lay very sick on his bed. To these he made a passionate speech, to exhort them to unite, from the profit of peace, and danger of discord: and very emphatically urged it, insomuch, that seemingly they were his converts, and in token thereof shook hands together, whilest their hearts, God knows, were far asunder. This speech I may call King Edward his own Funeral Sermon, preached by himself (and it may pass also for the Funeral Sermon of his two Sons, finding no other obsequies at their burial) though very little was really thereby effected. Thus died King Edward, who, contrary to the ordinary observation, that men the elder the more covetous (as indeed dying-mens hands grasp what is next, and hold it hard) was gripple in the beginning of his Reign, and more bountiful towards the end thereof. 1482 22.

SECT. III.

TO JOHN FERRARS OF TAMWORTH Caſtle, Eſquire.

SIR!

MOdeſt Beggars in London-ſtreets, commonly chuſe twylight to prefer their Petitions; that ſo they may have light enough to diſcover Him to whom they ſue, and darkneſſe enough to cover and conceal themſelves.

This may make you the more to admire my boldneſſe, who in a meer mid-night (utterly unknowing you, and unknown to you) requeſt you to accept this Dedication. But know Sir, though I know not your face, I know you are a FERRARS, enclined by your Extraction to a Generous Diſpoſition, as I have found by one of your neareſt Relations.

Ed. 5. 1483. 1. MIſerable King Edward the fifth ought to have ſucceeded his Father; but alas! He is ever pictured with a chaſma, or diſtance, betwixt his head, and the Crown; and, by the practice of his Uncle, the Duke of Gloceſter, choſen Protector (to protect him from any of his friends to come near him) was quickly made away, being a King in right, though not in poſſeſſion; as his Uncle Richard was in poſſeſſion, though not in right. All the paſſages whereof are ſo elegantly related by Sir Thomas More, that a man ſhall get little who comes with a forke, where Sr Thomas hath gone with a rake before him, and by his judicious induſtry collected all remarkables. Onely (as proper to our employment) let us take notice of the carriage of the Clergie in theſe diſtractions.

After More, no more.

Anno Dom. 1483 | Anno Regis Ed. 5. 22.

Clergy complying, not active.

2. Although moſt of the Prelates were guilty of cowardly compliance with King Richard, yet we finde none eminently active on his ſide. Indeed the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury was employed to get Richard Duke of York, from his Queen-Mother in the Sanctuary in Weſtminſter, and very pathetical he was in the perſwading her to part with him: haply on a point of conſcience, as fearing, if denied, ſome injury would be offered to the prejudice of the Church, and therefore more willing himſelf to wooe him from her with eloquence, then that others ſhould wreſt him thence with violence. Yet he is generally conceived innocent herein, as not as yet ſuſpecting any fraud in the Duke of Gloceſter: except any will ſay, that it was a fault in him, that ſo great a States-man was no wiſer, then to have been deceived by his diſſimulation.

Shaw: ſhameleſs Sermon.

3 But of the inferiour Clergie, Dr Shaw, a popular preacher, made himſelf infamous to all poſterity. His Sermon at St Pauls Croſs had nothing but the text (and that in the [a] Apocrypha) good therein; as conſiſting of two parts, defaming of the dead, and flattering of the living; making King Edward far worſe then he was, and Duke Richard far better then ever he would be. He made King Edward the fourth, and the Duke of Clarence, both to be baſtards, and Duke Richard onely right begotten, ſo proclaiming Cicilie his Mother (ſtill ſurviving) for a whore; all being done by ſecret inſtructions from Duke Richard himſelf, who hereby gave a worſe wound to his Mothers credit, then that which at his birth he cauſed to her body, being (as it is commonly reported) cut out from her. With Shaw we may couple another brawling cur of the ſame litter, Pynkney the Provincial of the Auguſtinian Friers, who in the ſame place uſed ſo loud adulation, he loſt his credit, conſcience, and voice, altogether. Theſe two were all (and they too many) of the Clergie whom I finde actively ingaging on his party, whileſt multitudes of the Laity ſided with him. So that thorough the popularity of the Duke of Buckingham, the Law-learning of Catesby, the City-intereſt of Shaw, (then Lord Major of London, and brother to the preacher) the rugged rigor of Ratcliffe, and the aſſiſtance of other inſtruments in their ſeveral ſpheres, the Queens kindred were killed, the Lord Haſtings murdered, King Edward and his Brother impriſoned, and at laſt Richard Duke of Gloceſter elected King of England. Ric.3 1.

The ſumptuous Coronation of King Richard.

4. His Coronation was performed with more pomp then any of his Predeceſſours; as if he intended with the glory thereof, ſo to dazle vulgar eyes, that they ſhould not be able to ſee the ſhame of his uſurpation. Indeed ſome of our Engliſh Kings, who by undouoted right ſucceeded to the Crown, accounted their Coronation but a matter of courſe (which did not make but manifeſt them to be Kings) and ſo leſs curious in the pompous celebration thereof. But this Uſurper appprehended this ceremony more ſubſtantial, and therefore was moſt punctual in the obſervation of it, cauſing all the Nobility, who held Lands in grand Soveraignty, to do their ſervice in ſtate: amongſt whom Richard Dimock, Eſquire, hereditary Champion by tenure, with a ſafe piece of valour (having ſo many to back him) caſt down his Gauntlet, challenging any that durſt oppoſe the title of King Richard, and (for ought I do know to the contrary) he afterwards made his challenge good in Boſworth field. And, becauſe ſure binde, ſure finde; he is ſaid, and his Queen, to be Crowned again in York with great ſolemnity.

King Edward and his brother ſtifled.

5. Soon after followed the murder of King Edward, and his Brother Richard Duke of York. It was high time they ſhould ſet, when another already was riſen in the throne. By a bloudy bloudleſs death they were ſtifled with pillows, and then obſcurely buried. The uncertainty of their interment gave the advantage to Perkin Warbeck, afterwards to counterfeit Richard Duke of York: ſo like unto him in age, carriage, ſtature, feature, favour, that he wanted nothing but ſucceſs; to make him who did but perſonate Duke Richard, to paſs current for the perſon of Duke Richard.

6. After

Anno Regis Ric. 3. 2 | Anno Dom. 1484

6. After this bloudy act, King Richard endeavoured to render himself popular. First by making good Laws in that sole Parliament kept in his Reign. Benevolence, malevolence, which formerly the subjects unwillingly willing had paid to their Soveraign (power, where it requests, commands; it not being so much thank-worthy to grant, as dangerous to deny it) he retrenched, and reduced to be granted onely in Parliament. He regulated Trading, which the Lombards, and other foraigners had much ingrossed, to the detriment of the English Nation. Now, although all people carry much of their love and loyaltie in their purses, yet all this would not ingratiate this Usurper with them, the dullest nostrils resenting it done, not for love of vertue, but his own security. And, that affects none, which all palpably discover to be affected.

King Richard vainly endeavoureth to ingratiate himself by makeing good Laws.

7. Next he endeavoured to work himself into their good will, by erecting and endowing of Religious Houses; so to plausiblelize himself, especialy among the Clergy. Thus he built one far North, at Middleham, and and a College in the Parish of [a] Alhallows-Barking, hard by the Tower, as if he intended by the vicinity thereof, to expiate those many murders, which he therein had committed. Besides, he for his time dis-Forested Whichwood in [b] Oxford-shire (then far more extended then in our Age) which his brother Edward had made Forest to the great grievance of the Country thereabouts. Yet all would not do, the people being [illegible] patient for an injury done by King Edward, then thankful for the favour this Richard bestowed upon them. He is said also to have given to Queens Colledge in Cambridg [c] five hundred marks of yearly rent; though at this time, I believe, the College receives as little benefit by the Grant, as Richard had right to grant it. For, it was not issued out of his own purse, but given out of the lands of his enemy, the unjustly proscribed Earl of Oxford; who being restored by Henry the seventh, made a resumption thereof.

As also by building of Monasteries.

c Stow in his Annals, p. 470.

8. Duke Richard was low in stature, crook-backed, with one shoulder higher then the other, having a prominent gobber-tooth, a war-like countenance which well enough became a souldier. Yet a modern [d] Author, in a Book by him lately set forth, eveneth his shoulders, smootheth his back, planeth his teeth, maketh him in all points a comly, and beautiful person. Nor stoppeth he here, but proceeding from his naturals to his morals, maketh him as vertuous, as handsome (which in some sense may be allowed to be true) concealing most, denying some, defending others of his foulest facts, wherewith in all ages since he standeth charged on record. For mine own part, I confess it no heresie to maintain a paradox in History, nor am I such an enemy to wit, as not to allow it leave harmlesly to disport it self for its own content, and the delight of others. Thus Cardan hath written his Encomium Neronis, and others (best husbandmen who can improve the barrenest ground) have by art endeavoured to praise as improbable subjects. But, when men shall do it cordially, in sober sadness, to pervert peoples judgments, and therein go against all received Records, I say, singularity is the least fault can be laid to such mens charge. Besides, there are some Birds (Sea-pies by name) who cannot rise except it be by flying against the winde, as some hope to atchieve their advancement, by being contrary, and paradoxal in judgment to all before them.

Art hath done more for King Richard, then ever nature did.

e George Buck Esqus a claw-back to Crook-back.

9. Soon after followed the execution of the Duke of Buckingham, King Richard his grand enginere, or, Master of the fabrick of his preferment. The occasion thus; The Duke requested-required of King Richard (as confident that his merits were incapable of a denial) the Earldome of Hereford, and the hereditary Constable-ship of England, laying title to them by discent. Well did he ask both together, which would be granted both together. For the Earldome of Hereford was an Abishag, concubine to the former Kings of England, which had long lien in the Crown (whilest in the Lancastrian line) so imbraced and interlaced therewith, that it was difficult to dissever them. And

The request of the Duke of Buckingham denied.

And the affecting thereof proved as fatall to Buckingham, as the desiring of the other was to Adonijah, being interpreted in both an ambition of the Kingdome. The Hereditary Constableship was conceived too unlimited a power to be trusted to a Subject, lest he should make more disorder, then he should mend therewith; so that in fine, both in effect were denied unto him. Anno Dom. 1484. Anno Regis Ric. 3. 2.

Buckingham surprised and beheaded.

10. Buckingham stormes thereat, Shall a Coronet be denied him, by him, on whom he had conferred a Crown? Yet, what anger soever boiled in his heart, none ran over in his mouth, pretending very fair in his behaviour. But, hard it is to halt before a cripple, and dissemble before King Richard. The Duke withdraws to Brecknock in Wales, with his prisoner Bishop Morton of Elie (committed unto him by the King on some distaste) who tampered with him about the marriage of Henry Earl of Richmond, with the eldest Daughter of King Edward the fourth. The Duke carried himself so open therein, that (surprised by King Richard) his head was divorced from his body, before this marriage was compleated.

Morton make-peace.

11. More cunning was Bishop Morton to get himself over into France, there to contrive the Union of the two Houses of York and Lancaster. If, Blessed be the peace-makers, be pronounced of such as reconcile party and party: how much more must it be true of his memory, the happy instrument to unite those Houses, to the saving of the effusion of so much bloud. Some will say, it was a design obvious to every capacity, to make such an union. But, we all know, when a thing is done, then it is easie for any to do it. Besides, it is one thing for men in their brains barely, and notionally to apprehend a project; and another (as our Morton did) to elect proportionable means, and, by the vigorous prosecution thereof, really to effect it.

Mr Pryn charged for charging Bishop Morton of Treason.

12. A modern Writer in his voluminous book, which he hath Entituled, The Rebellions, Treasons, Conspiracies, Antimonarchical practises &c. of the English Prelates, to swell his number, chargeth this Bishop Morton with Treason against King Richard the third. But, is it treason for one, in favour of the true heir, to oppose an Usurper in Title, and Tyrant in practice? Surely unbiased judgments behold Morton herein under a better notion. Had this Bishop been active on King Richards side, how would the same Author have proclaimed him for a Traitor against King Henry the seventh? Thus I see an inevitable necessity, that Morton must be a Traitor whatsoever he did; and can observe, that no practice will please which cometh from one, whose person, or profession is distasted.

Earl Henry landeth at Milford Haven.

13. But King Richard his cruelties had so tired out Divine patience, that his punishment could be no longer deferred. Henry Earl of Richmond lands with an handful of men at Milford Haven. A landing place politickly chosen, near Pembroke, the place of his Nativity, in the heart of his Countrymen, and Kinsmen, the Welsh (his grand-father Owen ap Theodore, alias, Tuthar, having thence his extraction) and far from London, the Magazine of King Richards might. From Milford the Earl marched North-East, through the bowels of Wales; and, both his Army, and the fame thereof, crevit eundo, grew by going. Many old Propheſies (the people about Leicester will load a stranger with them) were fulfilled in him, and this amongst the rest may be remembred. It was foretold, that in a great battle, which was to be fought near Leicester, whosoever should shoot the arrow first, should have the victory. This most understood, that the archer in the fight which should first let loose, should gain the day to his side. When behold the Earl of Richmond, bending his march out of Wales, to the middle of England, first passed Arrow, a rivolet in the confines of Worcester and Warwick-shire, and accordingly proved victorious. For into Leicester-shire he came, and in the navel thereof is met by King Richard, and next morning both sides determine to trie their fortunes in fight. This night the Earl had sweet and quiet rest, whilest King Richard his guilty conscience was frighted with hideous dreams, 1585 3.

Anno Regis Ric. 3. 3. Anno Dom. 1485

dreams, and fanciful apparitions, as no wonder if no pillow could give him quiet sleep, who with a pillow had so lately smothered his Lord and Master.

14. The Battle is called the Battle of Bosworth (though fought full three miles from the [a] Town, and nearer other Country Villages) because Bosworth is the next Town of note thereunto. The Earls Army fell far short of the Kings in number, and Armes; equalled it in courage, exceeded it in cause, and success. Indeed the Kings Army was hollow at the heart, many marching in his main battle, who were much suspected (and therefore purposely placed there to secure them from flying out) and fought as unwilling to overcome. Yet the scales of victory seemed for a long time so equal, that an exact eye could not discern on which side the beam did break. At last the coming in of the Lord Stanley with three thousand fresh men, decided the controversie on the Earls side. King Richard fighting (valiantly, so his friends; desperately, say his foes) fell in the midst of his enemies, and his corps were disgracefully carried to Leicester, without a rag to cover his nakedness; as if no modest usage was due to him when dead, who had been so shameless in his cruelty when alive. The Crown ornamental being found on his head, was removed to the Earls, and he Crowned in the field, and Te Deum was solemnly sung by the whole Army.

The Battle of Bosworth.

Hen. 7 1.

15. Soon after King Henry married the Lady Elizabeth, eldest Daughter unto King Edward the fourth, whereby those Roses (which formerly with their prickles had rent each other) were united together. Yea, sixfold was King Henry his title to the Crown. First, Conquest. Secondly, Military election, the Souldiers crying out in the field, King Henry, King Henry. Thirdly, Parliamentary Authority, which setled the Crown on Him, and His Heirs. Fourthly, Papal confirmation, his Holiness, forsooth, concurring with his religious complement. Fifthly, Discent from the House of Lancaster. But, that (all know) was but the back-door to the Crown, and this Henry came in but by a window to that back-door (there being some bastardy in his pedigree) but that was salved by post-legitimation. Sixthly, Marriage of King Edwards Daughter, the first and last being worth all the rest. Thus had he six strings to his bow, but commonly he let five hang by, and onely made use of that one, which, for the present, he perceived was most for his own advantage. Yet, for all these his Titles, this politick Prince thought fit to have his Person well secured, and was the first King of England who had a standing Guard to attend him.

Henry the seventh his sixfold title to the Crown.

2. 1586

16. Thomas Bourchier Cardinal, and Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, had the honour first to marry, then to Crown King Henry and the Lady Elizabeth. And then having sitten in a short Synod at London (wherein the Clergie presented their new King with a tenth) quietly ended his life, having sate in his See two and thirty years. He gave an hundred and twenty pounds to the University of Cambridg, which was joyned with another hundred pounds which Mr Billingsforth (Master of Bennet Colledg) had some years before given to the said University; and this joynt stock was put into a Chest, called at this day, the Chest of Billingforth and Bourchier; and Treasurers are every year chosen for the safe keeping thereof.

The death of Arch-Bishop Bourchier.

17. John Morton born (say some) at Beare, but more truly at St Andrews Milbourne in Dorcet-shire (where a worshipful family of his name and lineage remain at this day) succeeded him in the See at Canterbury. He was formerly Bishop of Elie, and appointed by Edward the fourth, one of the Executors of his Will, and on that account hated of King Richard the third, the Executioner thereof. He was, as aforesaid, imprisoned, because he would not betray his trust, fled into France, returned, and justly advanced by King Henry, first to be Chancellor of England, and then to be Arch-Bishop of Canterbury.

John Morton succeeded him.

18. Now

A gift not worth the taking.

18. Now began the Pope to be very busie by his officers, to collect vast summes of money in England, presuming at the Kings connivance thereat, whom he had lately gratified with a needless Dispensation, to Legitimate his Marriage with the Lady Elizabeth, his Cousin so far off, it would half pose a Herald to recover their Kindred; For, Anno Dom. 1486. Neither Law, Divine or Civil, forbad marriage at this distance; but the Pope would be over-officious, both to oblige the King, and interest himself, as if no Princes could well be married, except the Pope had a finger in joyning their hands together.

Exorbitancies of Sanctuaries retrenched.

19. More material to the King was the help of his Holiness, to regulate the exorbitancies of abused Sanctuaries: In this age could an offendor get such an house over his head, he accounted himself instantly innocent, though not in conscience, yet as to outward punishment, the Kings enemies once Sanctuaried, daring him no less then the Jebusites in their strong fort of Sion defied David, [a] Though shalt not come in hither, : The Pope therefore, in favour of the King, and indeed of equity it self, ordered, 1487 3.

2. That howsoever the person of the Sanctuary man was protected from his Creditors, yet his goods out of Sanctuary should not.
3. That if any took Sanctuary for cause of Treason, the King might appoint him keepers to look to him in Sanctuary.

Surely had the King been pleased to interpose his own power, he might have reformed these abuses; but he thought fitter to make use of the Popes Spiritual artillery, against these Spiritual Castles of Rebellion, that he might not seem to intrench on their lawful priviledges, having formerly, at least in pretence, appeared a great Patron of Sanctuaries, and a severe punisher of the unjust infringers thereof. On which account this King (who was never uxorious husband, nor over-dutiful son in law, confined the Queen Dowager, his wives Mother) to a Religious House in Bermansey, because three years since

A Synod was holden by Arch-Biſhop Morton at London, wherein the Luxury of the London [a] Clergie in cloaths (that City alwayes the ſtaple of bravery) with their frequenting of Taverns was forbidden; ſuch Preachers alſo were puniſhed, who with popular applauſe enveighed againſt Biſhops in their abſence; the next year alſo a Synod was called, but little therein effected, but vaſt ſummes of money granted by the Clergie to the King.

22. Arch-Biſhop Morton, as one much meriting from the Pope, was not onely honoured with a Cardinals Hat, of the title of S^t Anaſtatius, but alſo privileged from his Holineſs, to viſit all places formerly exempt from Archiepiſcopal juriſdiction. 23. The King had more then a moneths minde (keeping ſeven years in that humour) to procure the Pope to Canonize King Henry the ſixth for a Saint. For Engliſh Saint-Kings ſo frequent before the Conqueſt, were grown great dainties ſince that time. France lately had her King Saint Lewis, and why ſhould not England receive the like favour, being no leſs beneficial to the Church of Rome? Nor could the unhappineſs of our King Henry (becauſe Depoſed from his Throne) be any juſt bar to his Saintſhip, ſeeing generally Gods beſt ſervants are moſt ſubject to the ſharpeſt afflictions. His Canonizing would add much Luſtre of the Line of Lancaſter, which made his Kinſman and mediate ſucceſſor King Henry the ſeventh ſo deſirous thereof. Beſides, well might he be made a Saint who had been a Prophet. For when the Wars between Lancaſter and York firſt began, Henry the ſixth beholding this Henry the ſeventh, then but a Boy playing in the Court, ſaid to the ſtanders by, See this youth one day will quietly enjoy what we at this time ſo much fight about. This made the King with much importunity to tender this his requeſt unto the Pope. A requeſt the more reaſonable, becauſe it was well nigh fourty years ſince the death of that Henry, ſo that onely the skeletons of his vertues remained in mens memories, the fleſh and corruption (as one may ſay) of his faults being quite conſumed and forgotten.

The King deſired King Henry then the ſixth to be Sainted.

24. Pope Alexander the ſixth, inſtead of granting his requeſt, acquainted him with the requiſites belonging to the making of a Saint. Firſt, that to confer that honour (the greateſt on earth) was onely in the power of the Pope, the proper judg of mens merits therein. Secondly, that Saints were not to be multiplied but on just motions, lest commonness should cause their contempt. Thirdly, that his life must be exemplarily holy, by the testimony of credible witnesses. Fourthly, that such must attest the truth of reall Miracles wrought by him after death. Fifthly, that very great was the cost thereof, because all Chaunters, Choristers, * Bell-ringers (not the least clapper in the steeple wagging, except money was tied to the end of the rope) with all the officers of the Church of Saint Peter, together with the Commissaries and Notaries of the Court, with all the officers of the Popes Bed-chamber, to the very Lock-smiths, ought to have their several fees of such Canonization. Adding that the total summe would amount to fifteen hundred Duckets [a] of Gold.

Tantæ Molis erat Romanum condere Sanctum.

Concluding with that which made the charges, though not infinite, indefinite, that the costs were to be multiplied, secundum Canonizati Potentiam, according to the power or dignity of the person to be Canonized. And certain it was, the Court of Rome would not behold this Henry the sixth in the notion he died in, as a poor prisoner, but as he lived a King, so long as he had this Henry his Kinsman to pay for the same.

These applied to King Hen. 6.

25. Most of these requisites met in King Henry the sixth, in a competent measure. First, the holiness of his life was confessed by all, save that some sullen persons suggested that his simplicity was above his Sanctity, and his life pious, not so much out of hatred, as ignorance of badness. As for Miracles, there was no want of them, if credible persons might be believed, two of whose Miracles it will not be amiss to recite.

A brace of Miracles wrought by King Hen. 6.

25. Thomas Fuller, a very honest [b] man, living at Hammersmith, near London, had a hard hap accidentally to light into the company of one who had stolen and driven away Cattle, with whom, though wholly innocent, he was taken, arraigned, condemned, and executed: When on the Gallows, blessed King Henry (loving justice when alive, and willing to preserve innocence after death) appeared unto him, so ordering the matter, that the halter did not strangle him. For having hung an whole hour, and taken down to be buried, he was found alive; for which favour he repaired to the Tomb of King Henry at Chertsey (as he was bound to do no less) and there presented his humble and hearty thanks unto him for his deliverance. The very same accident mutatis mutandis, of place and persons (with some addition about the apparition of the Virgin Mary) hapned to Richard Boyes, dwelling within a mile of Bath, the story so like, all may believe them equally true.

b Harpsfield Hist. Ecclesiastica Saculo decimo quinto pag. 846.

26. All the premisses required to a Saint, appearing in some moderate proportion in Henry the sixth, especially if charitably interpreted (Saints themselves needs some favour to be afforded them) it was the general expectation that he should be suddenly Canonized. But Pope Alexander the sixth delaied, and in effect denied King Henry's desire herein, yea, Julius his next successor of continuance (not to mention the short liv'd Pius the third) continued as sturdy in his denial.

Reasons why King Hen. 6. was not Sainted

27. Men variously conjecture why the Pope in effect should deny to Canonize King Henry the sixth; a witty, but tart reason is rendred by a Noble [c] pen, because the Pope would put a difference betwixt a Saint and an Innocent: But others conceive King Henry not so simple himself, his parts onely seeming the lower, being over-topped with a high spirited Queen; more probable it is what another [d] saith, that seeing King Henry held the Crown by a false title, from the true heir thereof; the Pope could not with so good credit fasten a Saintship on his memory. But our great [e] Antiquary resolveth all in the Popes covetousness, In causa fuit Pontificis avaritia, demanding more then thrifty King Henry the seventh would allow; Who at last

Thus is he whom Authors have obſerved twice Crowned, twice Depoſed, twice Buried; the beſt was, though he was not Canonized, yet there was plenty of Popiſh Saints beſide him, wherewith the Calender is ſo overſtocked, that for want of room they juſtle one another.

14. 1497 28. But the Sainſhip of Anſelme, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, was procured on cheaper terms, though it coſt Arch-Biſhop Morton much money, who procured the ſame. Indeed Anſelme being alterius orbis Papa, the Pope of the Engliſh world (as the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury was termed) no wonder if one Pope upon reaſonable termes, did this courteſie for another. Beſides, great was the merit of Anſelme to the Church of Rome (little whereof goes far to obtain a Canonization) ſeeing he was the Champion and confeſſor of the Popes cauſe, about inveſting of Biſhops, againſt two Kings ſucceſſively, William Rufus, and King Henry the firſt.

Arch-Biſhop Morton procureth the Sainting of Anſelm.

29. Obſervable was the carriage of King Henry towards the Pope, the Clergie, and the poor Lollards. To the Pope he was ſubmiſſive, not ſervile, his devotion being ſeldom without deſign, ſo uſing his Holineſs, that he ſeldom ſtooped down to him in any low reverence, but with the ſame geſture he took up ſomething in order to his own ends.

The Kings carriage to the Pope.

30. To the Clergie of deſert he was very reſpectful, truſting and imploying them in State affairs, more then his Nobility. To the diſſolute and vitious Clergie he was juſtly ſevere, and pared their priviledges, ordeining that Clerks [a] convict ſhould be burnt in the hand; both that they might taſte a corporal puniſhment, and carry a brand of infamy. But for this good act, the King himſelf was afterwards branded by Mock-King-Perkins proclamation for an execrable breaker of the Rights of Holy Church. He alſo made a [b] Law, that begging ſcholars, though Clerks, ſhould be reputed Vagabonds, without they ſhew the Letters of the Chancellor of the Univerſity, from whence he ſaith he cometh.

Severe to the vitious Clergie.

31. To the Lollards (ſo were Gods people nick-named) he was more cruel then his predeceſſors; for he not onely in the beginning of his Reign connived at the cruel perſecutions which Jo. Halſe Biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield raiſed againſt them, but towards the end of his Reign appeared in his perſon very bloudy unto them, if the ſtory be true which is very lamely delivered unto us. There was in Canterbury an old Prieſt ſo reſolute in Wicliffs opinions, that none of the Clergie there could convince him of the contrary: The King caſually coming thither in the moneth of May, undertook the Prieſt himſelf, though we never read before of his Majeſties diſputing, ſave when he diſputed Boſworth field with King Richard the third. The King, by what arguments we know not, converted this Prieſt, and then preſently gave order he ſhould be burnt, which was done [c] accordingly. Surely there was more in the matter, then what appeared in the Record, or elſe one may boldly ſay, that if the Kings Converts had no better incouragement, this was the firſt he made, and the laſt he was ever likely to make.

Sad to be the Kings Convert.

32. Two moſt needleſs pieces of Cruelty were committed at this time, the one, an aged old man burnt in Smithfield, the other, one Joan Baughton widow, which ſeemeth a woman of ſome quality, as Mother to the Lady Young (who was afterwards Martyred) ſhe being fourſcore [d] years of age, was burnt for an Heretick, poſting her to the Stake which was going to the Grave.

33. William Smith, ſometimes Fellow of Pembroke Hall in Cambridg, and Biſhop of Lincoln, this year began the Foundation of Braſen-noſe Colledg in Oxford; I meet not with any ſatisfactory reaſon why ſo called, ſave the fancy of the Founder. The Death of Arch-Bishop Morton.

34. John Morton Cardinal and Arch-Bishop of Canterbury deceased, many condemned him in his life for acting and putting the King forward to be burthensome to his Subjects with his Taxes; but his innocence appeared after his death, that he rather tempered the Kings covetousness then otherwise: He was a Learned man, and had a fair Library (Rebus's'd with More in text and Tun under it) partly remaining in the possession of the late Earl of Arundell. I finde him in the Catalogue of the Benefactors of S[t] John's Colledg in Cambridg, understand it by his Executors, otherwise the first Brick of that House was laid nine years after the Arch-Bishops death. Now as this was a sad year to Canterbury, wherein their good Arch-Bishop departed, so was it a joyful year at Rome for the coming in of that Jubilee, which brought men and money there: Yet many went to Rome in effect, which staied in England, by commuting their journey into money, which was equally meritorious, the Popes Officers being come over to receive the same. 1500 16

THE CHVRCH-HISTORY OF BRITAINE.

BOOK V.

Hen. 7 17. 1501

1. GOD hath alwayes been ambitious to preserve and prefer little things, the Jews the least of all Nations, DAVID their King, least in his fathers family; little Benjamin the Ruler; little Hill of Hermon; the Virgin Mary, the lowlinesse of thy handmaiden: Gods children severally are stiled his little ones, and collectively make up but a little flock. And surely it renders the work of grace more visible and conspicuous, when the object can claim nothing as due to it self. A pregnant proof hereof we have in Divine Providence, at this time preserving the inconsiderable pittance of faithful professors against most powerful opposition. This handful of men, were tied to very hard duty, being constantly to stand Sentinels against an Army of enemies, till God sent Luther to relieve them, and the work was made lighter, with more hands to do it, as in the sequel of our story, God willing will appear. Mean time we must remember that Henry Dean succeeded in the place of Arch-Bishop Morton, lately deceased, and enjoyed his honour but two years, then leaving it to william Warham, one well qualified with learning and discretion.

Poor professours still preserved by Gods providence.

22. 1506

2. Now it is no small praise to Buckingham-shire, that being one of the lesser Counties of England, it had more Martyrs and Confessors in it, before the time of Luther, then all the Kingdom besides: where William Tylsworth was burnt at Amersham, (the Rendezvous of Gods children in those dayes) and

Some burnt, some branded, for the profession of the truth.

Anno Dom. 1506 | Anno Regis Hen. 7. 22.

Joan his onely daughter, and a faithful woman, was compelled with her own hands to set fire to her dear [a] father. At the same time sixty professors, and aboue, did bear fagots for their penance, and were enjoyned to wear on their right sleeves, for some years after, a square piece of cloath, as a disgrace to themselves, and a difference from others. But what is most remarkable, a new punishment was now found out of branding them in the cheek. The [b] manner thus: Their necks were tied fast to a post with towels, and their hands holden that they might not stir; and so the hot Iron was put to their cheeks. It is not certain whether branded with L for Lollard, or H for Heretick, or whether it was onely a formless print of Iron (yet nevertheless painful) this is sure, that they [c] bare in their bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus. And no doubt they had so well learned our Saviours [d] precept, that rather then they would have revenged themselves, by unlawful means, to them that smit them on the one cheek, they would have turn'd the other also. Surely Ecclesiastical constitutions did not reach thus far, as to impose any corporal torture: and whether there be any Statute of the Land that enjoyns, (not to say permits) such punishments, let the learned in the Laws decide. This I am sure, if this was the first time that they fell into this (supposed) Heresie, by the Law they were onely to abjure their errours; and if it were the second time, upon relaps into the same again, their whole bodies were to be burnt. Except any will say, that such as by these bloudy Laws deserved death, were branded onely by the favour of William Smith Bishop of Lincoln, and one may have charity enough to encline him to this belief, when considering the same william (Founder of Brazen-nose Colledg in Oxford) was generally a lover of learning and goodness, and not cruelly disposed of himself. However some of Gods children, though burnt, did not dread the fire. And Father [e] Rever, alias Reive, though branded at the time, did afterwards suffer at a stake; so that the brand at the first did but take livery and seisin in his cheek, in token that his whole body should afterwards be in the free and full possession of the fire.

The cruel killing of Thomas Chase.

3. They who desire further information of the number and names of such as suffer'd about this time, may repair to the Acts and Monuments of Mr Fox, onely Thomas Chase of Amersham must not be here omitted, being barbarously butchered by bloudy hands in the Prison of Wooburne. Who to cover their cruelty, gave it out that he had hang'd himself, and in colour thereof, caused his body to be buried by the high ways side, where a stake knock't into the grave, is the monument generally erected for Felons de Se. Fear not those (saith our Saviour) who kill the body, and afterwards have no more that they can do: But these mens malice endeavoured to do more, having kill'd his body, to murder his memory with slanderous reports; although all in vain. For the Prison it self did plead for the innocence of the prisoner herein, being a place so low and little, that he could not stand upright. Besides the woman that saw his dead body, (a most competent witness in this case) declared, that he was so loaden with Manicles and Irons, that he could not well move either hand or foot. But we leave the full discussing, and finall deciding hereof to him, who makes inquisition for bloud, at that day, when such things as have been done in secret, shall be made manifest.

The Pope and King Hen 7. share the money for Pardons betwixt them.

4. By this time we may boldly say, that all the arrears of money due to the Pope, for Pardons in the year of Jubilee, five years since were fully collected, and safely returned to Rome, by the officers of his Holiness, the lagging money which was last sent thither, came soon enough to be received there. We wish the sellers more honesty, and the buyers more wisdom. Yet we envy Rome this payment the less, because it was the last in this kind, she did generally receive out of England. Mean time time King Henry the seventh did enter common with the [f] Pope, having part allowed to connive at the rest. Thus whilest Pope and Prince shared the wooll betwixt them, the people

Anno Regis Hen. 7. 22. Anno Dom. 1506 people were finely fleeced. Indeed King Henry was so thrifty, I durst call him covetous, not to say sordid, had he been a private man, who knowing what tickliſh termes he ſtood upon, lov'd a reſerve of treaſure, as being (beſides his claims of Conqueſt, match, and diſcent) at any time, a good title ad Corroborandum. (And we may the leſs wonder that this money was ſo ſpeedily ſpent by his ſucceſſor, a great part thereof being gotten by ſin, was ſpent on ſin :) Was it then charity or remorſe, giving or reſtoring, that 24. 1508 hereupon King Henry the ſeventh Founded the rich Hoſpital of the Savoy in the Strand, with the finiſhing whereof he ended his own life. And it is queſtionable whether his body lies in more magnificence in that ſtately and coſtly Tomb and Chappel of his own erecting, or whether his memory lives more laſtingly in that learned and curious Hiſtory, which the Lord Bacon hath written of his Reign ?

Hen. 8. 1. 5. Henry the eighth, his Son, ſucceeded him, one of a beautiful perſon, and majeſtick preſence, inſomuch that his picture in all places is known at the firſt ſight. As for the character of his minde, all the vertues and vices of all his predeceſſors from the Conqueſt, may ſeem in him fully repreſented, both to their kinde and degree, learning, wiſdom, valour, magnificence, cruelty, avarice, fury, and luſt ; following his pleaſures whileſt he was young, and making them come to him when he was old. Many memorable alterations in Church and State happen'd in his age, as God willing, hereafter ſhall appear.

Hen. 8. ſucceedeth his father.

1509 6. On the third day of June he was ſolemnly Married to the Lady Katharine Dowager, formerly wife to his brother Prince Arthur deceaſed. Two Popes took the matter in hand to diſcuſs and decide the lawfulneſs thereof, Alexander the ſixth, and Pius the third ; but both died before the buſineſs was fully effected. At laſt comes Pope Julius the ſecond, and by the omnipotency of his diſpenſation, removed all impediments and obſtructions, againſt the laws of God or man hindering or oppoſing the ſaid marriage. We leave them for the preſent wedded and bedded together, and twenty years hence ſhall hear more of this matter ; onely know that this marriage was founded in covetous conſiderations, meerly to ſave money, that the Kingdom might not be impoveriſhed by reſtoring her Dowry back again into Spain, though hereupon a greater maſs of coyn was tranſported out of the Land, though not into Spain, into Italy. Thus ſuch who conſult with covetouſneſs in matters of conſcience, embracing ſiniſter courſes to ſave charges, will finde ſuch thrift to prove expenſive at the caſting up of their audit ; however Divine Providence over-ruling all actions to his own glory, ſo ordered it, that the breaking off the Popes power, with the baniſhing of Superſtition out of England, is at this day the onely ſurviving iſſue of this marriage.

He marrieth the reliſt of his brother Arthur.

Sanders de ſchiſmate Anglicano, lib. 1. pag. 2.

7. The beginning of this Kings Reign was but barren (as the latter part thereof, ſome will ſay, over-fruitful) with eminent Church-paſſages. And therefore we will ſpare when we may, and be brief in his firſt ; that we may ſpend when we ſhould, in the larger deſcription of his latter years. Cruelty ſtill continued and increaſed on the poor Lollards (as they call them) after abjuration, forced to wear the faſhion of a faggot wrought in thread, or painted on their left ſleeves, all the dayes of their lives ; it being death to put on their cloaths without that cognizance. And indeed to poor people it was true, put it off, and be burned ; keep it on, and be ſtarved ; ſeeing none generally would ſet them on work, that carried that badg about them.

Abjured Lollards wear faggots.

8. On this account William Sweeting, and James Brewſter were re-impriſoned. In vain did [a] Brewſter plead, that he was commanded to leave off his badg, by the Controller of the Earl of Oxfords houſe, who was not to controll the orders of the Biſhops herein. And, as little did Sweetings plea prevail, that the Parſon of Mary Magdalene's in Colcheſter, cauſed him to lay his his faggot aside. These, like Isaac, first bare their fagots on their backs, which soon after bare them, being both burnt together in Smithfield. The Papists report, that they profered at their death, again to abjure their opinions, the truth whereof one day shall appear. Mean time, if true, let the unpartial but judge, which were most faulty, these poor men for want of constancy in tendring, or their Judges, for want of charity, in not accepting their abjuration. Richard Hunn murdered in Lollards-tower.

9. Richard Hunn, a wealthy Citizen of London, imprisoned in Lollards Tower, for maintaining some of Wiclifs opinions, had his neck therein secretly broken. To cover their cruelty, they gave it out, that he hang'd himself; but the Coroners inquest sitting on him, by necessary presumptions, found the impossibility thereof, and gave in their verdict, that the said Hunn was murdered. Insomuch that [a] Persons hath nothing to reply, but, that the Coroners Inquest were simple men, and suspected to be infected with Wicliffian heresies. But we remit the Reader to Mr Fox for satisfaction in all these things, whose commendable care is such, that he will not leave an hoof of a martyr behinde him, being very large in the reckoning up of all sufferers in this kinde. 1514 7. Cardinal Bainbrigg why poison'd at Rome.

10. Cardinal Bainbrigg, Arch-Bishop of York, being then at Rome, was so highly offended with Rivaldus de Modena, an Italian, his Steward (others say his Physician, and a Priest) that he fairly cudgelled him. This his passion was highly censured, as inconsistent with Episcopal gravity, who should be [b] no striker. But the Italian shewed a cast of his Countrey, and with [c] poison sent the Cardinal to answer for his fact in another world, whose body was buried in the English Hospital at Rome.

So that a Preſident, twenty Fellows, twenty Scholars, two Chaplaines, two Clerks, and two Choriſters, beſides Officers and Servants of the Foundation, are therein maintained, which with other Students, Anno 1634. made up threeſcore and ten.

12. This Hugh Oldham, in the front of Benefactors, becauſe he was Biſhop of Exeter, for names-ſake, intended his bounty to Exeter Colledg. But, ſuffering a repulſe from that Society (refuſing at his [a] requeſt to make one Atkin a Fellow) diverted his liberality to Corpus-Chriſti-Colledg; ſo bountifull thereunto, that, as Founder is too much, ſo Benefactour is too little for him. He was one of more piety then learning, courteous in his deeds, but very harſh and rugged in his ſpeeches, making himſelf but bad Orations, yet good Orators, ſo many eloquent men were bred by his bounty. 13. John Collet, Dean of Pauls, died this year [in the fifty third year of his age] of a peſtilential ſweating, at Shene in Surry. He was the eldeſt (and ſole ſurviving) childe, of S[r] Henry Collet, Mercer, twice Lord Major of London, who with his ten Sons and as many Daughters, are depicted in a glaſs window, on the North-ſide of S[t] Anthonies (corruptly S[t] Antlins) to which [d] Church he was a great Benefactor. His Son John Founded the FREE-SCHOOL of S[t] Pauls, and it is hard to ſay, whether he left better Laws for the government, or Lands for maintenance thereof.

Founder of Pauls School.

e John 21. 11.

15. It may ſeem falſe Latin, that this Collet being Dean of S[t] Pauls, the School Dedicated to S[t] Paul, and diſtanced but the breadth of the Street from S[t] Pauls Church, ſhould not be intruſted to the inſpection of his ſucceſſors, the Dean and Chapter of Pauls, but committed to the care of the Company of the Mercers, for the managing thereof. But [f] Eraſmus rendreth a good reaſon, from the mouth and minde of Collet himſelf, who had found by experience many Lay-men as conſciencious as Clergy-men in diſcharging this truſt in this kinde, conceiving alſo, that whole Company was not ſo eaſie to be bowed to corruption as any ſingle perſon, how publick and eminent ſoever.

The Mercers made Overſeers thereof.

f In his Epiſtle unto Jodocus Jonas.

16. For my own part, I behold Collets act herein, not onely prudential, but ſomething Prophetical, as foreſeeing the ruine of Church-lands, and fearing that this his School, if made an Eccleſiaſtical Appendent, might in the fall of Church-Lands, get a bruiſe, if not loſe a limb thereby.

Out of providient preſcience.

17. William Lily was the firſt School-maſter thereof, by Collets own appointment. An excellent Scholar, born at Odiam in Hampſhire, and afterward he went on Pilgrimage as far as [g] Jeruſalem: In his return through Italy he applied himſelf to his ſtudies. And becauſe ſome perchance would be pleaſed to know the Lilies of Lily, (I mean his Teachers and Inſtructers) know that John Sulpitius and Pomponius Sabinus, two eminent Criticks, were his principal informers. Returning home into his native Country well accompliſhed with Latin, Greek, and all Arts and Sciences, he ſet forth a Grammer, which ſtill goes under his name, and is univerſally taught all over England.

W. Lilly firſt School-Maſter.

g Pitzæus de Ang. Scriptor. pag. 697.

18. Many

His Grammer often printed.

18. Many were the Editions of this Grammer, the first set forth Anno 1513. (when Pauls School was Founded) as appears by that instance, Meruit sub Rege in Gallia, relating to Maximilian the German Emperour, who then at the Siege of Therovenne in Flanders, fought under the banner of King Henry the eighth, taking an [a] hundred crowns a day for his pay. Another Edition Anno 1520. when audito Rege Doroberniam proficisci, refers to the Kings speedy journey into Canterbury, there to give entertainment to Charles the fifth Emperour, lately landed at Dover.

[a] Godwins Annals, pag. 16.

And priviledged by authority.

19. Formerly there were in England almost as many Grammers as School-masters, children being confounded, not onely with their variety, but [sometimes] contrariety thereof, rules being true in the one, which were false in the other. Yea, which was the worst, a boy, when removed to a new School, lost all he had learned before: Whereupon King Henry endeavoured an uniformity of Grammer all over his Dominions; that so youths, though changing their School-masters, might keep their learning. This was performed, and William Lilies Grammer enjoyned universally to be used. A stipend of four pounds a year was allowed the Kings Printer for Printing of it; and it was penall for any publickly to teach any other. I have been told how lately Bishop Buckeridge examining a Free-School in his Diocess of Rochester, the Scholars were utterly ignorant of Lilies rules, as used to others; whereat the Bishop exclaimed, What, are there Puritans also in Grammer?

Since amended by many.

20. I deny not but some since have discovered blasted leaves in our Lily, observing defects and faults therein, and commendable many persons pains in amending them; however it were to be desired, that no needless variations be made, and as much left of Lily as may be: The rather, because he submitted his Syntaxis to the judgment of [b] Erasmus himself, so that it was afterward printed amongst his works. Indeed Quæ Genus was done by Thomas Robinson, and the Accidens (as some will have it) by other Authors, after Lily was dead, and Prince Edward born, of and for whom it was said Edwardus is my proper name. And thus we take our leave both of Lily and Pauls-School, flourishing at this day as much as ever, under the care of Mr John Langly, the able and Religious School-master thereof.

[b] Pitzæus ut prius.

King Henry writes against Luther.

21. King Henry had lately set forth a Book against Luther, endeavouring the confutation of his opinions as novel and unsound. None suspect this Kings lack of learning, (though many his lack of leisure from his pleasures) for such a design; however it is probable, some other Gardner gathered the flowers (made the collections) though King Henry had the honour to wear the posie, carrying the credit in the title thereof. Anno Dom. 1521 Anno Regis Hen. 8. 13.

Stiled by the Pope Defender of the Faith.

22. To requite his pains, the Pope honoured him and his Successors with a specious title, A Defender of the [c] Faith. Indeed it is the bounden Duty of every Christian, earnestly to contend for the faith which once was given to the Saints, but it is the Dignity of few men, and fewer Princes, to be able effectually to appear in Print in the Vindication thereof.

[c] Jude 3.

His Jesters reply.

23. There is a tradition, that King Henry's Fool (though more truly to be termed by another name) coming into the Court, and finding the King transported with an unusual joy, boldly asked of him the cause thereof, to whom the King answered, it was because that the Pope had honoured him with a stile more eminent then any of his Ancestours; O good Harry (quoth the Fool) let Thou and I defend one another, and let the faith alone to defend it self. Most true it is, that some of his Successors more truly deserved the Title, then he to whom it was given: Who both learnedly, then solidly engaged their pens in the asserting of true Religion.

Wolsey his unlimited power and pride.

24. At this time, though King Henry wore the sword, Cardinal Wolsey bare the stroke all o're the Land; being Legate de Latere, by vertue whereof he visited all Churches and Religious Houses, even the Friers Observants themselves, notwithstanding their stoutness and stubbornness, that first [d] opposed him. Papal and Royal power met in him, being the Chancellor of the Land, and keeping ſo many Biſhopricks in Commendam, his yearlie income is ſaid to equal, if not exceed the Revenues of the Crown.

25. The more the pitty, that having of his own ſuch a flock of preferment, nothing but the poor mans [a] Ewe-lamb would pleaſe him, ſo that being to Found two Colledges, he ſeiſed on no fewer then fourty ſmall Monaſteries, turning their inhabitants out of houſe and home, and converting their means principally to a Colledg in Oxford. This alienation was confirmed by the preſent Pope Clement the ſeventh, ſo that in ſome ſort his Holineſs may thank himſelf, for the demoliſhing of Religious Houſes in England.

He was the firſt confounder of Abbies.

a 2 Sam. 12 3.

16. 1524

26. For the firſt breach is the greateſt in effect: And Abbies having now loſt their Virginity, (diverted by the Pope to other) ſoon after loſt their Chaſtity, proſtituted by the King to ordinary uſes. And now the Cardinal was buſied in building his Colledg, conſiſting of ſeveral Courts, whereof the principal is ſo fair and large, it would have equalled any Princes Palace, if finiſhed according to the deſign, all the Chambers and other Offices being intended ſuitable to the magnificent Hall and Kitchin therein.

A precedent quickly followed.

27. Indeed nothing mean could enter into this mans minde, but of all things his ſtructures were moſt ſtately. He was the beſt Harbinger that ever King Henry had, not onely taking up before-hand, but building up beautifull houſes for his entertainments, which when finiſhed [as White-Hall, Hampton Court &c.] he either freely gave them to the King, or exchang'd them on very reaſonable conſiderations.

Wolſey a Royal Harbinger.

28. Some ſay he intended this his Colledg, to be an Univerſity in an Univerſity, ſo that it ſhould have therein by it ſelf profeſſours of all Arts and Sciences: But we may believe that all theſe go but by gueſs, as not knowing the Cardinals minde, (who knew not his own) daylie embracing new deſigns of magnificence, on the emmergency of every occaſion. Yet let not the greatneſs of his buildings ſwallow up in ſilence the memory and commendable devotion of Simon Iſlip Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, who Founded Canterbury Colledg, taken in with this Cardinals unfiniſhed Foundation.

His vaſt deſign, why unknown.

29. However too tart and bitter was the expreſſion of Rodulphus Gualterus a Germane, who comparing the Cardinals project with his performance, ſaid of him, inſtituit Collegium & abſolvit Popinam, he began a Colledg and built a Kytchin: For had he not been civilly defunct, before naturally dead, not a pane of glaſs, nor peg of wood had been wanting in that Edifice.

An over-tart Sarcaſme.

30. More wit then Truth was in anothers return, who being demanded what he thought concerning the ampleneſs of this Foundation, made this homonymous anſwer, Fundatione nihil amplius, there is nothing more, [or more ſtately] then this Foundation; whereas indeed had not he himſelf been unexpectedly ſtript of his eſtate, he had left more and better lands to this houſe, then King Henry conferr'd upon them, who conceiving Church-means fitteſt for Chriſt-Church, exchang'd many of their beſt Manors for Impropriations.

A ſecond ſomewhat milder.

31. This Colledg did thrice change its name in ſeven years, accounting it no ſmall credit thereunto, that it alwayes aſcended, and was advanced in every alteration; firſt call'd Cardinals Colledg, then Kings Colledg, and at laſt Chriſts Church, which it retaineth at this day.

Three names to one Colledg.

32. King Henry took juſt offence that the Cardinal ſet his own [b] Arms above the Kings, on the Gate-houſe, at the entrance into the Colledg. This was no verbal but a real Ego & Rex meus, excuſable by no plea in Manners or Grammer; except onely by that (which is rather Fault then Figure) a harſh down right Hyſteroſis; but to humble the Cardinals pride, ſome afterwards ſet up on a window, a painted [c] Maſtiff-dog, gnawing the ſtate-bone of a ſhoulder of Mutton, to minde the Cardinal of his extraction, being the Son of a Butcher, it being utterly improbable (that ſome have fancied) that that picture was placed there by the Cardinals own appointment, to be to him a monitour of humility.

The pride of the Cardinal humbled by others.

35. Know alſo this, John Higdon, firſt Dean, was he, of whom Cardinal Wolſey (when fallen into diſtreſs) did borrow two hundred pounds, therewith to pay and reward ſome of his pooreſt ſervants, giving them money on this condition, that hereafter they ſhould ſerve no ſubject, but onely the [b] King himſelf, as if this had been ſuſcipere gradum Simeonis, for thoſe who ſo long had attended on a Lord-Cardinal. But this happened many years after; we return to this proud Prelate, while he flouriſhed in the height of his Proſperity.

Wolſeys pride in his ſervants.

[b] Rex Platonicus, pag. 43.

36. Their heads will catch cold, which wait bare for a dead Popes Triple-Crown. Wolſey may be an inſtance hereof, who, on every avoidance of St. Peters Chaire, was ſitting down therein, when ſuddenly ſome one or other, clapt in before him. Weary with waiting, he now reſolved to revenge himſelf on Charles the Emperour, for not doing him right, and not improving his power, in preferring him to the Papacy, according to his promiſes and pretences. He intends to ſmite Charles through the ſides of his Aunt, Katharine Queen of England, endeavouring to alienate the Kings affections from her. And this is affirmed by the generality of our Hiſtorians, though ſome of late have endeavoured to acquit Wolſey, as not the firſt perſwader of the King divorce.

Wolſey turns his waiting into revenge.

37. Indeed he was beholding, for the firſt hint thereof, to the Spaniards themſelves. For, when the Lady Mary was tendered in marriage to Philip, Prince of Spain, the Spaniſh Embaſſadours ſeemed to make ſome difficulty thereof, and to doubt her extraction, as begotten on a mother formerly married to her husbands elder brother. Wolſey now put this ſcruple into the head of Biſhop Longlands, the Kings Confeſſour, and he inſinuated the ſame into the Kings conſcience; adviſing him hereafter to abſtain from the company of his Queen, to whom he was unlawfully married. Adding moreover, that after a divorce procured (which the Pope in juſtice could not deny) the King might diſpoſe his affections where he pleaſed. And here Wolſey had provided him a ſecond Wife, viz. Margarite, Counteſs of Alenzon, ſiſter to Francis King of France; though heavens reſerved that place, not for the Miſtreſs, but her Maid, I mean Anna Bollen, who (after the return of Mary, the French Queen for England, attended in France for ſome time on this Lady Margarite.

The ſcruple of the Kings marriage.

38. Tander needs no torch to light it, the leaſt ſpark will preſently ſet it on flame. No wonder if King Henry greedily reſented the motion. Male iſſue he much wanted, and a young Female more on whom to beget it. As for Queen Katharine, he rather reſpected, then affected; rather honoured, then loved her. She had got an habit of miſcarrying, ſcarce curable in one of her age, intimated in one of the Kings private papers, as morbus incurabilis. Yet publickly he never laid either fault or defect to her charge; that, not diſlike of her perſon or conditions, but onely principles of pure conſcience, might ſeem to put him upon endeavours of a Divorce.

The King willingly embraceth the motion.

39. The buſineſs is brought into the Court of Rome, there to be decided by Pope Clement the ſeventh. But the Pope at this time was not ſui juris, being a priſoner to the Emperour, who conſtantly kept a guard about him.

The Pope a Captive.

So that one wittily ſaid, it was now moſt true, Papa non poteſt errare, The Pope could not wander, as cooped up, and confined. Yet, after ſome delaies, the Pope at laſt, to ſatisfie the King, and clear his own credit, diſpatch'd a Commiſſion to two Cardinals, Wolſey, and Campegius, an Italian, at London to hear and determine the matter. Anno Dom. 1528 Anno Regni Hen. 8 20.

The character of Campegius.

40. Campegius was the junior Cardinal, and therefore the rather procured by Wolſey to be his Collegue in this buſineſs, whoſe pride would ſcarce admit an equal, but abhorr'd a ſuperiour, that any Foraign Prelate ſhould take place of him in England. As Wolſeys junior, ſo was he none of the moſt Mercurial amongſt the Conclave of Cardinals, but a good heavy man, having ingenium par negotio, neither too much, nor too little, but juſt wit enough for the purpoſe the Pope imployed him in. Wolſey might ſpur Campegius, and Campegius would bridle Wolſey, keeping them both ſtrictly to the letter of their inſtructions. Wolſey hearing Campegius was come to Calis, with an equipage not ſo Court-like as he could have deſired, and loath that his own pomp ſhould be ſhamed by the others poverty, cauſed him to ſtay there, till he ſent him more ſplendid accommodations (at leaſt in outward ſhew) and then over he came into England. But ſee the ſpight of it. As the Cardinals Mules paſſed Cheap-ſide, out of unrulineſs they chanced to break the Trunkes they carried, which were found full of nothing but emptineſs, which expoſed his mock-ſtate to the more ſcorn and contempt. Empty Trunks, the lively embleme of this Cardinals Legacy, coming hither with intent, and inſtruction to do little, and going hence having done nothing at all. However a Court is ſolemnly called, and the Cardinals (having firſt read their Commiſſion) ſet themſelves to examine the matter.

A matchleſs ſight.

41. It was faſhionable amongſt the Heathen, at the celebration of their Centenary Solemnities, which returned but once in an hundred years, to have an Herauld publickly to proclaim, Come hither to behold what you never ſaw before, and never are likely to ſee again. But here happ'ned ſuch a ſpectacle (in a great room called the Parliament-Chamber in Black-Friers) as never before, or after, was ſeen in England, viz. King Henry ſummoned in his own Land to appear before two Judges, the one Wolſey, directly his Subject by birth; the other his Subject occaſionally by his preferment, Campegius being lately made Biſhop of Sarisbury. Summoned, he appeared perſonally, and the Queen did the like the firſt day, but afterwards both by their Doctors. 1529 21. May 31.

42. For the KING.	For the QUEEN.
Rich. Samſon, John Bell, Peter and John Tregonwell.	Nic. Weſt, Biſhop of Ely; John Fiſher, Biſhop of Rocheſter; Hen. Standiſh, Biſhop of S^t Aſaph.

Here the Queeen aroſe, and after her reſpects dealt to the Cardinals, in ſuch manner as ſeemed neither uncivil to them, nor unſuting to her ſelf, uttered the following Speech, at the Kings feet, in the Engliſh tongue, but with her Spaniſh-tone, a clip whereof was ſo far from rendring it the leſs intelligible, that it ſoundeth the more pretty, and pleaſant to the hearers thereof. Yea, her very pronunciation pleaded for her with all ingenious auditors, providing her ſome pitty, as due to a Foraigner far from her own Country. But hear her words:

Sir!

Anno Regni Hen. 8. 21. Anno Dom. 1529

SIR!

I Desire * you to take some pitie upon me, and do me justice and right: I am a poor woman, a stranger, born out of your Dominions, having here no indifferent Councel, and less assurance of friendship. Alas, wherein have I offended, or what cause of displeasure have I given, that you intend thus to put me away? I take God to my Judge, I have been to you a true and humble wife, ever conformable to your will and pleasure, never gainsaying any thing wherein you took delight, without all grudg or discontented countenance; I have loved all them that loved you, howsoever their affections have been to me-ward; I have born you Children, and been your Wife now this twentie years; of my Virginitie and Marriage-bed, I make God and your own conscience the Judge, and if it otherwise be proved, I am content to be put from you with shame. The King your Father in his time for wisdom was known to be a second Solomon; and Ferdinando of Spain my Father, accounted the wisest among their Kings; could they in this match be so far overseen, or are there now wiser and more learned men, then at that time were? Surely, it seemeth wonderful to me, that my marriage after twentie years should be thus called in question, with new invention against me, who never intended but honestie. Alas Sir! I see I am wronged, having no Councel to speak for me, but such as are your Subjects, and cannot be indifferent upon my part. Therefore I most humbly beseech you, even in charity to stay this course, untill I have advice, and Counsel from Spain; if not, your Graces pleasure be done.

Queen Katharine her Speech.

* Speed, pag. 766.

June 18. 1529

This her Speech ended, She departed the Court, and, though often recalled, would not return; whereupon she was pronounced Contumacious. Many commending the greatness of her spirit, and moe condemning the stoutness of her stomach, as every one stood affected.

43. The most pungent passage in this her Speech, was her appeal to the Kings conscience, that he found her a Virgin, when first coming to her bed. Her words gained the more credit, because coming from one generally known to be spare of speech, and such may be rationally presumed to take best aim at the truth, who so seldom discharge in discourse; The rather, because she saying it, and the King not gainsaying it, many interpreted his silence herein consent. Whilest others imputed the Kings silence to his discretion, because both of them were parties, who though they knew the most, were to speak the least in their own cause, remitting it to the triall by the testimony of others.

The sting in her Speech.

44. As

Anno Dom. 1529 | Anno Regis Hen. 8. 25.

Fishers short plea.

44. As for the Queens Councel, (which, though assigned to her, appear not dearly accepted by her, as chosen rather by others for her, then by her for her self) I finde at this present little of moment pleaded, or performed by them. Onely Bishop Fisher affirmed, that no more needed to be said for the validity of the marriage, then, Whom God hath joyned together, let no man put asunder. A most true position in it self, if he could have cleared the application thereof to his Royal Client, but Hoc restat probandum; the contrary, that God never joyned them together, being vehemently urged by her adversaries.

The pleas of the Kings Councel.

45. Notwithstanding the Queens ablence, the Court proceeded: And first the Kings Proctors put in their exceptions against both Bull, and Breve of Pope Julius the second, dispensing with the Kings marriage with his brothers wife; viz.

1. That they were not to be found amongst the Original Records in Rome.
2. That they were not extant in Chartaphylacio, amongst the King of Englands papers (most concerned therein) but found onely in Spain, amongst the writings of a State-Officer there.
3. That in them it was falsely suggested, as if the same were procured at the instance of Henry, Prince of Wales, who then, not being above thirteen years old, was not capable of such intentions.
4. That the Date thereof was somewhat discrepant from the form used in the Court of Rome.

Secrets sub sigillo thalami.

July 12.

46. After this, many witnesses on the Kings side were deposed: and though this favour is by custome indulged to the English Nobility, to speak on their Honours; yet the Canon-Law taking no notice of this their municipal priviledg, and for the more legal validity of their testimonies, required the same on oath, though two Dukes, one Dutchess, one Marquess, many Lords and Ladies gave in their depositions. These attested,

1. That both were of sufficient age, Prince Arthur of fifteen years, the Lady Katharine somewhat elder.
2. That constant their cohabitation, at board, and in bed.
3. That competent the time of the same, as full five moneths.
4. That entire their mutual affection, no difference being ever observ'd betwixt them.
5. That Henry, after his Brothers death, by an instrument produced in Court, and attested by many witnesses, refused to marry her, though afterwards altered by the importunity of others.
6. That, by several expressions of Prince Arthur's, it appeared, he had carnal knowledg of the Lady Katharine.

The beds of private persons are compassed with curtaines, of Princes vailed also with canopies, to conceal the passages therein, to which modesty admitteth no witnesses. Pitty it is, that any, with Pharaoh, should discover what is exchanged betwixt Isaac and Rebekah; all which are best stifled in secrecy and silence. However, such the nature of the present cause, that many privacies were therein discovered.

A shrewd retortion.

47. Observe by the way, that, whereas it was generally alledged in favour of the Queen, that Prince Arthur had not carnal knowledg of her; because, because, soon after his marriage, his consumptionish body seemed unfit for such performances; this was retorted by testimonies on the Kings side, his witnesses deposing, that generally it was reported and believed, the Prince impaired his health, by his over liberal paiment of due benevolence.

Anno Regis Hen. 8 21. Anno Dom. 1529.

48. It was expected that the Cardinals should now proceed to a definitive sentence, according as matters were alledged, and proved unto them. The rather because it was generally reported, that Campegius brought over with him a Bull Decretal, to pronounce a nullity of the match, if he saw just cause for the same. Which rumor (like the silken flie wherewith Anglers cheat the fishes) was onely given out to tempt King Henry to a longer patience, and quiet expectation of the event. But by this time Queen Katharine had privately prevailed with the Pope, to advoke the cause to Rome, as a place of more indifferency for a plea of so high concernment. Whereupon Campegius took his leave of the King, and returned into Italy.

An end in vain expected.

Oct. 22.

49. The Papists tell us, that Cardinal Campegius sent over before him some amatorious Letters, which passed written with the Kings own hand, betwixt him and his dear Nan, as he termed her. These are said to import more familiarity then chastity betwixt them, and are carefully kept, and solemnly shewn in the Vatican to strangers, especially of the English Nation, though some suspect them to be but forged. For though the King had wantonness enough to write such Letters, yet Anna Bollen had wit and wariness too much, to part with them. It would more advance the Popish project, could they shew any return from her to the King accepting his offers, which they pretend not to produce. Our Authors generally agree, her denialls more inflamed the Kings desires. For though perchance nothing more then a woman was wish'd by his wilde fancy, yet nothing less then an husband would content her conscience. In a word, so cunning she was in her chastity, that the farther she put him from her, the nearer she fastened his affections unto her.

Love-Letters of King Hen. kept in the Vatican.

50. Still was the Kings cause more delaied in the Court of Rome. If a melancholick School-man can spin out a speculative controversie with his Pro's and Con's, to some quires of paper, where the profit is little to others, and none to himself, except satisfying his curiosity, and some popular applause; no wonder if the Casuists at Rome (those cunning Masters of Defence) could lengthen out a cause of so high concernment, and so greatly beneficial unto them. For, English silver now was current, and our gold volant in the Popes Courts, whither such masses of money daily were transported, England knew not certainly what was expended, nor Rome what received herein. Yea, for seven years was this suit depending in the Popes Court; after which Apprentiship, the Indentures were not intended to be cancelled, but the cause still to be kept on foot, it being for the interest, to have it alwayes in doing, and never done. For, whilest it depended, the Pope was sure of two great friends; but, when it was once decided, he was sure of one great foe, either the Emperour, or our King of England.

No haste to end the Kings cause at Rome.

51. It was a Maxime true of all men, but most of King Henry, Omnis mora properanti nimia. He (who would have not onely what, but when he would himself) was vexed with so many delayings, deferrings, retardings, prorogations, prolongations, procrastinations, betwixt two Popes (as one may say) Clement that was, and Wolsey that would be. So that all this while, after so much adoe, there was nothing done in his business, which now was no nearer to a final conclusion, then at the first beginning thereof. Yea, now began Cardinal Wolsey to decline in the Kings favour, suspecting him for not cordial in his cause, and ascribing much of the delay to his backwardness herein. More hot did the displeasure of Queen Katharine burn against him, beholding beholding him as the chief engine, who set the matter of her Divorce first in motion. Anno Dom. 1529 Anno Regni Hen. 8. 25.

King and Queen both offended with Wolsey.

Wolsey looks two wayes in this design.

52. Be it here remembred, that in perswading the Kings Divorce, Wolsey drave on a double design: by the recess of the Kings love from Queen Katharine, to revenge himself of the Emperour; by the access of his love to Margaret of Alenson, to oblige the King of France. Thus he hoped to gain with both hands, and presumed, that the sharpness of his two-edged policy should cut on both sides: when God, to prevent him, did both blunt the edges, and break the point thereof. For, instead of gaining the love of two Kings, he got the implacable anger of two Queens; of Katharine decaying, and Anna Bollen increasing in the Kings affection. Let him hereafter look but for few fair dayes, when both the Sun-rising, and setting, frowned upon him.

1. KNow now in the next year, the Lords in Parliament put in a Bill of fourty four particulars againſt Wolſey. The moſt material was his exerciſing of power-Legative, without leave, to the prejudice of the Kings Crown and Dignity. The Bill is brought down into the Houſe of Commons, where Mr Cromwel, then Servant to the Cardinal, chanced to be a Burgeſs. Here he defended his Maſter with ſuch wit and eloquence, that even thoſe who hated the Client, yet praiſed the Advocate who pleaded in his behalf. This was the firſt time, that publick notice was taken of Cromwel his eminent parts, and advantagious ſtarting is more then half the way in the race to preferment, as afterwards in him it came to paſs. As for Wolſey, though at this time he eſcaped with life and liberty, yet were all his goods, of ineſtimable value, confiſcated to the King, and he outed of moſt of his Eccleſiaſtical promotions.

Accuſed in Parliament and well defended by Mr Cromwel his ſervant.

Prosecuted by his Enemies and removed to York.

2. Court-favourites, when it is once past noon, it is presently night with them, as here it fared with Wolsey. His enemies, of whom no want, follow the blow given unto him. For they beheld him, rather in a Sown, then as yet Dead in the Kings favour, and feared if his submission should meet with the Kings remembrance of his former services, they might produce his full restitution to power and dignity. The rather because the Cardinal was cunning to improve all to his own advantage, and the King (as yet) not cruel, though too perfect in that lesson afterwards. His enemies would not trust the Cardinal to live at London, (nor at Winchester within fifty miles thereof) but got the King to command him away to York, sending him thither, whither his conscience long since should have sent him, namely to visit his Dioceſs, so large in extent, and reside therein.

Large means allowed him.

3. Indifferent men thought that he had enough, his Foes that too much, onely himself that too little was left unto him. Pride accounts the greatest plenty, if without Pomp no better then Penury. Yet he had the whole revenues of York Arch-Bishoprick (worth then little less then four thousand pounds yearly) besides a large Pension paid him out of the Bishoprick of Winchester. Was not here fuel enough, had there not been too much fire within, such his covetousness and ambition?

He states it at York.

4. Earthly Kings may make men humbled, God alone humble. Wolsey began to state it at York as high as ever before, in proportion to his contracted revenues. Preparation is made in a Princely equipage for his Installation, attracting envie from such as beheld it. All is told unto the King, and all made worse by telling it, complaining Wolsey would never leave his pride, till life first left him. His old faults are revived and aggravated, and the King incensed afresh against him.

Arrested of Treason and dieth.

5. The Earl of Northumberland by the Commission from the King, Arrested him of high-Treason, in his own chamber, at Cawood. By slow and short journeys he setteth forward to London, meeting by the way with contrary messages from the King; Sometimes he was tickled with hopes of pardon and preferment, sometimes pinched with fears of a disgraceful death, so that he knew not how to dispose his minde, to Mirth or Mourning. Age and anguish, brought his disease of the dysentery, the pain lying much in his guts, more in his heart. Especially after Sr William Kingston was sent unto him, who being Lieutenant of the Tower seemed to carry a restraint in his looks. Coming to Leicester he died, being buried almost as obscurely as he was born. Nov. 27. 30.

Wolseys credulity befooled with a dubious Prophecy.

6. I know not whether or no it be worth the mentioning here, (however we will put it on the adventure) that Cardinal Wolsey, in his life time was inform'd by some Fortune-tellers, that he should have his end at Kingston. This his credulity interpreted of Kingston on Thames, which made him alwayes to avoid the riding through that Town, though the neareſt way from his house to the Court. Afterwards understanding that he was to be committed by the Kings express order to the charge of Sr Anthony * Kingston, it struck to his heart, too late perceiving himself deluded by that Father of Lies in his homonymous prediction.

* Hen. Lord Howard in his Book against Prophesies, chap. 28. fol. 130.

The King deluded with delays at Rome.

7. Anna Bollen did every day look fairer and fairer in the King's eyes, whilest the hopes of his marriage with her, seemed every day farther and farther from him. For, the Court at Rome meddled not with the merits of the cause, but fell upon by-points therein of lesser concernment. Yea, they divided his case into three [a] and twenty particulars; whereof the first was, Whether Prince Arthur had car. al knowledg with the Lady Katharine? This bare about a years debate; so that according to this proportion, King Henry would be, not onely past marrying, but past living, before his cause should be decided. This news put him into a passionate pensiveness, the rather, because meeting with sadness here, many populous places in England, and Cambridg particularly, being at the present visited with the sickness.

8. But

Anno Regis Hen. 8. 22. Anno Dom. 1530

8. But, it is an evil plague which brings no body profit. On this occasion Dr Cranmer retired to Waltham with two of his Pupils, the sons of Mr Cressey (a name utterly extinct in that Town where God hath fixed my present habitation) long before the memory of any alive. But, consulting Weavers [a] Funeral-Monuments of Waltham-Church (more truly then neatly by him composed) I finde therein this Epitaph,

Here lyeth Jon and Jone Cressy,
On whose soulys Jesu hav mercy. Amen.

It seems paper sometimes is more lasting then brass; all the ancient Epitaphs in that Church being defac'd by some barbarous hands, who perchance one day may want a grave for themselves.

9. The King coming to Waltham, Dr Fox his Chaplain and Almoner (afterwards Bishop of Hereford) is lodged in Mr Cressy's house: Discoursing about the Kings Divorce; Cranmer conceived that the speediest course was to prove the unlawfulness of his Match by Scripture; whence it would follow, that the Pope at first had no power to dispence therewith; and that the Universities of Christendom would sooner and truer decide the case, then the Court of Rome. This passage Fox reports to the King; who, well pleased thereat, professes that this man had the [b] Sow by the right ear: An ear which the King never left worrying, till he had got it off, and effected his will therein: Cranmer being sent for, comes to the King, who very lovingly entertains him. Indeed he was a most comely person, having an amiable eye (and as the soul sees much by the eye, so is it much seen in them) and pleasing countenance, as by his lively [c] Picture doth appear. Glad was the King to see, more to hear him enlarge himself on the former subject, that it was above the Popes power to dispense with Gods work in the Kings case. And now what fitter Nurse for the Childe, then the own Mother; what person more proper to manage this matter then Cranmer himself, who first moved it. The King resolves, and Cranmer consents he should be sent to the Pope, there to make God his petition. Leave we Cranmer for a time, preparing himself for his long journey; and come briefly to state the Kings Controversie out of Gods Word, and several Authors who have written thereof.

10. It plainly appears that a marriage with a Brothers Wife is unlawful; because expresly forbidden.

Marriage with Brothers Wives twice forbidden in Scripture.

Levit. 18. 16.

Thou shalt not uncover the Nakedness of thy Brothers Wife, it is thy Brothers Nakedness.

Wherein we have

1. A Prohibition.

Thou shalt not uncover the Nakedness of thy Brothers Wife: See all these Laws are made to men; it being presumed that the weaker sex, (whose part it is to take, not tender; accept, not offer love) would be so modest, as not to adventure of themselves on any incestuous act, except first solicited by men thereunto.

2. The Reason thereof.

It is thy Brothers Nakedness. God could according to his Dominion peremptorily have forbidden the same, without rendring a reason of his Prohibition; but that men might pay the more willing obedience to his Law, he maketh those who were to keep it, in some sort Judges of the justness thereof, endeavouring to convince their consciences, and make their souls sensible of the natural uncleanness of such an act. It is thy Brothers nakedness.

Such marriages are again forbidden in another Text. Nor can I render other reason of this Duplicate, whereas others are but once, that this should be twice prohibited; save, that God, foreseeing in his providence mens corrupt inclinations, prone here to climb over, did therefore think fit to make a double fence. Anno Dom. 1539 Anno Regni 31.

LEVIT. 20. 21.

And if a man shall take his Brothers Wife, it is an unclean thing; he hath uncovered his Brothers Nakedness, they shall be Childless.

Here we have the Prohibition backt with a Commination of being Childless, which is variously interpreted, either that they shall never have children, or if having them, they shall not survive their Parents, or if surviving, they shall not be counted children, but Bastards, illegitimate in the Court of Heaven. This Commination of being childless, as applied ad hominem, fell heavy on King Henry the eighth; who sensible that his Queen, though happy often to conceive, was unhappy almost as often to miscarry. Henry his onely Christian son, by her, died before a full year old; a second was nameless, as never living to the honour of Baptism; and of many blasted in the bud, Mary onely survived to womans estate.

This proved to be a Law of Nature.

11. Such as inquire into the nature of this Law finde it founded in Nature it self, being onely declaratory of what true reason doth dictate to man. God in making this Law did not imprint a new writing in mens hearts, but onely rub off some old rust from the same; wherefore it is added, Levit. 18. 27, 28. For all these abominations have the men of the Land done, which were before you, and the Land is defiled; that the Land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the Nations that were before you. Surely the Land would never have vomited out the Heathen for not observing a positive precept, never immediately delivered unto them, which plainly shews it was imprinted in nature, though partly obliterated by their corrupt customes to the contrary; and their consciences in their Lucid Intervals were apprehensive thereof. This would make one the more to admire, that any should maintain, that this Law, the breach whereof made the Country to avoid her Pagan Inhabitants, should be onely [a] lex impositiva & Ecclesiastica, an imposed and Church-Law. To hear of a Church-Law amongst the Canaanites, is a strange Paradox.

[a] Sanders de schism. Angli. pag. 3.

The Objection to the contrary.

12. It is objected this could not be a Law of Nature, because almost at the beginning of nature, men brake them by the consent and permission of the God of heaven; For Cain and Seth with the elder sons of Adam must be allowed to have married their own sisters, far nearer in nature then their Brothers wife.

Answered.

13. It is answered, when God first created man-kinde, it was his pleasure all men should derive their original from Eve, as she from Adam. For had he made (as one may say) two distinct houses of Man-kinde, what falling out and fighting, what bickering and battleing would have been betwixt them. If men now adayes descended from the loyns of one general Father, and womb of one mother, are full of so fierce hatred, how many and keen may their differences be presumed, had they spring from several Fountains, and then all their hatred would have been charged, not on their corruption, but on their Creation? God therefore (as the Apostle saith) Acts 17. 26. hath made of one bloud all nations. Now in the beginning of Man-kinde absolute necessity gave Brethren liberty to marry their own sisters. Yea, God himself, interpretatively, signed and sealed the same with his own consent, because his wisdom had appointed no other means without miracle, for

Anno Regis Hen. 8. 22. Anno Dom. 1530.

for the propagation of man-kinde. But when men began to be multiplied on the earth, that neceſſity being removed, the light of Nature dictated unto them the unlawfulneſs of ſuch marriages, and of ſome others more remote, as coming within the compaſs of Inceſt; though the corrupt practiſes of Pagans ſometimes treſpaſſed in that kinde. God therefore being to give his Law to the Jews, cleared and declared that light of Nature, by his poſitive Law unto his people, to whom his Goodneſs gave a Garden, and forbad a Tree, ſo inconſiderable were thoſe few prohibited, to the many perſons permitted them in marriage. For whereas there came out of [a] Egypt about ſix hundred thouſand men, beſides children, fifty perſons at the moſt (counting thoſe forbidden, as well by conſequence as expreſly) were interdicted unto them; amongſt whom one was the Marriage with a Brothers Wife. For although God permitted this by a judicial Law to his own people in caſe of [b] raiſing up ſeed to a Brother deceaſed childleſs (the will of God being the Law of Laws;) yet otherwiſe it was utterly unlawful, as whereon God had ſtamped (as is aforeſaid) a double Note of natural uncleanneſs.

a Exod. 12. 37.

b Deut. 25. 5.

14. The Law then of forbidding marriage with a Brothers Wife, being founded in nature, it was pride, and preſumption in the Pope to pretend to diſpenſe therewith. Indeed we read that the diſpenſation of the Goſpel (to ſee it dealt and diſtributed to ſeveral perſons) was committed to [c] S^t Paul (whoſe joynt ſucceſſour, with S^t Peter, the Pope pretends to be) but a Diſpenſation from the Law of God, to free men from the ſame, neither Paul nor Peter ever pretended unto. Let the Pope make relaxations of ſuch Church Canons, which meerly Eccleſiaſtical Authority hath made, there he may have the ſpecious power to remit the rigour thereof at ſome times, places and perſons, as he apprehendeth juſt occaſion. But let him not meddle to grant liberty for the breach of Gods Law. The firſt Diſpenſation in this kinde is what Satan in the Serpent gave our firſt Parents in Paradice, [d] you ſhall not ſurely dye; and whether the Granter had leſs power therein, or the receivers leſs profit thereby, we their woful poſterity have little comfort to decide.

Gods Laws indiſpenſable with by the Pope.

d Gen. 3. 4.

15. Nor doth it any thing alter the caſe, (what was ſo much controverted in the Court of Rome) whether or no Prince Arthur had carnal knowledg of his Wife, ſeeing we may obſerve, that in the Court of Heaven Marriages bear date, not from their Copulation, but ſolemn Contract; And they thenceforward are eſteemed Man and Wife before God. For it is [e] provided, that if a Damſel be betrothed to a Husband ſtill remaining a Virgin, and ſhall be layen with by another man, both of them ſhall be ſtoned to death, and ſhe puniſhed for an Adultereſs, he for humbling his Neighbours Wife. Be then the Lady Katharine known or unknown by Prince Arthur, due Benevolence is the effect, not the cauſe of Marriage, which was compleated before God, and they two made one fleſh, when ſolemnly joyned together in the face of the Congregation.

Carnal knowled not material in this controverſie.

16. Such a Marriage with a Brothers wife, thus appearing againſt the Law of God, it is ſtrange that any ſhould maintain that Publica honeſtas, publique honeſty, was the onely obſtacle of this marriage, which obſtruction (ſay they) by the Popes diſpenſation was removed, becauſe Publica Utilitas, the Publick Profit was greater, that redounded by permitting this match. Now ſuppoſe this all the obſtacle, the Poſition is dangerous and unſound; For, firſt, Chriſtians are not ſenſible of utility (as falſely ſo called) which ſtands at diſtance with Publick Honeſtie. Secondly, the publickneſs of the Profit was not adæquate to the publickneſs of the Scandal. The Profit or State-benefit thereby, onely extended to the Crowns of England and France as concerned therein; whileſt the Scandal dilated it ſelf to the People of all Chriſtian Provinces, juſtly offended thereat. And although we confeſs, that in this reſpect the world is narrower to Princes then to private perſons, as not affording ſo fit matches unto them; yet Kings have no Commiſſion to enlarge themſelves herein, by the actual breach of Gods Commandment.

No Chriſtian utility inconſiſtent with honeſty.

Eraſmus, a greater Scholar then Divine, was very doubtful in his judgment herein. He is made by ſome modern Apocalyptical Commentaries to be the Angel flying ἐν μεσουρανήματι, that is (as they will have it) in a middle diſtance betwixt Heaven and Earth, which how it agrees to the Text, I know not. It alludeth well to his dubious poſture betwixt different opinions in Religion, and particularly in this Controverſie; ſometimes being for King Henry, and ſometimes againſt him herein.

The Earl preſented the Pope a Book of Cranmers penning, proving Gods Law indiſpenſable with by the Pope: A Book as welcome to his Holineſs as a priſon, beholding his own power therein limited and confined. Promiſe was made of a publick Diſputation, but never performed, Onely the Pope (who is excellent at the making of nothing ſomething, by the ſolemn giving thereof) made Cranmer ſupreme Penitentiary (an empty Title) throughout all his Dominions; This was onely to ſtay his ſtomach for that time, in hope of a more plentiful Feaſt hereafter, if Cranmer had been pleaſed to take his repaſt on any Popiſh preferment.

Wonder not herein, at the silence of many Dutch Universities, Wittemberg, Heidelberg, Tubing, Bazil, that they interposed not their opinions herein; for these having formerly utterly exploded the Popes power, were conceived partial, and therefore incompetent Judges in this point: Wherefore the King onely solicited such Universities in this his Case, which [as yet] remained in fast and firm obedience to the See of Rome.

20. Of all the Universities declaring for the Popes inability to dispence with Gods positive command, most bold and daring (because largest, fullest clearest) was that of Bononia, the chief City in Romandiola, a Province of Peters Patrimony, and that City the Popes retiring place. Nor can I omit the conclusion of their Declaration. We confidently do hold and witness, that such Marriage is horrible, accursed, and to be cried out upon, and utterly abominable, not onely for a Christian man, but for an Infidel, unfaithful or heathen, and that it is prohibited under grievous pains and punishments, by the Law of God, of Nature, and of man; and that the Pope, though he may do much, unto whom Christ gave the [i] Keys of the Kingdom of heaven, hath no power to give a dispensation to any man to contract such Marriage. In witness whereof we confirm this our judgment, both under the Seal of our University, as also with the Seal of our Colledg of Doctors of Divinity, and have subscribed it in the Cathedral Church of Bonony, this tenth of June, in the year of our Lord, 1530.

21. [k] Sanders hath little to say against so many and clear decisions of the Universities; onely he tels us, that all the Kings Agents had not equal success in their Negotiations: and particularly that one Hutton, the Kings instrument herein could not bow those of Hamborough and Lubeck, to express themselves against the Marriage. But surely these two places were onely Gymnasia, for I finde them not mentioned amongst the Dutch Universities. Also he saith that Richard Crook, another of the Kings Emissaries, prevailed nothing on many Germane Professors, and particularly he praiseth the University of Colen, for their recusancy therein. As for such who subscribed on the Kings side, he pretends that Bribes bought their judgments; as if our King Henry had learnt from King [l] Solomon, that Money recompenceth all things. The best is, the cleanly hands of the Court of Rome, had never, no doubt any bribes sticking to their fair fingers. But though that English-Angels flew over to foraign Universities, yet there lieth a real distinction betwixt a Bribe and a Boon, freely bestowed, not to bow and bias their opinions; but to gratifie their pains, and remunerate their industry, in studying of the point.

Acknowledg the King Supreme Head of the Church.

24. But the King would not be ſo ſatisfied with the payment of the money, except alſo they would acknowledg him to be Supreme Head of the Church. This was hard meat, and would not eaſily down amongſt them, however being throughly debated in a Synodical way, both in the upper and lower houſes of Convocation; they did in fine agree, on this expreſſion, cujus (Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ) ſingularem Protectorem, unicum & ſupremum Dominum, & (quantum per Chriſti leges licet) ſupremum caput ipſius Majeſtatem recognoſcimus.

Confirmed by Act of Parliament.

25. This thus conſented unto, and ſubſcribed by the hands of the Clergie, (as appears at large in the Records and Acts of the Convocation) and ſo preſented to the King in the name of his Clergie; was afterwards confirmed by Parliament, and incorporated into a ſolemn Act for the ratification thereof.

36. Fourth accuſation, the Lincoln-ſhire Rebels, in their ſix Articles of their grievances preſented to King Henry the eighth complain, that this Arch-Biſhop, and other Prelates of his Graces late promotion, had [b] ſubverted the Faith of Chriſt, &c.

Ill uſed againſt a loyal ſubject.

37. I Anſwer, they were the Lincoln-ſhire Rebels that ſaid it, and this their pretended ſubverting of the faith, was the reforming and confirming thereof; Cranmer ſerving the God of his Fathers in that way which they termed Hereſie. Wellthereforе might this cavil have been waved, good onely to ſwell the Volume.

The grand cavil.

c Mr Pryn, pag. 133.

38. Fifth Cavil, though Matthew Parker reports (as this [c] Delator confeſſes) that Cranmer oppoſed this act of the ſix Articles at firſt, then cauſed it to be moderated, and at laſt to be repealed in King Edwards dayes, but others ſeem to imply that he gave conſent thereunto at firſt.

Anſwered.

39. To this I Anſwer three things: Firſt, to imply is far leſs then to expreſs, and ſuch implications are often the bare ſurmiſes of a byaſſed apprehenſion. Secondly, to ſeem to imply, is leſs then to imply, nulla videntur quæ non ſunt. Thirdly, the Others by him mentioned, ought to have been nominated, this Author generally giving no ſcant meaſure in ſuch wares; ſo that his margin (commonly over-thronged) is here quite empty of quotations. Inopem nunc copia fecit. We may aſſure our ſelves he would have alledged ſuch Other Authors, but for ſeveral ſubſtantial reaſons, whereof this was one, becauſe he had none to alledg. And ſhall an uncertain, un-named No body, be believed againſt Cranmer, before Mr Fox, and Dr Parkers clear teſtimonies in his behalf?

Violent no juſt depriving.

40. Seventh Cavil. He ſuffered Martyrdome, not while he was a Biſhop, but when degraded and deprived. What of this? does this tend any thing to the diſgrace of him or his order, ſeeing ſuch an injurious and violent degradation, deprived him not of his Epiſcopal indeleble character, ſo that ſtill in right he remained a Biſhop?

God ſend valour at laſt.

41. Eight Cavil. He failed more in his Martyrdome, by reaſon of his cowardly recantation, thorow hopes of life, and reſtitution to his former dignity, then any of his fellow Martyrs. Anſwer, It is confeſſed: But his final conſtancy may well cover his intermediate failings. Better it is faintly and fearfully to bear in our body the marks of our Lord Jeſus, then ſtoutly and ſtubbornly to endure the brands of our own indiſcretion.

42. Laſt

Anno Regis Hen. 8. 24. Anno Dom. 1533.

42. Laſt Cavil. He was condemned for high Treaſon, for an act done by him as an Arch-Biſhop, and Councellor of State, for which he profeſſed both his ſorrow [a] and repentance. Did he ſo indeed, by the confeſſion of his adverſary? The more unworthy man his accuſor, after this his ſorrow and repentance to upbraid him therewith. Mr Pryn might alſo remember that the two Lord chief Juſtices were in the ſame Treaſon (whoſe Education made them more known in the Laws of the Land) and our Cranmer was laſt and leaſt in the fault, it being long before he could be perſwaded to ſubſcribe to the diſinheriting of Queen Mary.

Remember not what God had forgotten.

[a] Mr Pryn, 134.

43. We appeal to the unpartial Reader, upon the peruſal of the premiſſes, whither an ordinary charity, might not, yea ought not to have paſt by theſe accuſations, and whether the memory of Arch-Biſhop Cranmer may not juſtly ſay of Mr Pryn, as once the King of [b] Iſrael, of the King of Syria, wherefore conſider I pray you, and ſee how he ſeeketh a quarrel againſt me? Indeed ſo great is his antipathy againſt Epiſcopacy, that if a Seraphim himſelf ſhould be a Biſhop, he would either finde or make ſome ſick feathers in his wings.

An appeal to any indifferent.

44. Cranmer was now ſetled in his Arch-Biſhoprick, and the firſt eminent act of his office was exerciſed in the Kings Divorce. A Court is called in the Priory of Dunſtable in Bedford-ſhire, as a favourable place, indifferently diſtanced, but five miles from Amphil, where Queen Katharine reſided. With Cranmer were the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, Bath, and Lincoln, with many other great Prelates. Theſe ſummoned Queen Katharine to appear before them, full fifteen dayes together, on whoſe refuſal they not onely adjudged her contumacious, but alſo pronounced her match with the King as null and unlawful by Scripture; and ſoon after it was proclaimed, that hence forward none ſhould call her Queen, but the Dowager of Prince Arthur. And thus a few dayes had diſpatched that Divorce, which had depended many years in the Court of Rome.

Cranmer Divorceth King Henry.

45. And now I cannot call King Henry a Batchelor, becauſe once married; nor a married man, becauſe having no wife; nor properly a widower, becauſe his wife was not dead. But he therefore a ſingle, or rather a ſeparated perſon, remaining ſo (if at all) but a very ſhort time, as ſoon after ſolemnly married to the Lady Anna Bollen, of whom largely hereafter.

Who Marrieth a Lady, and a Bollen.

46. Now began Elizabeth Barton to play her tricks, commonly called the holy Maid of Kent, though at this day of Kent alone is left unto her, as whoſe Maiden-ſhip is vehemently ſuſpected, and holineſs utterly denied; ſhe was famous on a double account. Firſt, for knowing ſecrets paſt, and indeed ſhe could tell any thing which was told her; converſing with Fryers her familiars, and other folks Confeſſors, who revealed many privacies unto her. Secondly, ſhe was eminent for foretelling things to come, and ſome of her predictions hit in the mark, procured to the reſt the reputation of prophecy with credulous people. She foretold that King Henry ſhould not be King a full twelve moneth, except he reaſſumed Queen Katharine to be his Wife.

The Impoſture of Elizabeth Barton.

47. I am heartily ſorry that the gravity of John Fiſher, Biſhop of Rochecheſter ſhould be ſo light, and the ſharp ſight of Sr Thomas More ſo blinde, as to give credit to ſo notorious an Impoſtrix, which plunged them both into the Kings deep diſpleaſure. As for Elizabeth Barton, ſoon after ſhe was executed, with many of her complices and complotters. The Papiſt at this day, unable to defend her forgery, and unwilling to confeſs her cheating, ſeek to ſalve all by pleading her to be diſtracted. Thus if ſucceeding ſhe had been praiſed (and perchance Canonized) for her devotion; now failing ſhe muſt be pardoned and pitied for her diſtraction.

Fiſher & More beſooled by her forgery.

48. We may remember, how, not long ſince, the Clergie did own, and recognize King Henry the eighth, for Supreme Head of the Church, which was clearly carried by a plurality of voices in the Convocation. John Fiſher, Biſhop of Rocheſter, was the onely eminent Clergy-man, who openly oppoſed it.

it. One obnoxious to the Kings displeasure, on a threefold account; first, for engaging so zealously, (above the earnestness of an Advocate) against the Kings Divorce. Secondly, for tampering with that notable Impostrix, the holy maid of Kent. Thirdly, for refusing the Oath of Supremacy, for which he was now imprisoned. Indeed this Bishop lost himself (both with his friends and his foes) by his inconstancy at the first, seeing he who should have been as staid as the Tower, was as watering as the weather-cock, neither complying with the King, nor agreeing with himself; but would and would not, acknowledge the Kings Supremacy. But at last he fixed himself on the negative, and resolutely continued therein till the day of his death, of whom more largely hereafter.

The Convocation of York denies the Kings Supremacy.

49. The Clergie in the Province of York did also for a long time deny the Kings Supremacy. Indeed the Convocation of York hath ever since struck Tallies with that of Canterbury, though not implicitly) unanimously post-concurring therewith; But here they dissented, not because more knowing in their judgments, or tender in their consciences, but generally more superstitious, and addicted to Popery. Insomuch that they sent two Letters to the King (I conceive them written, one from the upper, the other from the lower house of Convocation) wherein they acquainted his Highness with their judgments, (interlacing many expressions of general submission) and their Reasons in a large discourse, why they could not acknowledg him to be Supreme Head of the Church.

Edw. Lee Arch-Bishop of York a furious Papist. De Scriptoribus Brit. in Edwardo Sexto.

50. Give me leave to suspect Edward Lee, Arch-Bishop of York, for a secret fomentor of this difference. He was a virulent Papist, much conceited of his own Learning, (which made him to write against Erasmus) and a persecutor of Protestants; witness John Bale, convented before him for suspicion of heresie, who in vain earnestly pleaded Scripture in his own defence, till at last he casually made use of a distinction out of Scotus, which the Arch-Bishop more valued, then all which he had before more pertinently alledged out of the Old and New Testament.

King Henry his answer to York Convocation.

51. King Henry wrote a fair and large Letter to the Convocation of York, too long here to be inserted, (though otherwise I have a good [a] Copy thereof) wherein the King began mildly to make the passage for his Supremacy into their consciences, by a Rational and Argumentative way. He disclaimed all design by fraud to surprize, or by force to captivate their judgments, but onely to convince them of the Truth, and Equity of what he desired. He [b] declavered the sence of Supreme Head of the Church, (though offensive in the sound to ignorant ears) claiming nothing more thereby, then what Christian Princes in the Primitive times assumed to themselves, in their own Dominions, so that it seems he wrought so far on their affections, that at last they consented thereunto.

[a] Communicated unto me by my good friend Dr Littleton.

[b] It is printed in the second part of the Cabal.

A couseless cavil.

52. Here I wonder at the cavil of the Papists, which being so causeless, should be so clamorous, accusing us to have a [c] Parliament Religion, a Parliament Faith, a Parliament Gospel; and [d] another addeth Parliament Bishops, and a Parliament Clergy. Whereas upon serious examination it will appear, that there was nothing done in the Reformation of Religion, save what was acted by the Clergy in their Convocations, or grounded on some Act of theirs, precedent to it, with the advice, counsel, and consent of the Bishops and most eminent Church-men; confirmed upon the Postfact, and not otherwise, by the Civil Sanction, according to the usage of the best and happiest times of Christianity.

[c] Harding against Jewel.

[d] Stubbings.

The Cavil retorted.

53. By the same proportion in the dayes of Queen Mary the Popish Religion, might have been stiled a Parliament Religion, because after the same had been debated on, and concluded of in the Convocation, it was confirmed by the Queen, Lords and Commons, by the Act of Parliament.

SECT. III.

To the Right Worſhipful,

Sir RICHARD SHUGBOROUGH

OF

SHUGBOROUGH in Warwick-ſhire.

MAſter Haward returned this anſwer to Queen Mary (demanding the cauſes of his coming to Court) that it was partly to ſee Her Highneſs, and partly that Her Highneſs ſhould ſee him; an anſwer, which though more witty then Court-like; yea, more blunt, then witty, ſhe took in good part.

You will not be offended at this my Dedication, partly that I may know you, partly that I may be known unto you. Beſides, being informed, that you love to have your Hoſpital Table handſomly attended with Ancient Servitors; I preſumed that this Section, containing much of memorable Antiquity, would not be unwelcome unto you.

Hen. 8 25. | 1533

1. NOw though nothing was done in matters of Religion, but what was fairly and largely diſcuſſed; firſt by the moſt Learned of the Clergy; yet this year the Clergy in the Convocation ſo ſubmitted themſelves to the King, that each one ſeverally promiſed in verbo Sacerdotis, never henceforth to preſume to alledg, claim, or put in ure, any new Canons, unleſs the Kings moſt Royal Aſſent might be had unto them, and this ſoon after the ſame was ratified by Act of Parliament.

The Clergie bind themſelves to the King.

2. And here it will be worth my pains, and the Readers peruſal to obſerve the differences between Engliſh Synods or Convocations, which may eminently be diſtinguiſhed into four ranks, ſuch as were,

A fourfold ſort of Convocations.

1. Called

Anno Dom. 1533. Anno Regni 25.

1. Called before the Conqueſt.
2. Called ſince the Conqueſt, but before the Statute of Præmunire was made.
3. Called after the aforeſaid Statute, but before another made in the Reign of King Henry the eighth, wherein the Clergie were bound up, for doing ought, without the Royal aſſent.
4. Called after the twenty fifth year of the Reign of King Henry the eighth.

Theſe did plainly differ in the ſeveral manners of their meeting, and degrees of power, of their acting in Spiritual matters.

Kings Acted in Church matters before the Conqueſt.

3. As for Councels, called before the Conqueſt, whileſt the Popes power, had not as yet Lorded it over the Kings of England, the Kings ever were (if not in perſon) in power preſent thereat; as by peruſing Sr Henry Spelmans Councils plainly doth appear. Yea, matters both of Church and Common-wealth were often dictated and concluded in the ſame Meeting, Communi conſenſu tam Cleri quam a Populi Epiſcoporum, procerum, comitum, nec non omnium Sapientum, Seniorum populorumq; totius Regni.

a Sir Henry Spelman, Anno 665. pag. 118.

Of the ſecond ſort of Convocations.

4. For the ſecond ſort (called after the Conqueſt, but before the Statute of Præmunire) the Arch-Biſhops of Canterbury or York, uſed upon all extraordinary, and immergent caſes, toties, quoties, as their own diſcretions adjudging neceſſary or convenient, to aſſemble the Clergie of their reſpective Provinces, at what place they pleaſed, continuing Convocations in them ſo long, or diſſolving them, as ſoon as they pleaſed. And this they did, either as Metropolitans, or Primates, or as Legati Nati to the Pope of Rome, without any leave from the King afore obtained, and ſuch Canons, and Conſtitutions then and there concluded on, were in that Age (without any further Ratification) obligatory to all ſubjected to their juriſdiction. Such were all the Synods from Lanckfranck to Thomas Arundel, in whoſe time the Satute of Præmunire was enacted.

Of the third ſort of Convocations.

5. A Third ſort of Convocation ſucceeds: For after the Statute of Præmunire was made, (which did much reſtraine the Papal power, and ſubject it to the Laws of the Land) when Arch-Biſhops called no more Convocations by their ſole and abſolute command, but at the pleaſure of the King, as oft as his neceſſities and occaſions with the diſtreſſes of the Church did require it. Yea, now their meetings were by vertue of a Writ or Precept from the King, and it will not be amiſs here to exemplifie the form thereof.

The form of ancient Writs of Convocations.

6. REX, &c. Reverendiſſimo in Chriſto Patri, A. Canturienſi Archiepiſcopo totius Angliæ primati, & Apoſtolicæ ſedis legato ſalutem. Quibuſdam arduis & urgentibus negotiis, defenſionem & ſecuritatem Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ, ac pacem, tranquillitatem, & bonum publicum, & defenſionem Regni noſtri, & ſubditorum reſtrorum ejuſdem concernentibus, vobis in fide & dilectione, quibus nobis tenemini rogando mandamus, quatenus præmiſſis debito intuitu attentis & ponderatis univerſos & ſingulos Epiſcopos noſtræ Provinciæ, ac Decanes, & Præcores Eccleſiarum Cathedralium Abbates, Priores & alios Electivos Exemptos, & non Exemptos. Nec non Archidiaconos, Conventus, Capitula, & Collegia, totumq; Clerum, cujuſlibet Diœceſeos ejuſdem Provinciæ, ad conveniendum eorum vobis in Eccleſia Sancti Pauli London, vel alibi prout melius expedire videritis, cum omni celeritate accommoda modo debito convocari faciatis; Ad tractandum, conſentiendum, & concludendum, ſuper præmiſſis & aliis, quæ ſibi clarius proponentur, tunc & ibidem ex parte noſtrâ. Et hoc ſicut nos & ſtatum Regni noſtri, & honorem & utilitatem Eccleſiæ prædictæ diligitis nullatenus omittatis. Teſte me ipſo, &c.

Anno Regis Hen. 8 25. Anno Dom. 1533

7. In this Writ we may obſerve, firſt, that from the word Convocari faciatis, the word Convocation took its denomination, being formerly called Synods, as lately (ſince our Scotizing) termed Aſſemblies. Secondly, that clauſe, in Eccleſia Sancti Pauli London, vel alibi prout melius expedire videritis, pointeth at a power placed, or rather a Liberty left to the Arch-Biſhops, to call their Synods elſewhere, in caſe they adjudged it more convenient. But becauſe the Arch-Biſhops, and Biſhops, might the better attend their buſineſs in Parliaments (henceforward commonly kept at the ſame time with Convocations) S^t Pauls in London was generally preferred for the place of their convention. Thirdly, this Writ was uſed even after the Reformation, mutatis mutandis, namely, the title of Apoſtolical Legate to the Arch-Biſhop being left out, as alſo the names of Priors, and Abbots are extinguiſhed. Laſtly, of this third Sort of Convocations, was all thoſe kept by Thomas Arundel and the Arch-Biſhops of Canterbury his ſucceſſors, unto Thomas Cranmer; or if you will, from the ſixteenth of Richard the ſecond, unto the twenty fifth of King Henry the eighth. Theſe Convocations did alſo make Canons (as in Lynwood his Conſtitutions do appear) which were binding, although none other, then Synodical authority did confirm them.

Obſervations thereon.

8. The laſt ſort of Convocations remains, called ſince the Statute, the twenty fifth of King Henry the eighth, that none of the Clergie ſhould preſume to attempt, alledge, claim, or put in ure, any Conſtitutions or Ordinances Provincial, or Synodals, or any other Canons, Conſtitutions, or Ordinances Provincial, (by whatſoever name or names they may be called) in their Convocation in time coming; (which alwayes ſhall be aſſembled by the Kings Writ) unleſs the ſame Clergie may have the Kings moſt Royal Aſſent and Licence to make, promiſe and execute ſuch Canons, Conſtitutions and Ordinances Provincial, or Synodical, upon pain of every one of the ſaid Clergie doing the contrary to this Act, and thereof convicted, to ſuffer impriſonment, and making Fine at the Kings will. Since this year, from Arch-Biſhop Cranmer to Arch-Biſhop Laud, all Convocations (ſo long as they laſted) are born tongue-tied, till the King did cut the ſtring thereof with his Letters Patent, allowing them leave to debate on matters of Religion. Otherwiſe, what they conclude, are arrows without piles; daggers without points; too blunt to pierce into the practiſe of others, but ſharp enough to wound themſelves, and bring them within the compaſs of a Præmunire. Yea, even ſuch Convocations with the Royal aſſent, ſubject not any (for recuſancy to obey their Canons) to a civil penalty in perſon or property, until confirmed by Act of Parliament.

The laſt ſort of Convocations.

9. This I humbly conceive to be the difference betwixt the three kindes of Convocations, ſubmitting what I have written to the cenſure and correction of the Learned in the Law, conſcious of my own ignorance therein, as indeed ſuch skill neither is to be expected or required in one of my profeſſion, who am ready with willingneſs, yea, with cheerfulneſs, yea, with thankfulneſs to God and man, publickly to recall, and retract what any ſuch convince me to have miſtaken herein; hoping that my ſtumbling in ſo dark a ſubject, may prevent the failing of others.

The Authors ſubmiſſion.

10. There goeth a tradition (taken up by many without examination) that anciently the Clergie ſat as one body with the Parliament, and were not divided till in the Reign of King Henry the eighth, as a * modern Author hath written in a Tract. But when I asked of Him, where he had read the ſame, he cited a French Letter of Cardinal Sadolets. Strange that a Foraigner ſhould be more ſeeing herein, then any of our Native Authors and Records that I ever could behold. But it may be, the Error had its Original hence, becauſe anciently Biſhops ſitting in the Parliament, did not alwayes appear perſonally, or by the proxie of men of their own order, but ſometimes ſent one or more of the inferiour Clergie to repreſent them, if it be true what I have read in a ſmall Engliſh book, bearing the name of M^r Selden (but I queſtion whether avowed by him) of the proceedings in Parliament.

A vulgar Errour.

* Calebut Downing.

11. John

The Martyrdom of John Fryth.

11. John Fryth ſealed the Truth with his bloud, one who juſtly may be ſaid aged ſixty at ſix and twenty (ſo young was he Martyred) ſuch his learning, gravity, and conſtancy. It was chiefly charged on him, that he denyed the believing of the real preſence in the Sacrament (underſtand him de modo thereof) to be an Article of the Faith, though confeſſing Chriſt really preſent, in the bread, ſo he might not be compelled to the worſhipping thereof. But theſe things are ſet down largely in Mr Fox. Onely I will add, that perſons out of groundleſſe ſuggeſt two ſcandals on this good man, and his wives memory. One that he was guilty of ſome practiſe againſt the State, meerly becauſe he was committed to the Tower. The other that his wife being beyond the Seas with Mr Tyndal, expreſſing himſelf, content with the will of God, that for her ſake ſhe would not have the glory of God hindered, deſired to be rid of her husbands life, that Mr Tyndal might the more freely enjoy her company. Thus this Jeſuite, being himſelf a Baſtard, meaſureth others by the chaſtity of his own Parents. Indeed the aforeſaid Tyndal much exhorted Fryth to patient ſuffering, but not as thoſe Cowardly Captains, which encourage others to fight, and themſelves forſake the field, becauſe afterwards he valiantly brought up the rear, and ſuffered for the ſame cauſe two years after.

Anno Dom. 1533 — Anno Regis Hen. 8 25.

Biſhop Fiſhers Letter for new cloaths and a Confeſſour.

12. John Fiſher, Biſhop of Rocheſter, was now priſoner in the Tower, where he was but courſely uſed, as appears by a Letter to Mr Secretary Cromwel. 1534 — 26.

a Ex literis in Bibliotheca Cottoniana.

a FUrthermore I beſeche yow to be gode Maſter unto me in my neceſſitie, for I have neither Shirt, nor Sute, nor yet other Clothes, that ar neceſſary to me to weare; but that be ragged and torn to ſhameſully. And now in mine Age, my ſtomake may not away but with a few kind of meats, which if I want, I decay forthwith, and fall into coffs, and diſeaſes of my body, and cannot keep my ſelfe in health. And, as our Lord knoweth, I have nothing left unto me for to provide any better, but as my b brother of his own purſe laieth out for me, to his great hinderance.

b Robert Fiſher.

Wherefore gode Maſter Secretary, eſtſones I beſeche yow to have ſom pittie pon me, and let me have ſuch things as bar neceſſary for me in mine Age, and eſpecially for my health; and alſo that it may pleaſe yow by yowr high wyſdome, to move the Kings Highneſſe to take me unto his gracious favour againe, and to reſtore me unto my liberty, out of this cold and painful Impriſonment; whereby ye ſhall bind me to be yowr pore beadſman for ever unto Almighty God, who ever have yow in his protection and cuſtody.

Other twain things I muſt alſo deſyer upon yow; firſt, oon is, that itt may pleaſe yow, that I may take ſome Preeſt within the Tower, by th'aſſignment of Maſter Livetenant, to have my confeſſion againſt my hooly tym.

That other is, that I may borrow ſome bookes to ſtir my devotion mor effectually theis hooly dayes, for the comfortte of my ſowl. This I beſeche yow to grant me of yowr charitie. And thus our Lord ſend yow a mery Chriſtenmas, and a comfortable to yowr heart deſyer. Att the Tower this xxij. day of December.

Tour poor Beadſman

JOHN ROFFE.

His firſt petition for cloaths was granted him, (having exchange thereof at his execution) and it is probable the other two petitions being ſo reaſonable were not denied him.

19. During

Ann. Dom. 1535. Ann. Regis Hen. 8. 27.

19. During his durance in the Tower, he was often and ſtrictly examined, before Sir Edmund Walſingham Lieutenant thereof, by Thomas Bedyll, and Richard Layton Clerks of the Councell, and was ſworn in verbo Sacerdotii, to anſwer to many Interrogatories, but chiefly concerning four ſubjects. His often examinations.

Firſt, about the King's Divorce; wherein he was alwaies conſtant to what he had printed of the unlawfulneſſe thereof. Of four principal particulars

Secondly, about His Supremacy, which (at laſt) he peremptorily denyed.

Thirdly, about his concealing the Impoſture of Elizabeth Barton, the Maide of Kent; wherein, he confeſſed his weakneſſe, and over-eaſie beliefe; but utterly denied any ill Intentions to the King's Perſon.

Fourthly, about the Statute of Succeſſion, wherein (as appears by his Letter to * Secretary Cromwell) he was content to ſubſcribe, and ſwear to the body, but not to the Preamble thereof. * Extant in Sir Thomas Cotton's Library.

20. Which words therein, ſo offenſive to Fiſher (except there be any other unprinted Preface to this Statute) were theſe: The Biſhop [a] of Rome and See Apoſtolick, contrary to the great and invielable grants of Juriſdiction by God immediately to Emperours, Kings, and Princes, in Succeſſion to their Heires, hath preſumed in times paſt to inveſt, who ſhould pleaſe them to inherit in other mens Kingdomes and Dominions: which thing we Your moſt humble Subjects, both Spiritual and Temporal, doe moſt abhorre and deteſt. Taketh offence at the Preface of the Statute. a See the printed Statutes, 25 of Hen. 8. cap. 21 p. 558.

21. Here I know not whether more to commend the policy or charity of Archbiſhop Cranmer, deſiring in a Letter to [b] Secretary Cromwell, that this partial ſubſcription which Biſhop Fiſher proffered, to the Statute of Succeſſion, might be accepted: adding, that good uſe might be made thereof, to the King's advantage, ſuch generall reputation the World had of this Biſhop's Learning, and of Sir Thomas Moore's: both which, it ſeems, went the ſame path and pace, and in this point, ſtarted, ran, and ſtopp'd together. Indeed, it was not good to ſtrain ſuch fine ſtrings too high, which poſſibly moiſtened with milde uſage, might in proceſſe of time, have been ſtretched to a further compliance. But, it ſeems, nothing at preſent would ſatisfie, except both of them came up to the full meaſure of the King's demands. Archbiſhop Cranmer his politick charity. b ex Litt. MS. in Bib. Cotton.

22. As for Biſhop Fiſher his concealing the pretended Propheſies of Elizabeth Barton, it was ſo farre waved, that he was never indicted for the ſame. And indeed he made an ingenuous Plea for himſelf; namely, that the ſaid Elizabeth had told him, ſhe had acquainted the King therewith; yea, he had aſſurance thereof from the [c] Archbiſhop. And therefore, knowing the King knew of it; before, he he was loath to hazard His diſpleaſure in that, which was not revealing what was unknown, but repeating what would be unwelcome to His Grace. Fiſher concealing Barton's forgeries, waved. c in his Letter to the King, in bib. Cotton.

23. But not long after, he was arreigned of high Treaſon, and it will not be amiſſe to inſert the ſting of the Indictment out of the Originall. Yet how indicted, why condemned.

* May 7. DIverſis Domini Regis veris, ſubditis falsè malitioſè & proditoriè loquebatur & propalabat videlicet. The King owre Soveraigne Lord is not Supreme Hed yn erthe of the Cherche of England. In dicti Domini Regis immund. deſpect. & vilipendium manifeſt. * His words were ſpoken May 7. in the Tower of London, but he arraigned afterwards.

Of this he was found guilty, had Judgment, and was remanded to the Tower, where, for a time, we leave him, and proceed.

Ann. Dom. 1535. Ann. Regis Hen. 27.

Papists unjustly charge us for Schismaticks.

24. Thus was the power of the Pope totally abolished out of England, whereof the Romanists at this day doe bitterly complain, but can revenge themselves no other way, save by aspersing us as guilty of Schisme and Separation for rending our selves from the Mother-Church. Blame us not, if loath that the Church of England (in whole Doctrine and Discipline we were born, and bred, and desire to die) should lie under so foule and false an Imputation, which by the following Narrative may fully be confuted.

Three Essentials in Reformation.

25. Three things are Essential to justifie the English Reformation, from the scandal of Schisme, to shew, that they had

1. Just cause for which
2. True authority by which } they deceded from Rome.
3. Due moderation in what

The grosse errors in Popery.

26. The first will plainly appear, if we consider the abominable Errors, which contrary to Scripture and Primitive practise were then crept into the Church of Rome. As the denying the Cup to the Laity; Worshipping of Images; locking up the Scriptures in Latine, and performing prayers in an unknown Tongue, with the monstrosity of Transubstantiation, unexcusable practises. Besides, the Behemoth of the Pope's Infallibility, and the Leviathan of his Universall Jurisdiction, so exclaimed against by Gregory the great, as a Note of Anti-Christ.

The impossibility of a free generall Councell.

27. Just cause of Reformation being thus proved, proceed we to the Authority by which it is to be made. Here we confesse the most regular way, was by order from a Free and Generall Councell, but here alas no hope thereof. General it could not be, the Greeks not being in a capacity of repairing thither; not Free, such the Papal Usurpation; For before men could trie the Truth, hand to hand, by dint of Scripture (the Sword and Buckler thereof, by God's appointment) the Pope took off all his Adversaries, at distance, with (those Guns of Hellish Invention) his Infallibility and Universall Jurisdiction, so that no approaching his presence to oppose him, but with certainty of being pre-condemned.

The power of a Nationall Church well improved.

28. Now seeing the Complaints of the conscientious in all Ages, against the Errors in the Romish Church, met with no other entertainment than frowns and frets, and afterwards fire and faggot, it came seasonably into the mindes of those who steered the English Nation, to make use of that power which God had bestowed upon them. And seeing they were a National Church under the civil command of one King, He by the advice and consent of his Clergie in Convocation, and great Council in Parliament, resolved to reform the Church under His inspection from grosse abuses crept into it, leaving it free to other Churches either to follow His example, or continue in their former condition: and on these terms was the English Reformation first advanced.

Objection to the contrary.

29. But the Romanists object, that England being first converted to Christianity, by the zeale and care of the Church of Rome, (when Pope Gregory the great sent Augustine over to preach here) cannot, not onely without great Ingratitude, but flat Undutifulnesse depart from the Church which first taught it true Religion.

Answer 1.

It is answered, First, this Argument reacheth not west of Severne into Wales, where the antient Britains by generall confession, were converted before the time of Augustine.

Answer 2.

Secondly, this first favour received from Rome, puts not on England so strict and servile an obligation of perpetual continuance, that she may and must not serve God without asking her leave. It ties England onely to a faire and gratefull respect, which she alwaies tender'd, till the Insolency of the Church of Rome, made Us unwilling to pay, and Her unworthy to receive it.

Answer 3.

Thirdly, some strength may be allowed to this Objection, if Rome could be proved the same in Doctrine and Discipline, when under the Reign of King Henry the eighth, England divided it self from it, with Rome, when in the time of Grego-

Ann. Dom. 1535. Ann. Regis H. 8. 27.

ry the great, it was converted by God's bleſsings on his endeavours. But ſince that time the Church of Rome hath been much corrupted in Opinions and practiſe, eaſie to prove, but that it is not the ſet work of our Hiſtory.

2. Objection of the Romaniſts.

30. But again the Papiſts object, that the moſt judicious Proteſtants doe ingeniouſly confeſſe, that the Church of Rome maintaineth all the Fundamentals of Religion. England therefore cannot be excuſed from Schiſme, for dividing from that Church, which, by their own confeſſion, ſtill retaineth the true Foundation of Chriſtianity.

The Anſwer.

31. It is anſwered: if ſome Proteſtants be ſo civil in their cenſures on Papiſts, it appears thereby, though they have left Rome, they have not loſt their courteſie, nor their Charity. But grant (which is diſputable) the Errours of the Church of Rome not Fundamental, they are Circa-Fundamental, grating on the very Foundation. Beſides, we are bound to avoid, not onely what is deadly, but what is hurtful; not onely what may deſtroy the life, but what may prejudice the health of our Souls.

3. Objection.

But our Adverſaries perſiſt to object, that our Reformation took its riſe, from King Henry's pride, to pluck down a Power which croſſed His deſignes, from His covetouſneſſe to compaſſe the Revenues of Abbeys, and from His wantonneſſe, to exchange His old Embracings, for new ones. Well therefore may the Engliſh bluſh at the Babe, when they behold its Parents, and be aſhamed of their Reformation, conſidering the vitious Extraction thereof.

The Anſwer.

Anſw. Malice may load the Memory of K. Henry about His demerit; yet grant the charge true, that bad inclinations firſt moved Him to the Reformation, yet He acted therein nothing, but conformable to the Law Divine and Humane. It is uſuall with God's wiſdome and goodneſſe, to ſuffer Vice to ſound the firſt Alarum to that fight, wherein Virtue is to have the Victory. Beſides, King Henry's Reformation hath ſince been Reformed, by ſucceſsive Princes of England, who cannot juſtly be taxed with any vitious reflexion therein.

The moderation of Reformers.

32. It remaineth that we take notice of the moderation of the Reformers, who being acted not with an Oppoſition to all which the Papiſts practiſed, but with an Affection to Truth, diſclaimed onely the Ulcers and Sores, not what was ſound of the Romiſh Church, retaining ſtill what was conſonant to Antiquity, in the Four firſt Generall Councels.

The Concluſion of the Contreſt.

33. Matters thus ordered, had the Romaniſts been pleaſed to joyn with us, there had been no complaining of Schiſme either in their Streets, or ours. But ſuch their pride and peeviſhneſſe, to perſiſt obſtinate, to this day incenſe many people (who liſten more to the loudneſſe, than weigh the juſtneſſe of Complaints) accuſing us of wilfull Separation; But the Premiſſes well conſidered, England may ſay to Rome, * Pharez, the breach be upon thee, who (with * Athaliah, crying Treaſon, treaſon, being her ſelf the prime Traytour) taxeth us with Schiſme, when ſhe the onely Schiſmatick.

The Popes revenues out of England.

34. We enter now on a ſubject, which we muſt not omit, ſuch is the concernment thereof, in our Hiſtory; yet which we cannot compleat, ſo intricate the nature thereof, and ſo ſhort and doubtfull our intelligence therein; namely, to give a generall eſtimate (particulars being impoſſible) of the Papall Revennes of England.

Greateſt under King Hen. 3.

35. Here be it premiſed that I humbly conceive, the Pope's Income ran the higheſt in England under King Henry the third, and King Edward the firſt, before the Statute of Mortmaine (and after it that of Premunire) was made, for theſe much abated his Intrado. And although, I deny not, but under King Henry the eighth, he might receive more Money, (as then more plentifull in England) yet his profit formerly, was greater, if the ſtandard of Gold and Silver be but ſtated proportionably.

Popes profit by ſale of Trinkets.

36. However, the vaſt ſummes Rome received hence at the time of Reformation, will appear by the inſuing commodities. For, firſt Agnus Dei's, this is here ſet by Synecdoche, to ſignifie all Popiſh Trinkets, Medals, conſecrated Beads, &c. which which I as little know what they be, as Papists, why they use them: Of these were yearly brought over from Rome, into England, as many, as would fill the shop of a Habberdasher of Holy Wares. Now, though their prices were not immediately paid into the Pope's purse, but to such his subordinate Officers who traded therein; Yet they may be accounted part of the Papall Revennes (the King hath what the Courtiers have by His consent) and if such trading was not permitted unto them, the Pope must either abate of his Traine, or finde his Officers other waies of subsistance.

By his Annates.

37. Secondly, for Annates, so called, because they were the intire Revennes of one Yeare (in the nature of first Fruits) which the Bishops and inferiour Clergie paid to the Pope; We have no light concerning the latter, but can present the Reader with an exact account, what every Bishop in England, (new elected or translated to a See) paid at his entrance to his Holinesse.

b This standeth for Crowns.

In this account [F] stands for Florenes, being worth 4s--6d. in our English money. [D] for single Duckets sufficiently known for 8 shillings, Lincolnes, not being valued, I behold as a meer casual omission in this Catalogue, but can render a reason, why Rochester not rated, who being accounted as Chaplain, to the Archbishop bishop of Canterbury, (and anciently in his Donation) may be supposed valued in the high valuation of his Patron. That Bath and Wells then so high in Wealth, should be so low in first Fruits (whereat my [b] Authour wonders) plainly shows that Favour was fashionable, (as in all other Courts, so) in the Court of Rome. The rest of the English Bishopricks were not in being, before the Reformation.

Ann. Dom. 1537. Ann. Regis H. 8. 27.

39. Thirdly, by Appeals; The Pope having learn'd this policy from the Counсill of Jethro to Moses, * every Great thing they shall bring unto thee; but every Small matter they (viz. the 70 Elders) shall Judge; reserved to himself the definitive sentence in all high Controversies, which brought no small profit unto him.

40. Fourthly, by K. Athelph's Pension given by him to the Pope, Anno 852. whereof largely before; A distinct payment from Peter pence, (with which some confound it) as stinted to three hundred [c] Marks; whereas the other were casual, and increased according to the number of Houses.

41. Fifthly, for Dispensations. Oh the charity of the Pope, to lay heavy Burdens on mens consciences, (without command from God's Word) too heavy for them to bear! but then so merciful he was, for Money to take them off again; thus Licences to marry within degrees forbidden; for Priests [base] Sonnes, to succeed their Fathers in a Benefice, and a hundred other particulars brought yearly a Nemo scit, into the Papal Treasury.

42. Sixtly, Indulgencies are next, though I know not how essentially distinguished from Dispensations, not dare warrant the distinction, that the former was against, the other above Canon Law. As when Abbeys, and other places were freed from Episcopal Jurisdiction, and many other Priviledges and Exemptions both personal and conventual.

43. Seventhly, by Legatine Levies, these though not Annuall, yet came [almost] as often, as the Pope's needs, or covetousnesse would require them.

44. Eighthly, Mortuaries, due, at the death of great Prelates, though, I finde not in what manner and proportion they were paid.

45. Ninthly, Pardons; He saveth his credit the best, who makes no conjecture at the certainty of this Revenue. And though the Pope, (as then too politick openly to confesse his profit by granting; so since) be too proud publickly to bemone his losse, by stopping of these Pardons, yet is he secretly and sadly sensible of a great emptinesse in his Treasure thereby.

46. Tenthly, Peter-pence succeed, granted by Ina, King of the West Saxons to Pope Gregory the second, Anno 626. It was a peny paid for every Chimney that smoaked in England, which in that Hospitall Age had few smokelesse ones; the device of Cypher Tunnels or mock-Chimneys meerly for uniformity of building, being unknown in those dayes. Indeed, before the Conquest, such onely paid Peter-pence, who were worth * thirty pence in yearly revenue, or half a marke in goods, but afterwards it was collected generally of all solvable Housekeepers, and that on most heavy penalties.

47. Now though none can tell what these amounted to, yet conjecture may be made, by descending to such proportions, which no rational man will deny. Allowing nine thousand Parishes (abating the odde hundreds) in England and Wales, a hundred houses in every Parish, two chimneys in every house, one with another, it ariseth unto a yearly summe of seven thousand five hundred pounds. Here I say nothing of the intrinsecal value of their Peny, worth two pence in our Age.

48. Eleventhly, Pilgrimages follow, many persons of quality going yearly to Rome, sometimes perchance with bare feet, but never with empty hands. But the Pope's principal harvest was in the Jubile (which of late recurred every five and twenty years) when no fewer than two hundred thousand strangers have been counted at Rome at once. Of these, more than the tenth part may be justly allowed English, it being alwaies observed, that distance encreaseth devotion; and the farthest off, the forwardest, in Will-worship of this nature.

By Tenths.

49. Twelfthly, we conclude with Tenths, and on what Title they were paid to the Pope, largely hereafter.

All cannot be truly counted.

50. Here we speak not of the accidentals, as Legacies bequeathed by the deaths of Princes and great Persons, and other Casualties, and Obventions; Sixtus the fourth being wont to say, that a Pope could never want Money, while he could hold a Pen in his hand; (understand him to grant general Indulgencies) though Luther's holding a pen in his hand, hath since much marred his Mart herein. Now certainly Demetrius could tell better, what was gotten by making * silver Shrines for Diana, than S. Paul himself: and while some Protestants compute the Papal profit, to be a hundred and fifty thousand pounds per annum, some more, some lesse, (but all making it above the King's Revenues) they doe but state his Income at random.

*Acts 19. 27.

Polidore Virgil Collector of the English Peter-pence.

51. Onely Polidore Virgil, if alive, and willing, were able to give a certain account of the Peter pence, (a good guesse at the rest of Papall Revennues) knowing them, as well, as the Begger knows his dish, as holding the Bason into which they were put, being Collector general of Peter pence all over England. But this Italian was too proud to accept them as gratuities, (in which nature they were first given) but exacted them in the notion of a Rent and Tribute due to the Pope his Master.

Be-lawrelleth the Quire of Wells.

52. This is that Polidore Virgil, who was Dignitary of the Cathedral of Wells, (and, as I take it, Archdeacon of Taunton) on the Quire whereof he bestowed Hangings flourished with the Lawrel Tree, and as I remember, wrote upon them, ~~SUNT~~ HAEC POLIDORI MUNERA VIRGILII.

But would he had spared his benefaction to the Church of Wells, on condition he had been no Malefactor to the Church of England, yea, to Religion and Learning in generall, if it be true what commonly is reported.

A Malefactour to Posterity for burning MS.

53. For he wrote a Latine History of Britain, from the Original of the Nation, untill Anno Dom. 1538. the 30 yeare of King Henry the eighth, out of many rare Manuscripts, which he had collected together. Now, partly to raise the reputation of his own Writings, (that he might seem no lazie Transcriber) partly, to render himself out of the reach of Confutation (being suspected not over-faithfull in his Relation) he is said to have burnt all those rare Authours, which he could compasse into his possession. Thus Tyrant-like he cut down those stairs whereby he ascended the Throne of his own knowledge. If this be true, the World may thank Polidore Virgil, for his work, de Inventione Rerum, but have cause to chide, (not to say, curse) his Memory, for his Act de Perditione Librorum.

Two-edged Verses.

54. I have met with a paper of Verses, which like a two-edged Sword cut on both sides, plainly at Polidore Virgil, but obscurely at a later Plagiary, and in my opinion, not unworthy to be inserted.

Leyland's supposed Ghost.

Am I deceiv'd? or doth not Leyland's Ghost
Complain of wrong sustained after death;
As Virgil's Polidore accus'd his host,
The Tracian King for cruell breach of Faith,
And Treasures gain'd by stopping of his breath?
Ah greedy Gardian! t' enjoy his goods,
Didst plunge his Princely Ward into the floods.
Am I deceiv'd? or doth not Leyland's spirit
Complain with th' Ghosts of English Notaries
Whom Polidorus Virgil robb'd of merit,
Bereft of Name, and sacks of Histories,
While (wretch) he ravisht English Libraries.
Ah! wicked Book-thief whosoever did it,
Should One burn all, to get one single Credit?

Am I deceiv'd? or doth not Leyland's Spirit
Make heu& cry, for som Book-treasure stealth,
Rifling his works, and razing Name & Merit,
Whereby are smother'd a Prince-given wealth,
A Learned Writer's Travel, Wits, and Health.
All these he spent to doe his Countrey pleasure,
O save his name, the World may know his trea-
I am deceived, for Leylands ghost doth rest. (sure.
From plaints & crys, with souls of blessed men;
But Heaven and Humane Laws cannot digest,
That such rare fruits of a laborious Pen,
Came to be drown'd in such a thankless Den.
Thus Heaven and all Humanity doth sue,
That Leyland dead, may have his Titles due.

Who this second Plagiarie was, complained of for plundering Leyland, if the Reader cannot conjecture, I will not tell, such the honour I bear to his admirable performances, though herein not to be excused.

54. Papal

Ann. Dom. 1535. Ann. Regis Hen. 8. 27.

55. Papal power thus extinguished in England; it is worth our enquiry, where the same for the future was fixed, which we finde, not intirely setled in any One, but according to justice, and equity, divided amongst many Sharers therein.

How Papal power in England was cantoned.

56. And first, Give unto God the things which are Gods. What the Pharisees said, was true in the Doctrine, though false in the Use thereof, (as applied to our Saviour whom they mistook for a meer man *Who can forgive sins but God alone?) This paramount power no lesse blasphemously than arrogantly usurped by the Pope, claiming an absolute and authoritative pardoning of Sins, was humbly and justly restored to the high God of Heaven.

God first had his share.

* Mark 7.

57. Restitution was made to the second Person in the Trinity, of that Universal jurisdiction over the whole Church as belonging to Christ alone, who is the Sheepherd and Bishop of our souls, and a badge of Antichrist for the Pope proudly to assume the same.

Christ his due.

1 Pet. 2.25.

58. To the Holy Ghost was restored that Infallibility, which to him doth properly pertain, as being the Spirit of Truth, which neither will deceive, nor can be deceived, and which hath promised to lead his Church in generall into all Truth; but never fixed any inerrability, on any particular person, or succession of single persons whatsoever.

The holy Spirit his portion.

John 15.26. & 16.13.

59. And now give unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. The King comes to claim His own right, what the Kings of Judah (his Predecessours in Soveraignty) had by the Word of God, and Christian Emperours by the practise of the Primitive times, did possesse. In order whereunto the Parliament did notifie and declare, that Ecclesiastical power to be in the King, which the Pope had formerly unjustly invaded. Yet so, that they reserved to themselves (besides other priviledges which we leave to the Learned in the Law) the confirming power of all Canons Ecclesiastical; so that the person or property of Refusers, should not be subjected to temporal penalty without consent of Parliament.

The King assumes his share.

60. Of this power thus declar'd in the King, part thereof He kept in Himselfe, as to call, and dissolve Convocations at His pleasure; to grant or deny them Commission to debate of Religion; to command Archbishops and Bishops to be chosen in vacant Sees; to take order for the due Administration of the Word and Sacraments.

61. The other part of power Ecclesiastical, the King passed over to the Archbishop of Canterbury, as His Substitute; first, to grant Faculties in cases not repugnant to the Law of God, necessary for Honour and Security of the King, formerly wont to be remedied in the See of Rome. Secondly, to determine Causes Ecclesiastical in his Court, whence lay an Appeal to the Court of Delegates, &c.

62. The representative Clergie had power by the King's leave, to make Canons and Constitutions, whilst each Bishop in his respective Diocesse, Priest in his Parish, were freer than formerly in execution of their Office, acquitted from Papal dependance.

63. Lastly, every English Lay-Man, was restored to his Christian Birth-right, namely, to his judgment of practical discretion (in perusing the Scriptures in his own Language) formerly swallowed up in the Ocean of the Pope's Infallibility. Thus on the depluming of the Pope every bird had his own feather: in the partage whereof, what he had gotten by sacriledge, was restored to God; what by Usurpation, was given back to the King, Church, and State; what by Oppression, was remitted to particular Christians.

TO Master HENRY BARNARD,

LATE OF LONDON, Merchant.

THough lately you have removed your habitation into Shropshire, My pen is resolved to follow after and finde you out: Seeing the hand of your bounty hath had so long a reach, let the legs of my gratitude take as large a stride: When you shall be disposed to be Solitary, and desirous to have Society, at the same time peruse this Book, whereby you shall attain your desired Condition.

H.8. 27. June 22. 1535.

FOR twelve Moneths had Bishop Fisher (formerly condemned) now lived in durance, and so was likely to continue, untill (in all probability) his soul at the same time, should be freed from two Prisons, I mean, that of his body, and that of the Tower. For, his life could doe the King no hurt, whose death might procure Him hatred, as of one generally pitied for his age, honoured for his learning, admired for his holy conversation. Besides, it was not worth the while, to take away his life, who was not onely mortalis, as all men; and mortificatus, as all good men; but also morituras, as all old men, being past seventy six years of age. But now an unseasonable act of the Pope accelerated his execution, in making him Cardinal of S. Vitalis; a title which Fisher so little affected, that he professed, If the Hat lay at his feet, he would not stoop to take it up.

Fisher made Cardinal.

2. His Holinesse could not have studied a more destructive way against Fisher's life, than to fasten this injurious favour upon him. This heightned the King's anger into fury against him. He expounded the Pope's act, or rather the act expounded it self (as capable of no other comment) as done in his defiance, and there-therefore a Warrant is sent to the Lieutenant for his execution. Let not the Reader grudge his pains, if we describe this Bishop, from his cradle, to (I cannot say his coffin, or winding-sheet, being made to believe he had neither, but) his grave: The rather, because I collected the same out of his Manuscript-life, compiled by Richard Hall, of Christ-Colledge in [a] Cambridge, and communicated unto me by a worthy [b] friend. Onely be it premised, that the same Hall was a stiffe Roman Catholick, and therefore accordingly must abatement be made in his relations.

The King enraged thereat.

Bishop Fisher his birth, and breeding.

3. This John Fisher, born at Beverly in Yorke-shire, of Robert, his Father (a wealthy-man, and a kinde of Merchant) Anno 1459, was by his Parents sent to Cambridge to have his education in Michael-House, under Mr. William Melton, his Tutor.

Admitted ---------- 1484.
Commenced { Bachelour of Arts 1488. } made { Proctour ---------- 1495. / Doctour ---------- 1502. }
Master 1491. Master of the House, thereabouts.

{ Bishop of Rochester ---------- 1504. }
{ Chancellour of Cambridge { chosen --- 1505. / confirmed, 1514. } }

He was Chaplain, and Confessour to the Lady Margaret, Countesse of Richmond, at whose instance, and by whose advise, She founded, and endowed Christs, and S. John's-Colledge in Cambridge. Employed in building of the latter (her posthume Colledge of S. John's) and effectually advancing that work, he wanted the accommodation of a convenient Lodging, when Dr. Thomas Wilkinson, President of Queens Colledge, opportunely departed this life: and that Society requested Bishop Fisher to succeed in his place, which he gratefully accepted, faithfully discharged, and thereby had the advantage to finish his new Colledge in the lesse time, to his greater contentment.

Different characters of Fisher.

4. Here I meet with two descriptions of Fisher, as contrary each to other, as the Religions of the two Describers, whereof the one was a rigid Papist, the other a zealous Protestant:

Hall, In his aforesaid Manuscript.

Fisher is made by him a very wealthy man, having much plate, and furniture, of a great value; and, as for his Library, no Bishop in Europe had the like unto him, insomuch as he intended (as appeareth somewhere in his Letter to Erasmus) to found a Colledge of his own: but afterwards, reversing his resolution, in his life-time he bestowed all his rich plate, furniture, and Books, on S. John's in Cambridge, and borrowed the same of it again by Indenture under his hand and seal, for his use during life. But it hapned, that at his attainture the King's Officers seised on all he had.

Ascham. Commendatitiarum, Ep. 1.

Joannes [c] Fisherus, Episcopus Rosensis, dum falsam doctrinam nimis perverse defendit, optimas literas in hoc Collegio, suis ornamentis, & suis divitiis denudavit. Hic vir nutu suo rexit hoc Collegium; & propterea in manu ejus posita sunt clarissima ornamenta, quæ Domina Margareta huic Collegio elargita est. ——— Ejus perversa doctrina, & illum vitâ, & nos summis divitiis nostris privavit.

[c] In favour of Fisher I have left the words untranslated.

For mine own part, I conceive no Covetousnesse (much lesse such Sacrilege) can be charged on Fisher's account, it being notoriously known, that King Henry the eighth (Who formerly favoured him) profered to remove him from Rochester, to Lincolne, or Elie, (treble the other in Revenue) which Fisher refused, both in word,

Ann. Reg. Hen. 8. 27. Ann. Dom. 1537.

word, and print; Habeant alii (saith he) proventus pinguiores &c. being used to say, He would not change his little old wife, to whom he had been so long wedded, for a wealthier.

d In his Dedic. Epist. to the Bishop of Wint. in his place against Oecolampadius. . . . .

5. It is no wonder if a Papist, and a Protestant, cannot agree about Fisher's character, when we finde two stiffe Papists at a vast distance about his Estate. Hall, as is aforesaid, makes him very wealthie, which is not improbable, considering, he had a paternal bottome, whereon; competency of revenue, wherewith; long continuance of time, wherein; and commendable frugality, whereby to build an estate. Not to speak that he served a good Mistresse, the Lady Margaret, known to have rich coffers, and her Confessour could command the keyes thereof. But on the contrary, Sanders[e] makes him as poor as Job; insomuch, that Souldiers coming to seise on his supposed wealth, found (what was quickly told) nothing at all belonging to him, save a great barred chest. These, from the facing of Iron, concluded the lineing thereof Silver at least: and, having broken it open, found nothing therein but Sackcloth, and a Whip; which put them all to penance, and soundly lashed their covetous expectation. But, leaving his life, come we now to the manner of his death.

Variance betwixt Papists about Fisher's wealth.

e De Schism. Ang. lib. 1. pag. 123.

6. After the Lieutenant of the Tower had received the Writ for his execution, because it was then very late, and the Prisoner asleep, he was loth to disease him from his rest. But in the morning, before five of the clock, he came to him in his chamber, in the Bell-Tower, finding him yet asleep in his bed, and waking him, told him, He was come to him on a message from the King, to signifie unto him, that His pleasure was he should suffer death that forenoon. Well! (quoth the Bishop) if this be your errand, you bring me no great newes, for I have looked a long time for this message, and I must humbly thank His Majesty, that it pleaseth Him to rid me from all this worldly businesse. Yet, let me by your patience sleep an hour or two; for I have slept very ill this night, not for any fear of death, I thank God, but by reason of my great infirmity, and weaknesse.

He welcomes the newes of his death.

7. The King's pleasure is farther (said the Lieutenant) that you shall use as little speech as may be, especially of any thing touching His Majesty, whereby the people should have any cause to think of Him, or His proceedings otherwise than well. For that (said he) you shall see me order my self, as, by God's grace, neither the King, nor any man else, shall have occasion to mislike of my words. With which answer the Lieutenant departed from him, and so the Prisoner, falling again to rest, slept soundly two hours, and more; And, after he was awaked, called to his man to help him up. But first commanded him, to take away his shirt-of-haire (which customably he wore) and to convey it privily out of the house; and, instead thereof, to lay him forth a clean white shirt, and all the best apparel he had, as cleanly brushed as might be. And, as he was arraying himself, his man, seeing in him more curiosity, and care, for the fine, and cleanly wearing of his apparel that day, than was wont, demanded of him, What this sudden change meant? saying, That his Lordship knew well enough, that he must put off all again, within two hours, and lose it. What of that? (said he) Doest not thou mark, that this is our marriage-day? and, that it behoveth us therefore to use more cleanlinesse for solemnity thereof.

Yet labours to preserve his life.

8. About nine of the clock the Lieutenant came again, and, finding him almost ready, said, He was now come for him. Then said he to his man, Reach me my furred-Tippet to put about my neck. Oh my Lord! (said the Lieutenant) what need ye be so careful for your health for this little time, being, as your self knows, not much above an hour? I think no otherwise (said he) but yet in the mean time, I will keep my self as well as I can. For, I tell you truth, though I have, I thank our Lord, a very good desire and willing minde to die at this present, and so trust of his infinite mercy and goodnesse he will continue it, yet will I not willingly hinder my health in the mean time one minute of an hour, but still prolong the same, as long as I can, by such reasonable waies and means as Almighty God hath provided for me. And with that, taking a little book in his hand, which was a New Testament lying by him, he made made a crosse on his forehead, and went out of his prison-dore with the Lieutenant, being so weak, as that he was scant able to go down the stairs, wherefore at the stairs-foot he was taken up in a chair between two of the Lieutenant's men, and carried to the Tower-gate, with a great number of weapons about him, to be delivered to the Sheriffe of London for execution. Ann. Dom. 1535. Ann. Reg. Hen. 27.

Prepareth himself for his death.

He advanceth to the place of his execution.

9. And, as they were come to the uttermost precinct of the liberties of the Tower, they rested there with him a space, till such time as one was sent before to know in what readinesse the Sheriffs were to receive him. During which space he rose out of his chair, and standing on his feet, leaned his shoulder to the wall, and lifting his eyes towards Heaven, he opened a little Book in his hand, and said, O Lord! this is the last time that ever I shall open this book, let some comfortable place now chance unto me, whereby I thy poor servant may glorifie thee in this my last houre. And with that, looking into the Book, the first thing that came to his sight were these words, Hæc est autem vita æterna, ut cognoscant te solum verum Deum, & quem misisti Jesum Christum. Ego te glorificavi super terram, opus consummavi quod dedisti mihi &c. and with that he shut the Book together, and said, Here is even learning enough for me to my lives end. And so the Sheriffe being ready for him, he was taken up again among certain of the Sheriffs men, with a new and much greater company of weapons than was before, and carried to the Scaffold on the Tower-hill, otherwise called East-Smithfield, himself praying all the way, and recording upon the words which he before had read.

ſ Ioh. 17. 3, &c.

The manner of his mounting the scaffold.

10. When he was come to the foot of the Scaffold, they that carried him offered to help him up the stairs, but, said he, Nay Masters, seeing I am come so farre, let me alone and ye shall see me shift for my self well enough: And so went up the stairs without any help, so lively, that it was a marvell to them that before knew his debility and weaknesse. But as he was mounting the stairs, the South-east Sun shined very bright in his face, whereupon he said to himself these words, lifting up his hands, Accedite ad eum, & illuminamini, & facies vestræ non confundentur. By that time he was upon the Scaffold, it was about ten a clock; where the Executioner, being ready to doe his office, kneeled down to him (as the fashion is) and asked him forgiveneſſe. I forgive thee (said he) with all my heart, and I trust thou shalt see me overcome this storm lustily. Then was his gown and tippet taken from him, and he stood in his doublet and hose in sight of all the people, whereof there was no small number assembled to see the execution.

His Speech to the people.

11. Being upon the Scaffold, he spake to the people in effect as followeth:

Christian people,

I am come hither to die for the faith of Christ's holy Catholick Church, and I thank God hitherto my stomack hath served me very well thereunto, so that yet I have not feared death; wherefore I desire you all to help and assist with your prayers, that at the very point and instant of deaths stroke, I may in that very moment stand stedfast without fainting in any one point of the Catholick Faith, free from any fear. And I beseech Almighty God of his infinite goodnesse to save the King and this Realm, and that it may please him to hold his holy hand over it, and send the King a good Councell.

These words he spake with such a cheerfull countenance, such a stout and constant courage, and such a reverend gravity, that he appeared to all men, not only void of fear, but also glad of death.

His execution.

12. After these few words by him uttered, he kneeled down on both his knees, and said certain prayers. Among which (as some reported) one was the hymn of Te Deum laudamus, to the end; and the Psalm, In te Domine speravi. Then came the Executioner and bound an handkerchief about his eyes; and so the Bishop lifting up his hands and heart to heaven, said a few prayers, which were not long, but fervent and devout. Which being ended, he laid his head down over the midst of a little block, where the Executioner, being ready with a sharp and heavy Ax, cut asunder his slender Neck at one blow, which bled so abundantly, that many many (saith my Authour) wondred to see so much blood issue out of so lean and slender a body: Though in my judgement, that might rather have translated the wonder from his leanesse to his age, it being otherwise a received tradition, That lean folk have the most blood in them.

Ann. Reg. Hen. 27. Ann. Dom. 1535.

13. Thus died John Fisher in the seventy seventh year of his age, on the two and twentieth of June, being S. Alban's-day, the Protomartyr of England, and therefore with my Authour most remarkable. But surely no day in the Romish Kalendar is such a Skeleton, or so bare of sanctity, but (had his death hapned thereon) a Priest would pick a mysterie out of it. He had a lank, long body, full six foot high, toward the end of his life very infirm, insomuch that he used to sit in a chair when he taught the people in his Diocesse. His age, and stature.

14. His corpse (if our Authour speaketh truth) was barbarously abused; no winding-sheet being allowed it, which will hardly enter into my belief. For, suppose his friends durst, his foes would not afford him a shroud, yet some neuters betwixt both (no doubt) would have done it out of common civility. Besides, seeing the King vouchsafed him the Tower, a noble prison; and beheading, an honourable death; it is improbable He would deny him a necessary equipage for a plain and private burial. Wherefore when Hall tells us, That the Souldiers attending his execution, could not get spades to make his grave therewith, but were fain with halbards, (in the North side of the Church-yard of All-Hallows Barking) to dig a hole wherein they cast his naked corpse: I listen to the relation as inflamed by the Reporters passion. Be it here remembred, that Fisher in his life-time made himself a Tomb on the North-side of the Chappel in S. John's-Colledge, intending there to be buried, but therein disappointed. This Fisher was he who had a Cardinals Hat sent him, which (stopp'd at Calis) never came on his head; and a Monument made for him, wherein his body was never deposited. His mean, not to say (if true) barbarous burial.

15. Our Authour reporteth also, how Queen Anna Bolen gave order his head should be brought unto Her (before it was set up on London bridge) that She might please Her self at the sight thereof, and like another Herodias insult over the head of this John Her professed enemy. Nor was she content alone to revile his ghost with taunting terms, but out of spight, or sport, or both, struck Her hand against the mouth of this dead head brought unto her; and it hapned, that one of Fisher's teeth, more prominent than the rest, struck into her hand, and not onely pained Her for the present, but made so deep an impression therein, that She carried the mark thereof to Her grave. It seems this was contrary to the proverb, Mortui non mordent. But enough, yea, too much of such damnable falshoods. Passe we from Fisher to More, his fellow-prisoner, whom Fisher's execution had not mollified into conformity to the King his pleasure, as was expected. An impudent improbable Lie.

16. Son he was to Sir John More, one of the Judges of the Kings Bench, who lived to see his Son preferred above himself. Bred a Common-Lawyer, but withall, a general Schollar, as well in polite, as solid learning: a terse Poet, neat Orator, pure Latinist, able Grecian: He was chosen Speaker in the House of Commons, made Chancellour first of Lancaster-Dutchie, then of all England, performing the place with great integrity and discretion. Some ground we have in England, neither so light, and loose as sand; nor so stiffe and binding as clay, but a mixture of both, conceived the surest soil for profit, and pleasure to grow together on: such the soil of this Sir Thomas More, in which facetiousnesse and judiciousneſſe were excellently tempered together. Sir Tho. More's extraction and education.

17. Yet some have taxed him, that he wore a feather in his cap, and wagg'd it too often: meaning, he was over-free in his fancies and conceits. Insomuch, that on the Scaffold (a place not to break jests, but to break off all jesting) he could not hold, but bestowed his scoffs on the Executioner and standers-by. Now, though innocency may smile at death, surely it is unfit to flout thereat. Charged for his over-much jesting.

18. But the greatest fault we finde justly charged on his memory, is his cruelty in persecuting poor Protestants, to whom he bare an implacable hatred. Inso- A great Anti-Protestant.

much that in his life-time he caused to be inscribed, as parcell of his Epitaph on his Monument at Chelsey, that he ever was Furibus, Homicidis, Hæreticisq; molestus: a passing good praise, save after the way which he there calleth Heresie, pious people worship the God of their fathers. He suffered the next moneth after Fisher's execution, in the same place, for the same cause July 6. and was buried at Chelsey, under his Tomb aforesaid, which being become ruinous, and the Epitaph scarce legible, hath few years since been decently repaired at the cost (as I am informed) of one of his near Kinsmen. The death and character of Qu. Katharine Dowager.

19. At this time Katharine Dowager, whom we will be bold still in courtesie to call a Queen (notwithstanding King Henry's Proclamation to the contrary) ended her wofull life at Kimbolton. A pious woman toward God (according to Her devotion) frequent in prayer, which She alwaies performed on Her bare knees, nothing else between Her and the earth interposed; little curious in Her clothes, being wont to say, She accounted no time lost, but what was laid out in dressing of Her; though Art might be more excusable in Her, to whom Nature had not been over-bountifull: She was rather staid, than stately; reserv'd, than proud; grave from Her cradle, insomuch that She was a matrone, before She was a mother. This Her naturall gravity encreased with Her apprehended injuries, setled in Her reduced age into an habit of melancholie, and that terminated into a consumption of the spirits. She was buried in the Abby-Church of Peterborough, under an Herse of black Say; probably by Her own appointment, that She might be plain when dead, who neglected bravery of clothes when living. A noble[b] pen tells us, that in intuition to Her corpse here interred, King Henry, at the destruction of Abbies, not onely spared the Church in Peterborough, but also advanced it into a Cathedral. If so, it was civilly done of Him not to disturb Her in Her grave whom He had so disquieted in Her bed. The news of Her departure was not unwelcome to Queen Anna Bollen, who, though too good a Christian to desire Her death, was too wise a woman to be over-sorrowfull for the same: seeing formerly She was the King's Wife but by sequestration, the true possessour of His bed being yet alive; whereas now[c] Rehoboth, She conceived God had made room for her. The character of Queen Anna Bollen.

20. This Anna Bollen was great-grand childe to a Citizen, Sir Jefferie Bollen, Lord Major of London; grand-childe to Sir William Bollen Knight, who lived respectedly in his Countrey; daughter to Thomas Bollen Earle of Wiltshire, a great Courtier: and, she had Her birth in England; blood, by her[d] Grand-mother, from Ireland; and breeding in France, under Mary the French Queen: so that so many relations meeting in Her, accomplished Her with an acceptable behaviour to all qualities and conditions of people. Of an handsome person, and beautifull face; and therefore that[e] pen that reports Her lean-visaged, long-sided, gobber-toothed, yellow-complexioned, with a wen in her neck, both manifests his malice, and disparageth the judgement of King Henry, whom all knew well read in books, and better in beauties; who would never have been drawn to so passionate a love, without stronger load-stones to attract it. This Queen, remembring how Her Predecessour lost the King's love with her over-austerity, tuned Her self to a more open and debonaire behaviour, even generally to all with whom She conversed. Which being observed by Her adversaries, was improved by them to Her overthrow; so that She, but for a very short time had the sole and peaceable possession of Her Husband. In a word, She was a great Patroness of the Protestants, Protectour of the persecuted, Preferrer of men of merit (among whom Hugh Latimer) a bountifull Reliever of the poor, and the happy Mother of Queen Elizabeth.

The first reformed Convocation.

21. On the eighth of June began a short, but sharp Parliament (dissolved the eighteenth of July following) effecting much in little time, matters it seems being well prepared afore-hand, and the House assembled not to debate, but doe the King's desires. The parallel Convocation began the day after, being one new-modelled, and of a fashion different from all former Convocations. Therein the Lord June 8. 9.

Ann. Reg. Hē. 8. 27. Ann. Dom. 1535

Lord Cromwell, prime Secretary, ſate in ſtate above all the Biſhops, as the King's Vicar, or Vicegerent-Generall in all ſpirituall matters. Deformi ſatis ſpectaculo (ſaith my f Authour) indocto Laico cuncti præſidente ſacratorum Antiſtitum, omniam, quos ante hæc tempora Anglia unquam habuiſſet, doctiſſimorum. In one reſpect, that place had better become the perſon of King Henry, than this Lord His Proxie, all allowing the King a very able Scholar. But Cromwell had in power and policie what he lacked in learning, if he may be ſaid to lack it, who, at pleaſure, might command the borrowing thereof, from the beſt brains and pens of thoſe of his own partie in the Convocation.

f Goſwin's Annals, Anno Dom. 1536.

22. This Convocation conſiſted of two Houſes: the Lower, of the Clerks, and Proctours, of their reſpective Cathedrals, and Dioceſſes, with the Deans, and Arch-Deacons therein: the Upper, of the Biſhops, with the Lord-Abbots, and Priors (I mean ſo many of them as voted as Barons in Parliament) as may appear by their ſeverall ſubſcriptions. However, I finde not the Abbots active in any degree, in canvaſſing matters of Religion. Whether this proceeded from any deſire of eaſe, their lazineſs being above their learning; or, out of humility, counting it more proper to permit ſuch diſputes to the ſole diſpoſall of the Biſhops, as moſt concern'd therin; or, out of fear, loth to ſtickle on religion, knowing on what tickliſh terms they ſtood. For, in this very Parliament, all Abbies, which could not diſpend 200 li. a year, were diſſolved, and beſtowed on the King; and thoſe rich Abbots (which had more than ſo many thouſands yearly) knew that Maxime in Logick to be true, Magis & minus non variant ſpeciem, More and leſſe doe not alter the kinde; and, might ſay with him on the Croſſe, They were in the ſame condemnation, though as yet the ſentence was not paſſed upon them.

23. We will obſerve the daily motions in this Convocation, as with mine own hand I have faithfully tranſcribed them out of the Records: Hugh Latimer, Biſhop of Worceſter, made the Latine-Sermon, taking for his Text b, The children of this world are in their generation wiſer than the children of light. On the Friday following, Richard Gwent, Arch-Deacon of London, was preſented, and confirmed Prolocutour, in this Convocation. On the ſame day Maſter William Peter, Doctor of the Laws, came into the Houſe, as deputed from his Maſter the Lord Cromwell, who could not be preſent, becauſe of his greater employment in Parliament. This Dr. Peter claimed the higheſt place in the Houſe, as due to his Maſter the Lord Cromwell, i & petiit dictum locum ſibi, tanquam Procuratori dicti Magiſtri; and he (ſhall I ſay requeſted? or) required the ſame precedencie, as due to him, being his Proctour, and obtained it accordingly, without any diſpute. Though ſome, perchance, might queſtion, whether a Deputie's Deputy (as one degree farther removed) might properly claim His place, who was primitively repreſented. Next Wedneſday came in the Lord Cromwell in perſon, and having judiciouſly ſeated himſelf above all, tendred unto them an Inſtrument to be publickly ſigned by all the Convocation, concerning the nullitie of the King's marriage with the Lady Anna Bollen.

The Diurnal of this Convocation:

b Luke 16. 8.

i Records of Cant. An. Dom. 1536. fol. 9.

24. Some ten daies before, Archbiſhop Cranmer at Lambeth had held an open Court, in the preſence of Thomas Audley, Lord Chancellour; Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolke, and moſt of the Privie Councel. Wherein the King and Queen were cited to appear, as they did by their Proxies, Doctor Richard Sampſon being the Kings, and Doctor Nicholas Wooten the Queens. Then proceeded the Archbiſhop to diſcuſſe the validity of their marriage, and at the laſt, by his definitive Sentence, pronounced the ſame invalid, fruſtrate, and of none effect. No particular cauſe is ſpecified in that Sentence, (ſtill extant in the Record) and though the Judge and Court ſeemed abundantly ſatisfied in the Reaſons of this Nullitie, yet concealing the ſame unto themſelves, they thought not fit to communicate this treaſure to poſterity; except they ſhut their coffers on purpoſe, becauſe there was nothing in them. Sure I am, there is no daſhing on the credit of the Lady, nor any the leaſt inſinuations of inchaſtity in that Inſtrument; Præclara Domina, & Sereniſſima Regina, being the worſt titles that are given her therein.

Cranmer ſolemnly divorceth Anna Bollen from the King.

25. Men

What might be the King's designs in this divorce.

25. Men may justly marvell what King Henry meant by this solemn and ceremonious Divorce, which the edge of the Ax, or Sword was more effectually to perform the day after, Her death being then designed. Was it because He stood on this punctilio or criticisme of credit, that He might not hereafter be charged with cruelty for executing His Wife, that first He would be divorced from Her, and so cannot be said to put His Queen, but Anna Bollen to death? Or, did He first but barely intend Her divorce, and afterwards suspecting this would not make sufficient avoidance in His bed, to clear all claims, took up new resolutions to take away Her life? Or, was it because He conceived the execution would only reach the root, the Queen Her self, and not blast the branch, the Lady Elizabeth, whom by this divorce He desired to render illegitimate? Whatever His aimes were, He got Her divorce confirmed both by Convocation and Parliament, interesting all equally therein, that hereafter none should accuse Him of this act, but first they must condemn themselves. However, after-ages take the boldnesse to conceive, that the greatest guilt of Anna Bollen was King Henry's better fancying of another, which made Him, the next day after Her death, to mourn so passionately for Her in the embraces of a new and beautifull Bride, the Lady Jane Seymour.

Ann. Dom. 1536. Ann. Regni Hen. 8.

The Convocation bucksome to please the King in all things.

26. But, to return to the Convocation. That Instrument of Divorce was no sooner tendred therein, but all subscribed it. The Papists willingly, the Protestants faintly, but all publickly. Yea, in this Convocation nothing was propounded in the King's name, but it passed presently. Oh the operation of the purge of a Præmunire, so lately taken by the Clergie (and an hundred thousand pounds paid thereupon!) How did the remembrance thereof still work on their spirits, and made them meek and mortified? They knew the temper of the King, and had read the Text, † The lyon hath roared, who will not fear? Gardiner the fox, durst not so much as bark to oppose the King, nor the proudest in the place. As for Edmond Bonner, Arch-deacon of Leicester, present, and active in this Convocation, I may say, Bonner was no Bonner yet, but a perfect Cromwellist, and as forward as any to promote his designes.

† Amos 3. 8.

A Catalogue of erroneous opinions complained of in the Convocation.

27. On the Friday following, Mr. Gwent the Prolocutour, brought to the Upper House of Convocation, a Book containing the Mala dogmata, those erroneous doctrines, then (as he complained) publickly preached, printed, and professed, requesting reformation thereof, that order might be taken against the future propagation of such dangerous positions. Behold them here transcribed out of the Record, partly for novelty sake (because to my knowledge never printed before) and partly, because (though many wilde and distempered expressions be found therein, yet) they contain the Protestant Religion in ovo, which since, by God's blessing, is happily refined.

July 23.

Erroneous opinions (as then accounted) complained of in the Convocation.

28. The Protestation of the Clergie of the Lower House, within the Province of Canterbury, with declaration of the faults and abuses which heretofore have, and now be within the same, worthy special reformation:

IN very humble and reverent manner, with protestation, That we the Clergie of the Lower House within the Province of Canterbury, nother in word, deed, or otherwise, directly, or indirectly, intend any thing, to speak, attempt, or doe, which, in any manner of wise may be displeasant unto the King's Highnesse, our most dread Sovereign Lord, and supreme Head of the Church of England; but in all things, according to the command of God to be most obedient to His Grace, to Whom accordingly we submit our selves, minding in no wise by any colourable fashion, to recognize, privily, or apertly the Bishop of Rome, or his usurped authority, or in any wise to bring in, defend, or maintain the same, into this noble Realm, or Dominions of the same: but that the same Bishop of Rome, with his usurped authority, utterly for ever with his inventions, rites, abuses, ordinances, and fashions, to be renounced, forsaken, extinguished and abolished; And that we sincerely addict our selves to Almighty God, his laws, laws, and unto our ſaid Soverein Lord the King, our ſupreme Head in earth, and His Laws, Statutes, Proviſions and Ordinances made here within His Graces Realm. We think in our conſciences and opinions theſe errors and abuſes following, to have been and now to be, within this Realm, cauſes of diſſention, worthy ſpeciall reformation. It is to wete,

1. That it is commonly preached, taught and ſpoken, to the ſlander of this noble Realm, diſquietneſs of the people, dammage of Chriſtian ſouls, not without fear of many other inconveniences and perils, That the Sacrament of the Altar is not to be eſteemed: For divers light and lewd perſons be not aſhamed or aferde to ſay, Why ſhould I ſee the facring of the high Maſſe? Is it any thing elſe but a piece of bread, or a little predie round Robin?

2. Item, That they deny Extreme Unction to be any Sacrament.

3. Item, That Prieſts have no more authority to miniſter Sacraments than the Lay-men have.

4. Item, That Children ought not in any wiſe to be confirmed of the Biſhops afore they come to the age of diſcretion.

5. Item, That all Ceremonies accuſtomed in the Church, which are not clearly expreſſed in Scripture, muſt be taken away, becauſe they are mens inventions.

6. Item, That all thoſe are Antichriſts, that doe deny the Lay men the Sacrament of the Altar, ſub utráque ſpecie.

7. Item, That all that be preſent at Maſſe, and doe not receive the Sacrament with the Prieſt, are not partakers of the ſaid Maſſe.

8. Item, That it is preached and taught, That the Church, that is commonly taken for the Church, is the old Synagogue; and, that the Church is the congregation of good men onely.

9. Item, It is preached againſt the Letany, and alſo ſaid, That it was never merry in England, ſithence the Letany was ordained, and Sancta Maria, Sancta Catharina &c. ſungen and ſaid.

10. Item, That a man hath no Free-will.

11. Item, That God never gave grace nor knowledge of holy Scripture to any great eſtate or rich man, and that they in no wiſe follow the ſame.

12. Item, That all Religions and Profeſſions, whatſoever they be, are clean contrary to Chriſts religion.

13. Item, That it be preached and taught, That all things ought to be commune, and that Prieſts ſhould have Wives.

14. Item, That Preachers will in no wiſe conform themſelves ad Eccleſiam Catholicam, nor admit or receive Canonicos, & probatos Authores, but will have their own fancies and inventions preached and ſet forward.

15. Item, That Images of Saints are not in any wiſe to be reverenced. And, that it is plain idolatry and abomination to ſet up any lights before any Images, or in any place of the Church the time of Divine Service, as long as the Sun giveth light.

16. Item, That it is idolatry to make any Oblations.

17. Item, That it is as lawfull to Chriſten a Childe in a Tub of water at home, or in a Ditch by the way, as in a Font-ſtone in the Church.

18. Item, That the Water in the Font-ſtone is alonely a thing conjured.

19. Item, That the Hallowed oyl is no better than the Biſhop of Rome his greaſe or butter.

20. Item, That Prieſts crowns be the Whores marks of Babylon.

21. Item, That the Stole about the Prieſt's neck is nothing elſe but the Biſhop of Rome's rope.

Ann. Dom. 1536. Ann. Regis Hen. 8. 28.

22. Item, That Images, as well of the Crucifix, as of other Saints, are to be put out of the Church, and the Reliques of Saints in no wise to be reverenced. And, that it is against God's commandment, that Christian men should make courteſie or reverence to the Image of our Saviour.

23. Item, That it is no ſin or offence to eat white meats, eggs, butter, cheeſe, or fleſh in the Lent, or other Faſting-daies commanded by the Church, and received by conſent of Chriſtian people.

24. Item, That it is lawfull to eat fleſh on Good-Friday, as upon Eaſter-day, or other times in the year.

25. Item, That the ſinner offending in the Lent, or other high Feaſts of the year, is worthy no more puniſhment than he that tranſgreſſeth in any other time.

26. Item, That Confeſſion auricular, Abſolution, and Penance, are nother neceſſary nor profitable in the Church of God.

27. Item, That auricular Confeſſion is onely invented and ordained to have the ſecret knowledge of mens hearts, and to pull money out of their purſes.

28. Item, That the ghoſtly Father cannot give or enjoyn any penance at all.

29. Item, That it is ſufficient for a man or woman to make their confeſſion to God alone.

30. Item, That it is as lawfull at all times to confeſſe to a Lay-man as to a Prieſt.

31. Item, That confeſſion is but a whiſpering in a Prieſts eare, and is as well to be made, a multitude being preſent, as ſecretly.

32. Item, That it is ſufficient that the ſinner doe ſay, I know my ſelf a ſinner.

33. Item, That Biſhops Ordinaries and Eccleſiaſtical Judges have no authority to give any ſentence of excommunication or cenſure; ne yet to abſolve or loſe any man from the ſame.

34. Item, That it is not neceſſary or profitable to have any Church or Chappel to pray in, or to doe any divine ſervice in.

35. Item, That the Church was made for no other purpoſe, but other to keep the people from winde and rain, other elſe that the people upon Sondaies and Holy-daies ſhould reſort thither to have the Word of God declared unto them.

36. Item, That buryings in Churches and Church-yards be unprofitable and vain.

37. Item, That the rich and coſtly ornaments in the Church are rather high diſpleaſure than pleaſure or honour to God.

38. Item, That it is pity that ever the Maſs, Mattens, Evenſong, or any other Divine Service was made, or ſuffered to be read, ſaid, or ſung within any Church, becauſe it is onely to the deluding of the people.

39. Item, That Saints are not to be invocated or honoured: and that they underſtand not, nor know nothing of our Petitions, nor can be Mediatours or Interceſſours betwixt us and God.

40. Item, That our Lady was no better than another woman; and like a bag of pepper or ſaffron when the ſpice is out: and that ſhe can doe no more with Chriſt than another ſinfull woman.

41. Item, That it is as much available to pray unto Saints, as to hurl a ſtone againſt the winde: and that the Saints have no more power to help a man, than a man's wife hath to help her husband.

42. Item, That Dirige, Commendations, Maſſe, Suffrages, Prayers, Alms-deeds, or Oblations, done for the ſouls of them that be departed out of this world, be but vain and of no profit.

43. Item,

Ann. Reg. Hen. 8. Ann. Dom. 1536.

43. Item, That the Souls departed goe ſtraight to Heaven, other to Hell.

44. Item, That there is no mean place between heaven and hell, wherein ſouls departed may be afflicted.

45. Item, That if there be a place where they be puniſhed, God is not yet born, nor he that ſhall redeem the world.

46. Item, That Prayers, Suffrages, Faſting, or Alms-deeds, doe not help to take away any ſin.

47. Item, That there is no diſtinction of ſins after this ſort, ſin to be venial, and ſin to be mortal.

48. Item, That all ſins, after that the ſinner be once converted, are made by the merits of Chriſt's paſſion venial ſins, that is to ſay, ſins clean forgiven.

49. Item, That Almighty God doth not look for, nor yet require of a ſinner after his converſion from ſin any faſting, alms-deed, or any other penance, but only that the ſinner be ſorry for his ſins, amending his life, and ſinning no more.

50. Item, That hallowed-water, hallowed-bread, hallowed-candles, hallowed-aſhes, hallowed-palm, and ſuch like ceremonies of the Church are of none effect, and to be taken as trifles and vanities to ſeduce the people,

51. Item, That Holy-daies ordained and inſtituted by the Church are not to be obſerved and kept in reverence, inaſmuch as all daies and times be like: and that ſervile works, as plowing and carting may be done in the ſame, without any offence at all, as in other ferial daies.

52. Item, That the ſinging or ſaying of Maſſe, Mattens or Even-ſong, is but a roreing, howling, whiſtleing, mumming, tomring and jugling: and the playing at the Organs a fooliſh vanity.

53. Item, That pilgrimage, faſting, alms-deeds, and ſuch like are not to be uſed: and that a man is not bound to the Church, but onely to the preaching.

54. Item, That it is ſufficient and enough to believe, though a man doe no good works at all.

55. Item, That men be not content to preach of certain abuſes found in pilgrimages, in faſting, in prayer, in invocation of Saints, in reverencing of Images, in alms-deeds, but they will have needs the thing ſelf taken away, and not enough the abuſes to be reformed.

56. Item, That by preaching, the people have been brought in opinion and belief, that nothing is to be believed, except it can be proved expreſly by Scripture.

57. Item, That it is preached and taught, that foraſmuch as Chriſt hath ſhed his blood for us and redeemed us, we need not to doe any thing at all but to believe and repent, if we have offended.

58. Item, That there is of late a new Confiteor made after this form, Confiteor Deo cœli & terræ, peccavi nimis cogitatione, locutione, & opere, mea culpa. Ideo deprecor majeſtatem tuam, ut tu Deus deleas iniquitatem meam, & vos orare pro me.

59. Item, That it is preached, that becauſe auricular Confeſſion hath brought forth innumerable vices, it is clearly to be taken away.

60. Item, That the canon of the Maſſe is the comment of ſome fooliſh, unlearned Prieſt: and that the names of the Saints there expreſſed are not to be rehearſed.

61. Item, That water running in the chanel or common river, is of as great vertue as the holy-water.

62. Item, That holy-water is but jugg'led water.

63. Item, That the holy-water is more ſavoury to make ſauce with than the other, because it is mixt with salt; which is also a very good medicine for an horse with a gall'd back: yea, if there be put an onyon thereunto, it is a good sauce for a gibbet of mutton.

64. Item, That no humane constitutions or laws doe binde any Christian man, but such as be in the Gospels, Paul's Epistles, or the New Testament: and that a man may break them without any offence at all.

65. Item, That besides seditious preaching, letting unity to be had, there are many slanderous and erroneous books that have been made and suffered to goe abroad indifferently, which books were the more gladly bought, because of these words, Cum privilegio: which the ignorant people took to have been an expresse approbation of the KING, where it was not so indeed.

66. Item, That where heretofore divers books have been examined by persons appointed in the Convocation, and the said books found full of heresie and erroneous opinions, and so declared, the said books are not yet by the Bishops expresly condemned, but suffered to remain in the hands of unlearned people, which ministreth to them matter of argument, and much unquietnesse within the Realm.

67. Item, That Apostates, abjured persons, and of notable ill conversation, and infamed, have without licence of the King's Grace, or the Ordinary, taken upon them to preach slanderously.

Ann. Dom. 1536. Ann. Reg. Hen. 28.

Distempered expressions partly excused. * Jer. 24. 3.

29. The Reader hath no sooner perused these opinions, but well he may conceive himself to have put his hand into Jeremie's basket of figs, * Those that are good, exceeding good; and those that are bad, exceeding bad: Most of these tenents being true in themselves, grounded on God's Word, and at this day professed by the Protestants; But blended with these are some, rather expressions than opinions (and those probably worse spoken than meant, worse taken than spoken) which we will not go about in any degree to defend, onely may the unpartial Reader take this into consideration. It happeneth in all heights and heats of oppositions, as in horse-races; wherein the Rider, if he doth not go beyond the post, cannot come to the post, so as to win the prize; for being upon the speed, he must goe beyond it that he come to it, though afterwards he may rain and turn his horse back again to the very place of the mark. Thus men being in the heat of contest upon the very career of their souls, because of their passions, cannot stop short at the very mark they ayme at, but some extravagancies must be indulged to humane infirmity, which in their reduced thoughts they will correct and amend. As some Protestants, no doubt, now lashing out so farre in their language, retrenched them afterwards to a just proportion of truth.

Two contrary parties in the Convocation.

30. Two contrary interests visibly discovered themselves in the Upper-house of this Convocation betwixt the Bishops therein; and certainly in the Lower-house, their Clerks and Chaplains adhered to the parties of their Lords and Masters. An honourable * pen hath stated the principal parties, whom we implicitly follow herein; onely, where he mentions their bare Sees, we willl adde their names and sirnames for the better clearing thereof:

* Lord Herbert in the Life of Henry the 8th.

Protestants for the Reformation.	Papists against Reformation.
1. Thomas Cranmer, Archb. of Canterbury.	1. Edward Lee, Archb. of Yorke.
2. Thomas Goodrich, Bishop of Elie.	2. John Stokesley, Bp. of London.
3. Nich: Shaxton, Bishop of Sarum.	3. Cuthbert Tunstall, Bp. Durham.
4. Hugh Latimer, Bishop of Worcester.	4. Steven Gardiner, B. Winchester.
5. Edw: Fox, Bishop of Hereford.	5. Rob: Sherborne, Bp. Chichester.
6. John Hilsley, Bishop of Rochester.	6. Richard Nix, Bp. of Norwich.
7. Will: Barlow, Bishop of S. Davids.	7. John Kite, Bishop of Carlile.

Oh!

Ann. Reg. Hen. 8. 28. Ann. Dom. 1536.

Oh! what tugging was here betwixt these opposite sides? (For, I dare not take Bishop Latimer's phrase, as he took it out of his text, Betwixt the children of this generation, and the children of light) whilst with all earnestnesse they thought to advance their severall designs. But, as when two stout and sturdy travellers meet together, and both desire the way, yet neither are willing to fight for it, in their passage they so shove & shoulder one another, that dividing the way betwixt them both, and yet neither get the same; so these two opposite parties in the Convocation were fain at last in a drawn battell to part the prize between them, neither of them being conquering, or conquered: but, a medlie-Religion, as an expedient, being made up betwixt them both, to salve (if not the consciences) the credits of both sides.

31. Some Zelots of our Age will condemn the Laodicean temper of the Protestant-Bishops, because if stickling to purpose, and improving their power to the utmost, they might have set forth a more pure and perfect Religion. Such men see the faults of Reformers, but not the difficulties of Reformation. These Protestant-Bishops were at this time to encounter with the Popish-Clergie, equal in number, not inferiour in learning; but, farre greater in power and dependencies. Besides, the generality of the people of the Land being nusled in ignorance and superstition, could not on a suddain endure the extremity of an absolute Reformation. Should our eyes be instantly posted out of mid-night into noon-day, certainly we should be blinded with the suddennesse and excellency of the lustre thereof. Nature therefore hath wisely provided the twi-light, as a bridge, by degrees to passe us from darknesse to light. Yea, our Saviour himself did at the first connive at the carnality of his Apostles, and would not put new wine into old bottles for fear of breaking. Yea, he had some commandements, which as yet [b] they were not able to bear; and therefore till they could bear them, his wisdome did bear with them. Thus the best of Artists doe not alwaies work to the height of their own skill, but according to the aptnesse of the instruments wherewith, and the capacity of the subjects whereon, they employ themselves.

The Protestant Bishops their moderation vindicated.

34. And here we present the Reader with the aforesaid medley-Religion passed in this Convocation, and confirmed with Royal assent; requesting him, though it be somewhat long, not to grudge his time and pains, seriously to peruse it. Partly for the authenticalnesse thereof, being by me transcribed out of the Acts of the Convocation: partly for its usefulnesse, shewing by what degrees the Gospel insinuated it self into the souls of men. What said Zeresh, Haman's [c] wife to her husband? If thou hast begun to fall before Mordecai, thou shalt not prevail against him, but shalt surely fall before him. Seeing Popery began even now to reel and stagger, within few years we shall have it tumble down and lay prostrate with the face thereof at the foot-stool of truth.

[c] Esther 6. 13.

35. HENRY the Eighth, by the grace of God, KING of England, and of France, Defensour of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in earth Supreme Head of the Church of England; to all, and singular, our most loving, faithfull, and obedient Subjects, greeting,

AMongst other cures appertaining unto this Our Princely Office, whereunto it hath pleased Almighty God of his infinite mercy and goodnesse to call Us, We have alwaies esteemed and thought, like as We also yet esteem and think, that it most chiefly belongeth unto Our said charge, diligently to foresee and cause, That not onely the most holy Word and Commandements of God should most sincerely be believed, and most reverently be observed and kept of Our Subjects; but also that unity and concord in opinions, namely, in such things as doe concern Our Religion, may encrease & goe forthward, and all occasion of dissent and discord, touching the same, be repressed and utterly extinguished.

For the which cause, We being of late to Our great regrete, credibly advertised of such diversity in opinions, as have grown and sprongen in this Our Realm, as well concerning certain Articles necessary to Our salvation, as also touching certain other honest and commendable ceremonies, rites, and usages, now a long time used and accustomed in Our Churches, for conservation of an honest politie, and decent and seemly order to be had therein: minding to have that unity and agreement established through Our said Church concerning the premisses. And, being very desirous to eschew, not onely the dangers of souls, but also the outward unquietness, which, by occasion of the said diversity in opinions (if remedy were not provided) might perchance have ensued; have not onely in Our own Person, at many times taken great pain, study, labours, and travails; but also have caused Our Bishops, and other the most discreet and best learned men of Our Clergie of this Our whole Realm, to be assembled in Our Convocation, for the full debatement and quiet determination of the same. Where, after long and mature deliberation had, of, and upon the premisses, finally they have concluded, and agreed upon the most special points, and Articles; as well such as be commanded of God, and are necessary to our salvation, as also divers other matters, touching the honest ceremonies, and good and politick orders, as is aforesaid. Which their determination, debatement, and agreement, for so much as We think to have proceeded of a good, right, and true judgment, and to be agreeable to the laws, and ordinances of God, and much profitable for the stablishment of that charitable concord, and unity in Our Church of England, which which We moſt deſire, We have cauſed the ſame to be publiſhed, willing, requiring, and commanding you to accept, repute, and take them accordingly. And farther, We moſt heartily deſire, & pray Almighty God, that it may pleaſe him, ſo to illuminate your hearts, that you, and every of you, may have no leſſe deſire, zeal, and love to the ſaid unity and concord, in reading, divulging, and following the ſame, than We have had, and have, in cauſing them to be thus deviſed, ſet forth, and publiſhed.

And, for becauſe We would, the ſaid Articles, and every of them, ſhould be taken, and underſtanden of you, after ſuch ſort, order & degree, as appertaineth accordingly; We have cauſed by the like aſſent & agreement of our ſaid Biſhops, & other learned men, the ſaid Articles to be divided into two ſorts; whereof the one part containeth ſuch as be commanded expreſly by God, and be neceſſary to our ſalvation; and the other containeth ſuch things as have been of a long continuance, for a decent order & honeſt polity, prudently inſtituted & uſed in the Church of Our Realm, & be for that ſame purpoſe & end to be obſerved & kept accordingly, although they be not expreſly cõmanded of God, nor neceſſary to our ſalvation. Wherefore, We will & require you to accept the ſame, after ſuch ſort as We have here preſcribed them unto you, & to conform your ſelves obediently unto the ſame: whereby you ſhall not only attain that moſt charitable unity & loving concord, whereof ſhall enſue your incomparable cõmodity, profit & lucre, as well ſpiritual as other; but alſo you ſhall not a little encourage Us to take farther travails, pains, & labours, for your commodities in all ſuch other matters, as in time to come, may happen to occur, and as it ſhall be moſt to the honour of God, the profit, tranquility & quietneſs of all you Our moſt loving Subjects.

The principal Articles concerning our Faith.

First, As touching the chief and principal Articles of our Faith, it is thus agreed, as hereafter followeth, by the whole Clergie of this Our Realm. We will, that all Biſhops and Preachers ſhall inſtruct and teach Our people by Us cõmitted to their ſpiritual charge, that they ought and muſt moſt conſtantly believe and defend all thoſe things to be true which be comprehended in the whole body and Canon of the Bible; and alſo in the three Creeds or Symbols, whereof one was made by the Apoſtles, and is is the common Creed which every man useth: The second was made by the Councel of Nice, and is said daily in the Masse: And the third was made by Athanasius, and is comprehended in the Psalm, Quicunq; vult. And, that they ought, and must take and interpret all the same things, according to the self-same sentence and interpretation, which the words of the self-same Creeds or Symbols doe purport, and the holy approved doctrines of the Church doe intreat and defend the same.

Item, That they ought, and must repute, hold, and take all the same things for the most holy, most sure, and most certain and infallible words of God, and such as neither ought, ne can be altered, or convelled by any contrary opinion or authority.

Item, That they ought, and must believe, repute, and take all the Articles of our Faith contained in the said Creeds, to be so necessary to be believed for mans salvation. That, whosoever being taught, will not believe them, as is aforesaid, or will obstinately affirm the contrary of them; he, or they, cannot be the very members of Christ, and his Spouse the Church, but be very Infidels or Hereticks, and members of the Devil, with whom they shall perpetually be damned.

Item, That they ought, and must, most reverently and religiously observe and keep the self-same words, according to the very same form and manner of speaking, as the Articles of our Faith be already conceived and expressed in the said Creeds, without altering in any wise, or varying from the same.

Item, That they ought, and must utterly refuse and condemn all those opinions contrary to the said Articles, which were of long time passed, condemned in the four holy Councels, that is to say, in the Council of Nice, Constantinople, Ephesus, and Calcedon, and all other since that time in any point consonant to the same.

The Sacrament of Baptism.

Secondly, As touching the holy Sacrament of Baptism, We will, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct and teach Our people committed by Us unto their spiritual charge, that they ought, and must of necessity believe certainly all those things, which have been alwaies by the whole consent of the Church, approved, received, and used in the Sacrament of Baptism; that is to say, that the Sacrament of Baptism was instituted and ordained in the New Testament by our Saviour JESUS CHRIST, as a thing necessary for the attaining of everlasting life, according to the saying of Christ, [d] No man can enter into the kingdome of heaven, except he be born again of water, and the Holy Ghost.

d Iohn 3. 5.

Item, That it is offered unto all men, as well Infants, as such as have the use of reason, that by Baptism they shall have remission of sins, and the grace and favour of God, according to the saying of Christ, [e] Whosoever believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved.

e Mark 16.16.

Item, That the promise of grace & everlasting life, (which promise is adjoyned unto this Sacrament of Baptism) pertaineth not onely unto such as have the use of reason, but also to infants, innocents, and children: and, that they ought therefore, and must needs be baptized; and, that by the Sacrament of Baptism they do also obtain remission of their sins, the grace and favour of God, and be made thereby the very sons and children of God. Insomuch as infants and children dying in their infancy shall undoubtedly be saved thereby, and else not.

Item, That infants must needs be christened, because they be born in original sin, which sin must needs be remitted, which cannot be done but by the Sacrament of Baptism, whereby they receive the Holy Ghost, which exerciseth exerciseth his grace and efficacy in them, and cleanseth and purifieth them from sin by his most secret vertue and operation.

Ann. Reg. Hen. 8. 28. Ann. Dom. 1536.

Item, That children, or men, once baptized, can, ne ought ever to be baptized again.

Item, That they ought to repute, and take all the Anabaptists, and the Pelagians their opinions, contrary to the premisses, and every other man's opinion agreeable unto the said Anabaptists, or Pelagians opinions in this behalf, for detestable heresies, and utterly to be condemned.

Item, That men, or children, having the use of reason, and willing and desiring to be baptized, shall by the vertue of that Holy Sacrament obtain the grace and remission of all their sins, if they shall come thereunto perfectly and truly repentant, and contrite of all their sins before committed: and also perfectly and constantly confessing and believing all the Articles of our Faith, according as it was mentioned in the first Article.

And finally, If they shall also have firm credence and trust in the promise of God, adjoyned to the said Sacrament, that is to say, that in and by this said Sacrament which they shall receive, God the Father giveth unto them, for his son Jesus Christ's sake, remission of all their sins, and the grace of the Holy Ghost, whereby they be newly regenerated and made the very children of God, according to the saying of S. John, and the Apostle S. Peter, [f] Doe penance for your sins, and be each of you baptized in the name of Jesu Christ, and you shall obtain remission of your sins, and shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. And according also to the saying of S. Paul, [g] God hath not saved us for the works of justice which we have done, but of his mercy by baptism, and renovation of the Holy Ghost. Whom he hath powred out upon us most plentifully, for the love of Jesu Christ our Saviour, to the intent that we being justified by his grace, should be made the inheritours of everlasting life, according to our hope.

f Acts 2. 38.

g Tit. 3. 5.

The Sacrament of Penance.

Thirdly, concerning the Sacrament of Penance, We will, that all Bishops, and Preachers, shall instruct and teach Our people committed by Us unto their spiritual charge, that they ought, and must constantly believe, that that Sacrament was institute of Christ in the New Testament as a thing so necessary for man's salvation, that no man, which after his baptisme is fallen again, and hath committed deadly sin, can without the same be saved, or attain everlasting life.

Item, That like as such men, which after Baptism doe fall again into sin, if they doe not penance in this life, shall undoubtedly be damned: even so, whensoever the same men shall convert themselves from their naughty life, and doe such penance for the same as Christ requireth of them, they shall without doubt attain remission of their sins, and shall be saved.

Item, That the Sacrament of perfect Penance, which Christ requireth of such manner persons, consisteth of three parties; that is to say, Contrition, Confession, and the Amendment of the former life, and a new obedient reconciliation unto the laws, and will of God; that is to say, exteriour acts in works of charity, according as they be commanded of God, which be called in Scripture, [h] The worthy fruits of penance.

h Luke 3. 8.

Furthermore, As touching Contrition, which is the first part, We will, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct and teach Our people committed by Us unto their spiritual charge, that the said Contrition consisteth in two special parts, which must alwaies be conjoyned together, and cannot be dissevered; that is to say, The penitent and contrite man must first knowledge the filthiness and abomination of his own sin, unto which knowledge he is brought by hearing and considering of the will of God, declared declared in his laws; and feeling and perceiving in his own conſcience, that God is angry and diſpleaſed with him for the ſame. He muſt alſo conceive not onely great ſorrow and inward ſhame, that he hath ſo grievouſly offended God, but alſo great fear of Gods diſpleaſure towards him, conſidering he hath no works or merits of his own, which he may worthily lay before God, as ſufficient ſatisfaction for his ſins. Which done, then afterward with this fear, ſhame and ſorrow, muſt needs ſucceed and be conjoyned, the ſecond part, that is to wit, a certain faith, truſt and confidence of the mercy and goodneſſe of God, whereby the penitent muſt conceive certain hope and faith, that God will forgive him his ſins, and repute him juſtified, and of the number of his elect children, not for the worthineſſe of any merit or work done by the penitent, but for the onely merits of the blood and paſſion of our Saviour JESU CHRIST.

Item, That this certain faith and hope is gotten, and alſo confirmed and made more ſtrong by the applying of Chriſts words and promiſes of his grace and favour contained in his Goſpel & the Sacraments inſtituted by him in the New Teſtament. And therefore to attain this certain faith, the ſecond part of Penance is neceſſary, that is to ſay, Confeſſion to a Prieſt, if it may be had; for, the abſolution given by the Prieſt was inſtitute of Chriſt to apply the promiſes of God's grace and favour to the penitent.

Wherefore, as touching Confeſſion, We will, that all Biſhops and Preachers ſhall inſtruct and teach Our people committed by Us to their ſpiritual charge, that they ought, and muſt certainly believe, that the words of abſolution, pronounced by the Prieſt, be ſpoken by the authority given to him by Chriſt in the Goſpel.

Item, That they ought and muſt give no leſſe faith and credence to the ſame words of abſolution, ſo pronounced by the Miniſters of the Church, than they would give unto the very words and voice of God himſelf, if he ſhould ſpeak unto us out of heaven, according to the ſaying of Chriſt, [i] Whoſe ſins ſoever ye doe forgive, ſhall be forgiven; whoſe ſins ſoever ye doe retain, ſhall be retained. And again in another place, Chriſt ſaith, [k] Whoſoever heareth you, heareth me.

Item, That in no wiſe they doe contemn this Auricular Confeſſion, which is made unto the Miniſters of the Church, but that they ought to repute the ſame as a very expedient and neceſſary mean, whereby they may require and ask this abſolution at the Prieſt's hands, at ſuch time as they ſhall finde their conſcience grieved with mortal ſin, and have occaſion ſo to doe; to the intent, they may thereby attain certain comfort and conſolation of their conſciences.

As touching to the third part of Penance, We will, that all Biſhops and Preachers ſhall inſtruct and teach Our people committed by Us to their ſpiritual charge, that although Chriſt & his death be the ſufficient oblation, ſacrifice, ſatisfaction, and recompenſe, for the which God the Father forgiveth and remitteth to all ſinners, not only their ſin, but alſo eternal pain due for the ſame; yet all men truly penitent, contrite and confeſſed, muſt needs alſo bring forth the fruits of penance, that is to ſay, Prayer, Faſting, Alms-deeds: and muſt make reſtitution or ſatisfaction in will and deed to their neighbours in ſuch things as they have done them wrong and injury in, and alſo muſt doe all other good works of mercy and charity; and expreſſe their obedient will in the executing and fulfilling of Gods commandements outwardly, when time, power, and occaſion ſhall be miniſtred unto them, or elſe they ſhall never be ſaved. For, this is the expreſſe precept and commandement of God, [l] Doe you the worthy fruits of penance. And S. Paul ſaith, [m] Like as in times paſt you have given and applied applied your ſelves, and all the members of your body, to all filthy living and wickedneſſe, continually encreaſing the ſame; in like manner now, you muſt give and appply your ſelves wholly to juſtice, encreaſing continually in purity and cleanneſſe of life. And in another place he ſaith, [n] I chaſtiſe and ſubdue my carnal body, and the affections of the ſame, and make them obedient unto the ſpirit.

Item, That theſe precepts and works of charity, be neceſſary works to our ſalvation, and God neceſſarily requireth, that every penitent man ſhall perform the ſame whenſoever time, power and occaſion ſhall be miniſtred unto them ſo to doe.

Item, That by penance and ſuch good works of the ſame, we ſhall not onely obtain everlaſting life, but alſo we ſhall deſerve remiſſion or mitigation of theſe preſent pains and afflictions in this world, according to the ſaying of Saint Paul, [o] If we would correct and take puniſhment of our ſelves, we ſhould not be ſo grievouſly corrected of God. And Zacharias the Prophet ſaith, [p] Turn your ſelves unto me, and I will turn again unto you. And the Prophet Eſay ſaith, [q] Break, and deal thy bread unto the hungry, bring into thy houſe the poor man, and ſuch as want harbour. When thou ſeeſt a naked man, give him clothes to cover him with, and refuſe not to ſuccour and help the poor and needy, for he is thine own fleſh. And, if thou wilt thus doe, then ſhall thy light gliſter out as bright as the ſun in the morning, and thy health ſhall ſooner ariſe unto thee, and thy juſtice ſhall goe before thy face, and the glory of God ſhall gather thee up, that thou ſhalt not fall. And, whenſoever thou ſhalt call upon God, God ſhall hear thee: and, whenſoever thou ſhalt crie unto God, God ſhall ſay, Loe! here I am ready to help thee; then ſhall thy light overcome all darkneſſe, and thy darkneſſe ſhall be as bright as the ſun at noon-daies: and then God ſhall give unto thee continuall reſt, and ſhall fulfill thy ſoul with brightneſſe; and ſhall deliver thy body from adverſity: and then thou ſhalt be like a garden, that moſt plentifully bringeth forth all kinde of fruits, and like the well-ſpring that never ſhall want water.

Theſe things, and ſuch other, ſhould be continually taught and inculked into the ears of Our people, to the intent to ſtirre and provoke them unto good works, and by the ſelf-ſame good works to exerciſe and confirm their faith and hope, and look for to receive at God's hand mitigation and remiſſion of the miſeries, calamities and grievous puniſhments, which God ſendeth to men in this world for their ſins.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

Fourthly, As touching the Sacrament of the Altar, We will, that all Biſhops & Preachers ſhall inſtruct and teach Our people committed by Us unto their ſpiritual charge, that they ought, and muſt conſtantly believe, that under the form & figure of bread & wine, which We there preſently do ſee & perceive by outward ſenſes, is verily, ſubſtantially & really contained and comprehended the very ſelf-ſame body and blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, which was born of the Virgin Mary, and ſuffered upon the Croſſe for our redemption. And, that under the ſame form and figure of Bread and Wine, the very ſelf-ſame body and blood of Chriſt is corporally, really and in the very ſubſtance exhibited, diſtributed, and received unto, and of all them which receive the ſaid Sacrament. And, that therefore the ſaid Sacrament is to be uſed with all due reverence and honour; and, that every man ought firſt to prove and examine himſelf, and religiouſly to trie and ſearch his own conſcience before he ſhall receive the ſame, according to the ſaying of S. Paul, Whoſoever eateth [r] this body of Chriſt unworthily, or drinketh of this blood of Chriſt unworthily, ſhall be guilty guilty of the very body and blood of Christ. Wherefore let every man first prove himself, and so let him eat of this bread, and drink of this drink; for, whosoever eateth it, or drinketh it unworthily, he eateth and drinketh to his own damnation, because he putteth no difference between the very body of Christ, and other kindes of meat.

Ann. Dom. 1536. Ann. Reg. 28.

Justification.

Fifthly, As touching the order and cause of our Justification, We will, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct and teach our people committed by Us to their spiritual charge, that this word Justification signifieth remission of our sins, and our acceptation or reconciliation into the grace and favour of God, that is to say, our perfect renovation in Christ.

Item, That sinners attain this justification, by contrition and faith joyned with charity, after such sort and manner as we before mentioned and declared. Nor, as though our contrition, or faith, or any works proceeding thereof, can worthily merit or deserve to attain the said justification: for the onely mercy and grace of the Father promised freely unto us for his Sons sake Jesus Christ, and the merits of his blood and passion, be the onely sufficient and worthy causes thereof. And yet, that, notwithstanding, to the attaining of the same justification, God requireth to be in us, not onely inward contrition, perfect faith and charity, certain hope and confidence with all other spiritual graces and motions; which, as we said before, must necessarily concurre in remission of our sins, that is to say, our justification: but also he requireth and commandeth us, that after we be justified, we must also have good works of charity and obedience towards God, in the observing and fulfilling outwardly of his laws and commandements. For, although acceptation to everlasting life be conjoyned with justification, yet our good works be necessarily required to the attaining of everlasting life. And, we being justified be necessarily bound, and it is our necessary duty to doe good works, according to the saying of S. Paul, [f] We be bound not to live according to the flesh, and to fleshly appetites; for, if we live so, we shall undoubtedly be damned. And contrary, if we will mortifie the deeds of our flesh, and live according to the spirit, we shall be saved. For, whosoever be led by the spirit of God, they be the children of God: And Christ saith, [t] If you will come to heaven, keep the commandements. And Saint Paul, speaking of evil works, saith, [u] Whosoever commit sinfull deeds, shall never come to heaven. Wherefore, We will, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct & teach Our people committed by Us unto their spiritual charge, that God necessarily requireth of us to doe good works commanded by him, and that not onely outward and civil works, but also the inward spiritual motions and graces of the Holy Ghost: that is to say, to dread and fear God, to love God, to have firm confidence and trust in God, to invocate and call upon God, to have patience in all adversities, to hate sin, and to have certain purpose and will not to sin again, and such other like motions and virtues. For Christ saith, [w] Except your righteousnesse shall exceed the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdome of heaven: that is to say, We must not only do outward civil good works, but also we must have these foresaid inward spiritual motions, consenting and agreeable to the law of God.

Articles concerning the laudable Ceremonies used in the Church of Christ; and first of Images.

As touching Images, truth it is, that the same have been used in the Old Testament, and also for the great abuses of them, sometime destroyed and put down. And in the New Testament they have been also allowed, as good Authors doe declare. Wherefore We will, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct and teach Our people committed by Us to their spiritual charge, how they ought and may use them. And first, that there be attributed unto them, that they be representers of virtue and good example. And, that they also be by occasion, the kindlers and stirrers of mens mindes, and make men oft to remember and lament their sins and offences, especially the images of Christ and our Lady. And, that therefore it is meet that they should stand in the Churches, and none otherwise to be esteemed. And, to the intent that rude people should not from henceforth take such superstition as in time past, it is thought, that the same hath used to doe. We will, that Our Bishops and Preachers diligently shall teach them, and according to this doctrine reform their abuses; for, else there might fortune idolatry to ensue, which God forbid. And as for sensing of them, and kneeling and offering unto them, with other like worshippings, although the same hath entered by devotion, and faine to custome, yet the people ought to be diligently taught, that they in no wise doe it, nor think it meet to be done to the same images, but onely to be done to God and in his honour, although it be done before the images, whether it be of Christ, of the Crosse, of our Lady, or of any other Saint beside.

Of honouring of Saints.

As touching the honouring of Saints, We will, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct and teach Our people committed by Us unto their spiritual charges, that Saints, now being with Christ in heaven, be to be honoured of Christian people in earth, but not with that confidence and honour which are onely due unto God, trusting to attain at their hands that which must be had onely of God. But, that they be thus to be honoured, because they be known the elect persons of Christ, because they be passed in godly life out of this transitory world: because they already doe reigne in glory with Christ: and, most specially to laud and praise Christ in them for their excellent virtues, which he planted in them, for example of, and by them, to such as yet are in this world, to live in virtue and goodnesse: and also not to fear to die for Christ and his cause, as some of them did. And finally, to take them in that they may, to be the advancers of our prayers and demands unto Christ. By these waies, and such like, be Saints to be honoured and had in reverence, and by none other.

Of Praying to Saints.

As touching Praying to Saints, We will, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct and teach Our people committed by Us unto their spiritual charge, that albeit, grace, remission of sin and salvation cannot be obtained, but of God onely, by the mediation of our Saviour CHRIST, which is onely sufficient Mediatour for our sins; yet, it is very laudable to pray to Saints in heaven everlastingly living, whose charity is ever permanent to be Intercessors, and to pray for us, and with us, unto Almighty God, after this manner:

Ann. Dom. 1536. Ann. Regni Hen. 8.

All holy Angels and Saints in heaven, pray for us, and with us, unto the Father, that for his dear Son Jesu Christ his sake, we may have grace of him, and remission of our sins, with an earnest purpose, (not wanting ghostly strength) to observe and keep his holy commandements, and never to decline from the same again unto our lives end. And in this manner we may pray to our blessed Lady, to Saint John Baptist, to all, and every of the Apostles, or any other Saint particularly, as our devotion doth serve us: so that it be done without any vain superstition, as to think that any Saint is more mercifull, or will hear us sooner than CHRIST; or that any Saint doth serve for one thing more than another, or is patrone of the same. And likewise we must keep Holy-daies unto God, in memory of him and his Saints, upon such daies as the Church hath ordained their memories to be celebrate, except they be mitigated and moderated by the assent and commandment of Us the Supreme Head, to the Ordinaries, and then the Subjects ought to obey it.

Of Rites, and Ceremonies.

As concerning the Rites and Ceremonies of Christ's Church, as, to have such vestments in doing Gods service, as be, and have been most part used: as sprinkling of Holy-water to put us in remembrance of our Baptism, and the blood of Christ sprinkled for our redemption upon the Cross: Giving of Holy-bread to put us in remembrance of the Sacrament of the Altar, that all Christian men be one body mystical of Christ, as the bread is made of many grains, and yet but one loaf; and to put us in remembrance of the receiving of the holy Sacrament and body of Christ, the which we ought to receive in right charity, which in the beginning of Christ's Church, men did more often receive, than they use now adaies to do: Bearing of Candles on Candle-mas-day, in memory of Christ the spiritual Light, of whom Simeon did prophecie, as is read in the Church that day: Giving of Ashes on Ash-wednesday, to put in remembrance every Christian man in the beginning of Lent, and penance, that he is but ashes and earth, and thereto shall return, which is right necessary to be uttered from henceforth in our Mother-tongue alwaies on the Sunday: Bearing of Palms on Palm-Sunday, in memory of the receiving of Christ into Hierusalem a little before his death; that we may have the same desire to receive him into our hearts: Creeping to the Cross, and humbling our selves to Christ on Good Friday before the Cross, and there offering unto Christ before the same, and kissing of it in memory of our redemption by Christ made upon the Cross: Setting up the Sepulture of Christ, whose body after his death was buried: The hallowing of the Font, and other like exorcismes and benedictions by the Ministers of Christs Church, and all other like laudable Customes, Rites and Ceremonies, be not to be contemned and cast away, but to be used and continued, as things good and laudable, to put us in remembrance of those spiritual things that they doe signifie, not suffering them to be forgotten, or to be put in oblivion, but renewing them in our memories from time to time, but none of these Ceremonies have power to remit sinne, but onely to stirre and lift up our mindes unto God, by whom onely our sinnes be forgiven.

Ann. Reg. Hen. 28. Ann. Dom. 1536

Of Purgatorie.

Foraſmuch as due order of charity requireth, and the Book of Maccabees, and divers antient Doctours plainly ſhewen, That it is a very good and charitable deed to pray for Souls departed; and, foraſmuch alſo as ſuch uſage hath continued in the Church ſo many years, even from the beginning: We will, that all Biſhops and Preachers ſhall inſtruct and teach Our people committed by us unto their ſpiritual charge, that no man ought to be grieved with the continuance of the ſame; and, that it ſtandeth with the very due order of charity, a Chriſtian man to pray for Souls departed, and to commit them in our prayers to God's mercy, and alſo to cauſe other to pray for them in Maſſes and Exequies, and to give alms to other to pray for them, whereby they may be relieved and holpen of ſome part of their pain. But, foraſmuch as the place where they be, the name thereof, and kinde of pains there alſo, be to us uncertain by Scripture, therefore this, with all other things, we remit to Almighty God, unto whoſe mercy it is meet and convenient for us to commend them; truſting that God accepteth our prayers for them, referring the reſt wholly to God, to whom is known their eſtate and condition. Wherefore it is much neceſſary that ſuch abuſes be clearly put away, which under the name of Purgatorie hath been advanced, as to make men believe, that through the Biſhop of Rome's Pardons, Souls might clearly be delivered out of Purgatorie, and all the pains of it. Or, that Maſſes ſaid at Scala cœli, or otherwhere in any place, or before any Image, might likewiſe deliver them from all their pain, and ſend them ſtraight to heaven. And other like abuſes.

Nothing elſe of moment paſſed in this Convocation, ſave that on the 20 of July, Edward Biſhop of Hereford, brought in a Book containing the King's Reaſons, conceiving it unfit, in Perſon, or by Proxie, to appear at the General Councel, lately called by the Pope at Mantua, (afterward removed to Trent) and then the Convocation having firſt confirm'd the King's Reaſons, was diſſolved. 37. Towards

The birth, breeding, first persecution, & far travelling of William Tyndal.

Ann. Dom. 1536. Octob. 7.

Ann. Regni Hen. 28.

37. Towards the end of this year, the faithfull servant of God, William Tyndall, alias [c] Hichins, was martyred at Fylford in Flanders, born about Wales, bred first in Oxford, then in Cambridge, after School master to the children of Mr. Welch, a bountifull house-keeper in Gloucester-shire. To his house repaired many Abbots of that County (as indeed no one Shire in England had half so many mitred ones, which voted in Parliament) and Clergy-men, whom Tyndal so welcomed with his discourse against their superstitions, that afterwards they preferred to forbear Master Welch his good cheer rather than to have the sower sauce therewith, Master Tyndal's company. But this set their stomachs so sharp against him, that he was forced to quit Gloucester-shire, and tender his service to Cuthbert Tunstall, Bishop of London, a great Scholar himself, and therefore probable to prove a Patron to a learned man. Him Tyndal presented in vain, with an Oration out of Isocrates, which he had translated into English. But, though he sued for himself in two tongues, Greek, and English, both proved ineffectual; the Bishop returning, That he had moe already than he could well maintain. On this denial, over hasts Tyndal beyond the seas; and, after much travelling, fixeth at last at Antwerp, where he became Clerk to the Company of English Merchant-Adventurers.

[c] Bal. ut prius.

He translateth the New, and most part of the Old Testament.

38. Here he began with the New Testament, (as of most concernment to mans salvation) and, with the help of John Frith, the Baruch to this Jeremie) translating it out of the Greek Original, finished, printed, and published it. Then he proceeded to the Old, and accomplished it from Genesis to Nehemiah inclusively, but translated none of the Prophets, (save [c] Jonah) being prevented by death. I presume he rendred the Old Testament out of the Latine, his best friends not intituling him to any skill at all in the Hebrew. And remarkable it was, that sailing to Hamborough to print the Pentateuch, he lost all his Books and Copies by [f] shipwrack, which doubled his pains in re-translating it. But here he lighted on the help of Miles Coverdale, afterward Bishop of Exeter, to assist him; and safely they went thorough their work, even when the Sweating-sickness swept away thousands in the City, with a generall mortality: As if the usefull sweating of their brains, were a preservative against the hurtfull sweating of their bodies. And indeed painfulness in a lawfull calling, is the best antidote against a publick infection.

[f] Fox Martyrol. vol. 2. pag. 364.

Faults in his Translation confessed and excused.

39. Yet none will deny, but that many faults needing amendment, are found in his Translation; which is no wonder to those who consider; First, such an undertaking was not the task for a man, but men. Secondly, no great design is invented, and perfected at once. Thirdly, Tyndal, being an exile, wanted many necessary accommodations. Fourthly, his skill in Hebrew was not considerable; yea, generally Learning in Languages was then but in the infancie thereof. Fiftly, our English tongue was not improved to that expressiveness, whereat at this day it is arrived. However, what he undertook was to be admired as glorious; what he performed, to be commended as profitable; wherein he failed, is to be excused as pardonable, and to be scored on the account rather of that Age, than of the Authour himself. Yea, Tyndal's pains were usefull, had his Translation done no other good than to help towards the making of a better; Our last Translators having in expresse charge from King JAMES, to consult the Translation of Tyndall.

Tyndal and his Translation both martyred with fire.

40. But, when the Testament of Tyndal's Translation came over into England, oh! how were the Popish Clergie cut to the heart? How did their blear-eyes smart at the shining of the Gospel in a vulgar Tongue? Downe must their Dagon, if this Arke be set up: down their Diana, if Paul be permitted to preach to the people. Some said, that the Bible ought not to be translated; some, that it could not be, that it was impossible: Others, that the translating thereof would make men rebell against the King; and why I pray? seeing they shall read therein, [h] Let every soul be subject to the higher powers, &c. and many other places pressing obedience. Some were not so much angry with the Text, as with Tyndal's dal's Comment, his Preface before, and Notes upon the same: In fine, they did not onely procure his Book to be publickly burnt in Paul's Church-yard, but also their malice (which hath long arms to reach at such distance) contrived, and effected the strangling and burning of Tyndal in Flanders.

41. Bale calleth him the Apostle of the English. And indeed, some generall parallel (farre be it from me to enforce it to an absolute conformity) may be observed betwixt Saint Paul, and our Tyndal: S. Paul withstood, and defeated the power of [i] Elymas the Sorcerer: Tyndal, with the grace and gravity of his company put a [k] Magician out of countenance, being brought thither to shew a cast of his skill by inchanting. S. Paul, in Thyatira, converted his [l] Jaylour, and all his household: Tyndal, during his year and half durance, converted his keeper, his daughter, [m] and other of his family. Saint Paul was in perils by waters, in perils by robbers, in perils amongst false brethren: so was Tyndal, whom one Philips, pretending much friendship, by cunning insinuation betrayed to his destruction. We take our leaves of Tyndal, with that testimony which the Emperour's Procurator or Attorney-General (though his adversary) gave of him, Homo fuit doctus, pius, & bonus: He was a learned, a godly, and a good-natur'd man.

A parallel betwixt S. Paul, and Tyndal.

SECTION IV.

TO CLIFFORD CLIFTON, Esquire.

I Know not of what place properly to name and inscribe you, whether of Middlesex, where you have your present Dwelling; or of Nottingham-shire, whence first you fetched your Name; or from Derby-shire, and other neighbouring Counties, wherein you are Heire apparent to a fair Inheritance. I envie not your deserved Happinesse, but onely observe it is almost as difficult to fix a rich man, as a begger; the one for his variety, the other for his want of habitation. But be you styled from what Place you please, be pleased also to accept this expression of my service unto you. All that I will adde is, that seeing two Antient and Honourable Families (the one of Norman, the other of Saxon extraction) have met in your name, may their joynt Virtues be united in your nature.

The beginning of the First-fruits Office.

GReat the Kings profit at this time from the Office for the Receipt of Tenths and First fruits, which was now first set up in London, and something must be observed of the original thereof: Such moneys formerly were paid to the Pope, who, as Pastor Pastorum, claimed Decimas Decimarum. Entituling himself thereunto, partly from Abraham, (a Priest) paying [o] Tithes to Melchizedeck the high Priest; partly from the Levites in the Mosaical Law, paying the Second Tithes, that is, the Tithes of their Tithes to the Priest: Thus shall you offer an heave offering unto the Lord, of all your [p] Tithes, which ye receive of the children of Israel, and ye shall give thereof the Lords heave-offering to Aaron the Priest. Hereupon, the Pope had his Collectors in every Diocesse, who sometimes by Bills of Exchange, but generally in specie, (to the great impoverishing of the Land) yearly returned the Tenths and First-fruits of the English Clergie to Rome. 1537. But now as the Clergie changed their Land lord, so their Rents were new-rated (and, I believe somewhat raised) Commissioners being imployed in all Counties, (the [r] Transcribed with my owne hand out of the original in the Office.

[s] No Clerk in the Office could read this word.

4. This being a work of time exactly to perform, took up some years in the effecting thereof. Devon-shire and Somerset were done in the twenty-seventh, Staffordshire, and many other Counties, in the thirty-fourth of King Henry the eighth, and most of Wales not till the reign of King Edward the sixt. Yea, I am credibly informed, that in Ireland, (to which Kingdome such Commissions were afterwards extended) the Commissioners partly tired with their troublesome work, partly afraid to pass the dangerous hill of Rushes (in Irish, Slewe-Logher) never came into the County of Kerry, the South-west extremity of that Island. So that the Clergie thereof, (though the poorest of the poorest in Ireland) enjoy this privilege, that they are presently put into their Livings, (or Benefices rather) without any payments.

Some yeares spent in the work.

Vicaridges why so highgrowne.

5. But no such favour was allowed to any place in England, where all were unpartially rated, and Vicaridges valued very high according to their present revenue by personal Perquisites. In that Age, he genererally was the richest Shepherd, who had the greatest flock; where Oblations from the living, and Obits for the dead, (as certainly paid, as Predial Tithes) much advanced their Income. In consideration whereof, Vicaridges (mostly lying in Market-Towns, and populous Parishes) were set very high, though soon after those Obventions sunk with superstition: And the Vicars, in vain, desired a proportionable abatement in the King's books, which once drawn up, were no more to be altered.

Q. Mary remits Tenths and First-fruits.

6. Now Queen Mary, a Princesse, whose conscience was never purse-ridden, as one who would go to the cost of Her own principles, did by Act of Parliament exonerate, acquit and discharge the Clergie from all First-fruits. As for Tenths, the same [t] Statute ordereth them to be paid to Cardinal Poole, who from the same was to pay the Pensions allowed by Her Father to Monks and Nuns at the dissolution of Abbies: yet so, that when such persons, who were but few and aged (all named in a Deed indented) should decease, all such paiments of the Clergie, reserved nomine decimæ, should cease, and be clearly extinct and determined for ever.

[t] 2 & 3 Phil. & Mary, cap. 4.

Q. Elizabeth resumeth them.

7. But Her Sister Q. Elizabeth succeeding Her, and finding so fair a flower, as First fruits & Tenths fallen out of Her Crown, was careful quickly to gather it up again, and get it re-sett therein. A Princesse most facil to forgive injuries, but inexorable to remit debts, who knowing that necessitous Kings are subject to great inconveniences, was a thrifty improver of Her treasure. And, no wonder if She were exact (though not exacting) to have Her dues from the Clergie, who herein would not favour her grand favourite Sir Christopher Hatton, (who by the way was Master of this first-fruits Office, and was) much indebted unto Her for moneys received. All which arrears Her Majesty required so severely and suddainly from him, that the grief thereof cost him his life. I say, this Queen in the first of Her Reign resumed first-fruits and tenths onely with this ease to Parsonages not exceeding ten Marks, and Vicaridges ten Pounds, that they should be freed from first-fruits. A clause in this Statute, impowering the Queen to take all that was due unto Her from the first day of this Parliament, was so improved by her Officers in the Exchequer, (who sometimes have none of the softest palms to those that fall into their hands) that many Ministers were much vexed thereby: Yea, one [u] observeth that the courtesie intended to the Clergie by Q. Mary in remitting their tenths, proved in event an injury to many, so vexed about their arrears.

The former certain, the latter casuall as depending on the uncertain deaths of Incumbents, and such as succeed them. Many indeed accuse such payments, as Popish in their original. But could that be superstitious, which was pluckt down by Queen Mary, and set up again by Queen Elizabeth? Besides, suppose them so, in their first foul fountain, since being shifted, yea strained through the hands of Protestant Kings, Tenths have their old property altered, and acquire no doubt a new purity to themselves. And the Advocates for this Office, doe pertinently plead, that there ought to be a badge of *subjection of the Clergie to the Secular power, by publick acknowledgment of their dependence thereon, which by such payments is best performed.

* Some say, such a vestigal from the Clergie is mentioned in Bede.

9. John Lambert, alias Nicolson, bred in Cambridge, had lately been much persecuted by Archbishop Warham, about some opinions he held against the corporal presence in the Sacrament. And now being fallen into fresh troubles on the same account, to make the quicker work (following the precedent of S. Paul, appealing to Cæsar) he appeals to the King. Who having lately taken upon him the title of the Supreme head of the Church of England, would shew that head had a tongue could speak in matters of Divinity. In White-hall, the place and day is appointed, where an ACT-ROYAL was kept; the King himselfe being the Opponent, and Lambert the Answerer; and where His Highnesse was worsted or wearied, Arch-bishop Cranmer[w] supplied His place, arguing, though civilly, shrodely, against the truth, and his own private judgment.

John Lambert condemned, and why.

[w] Fox. Acts & Mon.

10. Was not this worse than keeping the clothes of those who killed S. Stephen, seeing this Archbishop did actually cast stones at this Martyr, in the Arguments he urged against him. Nor will it excuse Cranmer's cowardise and dissimulation to accuse Gardiner's craft and cruelty, who privily put the Archbishop on this odious act, such Christian courage being justly expected from a person of his parts and place as not to be acted by another, contrary to his own conscience. I see not therefore what can be said in Cranmer's behalf, save onely that I verily hope, and stedfastly believe, that he craved God's pardon for this particular offence, and obtained the same on his unfained repentance. And because the face of mens faults is commonly seen in the glasse of their punishment, it is observable, that as Lambert now was burnt for denying the corporal presence, so Cranmer (now his Opponent) was afterwards condemned and died at Oxford for maintaining the same opinion; which valour, if sooner shewn, his conscience had probably been more cleared within him, and his credit without him to all posterity.

Cranmer's unexcusable cowardly dissimulation.

11. A match being now made up by the Lord Cromwel's contrivance, betwixt King Henry and the Lady Anne of Cleve; Dutch-men flockt faster than formerly into England: Many of these had active souls, so that whilest their hands were busied about their manufactures, their heads were also beating about points of Divinity. Hereof they had many rude notions, too ignorant to manage them themselves, and too proud to crave the direction of others. Their mindes had a by-stream of activity more than what sufficed to drive on their vocation, and this waste of their souls, they imployed in needlesse speculations, and soon after began to broach their strange opinions, being branded with the general name of Anabaptists. These Anabaptists for the main, are but Donatists new dipt, and this year their name first appears in our English Chronicles; for, I* read that four Anabaptists, three men and one woman, all Dutch, bare faggots at Paul's Crosse, and three daies after a man and woman of their sect was burnt in Smithfield.

Dutch-men broach strange opinions.

Hen. 8. 31. 1539.

12. It quickly came to the turn of Queen Anne of Cleve to fall, if not into the displeasure, out of the dear affection of King Henry the eighth. She had much of Katharine Dowager's austerity, little of Anna Bollen's pleasant wit, lesse of the beauty of Jane Seamour. Some feminine impotency, that She answered not Her creation, was objected against Her, though onely Her precontract with the Son of the Duke of Lorraine was publickly insisted on, for which by Act of Parliament now sitting, She was solemnly divorced.

Queen Anne of Cleve why divorced.

Ann. Dom. 1539. Ann. Reg. Hen. 31.

The reparations the King made her.

13. King Henry durst not but deal better with Anne of Cleve than with such His Wives, which were His native Subjects: not so much for love of Her, as for fear of Her Brother the Duke of Cleve, considerable (if not much in Himself) in His union with the Protestant Princes of Germany. Wherefore He restored Her all Her Jewels, assigned Her precedencie above all English, (save His own that should be Queen, and Children) graced Her with a new-devised stile of, His adopted Sister, (by which from henceforward He saluted Her in His Letters, and She in Answer subscribed Her self) allotted Her Richmond-House for Her retirement, with an augmentation of means for Her maintenance. And now let Her be glad that She escaped so well, seeing all, which had reference to King Henry's bed, came off gainers, if savers of their own lives, and reputations. She returned no more into Her own Countrey, but living, and dying, Anno[a] 1557. in England, was buried in Westminster Church at the head of King Sebert, in a Tomb not yet finished; none other of King Henry's Wives having any, and this Anne but half a Monument.

[a] Stow's Funerall Monuments, p. 513.

Reformation goes backwards.

14. In the last Parliament, Reformation running a race with Superstition, hardly carried it by the heads-length, but it was hoped, that in this new Parliament (now sitting) true Religion would run her Rivall quite out of distance: Whereas alas! it not onely stood still, but went backwards, the SIX ARTICLES being therein enacted, that whip with six knots, each one (as heavily laid on) fetching blood from the backs of poor Protestants.

King Henry justly blamed.

15. K. Henry was much blamed for passing this Act. Indeed, Power and Profit being the things politick Princes chiefly desire; King Henry had already attained both by his partial-Reformation. Power, by abolishing the Pope's usurpation, in His Dominions; Profit, by seizing on the lands and goods of suppressed Monasteries. And thus having served His own turn, His zeal wilfully tired to goe any farther, and (onely abolishing such Popery as was in order to his aforesaid designes) He severely urged the rest on the practice of His Subjects.

Compared with King Jehu.

16. Herein he appeared like to Jehu King of Israel, who utterly rooted out the forraign Idolatry of BAAL, (fetcht from the Zidonians, and almost appropriated to the family of Ahab) but still worshipped the CALVES in DAN, and BETHEL, the state-Idolatry of the Kingdome; So our Henry, though banishing all out-landish superstition of Papall dependance, still reserved and maintained home bred Popery, persecuting the Refusers to submit thereunto.

The six bloody Articles.

17. For, by the perswasion of Bishop Gardiner (in defiance of Archbishop Cranmer, and the L. Cromwell, with might and main opposing it) it was enacted:

1. That in the Sacrament of the Altar, after consecration, no substance of bread or wine remaineth, but the naturall body and blood of Christ.

2. That the Communion in both kindes is not necessary ad salutem, by the law of God to all persons.

3. That Priests, after Orders received, may not Marry by the Law of God.

4. That Vows of Chastity ought to be observed.

5. That it is meet and necessary, that private Masses be admitted and continued in Churches.

6. That auricular Confession must be frequented by people, as of necessity to salvation.

Sir Aubrey Cotton I. 239

Laws, bad, as penned; worse, as prosecuted, which by some Bishops extensive interpretations, were made commensurate to the whole body of Popery.

The L. Cromwel's designe miscarrieth.

18. Indeed, the Lord Cromwell (unable to right his own) had a designe to revenge himself on the opposite party, by procuring an Act, That Popish Priests convict of Adultery, should be subject to the same punishment with Protestant Ministers that were married. But Gardiner, by his greatnesse, got that law so qualified, lified, that it soon became lex edentula, whilst the other remained mordax, death being the penalty of such who were made guilty by the six Articles, though Nicholas Shaxton of Salisbury, and Hugh Latimer of Worcester, found the especial favour to save themselves by losing of their Bishopricks.

Ann. Reg. Hen. 8. 32. Ann. Dom. 1540

19. And now began Edmond Bonner, alias Savage, (most commonly called by the former, but too truly known by the later name) newly made Bishop of London, to display the colours of his cruelty therein, which here I forbear to repeat, because cited at large by Mr. Fox. For, I desire my Church-History should behave it self to his Book of Martyrs, as a Lieutenant to its Captain, onely to supply his place in his absence, to be supplemental thereunto, in such matters of moment which have escaped his observation.

Bonner first beginneth to Bonner it.

20. Match-makers betwixt private persons seldome finde great love for their pains, betwixt Princes often fall into danger, as here it proved in the L. Cromwell, the grand contriver of the King's marriage with Anne of Cleve. On him the King had conferred Honours so many, and so suddainly, that one may say, The crudities thereof lay unconcocted in his soul, so that he could not have time to digest one Dignity before another was poured upon him. Not to speak of his Mastership of the Jewel-house, he was made Baron, Master of the Rolls, the Kings Vicar general in spiritual matters, Lord Privie Seale, Knight of the Garter, Earle of Essex, Lord Great Chamberlaine of England. And my [b] Authour observeth, that all these Honours were conferred upon him in the compasse of five years, most of them possessed by him not five moneths; I may adde, and all taken from him in lesse than five minutes, with his life on the scaffold.

Cromwell falls into the Kings displeasure, and peoples hatred.

b Camdens Brit. in Essex, p. 454.

21. This was the cause why he was envied of the Nobility and Gentry, being by birth so much beneath all; by preferment so high above most of them. Besides, many of his advancements were interpreted not so much Honours to him, as Injuries to others, as being either in use improper, or in equity unfit, or in right unjust, or in conscience unlawfull for him to accept. His Mastership of the Rolls, such who were bred Lawyers, conceived it fitter for men of their profession. As for the Earldome of Essex conferred upon him, though the title lately became void by the death of Bourchier the last Earl without Issue-male (and so in the strictnesse of right in the King's free disposal) yet because he left Anne, a sole Daughter behinde him, Cromwel's invading of that Honour, bred no good blood towards him amongst the kinred of that Orphan, who were honourable, and numerous. His Lord great Chamberlainship of England, being an Office for many years Hereditary in the Antient and Honourable House of Oxford, incensed all of all that Family, when beholding him possessed thereof. His Knighthood of the Garter, which custome had appropriated to such, who by three degrees at least could prove their Gentile descent, being bestowed on him, did but enrage his Competitours thereof, more honourably extracted. As for his being the King's Vicar-General in Spiritual matters, all the Clergie did rage thereat, grutching much, that K. Henry the substance, and more, that Cromwell, His shadow, should assume so high a Title to himself. Besides, Cromwel's name was odious unto them, on the account of Abbies dissolved, and no wonder, if this Sampson plucking down the pillars of the Popish Church, had the rest of the structure falling upon him. These rejoiced when the Duke of Norfolke arrested him for Treason at the Councel-Table, whence he was sent Prisoner to the Tower.

Why Cromwel was deservedly envied.

July 9.

22. And now to speak impartially of him, though in prison. If we reflect on his parts and endowments, it is wonderfull to see how one quality in him befriended another. Great Scholar he was none (the Latine Testament gotten by heart being the master-piece of his learning) nor any studied Lawyer, (never long-living, if admitted in the Inns of Court) nor experienced Souldier, (though necessity cast him on that calling, when the Duke of Burbone besieged Rome) nor Courtier in his youth, (till bred in the Court, as I may call it, of Cardinal Wolsey's house:) and yet, that of the Lawyer in him, so helped the Scholar; that of the Souldier, the Lawyer; that of the Courtier, the Souldier; and that of the Traveller, Cromwell's admirable parts.

Ann. Dom. 1540. Ann. Reg. Hen. 31.

Articles charged upon the Lord Cromwell.

23. It was laid to his charge; Firſt, that he had exceeded his Commiſſion, in acting many things of high conſequence, without acquainting the King therwith; dealing therein, though perchance wiſely for the State, not warily for himſelf. Indeed, it is impoſſible for ſuch Officers, managing not onely multitudes, but multiplicity of matters, but that in ſome things they muſt miſtake. As in [c] many words there wanteth not iniquity: ſo in the Actours of many affairs, faults are ſoon found out. He was alſo accuſed to ſet at liberty certain perſons not capable of it; for granting Licenſes and Commiſſions deſtructive to the King's authority; for being guilty of Hereſie himſelf, and favouring it in others. Trayterous ſpeeches were alſo charged upon him, ſpoken two years before in the Church of S. Peter's in the Poor, in Broad ſtreet; the avouchers thereof pretending, that, as hitherto they had concealed them for love of themſelves (fearing Cromwel's greatneſſe:) ſo now, for the love of the King, they revealed the ſame. Indeed, on the firſt manifeſting of the King's diſpleaſure againſt him, the foes of Cromwel had all their mouthes open, and his friends their mouthes ſhut up.

[c] Prov. 10. 19.

An injurious Act to many poor people charged on the Lord Cromwell.

24. The mention of S. Peter's in Broad-ſtreet, mindeth me of a paſſage, not unworthy to be recited, of an injury offered by this Lord Cromwell, to many poor men in the ſame Pariſh. And, becauſe every one is beſt able to tell his own tale, take it in the words of John [d] Stow, being himſelf deeply concerned therein:

[d] Survey of London, p. 187.

The Lord Cromwell having finiſhed his houſe in Throgmorton-ſtreet in London, and having ſome reaſonable plot of ground left for a garden, cauſed the pales of the gardens, adjoyning to the North part thereof, on a ſudden to be taken down, two and twenty foot to be meaſured forth-right into the North of every man's ground, a line there to be drawn, a trench to be caſt, a foundation laid, and an high brick-wall to be builded. My father had a garden there, and there was an houſe ſtanding cloſe to his South-pale: this houſe they looſed from the ground, and bare upon rowlers into my father's garden two and twenty foot, ere my father heard thereof: no warning was given him, nor other anſwer, (when he ſpake to the Surveyors of that work) but that their Maſter, Sir Thomas, commanded them ſo to doe: no man durſt goe to argue the matter, but each man loſt his land; and my father paid his whole rent, which was ſix ſhillings eight pence the year, for that half which was left. Thus much of mine own knowledge have I thought good to note, that the ſudden riſing of ſome men, cauſeth them to forget themſelves.

I am moved the rather to believe our Authour herein, becauſe elſewhere he alloweth this Lord his deſerved praiſe for his virtues, and eſpecially his Hoſpitality, affirming, [e] he had often ſeen at the Lord Cromwell's gate, above two hundred perſons ſerved twice every day, with meat, and drink ſufficient. Nor can I ſee what may be ſaid in excuſe of this oppreſſion, except any will plead, that Abimelech's ſervants violently [f] took away the wells from Abraham, and yet Abimelech himſelf never knew more or leſſe thereof.

The worſt paſſionate Speech objected againſt him.

[g] Sir J. Strode of Parnham in Dorcaſhire.

25. As for the paſſionate expreſſions of Cromwell; a [g] Knight, aged well-nigh eighty, whoſe Mother was Daughter to the Lord Cromwell's Son, hath informed me, That the principall paſſage, whereon the Lord's enemies moſt inſiſted, was this, It being told the L. Cromwell, that one accuſed him for want of fidelity to the King; Cromwell returned in paſſion, Were he here now, I would ſtrike my dagger into his heart; meaning, into the heart of the falſe Accuſer; and therein guilty of want of charity to his fellow-ſubject, not of loyaltie to his Sovereign. But, ſeeing the words were a meaſuring caſt as uttered (though not as intended) to whom they ſhould relate, the pick-thank Repeater avowed them uttered againſt the King Himſelf. So dangerous are dubious words, and ambiguous expreſſions, when prevalent power is to conſtrue, and interpret the meaning thereof.

26. Ten daies after his Arreſt, he was attainted of high Treaſon in Parliament, and brought on the Scaffold the next week to execution. Here he ſpake the following words unto the people, which the Reader is requeſted the more ſeriouſly to peruſe, that thereby he may be enabled to paſſe (if concerned therein) his verdict in what Religion this Lord died.

His Speech on the ſcaffold.

I Am come hither to die, and not to purge my ſelfe, as ſome think peradventure that I will. For, if I ſhould ſo doe, I were a very wretch, and miſer. I am by the law condemned to die, and thank my Lord God that hath appointed me this death for mine offence. For, ſince the time that I have had years of diſcretion, I have lived a ſinner, and offended my Lord God, for the which I aske him heartily forgiveneſſe. And it is not unknown to many of you, that I have been a great traveller in this world, and, being but of baſe degree, I was called to high eſtate, and ſince the time I came thereunto, I have offended my Prince, for the which I aske Him heartily forgiveneſſe, and beſeech you all to pray to God with me, that he will forgive me. And now I pray you that be here, to bear me record, I die in the Catholick Faith, not doubting in any Article of my faith, no, nor doubting in any Sacrament of the Church. Many have ſlandered me, and reported, that I have been a bearer of ſuch as have maintained evil opinions, which is untrue. But I confeſſe, that like as God by his Holy Spirit doth inſtruct us in the truth: ſo the Devil is ready to ſeduce us; and I have been ſeduced, but bear me witneſſe that I die in the Catholick Faith of the Holy Church. And I heartily deſire you to pray for the King's Grace, that He may long live with you in health, and proſperity: and that after Him, His ſon Prince Edward, that goodly impe, may long reign over you. And, once again, I deſire you to pray for me, that ſo long as life remaineth in this fleſh, I waver nothing in my faith. And ſo making his Prayer, &c.

The generall terms wherein this his Speech is couched, hath given occaſion for wiſe men to give contrary cenſures thereof.

Fox in his Marginall Note on this Speech, pag. 515.
A true Chriſtian Confeſſion of the Lord Cromwell at his death.

Lord Herbert in the Index of his Hiſtory, under C.
Cromwell died a Roman-Catholick, notwithſtanding he had been ſuch a deſtroyer of the Church.

True it is, ſo warie were Cromwell's expreſſions, that Luther and Bellarmine might in their own perſons have ſaid the ſame, without any prejudice to their own principles, and many conceive that the moſt, which theſe his words amount to, will but make him an ſix-Articles Proteſtant.

His Prayer, whereby his Speech may be interpreted.

27. But let Cromwell's politick Speech be in part expounded by his plain Prayer which he immediately after made, (too long here to inſert, but ſet down at large in Mr. Fox) and which ſpeaketh him a true Proteſtant. And if negative Arguments avail ought in this matter, no ſuperſtitious croſsing of himſelf, no praying to Saints, no deſiring of prayers for him after his death, &c. may evidence him no Papiſt in the cloſe of his life. Indeed, Anti-Cromwelliſts count this controverſie (of the Religion he died in) not worth the deciding, no Papiſts conceiving the gain great to get him on their ſide, and ſome Proteſtants accounting the loſſe as little to part with him. However, this right ought to be done to his Memory, in fixing it on its own principles, and not miſ-repreſenting the ſame to poſterity.

Heaven is just in Earths injustice.

28. Remarkable is that passage in his Speech, wherein he confesseth himself, by Law condemned to die, because a story dependeth thereupon. Not long agoe an Act had passed in Parliament, That one might be attainted of Treason by Bill in Parliament, and consequently lose his life, without any other legal triall, or being ever brought to answer in his own defence. The Lord Cromwell was very active in procuring this Law to passe, insomuch that it is generally believed, that the Arme and Hammer of all King Henry's Power, could never have driven on this Act thorough both Houses, had not Cromwell first wimbled an hole for the entrance thereof, and politickly prepared a major part of Lords and Commons to accept the same. For, indeed otherwise it was accounted a Law injurious to the liberty, which reason alloweth to all persons accused, and which might cut out the tongue of Innocency it self, depriving her of pleading in her own behalf. Now, behold the hand of Heaven! It hapned that this Lord first felt the smart of this rod which he made for others, and was accordingly condemned before ever he was heard to speak for himself.

Ann. Dom. 1540. Ann. Regni Hen. 31.

Nec lex est justior ulla
Quam necis artifices arte perire sua.

Most just it is, that they bad Laws who make,
Should themselves first of their own Laws partake.

Thus, those who break down the banks, and let in the stream of Arbitrary power, (be it into the hands of Prince or People) are commonly the first themselves which without pity are drowned in the deluge thereof.

Yet the Lord Cromwell by a great person acquitted herein.
* Sir Edward Coke, Part 4. of Institut. in Jurisdiction of Courts, p. 37.

29. Thus farre I have swome along with the winde and tide of all our English Historians, in charging of Cromwell herein. But I finde one * Authour of strong credit (such he needs to be, who swims against the stream) acquitting the said Lord, deriving his intelligence from Sir Thomas Gawdie, a grave Judge, then living, who acquainted him as followeth, King Henry commanded the L. Cromwell to attend the Chief Justices, and to know, whether a man that was forth-coming might be attainted of high Treason by Parliament, and never called to his answer? The Judges answered, That it was a dangerous question, and, that the high Court of Parliament ought to give examples to inferiour Courts for proceeding according to justice, and no inferiour Court could doe the like, and they thought the high Court of Parliament would never doe it. But, being by the expresse commandement of the King, and pressed by the said Earl to give a direct answer, they said, That if he be attainted by Parliament, it could not come in question afterwards, whether he was called, or not called to answer: and the Act of Attainder being passed by Parliament did binde, as they resolved. The party against whom this was intended, was never called in question, but the first man after the said resolution, that was so attainted, and never called to answer, was the said Earl of Essex: whereupon that erroneous and vulgar opinion amongst our Historians grew, That he died by the same Law which he himself had made.

His exemplary gratitude.

30. But, grant this Lord Cromwell faulty in this and some other actions, in the main he will appear a worthy person, and a great instrument of God's glory in the reforming of Religion, and remarkable for many personal eminencies. Commonly when men are (as in a moment) mounted from meanesse to much wealth and honour, first they forget themselves, and then all their old friends and acquaintance. Whereas on the contrary, here gratitude grew with his greatnesse, and the Lord Cromwell conferred many a courtesie on the Children from whose Fathers Master Cromwell had formerly received favours. As he was a good Servant to his Master, so was he a good Master to his Servants, and fore-seeing his own fall, (which he might have foretold without the Spirit of Prophesie, some half a year before) he furnished his Men, which had no other lively-hood to subsist by, with Leases, Pensions, and Annuities, whereby after his death they had a comfortable maintenance.

31. One

Ann. Reg. Hen. 8. 32. Ann. Dom. 1540.

31. One so faithfull to his Servants, cannot be suspected for an Infidel in not providing for his family, of his own children. It was not therefore his ambition, but providence, that on the same day wherein he was created Earle of Essex, he procured Gregory his Son, (which otherwise had been then but a Lord by courtesie) to be actually made Baron Cromwell of Oke-ham. Which honour, because inherent in the Son, was not forfeited on his Father's attainture, but descends at this day on his Posterity.

His care for his children.

32. We will conclude his story with this remarkable instance of his humility: Formerly there flourished a notable family of the [b]Cromwells at Tattershall in Lincoln-shire, especially since Sir Ralph Cromwell married the younger Sister and Coheir of William the last Lord Deincourt. Now there wanted not some flattering Heraults (excellent Chemists in Pedegrees to extract any thing from any thing) who would have entituled this Lord Cromwell to the Armes of that antient Family, extinct (in the issue male thereof) about the end of King Henry the sixt. His answer unto them was, That he would not weare another mans coat, for fear the right owner thereof should pluck it off over his ears: and preferred rather to take a new coate, (viz. * Azure, Or, a Fess inter three Lyons rampant, Or a Rose Gules, betwixt two Chaughes proper) being somewhat of the fullest; the Epidemical disease of all Armes given in the Reign of Henry the eighth.

An eminent instance of his humility.

* See Vincent in the Barles of Essex.

33. After the execution of the Lord Cromwell, the Parliament still sitting, a motly execution happened in Smithfield, three Papists hanged by the Statute for denying the King's supremacy, and as many Protestants burnt at the same time and place, by vertue of the six Articles, dying with more pain, and no lesse patience.

This caused was by the difference of Religions in the King's Privie Councel, wherein the Popish party called for the execution of these Protestants, whilest the Protestant Lords in the Councell, (out of policy to represse the others eagernesse, or if that failed, out of desire to revenge it) cried as fast, that the Laws might take effect on the Papists. And whilest neither side was able to save those of their own opinions, both had power to destroy those of their opposite party. They were dragged on hurdles, coupled two and two, a Papist and a Protestant, (cattel of different kindes yoked to draw, or rather to be drawn together) insomuch as a [c] Romanist professeth, that to the three Papists this their unequal matching was to them, ipsa morte gravius & intolerabilius, more heavy and intolerable than death it self: But the Protestants expresst no such distast hereat, not angry out of principles of pride, for the joyning of their bodies together, but grieved out of the grounds of charity, that their souls soon after, should so farre be parted asunder. A stranger, standing by, did wonder, (as well he might) what Religion the King was of, his sword cutting on both sides, Protestants for Hereticks, and Papists for Traytors, of whom in the same moneth, Laurence Cooke, Prior of Doncaster, and six others, were sent the same way, for the same offence.

But to return to such Acts of the Parliament as concern the Church, therein a Statute was made, commanding every man [d] fully, truly, and effectually to divide, set out, yeild or pay all and singular Tithes and Offerings, according to the lawfull customes and usages of the Parishes and Places where such Tithes or Duties shall grow, arise, come or be due. And remedy is given for Ecclesiastick persons before the Ordinary; and for Lay-men, that claimed appropriated Tithes by grant from the Crown, in the Secular Courts by such actions as usually Lay-possessions had been subject to. The occasion of which Statute is intimated in the Preamble thereof, because in few years past many presumed more contemptuously, and commonly commonly than in times past, had been seen or known to subtract and withdraw their lawfull and accustomed Tithes. Incouraged thereunto for that that divers Lay-persons having Tithes to them and their heires had no due remedy by order and course of the Ecclesiastical Laws to recover their right. And no wonder, seeing their Soveraign had set them so large, and so late a president in destroying of Abbies, if subjects thought that in their distance and proportion they might also be bold to detain the Rites of the Church, especially because it seemed unreasonable, that they should receive wages who did no work, and that the hire of the labourers in the vineyard should be given to lazie lookers on. This Statute, in favour of Lay-impropriators, was beneficiall to the Clergie to recover their prediall Tithes at Common-Law, being equally advantaged by that which was not principally intended for them, because of the concurrence of their interest, in case of Tithes. A Statute also made, That it was lawfull for all persons to contract marriage, who are not prohibited by Gods law. For although Gregory the great (who had not lesse learning, but more modesty, than his successours) did not flatly forbid the marriage of Cousin Germans as unlawfull, but prudentially dissuade it as unfitting; yet after-Popes prohibited that and other degrees further off, thereby to get money for Dispensations. What a masse these amounted unto, their own Auditors can onely compute, seeing Solomon himself sent ships but every third year to Ophir for gold; whereas his Holinesse, by granting such faculties from those Indies, made annuall returns of infinite profit. And this Law came very conveniently to comply with King Henry's occasions, who had the first fruits thereof, and presently after married Katharine Howard, Cousin Germane to Anna Bollen his second Wife, which, by the Canon-Law, formerly was forbidden without a speciall Dispensation first obtained.

35. But now to step out of the Parliament into the Convocation, a place more proper for our employment, there we shall finde Archbishop Cranmer landing in his Barge at Pauls-wharfe, and thence proceeding on foot with the Cross carried before him into the Quire of Pauls; where, at the high Altar Bishop Bonner officiated (if I speak properly) a Masse of the Holy Ghost, Doctor Richard Cox Archdeacon of Ely, preached a Latine Sermon on this text, Vos estis sal terræ. Richard Gwent Doctor of Law and Archdeacon of London, was chosen Prolocutor. Then intimation was given, that the KING allowed them liberty to treat of matters in Religion, to peruse the Canons de simonia vitanda, with other Ecclesiasticall constitutions; to continue the good ones, and make new ones pro temporis exigentia. In the third Session on Friday, severall Bishops * were assigned to peruse severall Books of the Translation of the New Testament, in order as followeth:

* Acts Synod. Cant. an. 1541. pag. 48, 49.

Ann. Dom. 1540.

Ann. Reg. Hen. 32. Ann. Dom. 1540.

35. The judicious Reader hath no sooner perused these words, but presently he sorts them in two ranks: First, some few untranslatable, without losse of life or lustre: these are continued in our English Testament intire, it being conceived better that Ministers should expound these words in their Sermons, than alter them in their Texts. But besides these, most of the second sort, are not so emphaticall in themselves, but that they may be rendred in English, without prejudice of truth. Wherefore Gardiner's designe plainly appeared in stickling for the preserving of so many Latine words to obscure the Scripture; who, though wanting power to keep the light of the Word from shining, sought out of policy to put it into a dark Lanthorn; contrary to the constant practice of God in Scripture, levelling high hard expressions to the capacity of the meanest. For forraign terms are alwaies brought in, like Joseph with an [w] Interpreter. [x] Emmanuel doth not passe without an Exposition, God with us: nor [y] Ephatha escape, but Commented on, be thou opened: Besides, the Popish Bishop multiplied the mixture of Latine names in the Testament, to teach the Laity their distance, who though admitted into the outward Court of common matter, were yet debarred entrance into the Holy of Holies of these mysterious expressions, reserved only for the understanding of the high Priest to pierce into them. Moreover, this made Gardiner not onely tender, but fond to have these words continued in kinde without Translation; because the profit of the Romish Church was deeply in some of them concerned: Witnesse the word Penance (which according to the vulgar sound, contrary to the original sense thereof) was a magazin of Will-worship, and brought in much gain to the Priests, who were desirous to keep that word, because that word kept them. I finde not what entertainment Gardiner's motion met with, it seems so suspended in success, as neither generally received nor rejected.

The Papists plot therein.

Mar. 10.

36. In a following Session, Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, informed the House, That it was the King's will and pleasure, that the Translation both of the Old and New Testament should be examined by BOTH UNIVERSITIES. This met with much opposition in the House, all the Bishops, (Ely and S. David excepted) making their Protests to the contrary. These affirmed, the Universities were much decayed of late, wherein all things were carried by Young Men, whose judgments were not to be relied on, so that the Learning of the Land was chiefly in this Convocation. But the Archbishop said, he would stick close to the will and pleasure of the King his Master, and that the Universities should examine the Translation. And here (for ought I can finde to the contrary) the matter ceased, and the Convocation soon after was dissolved.

Cranmer stickleth for the Universities approbation.

Hen. 36. 1544.

37. The cruell prosecution of the Protestants still continued on the six Articles. And yet the Parliament now somewhat abated the illegall fury thereof: for formerly any active Officer of the Bishops, at his pleasure molested all suspected persons, and prosecuted some to death. But afterwards it was required, That such Offenders should first be found guilty, by a Jury of Twelve men; a rub to the wheels of their cruelty, that it saved the lives of some, and prolonged the deaths of others.

The six Articles somewhat mitigated.

Hen. 37. Nov. 24. 1545.

38. Now began the last Parliament in the Kings Reign, wherein many things of consequence were enacted: First, an Act against Usury. [a] Secondly, for Tithes in London. Thirdly, for an exchange of Lands betwixt the King's Majestie, and Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, Robert Holegate Archbishop of York, and Edmond Bonner Bishop of London; which the King annexed to the Dutchie of Lancaster. Fourthly, an Act for union of Churches, not exceeding the value of six pounds. Lastly, that Doctors of the Civil Law, being married, might exercise Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction.

The Acts of the last Parliament in this Kings Reign.
a See the printed Statutes of this year.

39. At this time also, by the King's command, were the Stewes suppressed. A line or two, I hope, will not defile our Church-History, in the description and detestation of such filthy persons, and practises. There stood a place on the South bank over against London, called the Stewes, where live-Fishes were formerly kept, there to be washed in Ponds from their slime and muddinesse, to make the more more wholsome and pleasant food, which was the originall use of these Stewes, and the proper [b] meaning of the word. Afterwards the place was converted to a worse use, but still retaining its own name from the scouring of Fish to the defileing of Men: Brothel-houses being built there, and publickly permitted by the State. These were sixteen in number, known by the several signes, whereof one was the Cardinals [c] Hat, and it is to be feared, that too many of the Clergie (then forbidden marriage) were too constant customers to it. Such who lived in these Colledges of lust were called single Women, and pity it was so good a name should be put upon so leud persons.

The regulation of the Stewes.

40. Divers Constitutions were made in the eighth year of King Henry the second, for the regulating of these Houses, whereof some may inoffensively, yea, profitably be inserted.

1. No Stew-holder should keep open his doors on the Holy-daies, or keep any in his house on those daies.

2. No single woman to be kept against her will, if out of remorse of conscience she would leave that lewd life.

3. No Stew-holder to receive any mans wife, or any woman of religion.

4. No man to be drawn or inticed, into any of those houses, and the Constables and Bayliffes were every week to search the same. They were not to sell Bread, Ale, Flesh, Fish, Wood, Cole, or any Victuals.

This was done partly, because they should not engrosse those Trades, being the livelihood of more honest people: and partly lest simple Chapmen in seeking for such necessaries should be inveigled into sin. Such women living and dying in their sinfull life were excluded Christian buriall, and had a plot of ground farre from the Parish-Church appointed for them, called, The single-womans Church-yard.

d Stew us prius.

The impossibility to Legitimate, what in it self is unlawfull.

41. These Cautions and Constitutions could not make them, who are bad in themselves, to be good, though happily keeping some who were bad, from being worse. Such a toleration of sin being utterly unlawful. For though Naturall poysons may by Art be so qualified and corrected to make them not onely not noxious, but in some cases (as wisely applied) cordiall. Yet Morall poysons, I mean, things sinfull of themselves can never be so ordered and regulated, but that still they will remain pernitious and unlawfull; The onely way to order and amend, being to remove, and extirpate them.

Argument pro and con about Stewes.

42. Yet there wanted not those (better idle, than so imployed) who endevoured with Arguments to maintain; some (so shameless) the necessity, but more the conveniency of such Brothel-houses. No wonder if wanton wits, pleaded for wanton women. Whoredome (like the Whores) was painted over with politick Reasons for the permission thereof, which may easily be washed away if the following Parallel be but seriously perused.

1. Mans infirmity herein since his Naturall corruption is grown so generall, it is needfull to connive at such Houses, as a kinde of remedy to prevent worse incontinency with Married women, the whole land being the cleaner for the publick Sincks or Sewer of the Stewes.

1. It is absurd to say, and belibelleth Divine Providence, That any thing is really Needfull that is not Lawfull. Such pretended necessity created by bad men must be annihilated by good Laws. Let Marriage run in its proper Channell, being permitted to all persons; and then no need of such noysome sinks which may well be dammed up. The malady cannot be accounted a remedy: For whilest Matrimony is appointed and blessed by God to cool the heat of Lust, Whoredome doth double the drought thereof.

ment to the Jewes. Stewes may be connived at on the ſame accompt for the hardneſſe of mens hearts.

3. Strange women were no ſtrangers in Iſrael it ſelf under their beſt Kings; two of that trade publickly known, pleaded before King f Solomon. Theſe were publickly repaired unto and known by the attire g of an Harlot.

4. Many great Families were preſerved thereby, whoſe younger Brethren abſtaining from Marriage, did nont cumber the ſame with numeroſity of Children.

5. Such Stewes are Faſhionable in forreigne Nations; yea, in Rome it ſelf.

6. The ſuppreſſing of Stewes would not make men more chaſte, but more cloſe: not more ſincerely honeſt, but ſecretly wanton. In all populous places, male-incontinency will meet with a female counterpart, and ſo reciprocally.

5. Let the Paramount Whore tolerate Whores, which as a branch of Popery was now baniſhed England; more honour it is for us to go before forraign Nations in Reformation, than to follow them in their Corruptions.

6. This undeniable truth is ſadly granted. Perchance there may now be moe Engliſh-folk Adulterers, but England was then an Adulteresſe, ſo long as Stewes were openly licenſed. It was a Nationall ſin, when publickly permitted; which now is but perſonall, though too generally committed.

Thus Chaſtity, by the countenance of Authority, got at laſt a finall conqueſt of Wantonneſs. Indeed formerly, in the one and twentieth year h of Henry the ſeventh, for a time the Stewes were cloſed up; but afterwards opened again, though reduced from ſixteen to twelve; but now, by the King's commandment, this regiment of ſinners was totally and finally routed, the Kings pleaſure herein proclaimed by ſound of Trumpet, and their Houſes peopled with other Inhabitants of honeſt converſation.

h Rob. Fabian in his Chronicle, Anno 1506.

Prelates their loſs by pomp.

43. We lately mentioned the exchange of land, betwixt the King, and the two Archbiſhops. On which account be it remembred (though I finde not the exact year) Otford in Kent was given the King, whereof thus our great i Antiquary, William Warrham Archbiſhop of Canterbury built Otford for himſelf and his ſucceſſours, ſo ſumptuouſly, that, for to avoid envy, Cranmer, who next ſucceeded him, was conſtrained to exchange it with King Henry the eighth. Could the Clergie have found out the mean betwixt baſeneſs, & bravery; too ſordid, & too ſumptuous; they might have fixed themſelves therein with the more ſecurity. Whileſt their Palaces built ſo big as to receive, and ſo beautifull as to invite the King and His Court, made (eſpecially if lying neer London) covetouſneſſe to long after them. And, although ſome competent conſideration was given in exchange, yet politick Prelates diſliked ſuch commutations, as which gaged the root of Epiſcopal lands, from their firſt property, and antient foundation.

44. The laſt perſon of quality, which ſuffered martyrdome in this Kings Reign, was Anne Aſhcough alias Kyme. She was worſhipfully extracted, the Daughter of Sir William Aſhcough of Kelſay in Lincoln-ſhire, of the age of twenty five years,

The character of Anne Aſhcough.

Ann. Dom. 1546. Ann. Regni Hen. 38.

Whose wit, beauty, learning, and religion, procured her much esteem on the Queens side of the Court, and as much hatred from the Popish persecuting Bishops. But the [k] Jesuite condemns her for leaving her Husband, at home, and gadding to Gospel, and gossip it at Court, alwaies subscribing her self, not by her married, but maiden surname: the rather, because, being often examined, what reason she could give of forsaking her Husband, she refused to answer to any, save to the King alone. Master Fox turneth off the whole matter to John Bale; and, I having his Manuscript in my hand, thought fit to insert this his following account thereof, though not knowing whether the same will give the Reader satisfaction.

k Parsons in his Exam. of Fo. Fox his Saints in the moneth of June.

45. A match was made, by the power of their Parents, betwixt Mr. Kyme his Son in Lincoln-shire, and Sir William Ashcough his eldest Daughter, who chanced to die before the completing thereof. Sir William, loth to lose so rich an Heir, and having payed part of her Portion, for lucres sake compelled this Anne, his second Daughter, to supply her Sisters place, and to marry him against her own will and consent, notwithstanding, the marriage once past, she demeaned her self like a Christian Wife, [l] and bare him two Children. In processe of time, by oft reading of the sacred Bible, she cleerly fell from all Papistrie, to a perfect belief in Jesus Christ. Whereupon, her Husband was so offended, that (by suggestion of the Priests) he violently drove her out of his house. And she, on this occasion, sought from the Law a Divorce; and, because of his cruell usage, would not return unto him again: thinking her self free from that uncomely kinde of coacted marriage, by the doctrine of Saint Paul, [m] But, if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or sister is not under bondage in such cases: But God hath called us to peace. This is the effect, of what our Authour speaketh in moe words. Now, whether this rule laid down by Saint Paul, betwixt Christian, and Heathen, be also commensurate betwixt Protestant, and Papist, is not my work to decide. Perchance, she would only answer to the King, for her behaviour towards her Husband, as hoping for some tenderesse from His Highnesse, because of some general conformity, in the first part of her Case with the Kings (as Who for by-respects was first married to, then divorced from His Brothers Wife.

Her plea for leaving her husband.

m 1 Cor. 7. 15.

46. Her several examinations are largely penned by her self, extant in Mr. Fox, where the Reader may finde them. But be it remembred, that, whereas heresie onely was charged upon her, without the least suspition of Treason, yet was she rackt to detect some Court-Ladies of her opinion, by the Lord Wriothisly, the then, and Sir Robert Rich, the [n] next Lord Chancellour. But, whether it was noble in these Lords, or legall in these Lawyers, or conscientious in these Chancellours, to rack one already condemned to death, belongeth to others to determine. Their cruelty extorted no discovery from her, whose constancy now made recompense for her former infirmities. If it be true what is charged upon her, that before she had twice subscribed the Real Presence in the Sacrament of the Altar, but zealously died at last in the earnest deniall thereof, being amongst those, who according to the precept in the [o] Prophet, glorified the Lord in the fires. Her suffering in Smithfield was most solemnly performed, where three men, Nicolas Belevian, Priest of Shropshire; John Lacells, Gentleman, of the Household of King Henry the eighth; and John Adams, a poor Taylor of London, were all burnt together. Three couple of qualities, meeting together in four persons, Clergy, and Laity; Male, and Female; Gentle, and Simple, made the fewell of the same fire.

She is first racked, and then burnt.

n Fox, p. 1139.

o Isa. 24. 15.

47. John Bale registers this Anne Ashcough, amongst the number of his English learned Writers, for her Examinations, Letters, and Poems, wrote with her own hand; though the [p] Jesuite jeers him for his pains, as if no works, save those of the needle, became her sex. I have seen a Manuscript of her Verses (afterwards printed at Marpurge in Germany) and must confesse, I better approve her Charity in the four last, than her Poetry in all the rest:

p Parsons, ut prius.

Yet

Ann. Reg. Hen. 8. 38. Ann. Dom. 1546

Yet Lord I thee desire, } { Let them not taste the hire
For that they doe to me, } { of their iniquity.

However those that have drunk deeper than she of Helicon, would be loth to pledge her in the bitter cup of Martyrdome. So I take my leave of her memory.

48. Now began the troubles of Queen Katharine Parr, whom the King married some two years since. For He, either being, or believing Himself wronged by His last Wife, whom He married for a Maid, resolved now to take a Widow to Wife, who had given proof of her chastity and loyalty to her former Husband, and thereupon married this Katharine, the Daughter of Sir Thomas Parr of Kendall, the Relict of John Nevill Lord Latimer, one of great piety, beauty & discretion. Next to the Bible, She studied the Kings disposition, observing Him to Her utmost. And need She had of a nimble soul, to attend at all times on His humour, whose Fury had now got the addition of Frowardness thereunto. She was rather Nurse, than Wife unto Him, who was more decayed by sickness & intemperance, than old age.

The King marrieth Katharine Parr.

49. Yet sometimes She would presume to discourse with the King about points of Religion, defending the Protestant-Tenents by Scripture, and reason: and somtimes would hold up the King very close hard at it. This displeased Him, who loved looseness and liberty, in His clothes, arguments, and actions, and was quickly observed by Gardiner, and others, who were the Queens enemies. Hereupon, taking advantage of an unhappy juncture of time, Gardiner drew up Articles against Her, and had got them subscribed with the Kings own hand, to remove Her to the Tower. Whither had She been sent, Vestigia nulla retrorsum, without doubt She had followed the way of His former Wives in that place.

The conspiracy of Her enemies against Her.

50. But Divine Providence ordereth all things to fall out for the good of Gods children. Chancellour Wriothesly put the paper of those Articles (pretious jewels) in no worse cabinet than his own bosome. Hence it casually fell out, was taken up by one of the Queens servants, and brought to Her Grace, who, on Her sickness, and submission to the King, obtained His pardon, signed and sealed unto Her with many kisses and embraces. As for such Her enemies, who came at the present to attach Her (intending, by vertue of the Kings Warrant, to send Her the shortest way to Her long home) they were sent back with what made worse rumbling than a flea in the eare, even the taunts and threats of the enraged King against them.

By Gods Providence defeated.

51. And yet Parsons tells[q] us, that, notwithstanding the King purposed to have burned Her, if He had lived. I know not whence he derived this his strange intelligence, and therefore justly suspect the truth hereof: The rather, because I finde Her in great grace with the King, as appeareth by the good language, and great Legacie He gave Her in His Will, which here we thought fit to transcribe, both for the rarity thereof, and because containing many passages, which may reflect much light upon our Church-History.

Parsons his wild intelligence.

Testamentum Regis HENRICI octavi.

IN the name of God, and of the glorious and blessed Virgin our Lady S. Mary, and of all the holy company of Heaven: We HENRY by the grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and in earth immediately under God the supreme Head of the Church of England, and also Ireland, of that name the eighth; calling to Our remembrance the great gifts and benefits of Almighty God given unto Us in this transitory life, give unto him Our most lowly and humble thanks, acknowledging Our selves insufficient in any part to deserve or recompense the same. But fear that we have not worthily received the same, and considering further also that We be (as all mankinde are) mortal and born in ſinne; believing nevertheleſſe, and hoping, that every Chriſtian creature living here in this tranſitory and wretched world, under God dying in ſtedfaſt and perfect faith, endevouring and exerciſing himſelf to execute in his life-time, if he have leiſure, ſuch good deeds and charitable works as Scripture commandeth, and as may be to the honour and pleaſure of God, is ordained by Chriſts paſſion to be ſaved and attain Eternal life: Of which number We verily truſt by his grace to be one. Ann. Dom. 1546. Ann. Regn. Hen. 38.

And that every creature, the more high that he is in eſtate, honour and authority in this world, the more he is bound to love, ſerve and thank God, and the more diligently to endevour himſelf to doe good and charitable works to the laud, honour and praiſe of Almighty God, and the profit of his ſoule. We alſo calling to remembrance the dignity, eſtate, honour, rule and governance that Almighty God hath called Us unto in this world, and that neither We, nor any other creature-mortal knoweth the time, place, when nor where, it ſhall pleaſe Almighty God to call him out of this tranſitory world, willing therefore and minding with Gods grace before our paſſage out of the ſame, to diſpoſe and order Our later minde, Will and Teſtament, in that ſort, as We truſt it ſhall be acceptable unto Almighty God, our onely Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and all the holy Company of Heaven: and the due ſatisfaction of all godly brethren in earth, have now, being of whole and perfect minde, adhering wholly to the right faith of Chriſt and his doctrine, repenting alſo Our old and deteſtable life, and being in perfect will and minde, by his grace, never to return to the ſame, nor ſuch like. And minding, by Gods grace, never to vary therefro as long as any remembrance, breath, or inward knowledge doth, or may remain within this mortall body; moſt humbly and heartily doe commend and bequeath Our ſoule to Almighty God, who in Perſon of the Son redeemed the ſame with his moſt pretious body and blood in time of his paſſion: And for Our better remembrance thereof hath left here with us Us, in his Church militant, the conſecration and adminiſtration of his pretious body and blood, to Our no little conſolation and comfort, if We as thankfully accept the ſame, as he lovingly and undeſervedly on mans behalf, hath ordained it for our onely benefit, and not his.

Alſo, we doe inſtantly require, and deſire the bleſſed Virgin Mary his mother, with all the holy Company of Heaven, continually to pray for Us whiles We live in this world, and in the time of paſſing out of the ſame, that We may the ſooner attain Everlaſting life after Our departure out of this tranſitory life, which We doe both hope and claime by Chriſts paſſion; And for my body, which when the ſoul is departed, ſhall then remain but as a cadaver, and ſo return to the vile matter it was made of, were it not for the crown and dignity which God hath called Us unto, and that We would not be counted an Infringer of honeſt worldly policies and cuſtomes when they be not contrary to Gods laws, We would be content to have it buried in any place accuſtomed for Chriſtian folks, were it never ſo vile, for it is but aſhes, and to aſhes it ſhall return. Nevertheleſſe, becauſe We would be loath, in the reputation of the people, to doe injury to the Dignity which We are unworthily called unto, We are content, and alſo by theſe preſents, Our laſt Will and Teſtament, to will and order, That Our body be buried and enterred in the Quier of Our Colledge of Windſor, middle-way between the Stalls and the high Altar, and there to be made and ſet, as ſoon as conveniently may be done after Our deceaſe by Our Executors at Our coſts and charges, if it be not done by Us in Our life-time, an honourable Tomb for Our bones to reſt in, which is well onward and almoſt made, therefore already with a faire grate about it, in which We will alſo, that the bones and body of Our true and and loving Wife Queen Jane be put alſo; And, that there be provided, ordained and ſet, at the coſts and charges of Us, or of our Executors, if it be not done in Our life-time, a convenient Altar honourably prepared and apparelled with all manner of things requiſite and neceſſary for daily Maſſes there to be ſaid perpetually while the world ſhall endure; Alſo We will, that the Tombs and Altars of King Henry the ſixth, and alſo of King Edward the fourth Our great Unkle and Grandfather, be made more Princely, in the ſame place where they now be, at Our charge; And alſo will, and ſpecially deſire and require, that where and whenſoever it ſhall pleaſe God to call Us out of this tranſitory world to his infinite mercy & grace, be it beyond the ſea, or in any other place without Our Realm of England, or within the ſame, that Our Executors, as ſoon as they conveniently may, ſhall cauſe all Divine Service accuſtomed for dead folks to be celebrated for Us, in the next and moſt proper place where it ſhall fortune Us to depart out of this tranſitory life; And ever, that We will that whenſoever and whereſoever it ſhall pleaſe God to call Us out of this tranſitory life to his infinite mercy and grace, be it within the Realm or without, that Our Executors in as goodly, brief and convenient haſte as they reaſonably can or may order, prepare and cauſe Our body to be removed, conveyed and brought into the ſaid Colledge of Windſor, and the Service of Placebo and Dirige, with a Sermon and Maſſe on the morrow at Our coſts and charges devoutly to be done, obſerved and ſolemnly kept, there to be buried and interred in the place appointed for Our ſaid Tomb to be made for the ſame intent, and all this to be done in as devout-wiſe as can or may be; And We will and charge Our Executors that they diſpoſe and give almes to the moſt poor and needy people, that may be found, common beggars as much as may be avoided, in as ſhort ſpace as poſſible they may after Our departure out of this tranſitory life One thouſand marks of lawfull money of England, part in the ſame place and thereabout where it ſhall pleaſe Almighty God to call us to his mercy, partly by the way, and part in the ſame place of Our buriall after their diſcretions; And to move the poor people that ſhall have Our alms to pray heartily unto God for the remiſſion of Our offences and the wealth of Our ſoule.

And We will, that with as convenient ſpeed as may be done after Our departure out of this world (if it be not done in Our life) that the Dean and Canons of Our Free Chappell of Saint George within Our Caſtle of Windeſor ſhall have Manours, Lands, Tenements, and Spiritual promotions to the yearly value of vj C. pounds over all charges made ſure to them and to their ſucceſſours for ever upon theſe conditions hereafter enſuing, and for the due accompliſhment and full performance of all other things contained with the ſame in the form of an Indenture, ſigned with Our own hand, which ſhall be paſſed by way of Covenant for that purpoſe between the ſaid Dean and Canons, and Our Executors, (if it paſſe not between Us and the ſaid Dean and Canons in Our life) That is to ſay, the ſaid Dean and Canons, and their ſucceſſors forever, ſhall finde two Prieſts to ſay Maſſes at the ſaid Altar, to be made where We have before appoinced our Tomb to be made and ſtand.

And alſo after Our deceaſe keep yearly Four ſolemn Obits for us within the ſaid Colledge of Windeſor, and at every of the ſame Obits to cauſe a ſolemn Sermon to be made, and alſo at every of the ſaid Obits to give to poor people in alms Ten pounds, and alſo to give for ever yearly to thirteen poor men, which ſhall be called Poor Knights, to every of them Twelve pence a day, and once in the year yearly for ever a long Gown of white cloth with the Garter upon the breaſt imbroydered with a Shield and Croſſe of Saint George within the garter and a mantle of red cloath, and to ſuch one of the thirteen poor Knights, as ſhall be appointed to be head and governour over them, iij li. vj s. viij d. yearly for ever over and beſide the ſaid xij d. by the day. And alſo to cauſe every Sunday in the year for ever a Sermon to be made at Windeſor aforeſaid, as in the ſaid Indenture and Covenant ſhall be more fully and particularly expreſſed, willing, charging and requiring Our Son Prince EDWARD, all Our Executors and Counſellors, which ſhall be named hereafter, and all other Our Heirs and Succeſſours, whſch ſhall be Kings of this Realm, as they will anſwer before God Almighty at the dreadfull day of judgment, that they, and every of them, doe ſee that the ſaid Indenture and Aſſurance to be made between Us and the ſaid Dean & Canons, or between them and Our executors, and all things therein contained, may be duly put in execution, and obſerved and kept for ever perpetually according to this Our laſt Will and Teſtament. And as concerning the order and diſpoſition of the Imperiall Crown of this Realm of England and Ireland, with Our Title of France, and all dignities, honours, preheminences, prerogatives, authorities and juriſdictions to the ſame annexed or belonging, and for the ſure eſtabliſhment of the ſucceſſion of the ſame. And alſo for a full and plain gift, diſpoſition, aſsignment, declaration, limitation and appointment with what conditions Our Daughters MARY and ELIZABETH ſhall ſeverally have, hold and enjoy the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes after Our deceaſe; and for default of Iſſue and Heires of the ſeverall bodies of Us and of Our Son Prince EDWARD lawfully begotten and His Heirs; And alſo for a full gift, diſpoſition, aſsignment, declaration, limitation and appointment to Whom, and of what eſtate, and in what manner, form and condition the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes, ſhall remain and come after Our deceaſe; And for default of Iſſue and Heirs of the ſeverall bodies of Us, and of the ſaid Son Prince EDWARD, and of Our ſaid Daughters MARY and ELIZABETH lawfully begotten, We by theſe preſents doe make and declare Our laſt Will and Teſtament concerning the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and all other the premiſes, in manner and form following:

Ann. Dom. 1546. Ann. Reg. Hen. 38.

That is to ſay, We will, by theſe preſents, that immediately after Our departure out of this preſent life, Our ſaid Son Prince EDWARD ſhall have and enjoy the ſaid Imperiall Crown and Realm of England and Ireland, Our Title of France, with all dignities, honours, preheminences, prerogatives, authorities and juriſdictions, lands and poſſeſsions to the ſame annexed, or belonging unto Him and to His Heirs of His body lawfully begotten; And for default of ſuch Iſſue of Our ſaid Son Prince EDWARD's body lawfully begotten, We will the ſame Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes, after Our two deceaſes, ſhall wholly remain and come to the Heirs of Our body lawfully begotten, of the body of Our entirely beloved Wife Queen Katharine that now is, or of any other Our lawfull Wife that We ſhall hereafter marry, and for lack of ſuch Iſſue and Heirs, We will alſo that after Our deceaſe, and for default of Heirs of the ſeverall bodies of Us and of our ſaid Son Prince EDWARD's lawfully begotten, the ſaid Imperial Crown and all other the premiſes, ſhall wholly remain and come to Our ſaid Daughter MARY, and the Heirs of Her body lawfully begotten, upon condition that Our ſaid Daughter MARY after Our deceaſe ſhall not marry, nor take any Perſon to Her Huband without the aſſent and conſent of the Privy Counſellours, and others, appointed by Us to Our deareſt Son Prince EDWARD aforeſaid, to be of Counſell, or of the moſt part of them, or the moſt of ſuch as ſhall then be alive thereunto, before the ſaid marriage, had in writing, ſealed with their ſeals. All which conditions We declare, limit, appoint and will by theſe

Ann. Reg. Hen. 8. 38. Ann. Dom. 1546.

theſe preſents, ſhall be knit and inveſted to the ſaid eſtate of Our Daughter MARY in the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes, And if it fortune Our ſaid Daughter MARY to die without Iſſue of Her body, lawfully begotten, We will that after Our deceaſe, and for default of Iſſue of the ſeverall bodies of Us, and of Our ſaid Son Prince EDWARD, lawfully begotten, and of Our Daughter MARY; the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes, ſhall wholly remain to come to Our ſaid Daughter ELIZABETH, and to the Heirs of Her body, lawfully begotten, upon condition, that our ſaid Daughter ELIZABETH, after Our deceaſe, ſhall not marry, nor take any Perſon to Her Husband without the aſſent and conſent of the Privy Counſellors, and others, appointed by Us to be of Counſell with Our ſaid deareſt Son Prince EDWARD, or the moſt part of them, or the moſt part of ſuch of them as ſhall be then alive, thereunto, before the marriage had in writing, ſealed with their ſeals, which Condition We declare, limit and appoint, and will by theſe preſents, ſhall be to the ſaid eſtate of Our ſaid Daughter ELIZABETH in the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes knit and inveſted; And if it ſhall fortune Our ſaid Daughter ELIZABETH to die without Iſſue of Her body, lawfully begotten, We will that after Our deceaſe, and for default of Iſſue of the ſeveral bodies of Us and of Our ſaid Son Prince EDWARD, and of Our ſaid Daughters MARY, and ELIZABETH, the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes, after Our deceaſe, ſhall wholly remain and come to the Heires of the body of the Lady FRANCES, Our Niece, eldeſt Daughter to Our late Siſter the French Queen, lawfully begotten, and for default of ſuch Iſſue of the body of the ſaid Lady FRANCES, We will that the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes, after Our deceaſe, and for default of Iſſue of the ſeverall bodies of Us, and of Our Son Prince EDWARD, and of Our Daughters MARY, and ELIZABETH, and of the Lady FRANCES, lawfully begotten, ſhall wholly remain and come to the Heirs of the body of the Lady ELANOR Our Niece, ſecond Daughter to Our ſaid Siſter the French Queen, lawfully begotten. And if it happen the ſaid Lady ELANOR to die without Iſſue of Her body, lawfully begotten, We will that after Our deceaſe, and for default of Iſſue of the ſeverall bodies of Us, and of Our ſaid Son Prince EDWARD, and of Our ſaid Daughters MARY, and ELIZABETH, and of the ſaid Lady FRANCES, and of the ſaid Lady ELANOR, lawfully begotten, the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes, ſhall wholly remain and come to the next rightfull Heirs. And we will that if Our ſaid Daughter MARY doe marry without the conſent and aſſent of the Privy Counſellours and others appointed by Us to be of Counſell to Our ſaid Son Prince EDWARD, or the moſt part of them as ſhall then be alive thereunto, before the ſaid marriage had in writing, ſealed with their ſeals, as is aforeſaid, that then and from thenceforth for lack of Heirs of the ſeverall bodies of Us and of Our ſaid Son Prince EDWARD, lawfully begotten, the ſaid Imperial Crown ſhall wholly remain, be, and come to Our ſaid Daughter ELIZABETH, and to the Heirs of Her body lawfully begotten, in ſuch manner and form, as though Our ſaid Daughter MARY were then dead without any Iſſue of the body of Our ſaid Daughter MARY, lawfully begotten, Any thing contained in this Our Will, or any Act of Parliament or Statute to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding; And in caſe Our ſaid Daughter the Lady MARY doe keep and perform the ſaid Condition expreſſed, declared and limited to Her eſtate in the ſaid Imperiall Crown, and other the premiſes in this Our laſt Will declared. And that Our ſaid Daughter ELIZABETH doe not keep and perform for Her part the ſaid condition declared and limited ted by this Our last Will to the estate of the said Lady ELIZABETH in the said Imperiall Crown of this Realm of England and Ireland, and other the premises, We will that then and from thenceforth after Our decease, and for lack of Heirs of the several bodies of Us and of Our said Son Prince EDWARD, and of Our said Daughter MARY, lawfully begotten, the said Imperiall Crown and other the premises shall wholly remain and come to the next Heirs lawfully begotten of the body of the said Lady FRANCES, in such manner and form as though the said Lady ELIZABETH were then dead without any Heir of Her body lawfully begotten, Any thing contained in this Will, or in any Act or Statute to the contrary notwithstanding, the remainders over for lack of Issue of the said Lady FRANCES lawfully begotten to be and continue to such persons like remainders and estates as is before limited and declared. And We being now at this time (thanks to Almighty God) of perfect memory, doe constitute and ordain these personages following Our Executors and Performers of this Our last Will and Testament, willing, commanding and praying them to take upon them the occupation and performance of the same as Executors, that is to say, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Wriothesly Chancellour of England, the Lord St. John great Master of Our House, the Earl of Hartford great Chamberlain, the Lord Russell Lord Privie Seal, the Viscount Lisle high Admirall of England, the Bishop Tonstall of Duresme, Sir Anthony Browne Knight Master of Our Horses, Sir Edward Montague Knight, chiefe Judge of the Common Pleas, Justice Bromley, Sir Edward North Knight Chancellour of the Augmentations, Sir William Pagett Knight Our chief Secretary, Sir Anthony Denny, Sir William Herbert Knights chief Gentlemen of Our Privy Chamber, Sir Edward Wotton Knight, and Mr. Doctor Wotton his brother, and all these We will to be Our Executors and Counsellors of the Privie Counsell with Our said Son Prince EDWARD, in all matters concerning both His private affairs and publick affairs of the Realm, willing and charging them, and every of them, as they must and shall answer at the day of judgment, wholly and fully to see this my last Will and Testament performed in all things with as much speed and diligence as may be, and that none of them presume to meddle with any of Our treasure, or to do any thing appointed by Our said Will alone, unlesse the most part of the whole number of these Co-executors doe consent, and by writing agree to the same; And will that Our said Executors, or the most part of them, may lawfully doe what they shall think most convenient for the execution of this Our Will, without being troubled by Our said Son, or any other, for the same. Willing further, by Our said last Will and Testament, that Sir Edmund Peckham Our trusty servant and yet Cofferer of Our house, shall be Treasurer, and have the receipt and laying out of all such treasure and money as shall be defrayed by Our Executors for the performance of this Our last Will, straightly charging and commanding the said Sir Edmund, that he pay no great summe of money, but he have first the hands of Our said Executors, or of the most part of them, for his discharge touching the same; charging him further, upon his allegiance, to make a true account of all such summes as shall be delivered to his hands for this purpose; And sithence We have now named and constituted Our Executors, We will and charge them, that first and above all things, as they will answer before God, and as We put Our singular trust and confidence in them, that they cause all Our due Debts, that can be reasonably shewed and proved before them, to be fully contented and payed as soon as they conveniently can or may after Our decease without longer delay, and that they doe execute these points first, that is to say, the payment of Our

Our debts, with redreſſe of injuries, if any ſuch can be duly proved (though to Us they be unknown) before any other part of this Our Will and Teſtament, Our Buriall, Exequies, and Funerals, onely except.

Furthermore, We will that all ſuch Grants and Gifts as We have made, given or promiſed, to any which be not yet perfected under Our ſigne or any Our ſeals, as they ought to be, and all ſuch recompenſe for exchanges, ſales, or any other thing or things as ought to have been made by Us, and be not yet accompliſhed, ſhall be perfected in every point towards all manner of men for diſcharge of Our conſcience, charging Our Executors and all the reſt of Our Counſellours to ſee the ſame done, performed, finiſhed and accompliſhed in every point, foreſeeing that the ſaid Gifts, Grants, and Promiſes, and Recompenſe, ſhall appear to Our ſaid Executors, or the moſt part of them, to have been granted, made, accorded, or promiſed, in any manner of wiſe.

Further, according to the laws of Almighty God, and for the fatherly love which We bear to Our Son Prince EDWARD, and to this Our Realm, We declare Him according to juſtice, equity, and conſcience, to be Our lawfull Heir, and doe give and bequeath unto Him the ſucceſſion of Our Realms of England, and Ireland, with Our Title of France, and all Our Dominions, both on this ſide the ſeas, and beyond, a convenient portion for Our Will and Teſtament to be reſerved.

Alſo, We give unto Him all Our plate, ſtuffe of houſhold, artillery, ordnance, ammunition, ſhips, cables, and all other things and implements to them belonging, And money alſo and jewels, ſaving ſuch portions as ſhall ſatisfie this Our laſt Will and Teſtament, charging and commanding Him on pain of Our curſe, ſeeing He hath ſo loving a Father of Us, and that Our chief labour and ſtudy in this world is to eſtabliſh Him in the Crown Imperial of this Realm after Our deceaſe, in ſuch ſort as may be pleaſing to God, and to the wealth of this Realm, and to His own honour and quiet, that He be ordered and ruled both in His marriage, and alſo in ordering the affairs of the Realm, as well outward, as inward; And alſo in all His own private affairs, and in giving of Offices of charge by the adviſe and counſell of Our right entirely beloved Counſellours, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Wriotheſly Chancellour of England, the Lord St. John great Maſter of Our houſe, the Lord Ruſſell Lord Privie Seal, the Earl of Hertford great Chamberlain of England, the Viſcount Liſle high Admirall of England, the Biſhop Tonſtall of Dureſme, Sir Anthony Browne Knight, Maſter of Our horſes, Sir William Pagett Our chief Secretary, Sir Anthony Denny, Sir William Herbert, Juſtice Montague, and Bromley, Sir Edward Wotton, Mr. Doctor Wotton, and Sir Edward North, whom We ordain, name, and appoint, and by theſe preſents ſigned with Our hand, doe make and conſtitute Our Privie Counſell with Our ſaid Son, and will, that they have the governance of Our moſt dear Son Prince EDWARD, and of all Our Realms, Dominions, and Subjects, and of all the Affairs publick and private, untill he ſhall have fully compleated the xviij^th^ year of his age.

And, for becauſe the variety and number of things, affairs, and matters are, and may be, ſuch as we not knowing the certainty of them before cannot conveniently preſcribe a certain order or rule unto Our ſaid Counſellours for their behaviours and proceedings in this charge which We have now, and doe appoint unto them, about Our ſaid Son, during the time of his minority aforeſaid; We therefore for the ſpeciall truſt and confidence which We have in them, will, and by theſe preſents, doe give and grant full power and authority unto Our ſaid Counſellours, that they all, or the moſt part of them, being aſſembled together in Counſell, or if any of them fortune to die, the more part of them which ſhall be for the time living being assembled in Counsel together, shall, and may make, devise, and ordain what things soever they, or the more part of them, as aforesaid, shall, during the minority of Our said Son, think meet, necessary, and convenient, for the benefit, honour, and surety of the weal, profit, and commodity of Our said Son, His Realms, Dominions, or Subjects, or the discharge of Our conscience. And the same things devised, made, or ordained by them, or the more part of them aforesaid, shall, and may lawfully doe, execute and accomplish, or cause to be done, executed and accomplished by their discretions, or the discretions of the more part of them, as aforesaid, in as large and ample manner, as if We had or did expresse unto them by a more speciall Commission under Our Great Seal of England, every particular cause that may chance or occurre during the time of Our said Sons minority, and the self-same manner of proceeding, which they shall for the time think meet to use and follow. Willing and charging our said Son, and all others, which shall hereafter be Counsellours to Our said Son, that they never charge, molest, trouble, or disquiet Our aforesaid Counsellours, nor any of them, for the devising or doing, nor any other person for the doing of that they shall devise, or the more part of them, devise or doe, assembled, as is aforesaid. Ann. Dom. 1546. Ann. Reg. Hen. 38.

And, We doe charge expresly the same Our entirely beloved Counsellours and Executors that they shall take upon them the rule and charge of Our said Son and Heir, in all His causes and affairs, and of the whole Realm, doing nevertheless all things as under Him and in His name, untill Our said Son and Heir shall be bestowed and married by their advise, and that the xviijth year be expired, willing and desiring furthermore Our said trusty Counsellours, and then all Our trusty and assured Servants; and thirdly, all other Our loving Subjects, to aid and assist Our forenamed Counsellors in the execution of the premises during the aforesaid time. Not doubting but they will in all things deal so truly and uprightly, as they shall have cause to think them well chosen for the charge committed unto them, straightly charging our said Counsellours and Executors, and in Gods name exhorting them for the singular trust and speciall confidence which We have and ever had in them, to have a due and diligent eye, perfect zeal, love and affection to the honour, surety, estate, and dignity of Our said Son, and the good state and prosperity of this Our Realm; And that all delaies set apart, they well aid and assist Our said Counsellours and Executors to the performance of this Our present Testament and last Will, in every part, as they will answer before God at the day of judgment, Cum venerit judicare vivos & mortuos; and furthermore for the speciall trust and confidence which we have in the Earls of Arundell, and Essex, that now be, Sir Thomas Cheny Knight Treasurer of Our houshold, Sir John Gage Knight Comptroller of Our houshold, Sir Anthony Wingfield Knight Our Vice-Chamberlain, Sir William Peeter Knight one of Our two principall Secretaries, Sir Richard Rich Knight, Sir John Baker Knight, Sir Ralph Sadler Knight, Sir Thomas Seymour Knight, Sir Richard Southwell, and Sir Edmund Peckham Knights, they, and every of them, shall be of Counsell, for the aiding and assisting of the forenamed Counsellours and Our Executors, when they or any of them shall be called by Our said Executors, or the more part of the same.

Item, We bequeath to Our Daughters MARY and ELIZABETH's marriage, they being married to any outward Potentate, by the advise of the aforesaid Counsellours (if We bestow Them not in Our life-time) Ten thousand pounds in money, plate, jewels, and houshold-stuffe, for each of Them, or a larger summe, as to the discretion of Our Executors, or the more part of them, shall be thought convenient, Willing Them on

When this Will was made.

51. This the Kings Will was drawn up ſome two years ſince, before He went to Bologne, as is intimated in a paſſage, Be it beyond the ſea, &c. which now was onely fairly written over again, without any alteration, ſave that Stephen Gardiner was expunged from being one of His Executors. It ſeems, that formerly (finding none ſubſtituted in Gardiner's room) He appointed ſeventeen Executors, that ſo a deciſive Vote might avoid equality of Voices. And, although in this Will, proviſion is made for multitude of Maſſes to be ſaid for his ſoule, yet* one (pretending to extraordinary intelligence herein) would perſwade us, that K. Henry intended in His later daies ſo thorow a Reformation, as not to have left one Maſſe in the Land, if death had not prevented Him.

Fox*, Acts and Mon. p. 1291.

Legacies ſcarcely paid.

52. Amongſt His Servants in ordinary attendance, to whom Legacies were bequeathed, Richard Cecil there named Yeoman of the Robes, was the Father to William Cecil afterwards Baron of Burghly and Lord Treaſurer of England. Thomas Sternhold, Groom of the Robes (and afterwards of the * Bed chamber to King Edward the ſixth) was one of them who tranſlated the Pſalmes into Engliſh Meeter, being then accounted an excellent Poet; though he who wore bayes in thoſe daies, deſerveth not ivie in our Age. Now, ſeeing by the rules of juſtice, and the Kings own appointment, His Debts were to be paid before His Legacies; and, ſeeing many of His perſonall debts remained unſatisfied till the daies of Queen Elizabeth, probably moſt of theſe Legacies were never paid, eſpecially to inferiour perſons: As if it were honour enough for them to have ſuch ſumms bequeathed unto, though never beſtowed upon them.

Monument made for the King by the Cardinal.

53. Whereas mention in this Will of a Monument well onwards and almoſt made, it is the ſame which Cardinal Wolſey built for King Henry, and not for himſelf, as is commonly reported. Wherefore, whereas there goeth a tale, That King Henry one day finding the Cardinal with the workmen making His Monument, ſhould ſay unto him, Tumble your ſelf in this Tomb whileſt you are alive, for when dead, you ſhall never lie therein; it is a meer fiction, the Cardinal originally intending the ſame for the King, as appeareth by the ancient Inſcription * thereupon, wherein King Henry was ſtiled LORD (not KING) of Ireland, without addition of ſupreme Head of the Church, plainly ſhewing the ſame was of antient date in the daies of the Cardinal.

* Godwin in Hen 8. p. 200.

Why His Nieces more at liberty than his Daughters.

54. Whereas the Lady Mary and Elizabeth, Their marriages are ſo ſeverely conditioned, that if made without conſent of the Councell, They were to forfeit Their

Ann. Reg. Hen. 38. Ann. Dom. 1546.

Their right to the Crown, men interpret it as provided in terrorem, and not otherwise. Yet, this clause was it which afterwards put so plausible a pretence on Wiat his rebellion; which, though made of rotten cloth, had notwithstanding a good colour thereon. Now, whereas the King's Nieces (the Daughters to Mary His younger Sister) were not clogg'd in this His Will with such restrictions concerning their Marriages, the plain reason was, because both of them were already married before this Will was made: Frances the elder, to Henry Gray Marquesse Dorset, (afterward Duke of Suffolke) and Eleanour the younger, to Henry Clifford Earl of Cumberland.

Not May as one pro-labour the Parents

55. The Portion of but ten thousand pounds a piece left to His two Daughters, was not much unproportionable to the value of money as it went in that Age, though a summe small for such an use in our daies. And I have heard, that Queen Elizabeth being informed that Doctor Pilkington Bishop of Durham had given ten thousand pounds in marriage with his Daughter; and, being offended that a Prelates daughter should equal a Princesse in portion, took away one thousand pounds a year from that Bishoprick, and assigned it for the better maintenance of the Garrison of Barwick.

Ten thousand pounds the portion of a Princesse.

56. Very much of His own abitrarinesse appears in this Will of King Henry, entailing the Crown according to His own fancie, against all right, and reason. For, first, how unjust was it, that His female issue by Queen Katharine Parr, His last Wife (had He had any) should inherit the Crown before Mary and Elizabeth His eldest Daughters by His former Wives? If Mary and Elizabeth were not His lawfull Children, how came They by any right to the Crown? If His lawfull Children, why was Their birth-right and seniority not observed in succession? Well it was for Them that Henry Fitz-Roy His naturall Son (but one of supernaturall and extraordinary endowments) was dead, otherwise (some suspect) had He survived King Edward the sixth, we might presently have heard of a K. Henry the ninth; so great was His Fathers affection, and so unlimited His power to preferre Him. This could not have happened, for Henry died before Edw. was born.

Much of arbitrarineise in this Will.

They were bastardized by Act of Parliament.

57. But the grand injury in this His Testament is, That He quite passeth over the Children of Margaret, His eldest Sister, married into Scotland, with all Her issue, not so much as making the least mention thereof.

The Scotish Line quite left out.

58. Great indeed, (when this Will was first made) was the antipathy, which for the present possessed Him against the Scotch, with whom then He was in actual warre, though at other times, when in good humour, very courteous to His kinred of that extraction. For, most sure it is, that when Margaret Douglas, His Sisters Daughter, was married to Math. Earle of Lenox, He publickly professed, That in case His own Issue failed, He should be right glad some of Her body should succeed to the Crown, as it came to * passe.

* Henry Lord Darly her Son, Father to King James.

59. Of the eleven Witnesses, whose names are subscribed to His Will, the nine first are also Legatees therein, and therefore (because reputed Parties) not sufficient Witnesses had it been the Will of a private person. But, the Testaments of Princes move in an higher sphere, than to take notice of such Punctilloes, and (forraigners being unfit to be admitted to such privacies) domesticall Servants were preferred as the propereſt Witnesses, to attest an Instrument of their Lord and Master.

Legatees Witnesses in Kings Will.

60. It is but just with God, that He who had too much of His Will done, when living, should have the lesse, when dead, of His Testament performed. The ensuing Reformation swept away the Masses and Chantery Priests founded to pray for His soul. The Tombs of Henry the sixth, and Edward the fourth, (the one the last of Lancaster, the other the first of Yorke, the Titles of both which Houses met in this Henry) remain at this day in statu quo prius, without any amendment. Where, by the way, seeing in this Will King Henry the sixth, is styled his Uncle, I cannot make out the relation in the common sence of the word, except any will say, that Kings Uncles (as their Cousins) are oft taken in a large and favourable acception. But the main wherein His Will missed the intent is in that the Scotch Line, neglected

Little of His Will performed.

lected and omitted by Him, (ordinary Heirs are made in Heaven, Heirs to Crowns in the Heaven of Heavens) came in Their due time to the Throne, Their undoubted Right thereunto recognized by Act of Parliament. Ann. Dom. 1544. Ann. Regni H. 8. 38.

His disease, and the manner of His death.

61. After the making of this his Will, He survived a full Month, falling immediately sick. He had sesq; corpus, a body and half, very abdominous & unweldy with fat, and it was death to Him to be dieted, so great His appetite, and death to Him not to be dieted, so great His corpulency. But now all His humours repaired to one place, and setled themselves in an old sore in His thigh, which quickly grew to be greatly enflamed. Here flame met with fire, the anguish of the sore, with an hot and impatient temper, so that during his sickness, few of His Servants durst approach His presence. His Physicians, giving Him over, desired some, who tendred the good of His soul, to admonish Him of His estate. But such, who could flie with good tidings, would not halt to Him with ill newes. Besides, lately a Law was made, That none should speak any thing of the King's death. Which Act, though onely intended to retrench the Predictions and mock-Prophesies of Southsayers, yet now all the Courtiers (glad of so legall a covert for their cowardise) alledged it, to excuse themselves to inform the King of His approaching end. At last Sir Anthony Denny went boldly unto Him, and plainly acquainted Him of His dying condition; whereupon, Archbishop Cranmer was by the King his desire sent for, to give him some ghostly counsell and comfort.

His hope expressed by speechlesse gesture.

62. But before Cranmer (then being at Croidon) could come to Him, He was altogether speechlesse, but not sensless. The Archbishop exhorted Him to place all His trust in Gods mercies thorough Christ, and besought Him, that (if He could not in words) He would by some signe or other testifie this His hope. Who then wringed the Archbishops hand as hard as He could, and shortly after expired, having lived fifty five years, and seven moneths; and thereof reigned thirty seven years, nine moneths, and six daies. Jan. 28.

Lying Slanders.

63. As for the report of Sanders, that King Henry perceiving the pangs of approaching Death, called for a great bowle of white-wine, and drinking it off, should say to the company, We have lost all; it is enough to say, it is a report of Sanders. As loud a lie is it what he affirmeth, that the last words heard from His mouth were, The Monks, the Monks, and so gave up the ghost. This may goe hand in hand with what another Catholick * relates, that a black Dog (he might as truly have said a blew one) lickt up His blood, whilest the stench of His corps could be charmed with no embalming, though indeed there was no other noysomnesse than what necessarily attendeth on any dead body of equall corpulency.

* Rich. Hall in his Manuscript-Life of Bishop Fisher.

His Vices and Virtues.

64. Vices most commonly charged on His memory are: 1. Covetousnes, He was an eminent Instance, to verifie the Observation, Omnis prodigus est avarus, vast His profusiveness, (coming a fork, after a rake) not only spending the great Treasure left Him by His Father; but also vast wealth beside, and yet ever in want, and rapacious to supply the same. Secondly, Cruelty, being scarce ever observed to pardon any Noble person, whom He condemned to death. I finde but two black swannes in all the currant of His Reign, that tasted of His favour herein. And therefore when Arthur * Lord Lisle imprisoned, and daily expecting death in the Tower, was unexpectedly set free, he instantly died of soddain joy; so that it seems King Henry's pity proved as mortal as His cruelty. Thirdly, Wantonnes, which cannot be excused; But these faults were (if not over) even poised with His virtues, of Valour, Bounty, Wisdome, Learning and love of Learned men, scarce one Dunce wearing a Miter all His daies.

* Godwin in Hen.8. p. 181.

Why K. Henry's Monument never perfected.

65. The Monument mentioned in His Will, as almost made, was never all made, but left imperfect, whereof many reasons are rendred. Some impute it to the very want of workmen, unable to finish it, according to the exactnesse wherewith it was begun; a conceit in my minde, little better than scandalum seculi, and very derogatory to the Art and Ingenuity of our Age. * Others more truly ascribe it to the costlinesse thereof, which deterred His Successours from finishing of it.

* Godwin in Hen.8. p. 113.

Indeed

Ann. Reg. Hen. 8. 38. Ann. Dom. 1546.

Indeed, King Henry the seventh in erecting His own Monument in His Chappell at Westminster, did therein set a Pattern of despair for all Posterity to imitate. And yet Sanders * tells us, That Queen Mary had a great minde to make up His Tomb, but durst not for fear a Catholick should seem to countenance the memory of one dying in open schism with the Church of Rome. As for His imperfect Monument, it was beheld like the barren Fig-tree, bearing no fruit, and cumbring the * ground, (I mean the Chappell wherein it stood) and therefore it was, since these Civill Warres, took down, and sold by order of Parliament.

* De schis. Angl. pag. 216.

* Luke 13. 7.

66. In the Reign of Queen Mary, it was reported, that Cardinal Poole (whose spleen generally vented it self against dead-mens bodies) had a designe, with the principall Clergie of England, to take up and burn the body of King Henry the eighth. This plot is said to be discovered by Doctor Weston * Dean of Westminster. But because Weston was justly obnoxious for his scandalous living (for which at that time he stood committed to the Tower) and bare a personal grudge to the Cardinal, his report was the lesse credited, as proceeding from revenge, and desire to procure his own enlargement.

Card. Poole his project.

* Fox Acts and Mon. p. 2102.

67. Indeed, when a Vault, seven years since, was pierced in the midst of the Quire at Windesor, therein to interre the corps of King CHARLES, they lighted on two Coffins therein. Now (though no memory alive could reach the same, yet) constant tradition, seconded with a * coincidency of all signs and circumstances concluded these Coffins to contain the bones of King HENRY the eighth, and His dear Queen JANE SEYMOUR. And yet the bigness of the Coffin, (though very great) did not altogether answer that Giant-like proportion, which posterity hath fancied of Him.

The bones of K. Hen. abused.

HAving formerly proved at [a] large, That it is lawfull for any, and expedient for me, to have Infant-Patrons for my Books, let me give an account why this parcell of my History was ſet apart for your Honour, not being caſt by chance, but led by choice to this my Dedication.

First, I reſolved with my ſelf to ſelect ſuch a Patron for this my Hiſtory of Abbies, whoſe Anceſtour was not onely of credit, and repute, in the Reign; but alſo of favour and eſteem in the affection of King HENRY the Eighth.

Both my Requiſits have happily met in your Honour, whoſe direct Anceſtour Sir WILLIAM COMPTON, was not onely chief Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber to the aforeſaid KING, but alſo (as a noble [b] pen writing his Life, informeth us) the third man in His favour, in the beginning of His Reign: yet had he not a ſhooe-latchet of Abbey-Land, though nothing ſurely debarred him ſave his own abſtinence: as there is none in all your antient Paternall eſtate, for I account not what ſince by acceſſion of Matches hath accrued unto it.

I dare aſſure you, no ſpark of Sanctity the leſſe for a drop of milke the more. A good caſe is no hindrance to a pretious jewell, and a healthfull body no abaſement to a holy ſoule.

The History of Abbeys in ENGLAND.

Primitive MONKS, with their Piety and Painfulnesse.

First Monks caused by persecution.

WHen the Fornace of Persecution in the Infancy of Christianity was grown so hot, that most Cities, Towns, and populous Places were visited with that Epidemical Disease, many pious men fled into Desarts, there to live with more safety, and serve God with lesse disturbance. No wilde humour to make themselves miserable, and to chuse and court their own calamity put them on this project, much lesse any Superstitious Opinion of transcendent Sanctity in a Solitary life, made them willingly to leave their former Habitations. For, whereas all men by their Birth are indebted to their Countrey, there to stay and discharge all civil relations, it had been dishonesty in them, like Bankrupts to run away into the Wilderneſse to defraud their Countrey their Creditor, except some violent Occasion (such as Persecution was) forced them thereunto: and this was the first Originall of Monks in the world so called from μόνος, because living alone by themselves.

Their pious employment in a solitary life.

2. Here they in the Desarts hoped to finde Rocks, and Stocks, yea, Beasts themselves more kinde than Men had been to them: What would Hide, and Heat, Cover, and keep Warm, served them for Cloathes, not placing (as their Successours in after-Ages) any Holinesse in their Habit, folded up in the affected Fashion thereof. As for their Food, the Grasse was their Cloath, the Ground their Table, Herbs and Roots their Diet, wilde Fruits and Berries their Dainties, Hunger their Sauce, their Nails their Knives, their Hands their Cups, the next Well their Wine-cellar; But what their Bill-of-fare wanted in Cheer, it had in Grace; their Life being constantly spent in Prayer, Reading, Musing, and such like pious Employments. They turned Solitarinesse it self into Society, and cleaving themselves asunder by the divine Art of Meditation, did make of one, two, or more, opposing answering, moderating in their own Bosomes, and busie in themselves with variety of Heavenly recreations. It would doe one Good, even but to think of their Goodnesse, and at the rebound and second hand to Meditate on their Meditations. For if ever Poverty was to be envied it was here. And I appeal to the moderate men of these Times, whether in the heighth of these wofull Warres, they have not sometimes wisht, (not out of Passionate distemper, but serious recollection of themselves) some such Private Place to retire unto to, where, out of the noise of this Clamorous World, they might have reposed themselves, and served GOD with more Quiet.

They vowed no Poverty, Chastity, or Obedience. See Polidor, Virgil. de inventione rerum, lib. 7. c. 1. And Sixtus Senensis. lib. 6. Annotat. 332.

3. These Monks were of two sorts, either such as fled from actuall, or from imminent Persecution. For when a danger is not created by a timorous Fancie, but rationally represented as probable, in such a case, the Principles of Prudence, not out of Cowardise, but Caution, warrant men to provide for their Safety. Neither of these bound themselves with a wilfull Vow to observe Poverty, but Poverty rather vowed to observe them, waiting constantly upon them. Neither did they vow Chastity, though keeping it better than such as vowed it in after-Ages. As for the Vow of Obedience, it was both needlesse and impossible in their Condition, having none beneath or above them, living alone, and their whole Covent, as one may say, consisting of a single Person; And as they entred on this Course of Life, rather by Impulsion than Election; so when Peace was restored, they returned to their former homes in Cities and Towns, resuming their Callings, which they had not left off, but for a time laid aside. The first British Monks that we meet with in this kinde, were immediately after the Martyrdome of Saint Alban; for then, saith Gildas, Qui superfuerant sylvis ac desertis, abditisque speluncis se occultaverunt; Such as survived, hid themselves in woods and deserts, and secret dens of the earth. As long after on the like Occasion, when the Pagan Saxons, and Danes, invaded this Island, many religious Persons retired themselves to Solitary lives.

Voluntary MONKS, embracing that Life, not for Necessity, but Conveniency.

Silver Monks succeeded the former golden ones.

After these succeeded a Second Sort of Monks leading a Solitary Life, when no visible need forced them thereunto, as neither feeling nor fearing any apparent Persecution; Yet these considering the inconstancy of humane matters, that though they had Prosperity for the present, it might soon be changed into a contrary condition, if either the restlesse endevours of the Devil took effect, or sinfull Christians were rewarded according to their deserts, freely chose a Lone life, also prompted perchance thereunto by their own Melancholy disposition.

Fetcht from wandring in the wilderness to dwell together.

2. Afterwards it was counted convenient, that such who hitherto dwelt desolate in Desarts, scattered asunder, should be gathered together to live under one Roof, because their Company would be Cheerfull in Health, and Needfull in Sickness one to another. Hence these two words, though contrary to sound, signifie the same:

Monasterium, Cœnobium, } A place containing men living { Alone. In common.

For though they were sequestred from the rest of the World, yet they enjoyed mutuall Society amongst themselves. And again, though at solemn times they joyned in their Publick Devotions and Refections, yet no doubt, they observed howers by themselves in their Private Orisons: Of these, some were Gardeners like Adam, Husbandmen like Noah, caught Fish with Peter, made Tents with Paul, as every man was either advised by his Inclination, or directed by his Dexterity, and no Calling was counted Base that was found Beneficiall. Much were they delighted with making of Hives, as the Embleme of a Covent for Order and Industry; wherein the Bees under a Master their Abbot, have severall Cells, and live and labour in a regular discipline. In a word, they had hard hands and tender hearts, sustaining themselves by their labour, and relieving others by their Charity, as formerly hath been observed in the Monks of Bangor.

3. Take

3. Take a taſt of their Auſterity who lived at Vall Roſine, ſince called Minevea in Pembroke-ſhire, under the Method of S. David. They were raiſed with the crowing of the [a] Cock from their beds, and then betook themſelves to their prayers, and ſpent the reſt of the day in their ſeverall callings; when their task was done, they again beſtowed themſelves in prayers, meditations, reading & writing; and at night when the heavens were full of ſtarres, they firſt began to feed, having their temperate repaſt to ſatisfie hunger on bread, water, and herbs. Then the third time they went to their prayers, and ſo to bed, till the circulation of their daily employment returned in the Morning. A ſpectacle of virtue and continence, who although they received nothing, or any thing very unwillingly of others, yet were ſo farre from wanting neceſſaries, that by their pains they provided ſuſtenance for many poor people, Orphans, Widows, and Strangers.

The diſcipline of Britiſh Monks under S. David. [a] Harpsfield Hiſt Eccl. Angl. p. 49.

4. Here as we cannot but highly commend the integrity of their Hearts herein, ſo we muſt withall bemoan, that what in them was intentionally good, proved occaſionally evill, hatching Superſtition under the warmth of their Devotion. For though even theſe as yet were free from humane Ordinances and Vows, yet Will-worſhip crept in inſenſible in the next Age, (Tares are eaſier ſeen grown than growing) and errour and vitiouſneſſe came in by degrees. The Monks afterwards having ſufficiency turned lazie, then getting wealth waxed wanton, and at laſt endowed with ſuperfluity became notoriouſly wicked, as hereafter ſhall appear. Thus as Pliny reporteth of the GAGATE-ſtone, that ſet a fire it burneth more fiercely if water be caſt on, but is extinguiſhed if oyle be poured thereupon: So the Zeal of Monaſtick men was inflamed the more with the bitter water of affliction, whilſt in proſperity the oyle of plenty quenched their piety. So ill a Steward is humane corruption of outward happineſſe, oftner uſing it to the Receivers hurt, than the Givers glory.

Superſtition unawares occaſioned by them.

Of Superſtition, which was the fundamentall fault in all Abbeys.

THis was one main fault in all Engliſh Abbeys, that the Builders did not dig deep enough to lay the Foundation, as grounded on the foundred and mouldring bottome of ſuperſtition. For every Monaſtery was conceived a magazine of merit both for the Founder, his Anceſtors, and Poſterity. And although all theſe Dotations did carry the title of pure Alms, yet ſeriouſly conſidered, they will be found rather forced than free, as extorted from men with the fear of Purgatory, one flaſh of which fire believed, is able to melt a miſer into charity; yea, which is worſe, many of their foundations had their morter tempered with innocent blood: For which we may conceive afterwards, they ſped never a whit the better. To give ſome inſtances of many.

Abbeys built on the ſand of ſuperſtition.

2. Wolpher, King of the MERCIANS, having murdered Wolphald, and Ruſine, his own Sons, with cruell and barbarons Immanity, becauſe they had devoted themſelves unto Chriſt, and embraced his Religion; afterwards turning Chriſtian himſelf, to waſh away the ſtain of his impiety, built that famous Abbey, ſince known by the name of Peterborough.

Peterborough Abbey founded to expiate murder. [b] Cambd. Brit. in Northampton-ſhire.

3. King Athelſtance drowned his brother Edwine, having put him into a little Wherry, or Cockboat, without any tackling or furniture thereunto (to the end he might impute his wickedneſs to the waves) and afterwards as a ſatisfaction to appeaſe his Ghoſt, built the fair Abbey of Middleton in Dorſet-ſhire.

Middleton being on the ſame occaſion. Idem in Dorcet.

4. To joyn to theſe two houſes of Monks, one of Nuns, (ſuch ſociety hath not been unacceptable) Ælfrith, ſecond Wife to King Edgar, having contrived the death of Edward her Son-in-law, King of England, murdered him by a company of Hackſters and Villains, at her appointment, at Corſe-Caſtle in Dorſet-ſhire) to pave the way for the Succeſſion of her Son Ethelbred to the Crown) afterwards built the ſtately Nunnery of [c] Ambresbury, with ſome other religious Houſes.

So alſo the Nunnery of Ambresbury.

[c] Harpsfield Hiſt. Eccl. Angl. Sæc. 10. p. 188.

Suspitious therein might be a great fault herein.

5. It is confest, that wilfull murder may be pardoned in Christ, and they who deny it are guilty (as much as lies in their power) of a worse soul-murder in their unchartable opinion; Yet this we say, that all the chantings of the Monks and Nuns in their Covents could not drown the noise of innocent blood. And if these Founders of Abbeys thought that their murder could be expiated by raising such beautifull buildings, their most polished marble and costly carved pieces were in the expression of the Prophet, but [d] dawbing over their damnable sins with untempered morter. But though Abbeys long since have been demolished, we leave their Founders to stand or fall to their own Maker, when his all-seeing Eye hath discerned betwixt the Errours of their Judgment, and Integrity of their Affections, endevouring that, which they conceived was to the glory of God, and advance of true Religion.

d Ezek. 22. 28.

Of the severall Orders of Monks and Nuns in England.

An heap of Monkish Orders in England.

SO much of the Superstition of the Founders, come we now to their Superstition, and other notorious sins, who lived in these foundations. But first we will premise their severall Orders. Herein we pretend not to any critical skill: For though every Minister of God's Word (whereof I am the meanest) is a spirituall Herald to derive and deduce the Pedigrees and Genealogies of any Institution, which hath its Originall in God's Word, yet they are not bound (not to say it is a learned Ignorance) to be skilled in the Deductions, Divisions, and Sub-divisions of these Orders, which have no foundation in the Scripture. Yea, hear what [e] Matthew Paris, being a Monk of S. Albans saith, Tot jam apparuerunt Ordines in Angliâ, ut ordinum confusio videretur inordinata. It is possible then for my best diligence to commit an Errour, and impropriety in Reckoning them up. For what wonder is it if one be lost in a wood, to which their numerous Orders may well be resembled, though in all this wood there appears not one plant of God's planting, as one of their own [f] Abbots most remarkably did observe. In a word, when the [g] Frogs of Ægypt died out of the houses, out of the villages, and out of the fields, They gathered them together upon heaps, &c. And give us leave in like manner confusedly to shovel up these Vermin, now dead in England.

Benedictines the primitive Monks in England.

2. First, come forth the Benedictines, or Black Monks, so called from S. BENEDICT, or BENET, an Italian, first Father and Founder of that Order, Augustine the Monk first brought them over into England, and these black Birds first nested in Canterbury, whence they have flowen into all the parts of the Kingdome. For as [h] one rightly observeth, all the Abbeys in England, before the time of King William the Conquerour (and some whiles after) were filled with this Order. Yea, all the Abbeys in England, of the first magnitude, which had Parliamentary Barons (abate onely the Prior of the Hospitallers of S. John's in London) were of this Order, and though the Augustinians were their Seniors in Europe, they were their Juniors in England. Now as Mercers, when their old Stuffes begin to tire in Sale, refresh them with new Names to make them more vendible: So when the Benedictines waxed stale in the world, the same Order was set forth in a New Edition, corrected and amended under the names, first of h Clem. Reyner De antiq. Ordinis S. Benedict.

CLUNIACKS: these were Benedictines sifted through a finer search, with some additionals invented and imposed upon them by Odo Abbot of Cluni, in Burgundy, who lived Anno Domini 913. But these Cluniacks appeared not in England till after the Norman Conquest, and had their richest Covents at Barnestable in Devon-shire, Pontefract and Meaux in York-shire, &c.

2. CISTERCIANS, so called from one Robert, living in Cistercium, in Burgundy aforesaid, he the second time refined the drosse Benedictines, and and Walter Especk, first established their Brotherhood in England at Rivall in York-shire, besides which, they had many other pleasant and plentifull habitations, at Warden and Woburne in Bedford shire, Buckland and Ford in Devon shire, Bindon in Dorset-shire, &c. The Bernardine Monks were of a younger House, or under-Branch of the Cistercians.

3. Of GRAND-MONT, which observed S. Benet's Rule, were brought into England, Anno 1233, and were principally fixed at Abberbury in Shropshire.

The Family of these Benedictines, taken at large, with their Children, and Grand-Children, of under-Orders springing from them, were so numerous and so richly endowed, that in their Revenues they did match all the other Orders in England, especially if the Foundations of Benedictine Nuns be joyned in the same reckoning, I doubt not but since these Benedictines have had their crudities decon-cocted, and have been drawn out into more slender threds of sub-divisions. For, commonly once in a hundred years starts up some pragmaticall person in an Order, who out of novelty alters their old Rules (there is as much variety and vanity in Monks Cowles, as in Courtiers Cloaks) and out of his fancie adds some observances thereunto. To crie quits with whom after the same distance of time, ariseth another, and under some new Name reformeth his Reformation, and then his late new (now old) Order is looked on as an Almanack out of Date, wanting the Perfection of new and necessary Alterations.

3. A scandal hath lately been raised, much in dishonour of these Benedictines, viz.: That all the antient English Monks before the Conquest, were onely of the Order of S. Equitius. Some highly concerned to confute this Report, wrote over to our Antiquaries in England, for their judgments herein; from whom they received this following Answer. Scandalum Benedictinorum.

4. What this S. Equitius was, (pretended Founder of our first English Monks) is worth our enquirie. Sure he could not be that Equitius, of whom the African Bishops complained in the Councell of Carthage, That by indirect courses he had invaded the Priesthood; desiring by their [b] Legats (whom they sent to the Emperour) That he might be expelled that Office. Yet he, in defiance of their endevours, went about to disturb the peace of the Church. More probable it is, he was either Equitius a Deacon in the Apamean Church, (flourishing in the fourth Century) and famous for his faith and fervency in Religion in [c] assisting Marcellus Bishop thereof, to demolish the Temple of Jupiter, or else his contemporary Equitius, Consul of Rome with Gratian, An. 378, or some other unknown unto us. But be he, who he himself or any other pleaseth (brother, if they will, to S. George on Horse back) he was never father of any Monks in England.

5. I intended to present the Reader, with the habits of Benedictines, and all other Orders for the fashion, matter, and colour thereof. But understanding the industrious work called Monasticon, is comming forth (which hath the speed of this my Book, for a Term or two) wherein that Subject is handled at large, I thought better to forbear. Partly, because I presume Master Dodsworth (an eminent instrument in that usefull work) better acquainted, than I am, with their Taylors: partly, because my wardrobe of their clothes (coming so long after his) will be beheld, but as from the second hand fetched from Long lane, and his new bought out of the Draper's-shop.

Why habits of Monks not here presented.

6. The Augustinian Monks succeed, younger than the Benedictines in England, though older in Europe. For S. Augustine of Hippo, (on whom these Monks would willingly recover themselves) was S. Benet's Senior by sixty years. I cannot believe, that they came over into England (what some affirm) precise, Anno 636, (others 640) when Birinus was Bishop of Dorchester, or that [d] 1059, they were seated in London, being rather inclined to believe, that Eudo the Dapifer (Sewer, if you please) to King Henry the first, first brought them into England, Anno 1105, and that S. John's at Colchester was the prime place of their residence. However, I finde that Waltham-Abbey (for Benedictines at the first) had its Copie altered by King Henry the second, and bestowed on Augustinians.

Augustinian Monks.

7. These Augustinians were also called Canons Regular, where, by the way, I meet with such a nice distinction, which disheartens me from pretending to exactnesse in reckoning up these Orders. For, this I finde in our English [e] Ennius:

Whether H be a letter.

[e] Chaucer in the Plow-mans Tale.

Jeep 4.

And all such other Counterfaitours
Chanons, Canons and such disguised
Been Goddes enemies and Traytours
By his true religion han soule despised.

It seems the H here amounteth to a letter so effectuall as to discriminate Chanons from Canons, (though both Canonici in Latine) but what should be the difference betwixt them, I dare not interpose my conjecture. I have done with these Augustinians when I have observed, that this Order in England afforded * threescore and ten eminent Writers, and one in Germany worth them all in effect, I mean Martin Luther, who by his writings gave a mortall wound to all these Orders, yea, and to the root of the Romish Religion.

* Reckoned up by Pitzeus in Indice, p. 974.

8. Gilbertine Monks, may be the third, a mongrel Order, observing some select Rules partly of S. Bennet, partly of S. Augustine. So named from Gilbert (son to Joceline a Knight) Lord of Sempringham in Lincoln-shire, where 1148, first they were planted. Whereupon, this Order may boast, that it alone is a native and Indegena, (whereas Benedictines are by original Italians; Augustinians, African; frican, Carthusians, French, Dominicans, Spanish, &c.) pure English by the extraction thereof. This Gilbert, unhandsome, but not unlearned, erected this Order, (contrary to Justinians constitution, who forbad double Monasteries) wherein men and women lived together, (though secluded) under one roof. He survived to see thirteen Houses of this his own Order, and in them seventeen hundred Gilbertine Brothers and Sisters. Yet I finde no Writer of this Order, conceiving them so well busied with their Company in their Convent, they had little leisure for the writing of Books.

Gilbertine Monks.

Carthusian Monks.

9. Carthusian Monks make up a Messe, much famed for their mortified lives and abstinence from all flesh; one Bruno first founded them in the Dolphinate in France, Anno 1080, and some 60 years after they were brought over into England. I wonder men fasting so much, should have so high spirits, no Order standing more stoutly on their priviledges, insomuch when the means of all Covents were valued in the Reign of * King Henry the eighth, a peculiar clause was added to the Patent of the Commissioners, impowering them particularly to rate Charter-house in London. However, their Books (there being eleven * learned Authors of English Carthusians) contain much tending to mortification, and out of them Parsons the Jesuite hath collected a good part of his Resolutions.

* Some years before the dissolution of Abbeys.
* Pitseus in Indice, p. 973.

Monks and Fryers how they differ.

10. So much of Monks, come we now to Fryers, and it is necessary to premise what was the distinction betwixt them. For though some will say, the matter is not much, if Monks and Friers were confounded together, yet the distinguishing of them conduceth much to the clearing of History. Some make Monks the Genus, and Friers but the Species, so that all Fryers were Monks, but è contra all Monks were not Fryers. Others, that Monks were confined to their Cloisters, whilst more liberty was allowed to Fryers to goe about and preach in neighbouring Parishes. Others, that Monks were in those Convents who had a Bishop over them, as Canterbury, Norwich, Durham, &c. but never any Fryers in such places where the Bishop was the supreme, and they in some sort had the power of his Election. I see it is very hard just to hit the joynt so as to cleave them asunder at an hairs bredth, Authors being so divided in their opinions. But the most essentiall difference, whereon we most confide is this, Monks had nothing in propriety, but all in common; Fryers had nothing in propriety, nor in common, but being Mendicants, begg'd all their subsistance from the charity of others. True it is, they had Cells or Houses to dwell, or rather hide themselves in (so the Foxes have holes, and the Birds of the aire have nests) but all this went for nothing, seeing they had no means belonging thereunto. Yea it hath borne a tough debate betwixt them, Whether a Fryer may be said to be Owner of the Cloathes he weareth? and it hath been for the most part over-ruled in the negative.

Objection to null the distinction,

11. It will be objected, that many Convents of Fryers had large and ample revenues (as will appear by perusing the Catalogue in Speed's Tables) amounting to some hundreds (though never thousands) by the year, some Fryers barns wellnigh as wealthy as some Monks (rather every pretended Lazarus, a Dives) holding, though not severally to themselves, joyntly amongst themselves, most rich endowments. Here also it will be in vain to flie to the distinction of Ctesis and Chresis, of using and owning, seeing the Monks will lay a claim to that distinction, and challenge as great an interest therein as the Fryers themselves.

Answered.

12. I have nothing to return in answer hereunto, save onely that, Olim verò non fuit sic, from the beginning [of the Institution of Fryers] it was not so, these additions of Lands unto them, are of later date, and, believe it, not of their seeking, but their Benefactors casting upon them.

Criticisme in this subject not materiall.

13. However, nothing more common than to make Monks and Fryers both Synonyma's and reciprocall, and for my own part, I passe not, if in this my History I have committed the same, and hereafter shall be guilty of greater mistakes. Foresters laughed at the ignorance of that Gentleman, who made this difference betwixt a Stag and a Hart, that the one was a red, the other a fallow deer, being both of a kinde, only different in age, and some other circumstances in Venarie. I may make the like ſport to ſome Popiſh Reader, (and much good let it do him) in differencing ſome Orders which are the ſame, and identifying other Orders which are diſtinct, but the matter is of no dangerous concernment. May we be but carefull to order [f] our converſations aright, that God may ſhew us his ſalvation, and it matters not much if we commit errours, and diſcover ignorance in ordering Fryers, not in their exact number and ſeniority. Theſe premiſed, we begin with their four Elemental Orders.

What meant by Wickliffe's GAIM.

14. Wickliffe conſtantly inveigheth againſt Fryers, under the name of CAIM. Had it been Caine, I ſhould have ſuſpected his alluſion to the words of the Apoſtle, They have gone in the * way of Cain, but now am at a loſſe, and had ſo continued, had I not lighted on a railing Hexaſtick of an uncharitable Rythmer, (a baſe fellow may ſhow an honeſt man the way) who thus letteth flie at them:

* Jude ver. 11.

C. Carmelites | I. Jacobines } or { Dominicans. } Fryers.
A. Auguſtinians | M. Minorites } or { Franciſcans. }

And thus at laſt we have the great myſterie unfolded, whom Wickliffe therein did intend.

Dominican Fryers.

15. Of theſe Dominicans were the firſt Fryers, which came over into England, Anno 1221, being but twelve (an Apoſtolical number) with Gilbert de Fraxineto their Prior firſt landed at Canterbury, fixed at Oxford, but richly endowed at London, they were commonly called Black Fryers, Preaching Fryers, and Jacobine Fryers. They took their name from S. Dominick born at Calogora in Spain, and Hubert de Burgo Earl of Kent, was their prime Patrone, beſtowing his Palace in the Suburbs of London upon them, which afterwards they ſold to the Archbiſhop's of York, reſiding therein, till by ſome tranſactions betwixt King Henry the eighth and Cardinal Wolſey, it became the Royal-Court, now known by the name of White-hall. Afterwards by the bounty of Gregory Rockſly Lord Major of London, and Robert Kilwarby Archbiſhop of Canterbury, they were more conveniently lodged in two Lanes on the bank of Thames, in a place enjoying great priviledges, and ſtill retaining the name of Black Fryers. No fewer than [g] fourſcore famous Engliſh writers are accounted of this Order. At this day, as beyond the Seas, they are much condemned for being the ſole active managers of the cruell Spaniſh Inquiſition, ſo they deſerve due commendation for their Orthodox judgements in maintaining ſome Controverſies in Divinity of importance againſt the Jeſuits.

g Pitzeus in Inſtit. p. 981.

Franciſcan Fryers.

16. Franciſcans follow, commonly called Grey Fryers and Minorites, either in alluſion to Jacob's words, [h] Sum Minor omnibus beneficiis Tuis, or from ſome other humble expreſſions in the New Teſtament. They received their name from S. Francis, born in the Dutchy of Spoletum in Italy. Canonized by Pope Gregory the ninth, about two years after whoſe death the Franciſcans came over into England, and one Diggs (Anceſtour of Sir Dudley Diggs) bought for them their firſt ſeat in Canterbury: who afterwards were diffuſed all over England. For skill in School-Divinity they beat all other Orders quite out of diſtance, and had a curious Library in London (built by Richard Whittington) in that Age coſting five hundred and fifty pounds, which quickly might be made up, if (as it is reported) an [i] hundred marks were expended in transcribing the Commentaries of Lyra.

and

[i] Reyn. in Ap. Benedict. pag. 162.

17. We must not forget that one Bernard of Siena about the year 1400, refined the Franciscans into Observants, no distinct metall from the former, but different from them as steel from iron. K. Edward the fourth first brought them into England, where they had six famous Cloysters; since which time there have been a new Order of Minims begun beyond the Seas, conceiving the comparative of Minor too high, they have descended to Minimus, according to our Saviour's own words, He that is a [minime] of the least among you, the same shall be greatest: and I much admire that none have since begun an Order of Minor-Minimo's; the rather, because of the Apostles words of himself, who am lesse than the least of all saints. Βραδὺς ἐγὼ γενόμενος τοῦ ἁγίου. As I may say, a subter-subterlative in his humility. As for other Diminutives of Franciscans or Minorites beyond the Seas, Recollects, Penitentiaries, Capuchins, &c. seeing they had their rise since the fall of Abbeys in England, they belong not to our present enquiry. Sufficeth it that this Order, during the extent of our story, afforded in England an hundred and ten learned Writers.

Sub-reformations of Franciscans.

18. Carmelites, or White Fryers, come next, so named from Mount Carmel in Syria, brought over into England in the Reign of King Richard the first, by Ralph Freeborn: and placed at Alnewicke in Northumberland in a wilderneſſe (sic canibus catulos) most like unto Carmel in Syria. Whose Convent at their dissolution in the Reign of King Henry the eighth, was at low rates, in that cheap County, valued at one hundred ninety four pounds and seven shillings per annum, to justifie our former observation, that even Mendicant Fryers had Houses endowed with revenues.

Carmelites their first coming into England.

Speed Catalog. pag. 795.

19. This soundeth something to the commendation of the English Carmelites, That their Order lost not the vigour thereof by being poured into Cisternes (mediatly derived from other Countreys) but as our [w] Authour telleth us, Hi cum primis Monachis Britonum & Scotorum ex Ægypto & Palestinâ in Britanicas Insulas Monachatum intulerunt, That Monkery and (Carmelite) Friery came out of Ægypt and Palestine into Britain. Thus they will allow us to have superstition immediately thence without any circle from Rome, but are highly offended (and stickle mainly to the contrary) That we should fetch true Religion thence (with the antient observation of Easter) but this forsooth, we must receive at the second hand from Rome, and be ordered according to her directions therein.

A great privilege of English Carmelites.

[w] Regnum de Apostolatu Benedictinorum, p. 164.

20. Another thing also is alledged in the praise of our Carmelites, That they were most carefull in keeping the Records of their Order, that the List being lost of the Benedictines, Dominicans, &c. (save here or there a broken link or two) Carmelites have preserved the successive series of their Provincials. Let them thank John Bayle herein, once one of them, (though they be pleased to jeer him as forsaking it for the love of his dear Dorothy) who in his youth made the Catalogue out of love to his Order, and in his old age preserved it out of his generall affection to antiquity, and it will not be amisse here to represent it.

And praise of their industry.

This Order was vertical, and in the higheſt exaltation thereof in the Reign of King Edward the fourth, under Nicholas Kenton their twenty fifth Provincial, they reckoned no fewer than [n] fifteen hundred of their Order. But when John Milverton his Succeſſour, began (in favour of Friery) furiouſly to engage againſt Biſhops, and the Secular Clergy, the Carmelites good maſters and dames began to [o] forſake them, and they never recovered their credit, till they were utterly diſſolved. John Bird the one and thirtieth (ſome ſay laſt) Provinciall of this Order, zealouſly impugned the Pope's Primacy in his Sermons, for which he was made the firſt Biſhop of Cheſter, and was [*] ejected that See in the Reign of Queen Mary, becauſe he was married.

21. We muſt not forget how the Carmelites boaſt very much of one Simon Stock of their Order, a Kentiſh-man, or rather Kentiſh-boy, which being but twelve years of age, went out into the Woods and there fed on Roots and Wilde fruit, living in the Trunke of an hollow-Tree, whence he got the Sirname of [p] Stock, having a Revelation, That ſoon after ſome ſhould come out of Syria, and confirm his Order, which came to paſſe when the Carmelites came here. He afterwards became Maſter-Generall of their Order (to whom the reſpective Provincialls are accountable) and is ſaid to be famous for his miracles. 22. Auguſtinian Eremites lag laſt, of farre later date than Auguſtinian-Monks, as who firſt entred England, Anno 1252, and had (if not their firſt) their faireſt habitation at S. Peter's the Poor, London, thence probably taking the denomination of Povertie (otherwiſe at this day one of the richeſt Pariſhes in the City) becauſe the ſaid Auguſtinian-Eremites went under the notion of Begging-Fryers. Mean time, what a mockerie was this, that theſe ſhould pretend to be Eremites, who, inſtead of a wide Wilderneſſe, lived in Broad ſtreet, London, where their Church at this day belongeth to the Dutch-Congregation. To give theſe Auguſtine-Fryers their due, they were good Diſputants; on which account they are remembred ſtill in Oxford by an Act performed by Candidates for Maſterſhip, called Keeping of Auguſtines.

23. So much for the four principall ſort of Fryers. The following Orders being but additionall deſcants upon them, with ſome variations of their Founders: Amongſt whom were the Trinitarians, for whom Robert Rookſley built firſt an Houſe at Mottingden in Kent; they were called alſo Robertines, and de Redemptione Captivorum, whoſe work was to beg money of well-diſpoſed people for the ranſoming of Chriſtians in Captivity with the Pagans. A charitable employment, and God himſelf in ſome ſort may ſeem Soveraigne of their Order, I who looſeth the Priſoner, and their ſighing cometh before him. My [s] Author telleth me that he conceiveth them ſuppreſſed in England before the generall diſſolution of Priories, though conjecturing at no cauſe thereof. Sure I am, 'twas not becauſe ſublatâ cauſâ tollitur effectus, plenty of Chriſtian Captives then and ſince remaining amongſt the Pagans, nor will I be ſo uncharitable as to ſuſpect ſome indirect dealings in their miſapplying Contributions; but leave the reaſon to the enquiry of others.

24. The Bonhomes or Good men ſucceed them, being alſo Eremites brought over into England by Richard Earl of Cornwall, in the Reign of King Henry the third, his Brother. So ſtyled (not excluſively of other Orders, but) eminently becauſe of their ſignall goodneſſe. Otherwiſe the conceit of the [u] Epigrammiſt, admiring that amongſt ſo many Popes, there ſhould be but five Pious, lies as ſtrongly here, That amongſt ſo many Orders of Fryers, there ſhould be but one of Good men. But indeed the Apoſtle himſelf makes a Good man a degree above a Righteous man: [w] For ſcarcely for a Righteous man will one die, yet peradventure for a Good man ſome would even dare to die.

Bonehomes, or good men.

[w] Rom. 5. 7.

25. Theſe Bonehomes, though begging Fryers, (the pooreſt of Orders) and Eremites, (the moſt ſequeſtred of begging-Fryers) had two (and I believe no more) Covents in England; abſolutely the richeſt in all the Land, (Monks onely excepted) the one in Aſheridge in Buckingham ſhire, now the Manſion of the truly Honorable E. of Bridgewater, where I am informed more of a Monaſtery is viſible this day than in any other houſe of England. It was valued at the diſſolution yearly at four hundred forty ſeven pounds eight ſhillings halfpeny. The other at Edington in Wiltſhire, now known for the hoſpitality of the Lady Beauchampe dwelling therein: Valued, when diſſolved at five hundred twenty one pounds twelve ſhillings halfpeny. It ſeems that theſe Fryers (though pretending to have nothing nec in proprio, nec in communi) would not caſt their Caps (I ſhould ſay their Cowles) at rich Revenues, if beſtowed upon them, but contentedly (not to ſay cheerfully) imbrace the ſame.

Their rich Revenues.

26. I am affraid I have wronged the Crouched Fryers in their ſeniority, who about the ſame time, if not before the Bonehomes, viz: 1244, came over into England with the Pope's Authentick, and this unuſuall priviledge, That none ſhould reprove their Order, or upbraid them, or command them, under pain of [x] Excommunication. They carried a Croſſe ſome ſay on their Staves; others, on their Backs, called in French, a Crouch; and justly might they be angry, if their Properneſſe were debaſed into Deformity on the ſame miſtake whereon Edmund Crouch-back, Brother to King Edward the firſt (one of the comlieſt men alive) is miſ-repreſented to Poſterity for Crooked-back'd, meerly for aſſuming the Croſſe on Him in the Holy Warre. The place of Crouched-Fryers in London ſtill retaineth their name.

27. Soon after, one year, viz. 1257, produced two new Orders: ſo that I know not how to martiall their Priority, except to avoid Conteſts they will be pleaſed diſcreetly to uſe the Expedient betwixt the Company of Merchant Taylors and Skinners in London, to take their precedency yearly by turns. Both of them were fixed in Cambridge. The firſt, the Brethren, De Pœnitentiâ Ieſu, (otherwiſe Brethren of the Sack) whoſe Cell ſince is turned into Peter-houſe. The other Bethlemites dwelling ſomewhere in z Trumpington-ſtreet, and wearing a Starre with five Rayes on their backs. But their Starre proved but a Comet, quickly fading away, and no more mention found of them in Engliſh Authors.

28. I will conclude with the Robertines, confounded by a ſome, diſtinguiſhed by b others from Fryers Trinitarians. Theſe owe their originall to one Robert Flower, ſon of Took Flower, who had been twice Major of Yorke (the name lately remaining in that City) who forſaking the fair lands left him by his Father, betook himſelf to a ſolitary life about the Rocks in Niddſdale in Yorke ſhire, and it ſeems at Knaresborough the firſt and laſt Houſe was erected for his Order. c Matthew Paris reports that his Tomb abundantly caſt forth a Medicinall Oyle, which poſſibly might be, the diſſolving of ſome Gums uſed about his body, and other naturall cauſes may be aſſigned thereof.

29. For mine own eyes have beheld in the fair Church of Ilminſter in Somerſetſhire, the beautifull Tomb of Nicholas Wadham of Myrefield Eſquire, and Dorothy his Wife (Founders of the uniform Colledge of Wadham in Oxford) out of which in Summer ſweats forth an unctious moiſture with a fragrant ſmell, (which poſſibly an active fancy might make ſoveraign for ſome uſes) being nothing elſe than ſome bituminous matter (as by the colour and ſcent doth appear) uſed by the Marbler in joyning the chinks of the ſtones, iſſuing out chiefly thereabouts.

Sweating moiſture out of Tombs no Miracle.

30. So much of Monks and Fryers, as great being the variety amongſt Hiſtorians about their number, as amongſt Criticks in reckoning up the Originall Languages, and the difference almoſt proceedeth on the ſame account; for as the miſcounting of Dialects for Tongues cauſleſly multiplieth the number of thoſe Languages: So many miſtaking graduall for ſpecificall differences amongſt Orders, have almoſt doubled their true number on that miſpriſion. Maſter d Fox in the Reign of King Henry the third, reckoneth up no fewer than an hundred and two Male-Orders of Monks and Fryers (no Nuns being caſt into the account) but therein he confineth not himſelf to ſuch as onely were extant in England: but taketh in the whole compaſſe of Chriſtendome therein to make up his Catalogue. We have work enough upon our hands to inſiſt upon ſuch Orders as found footing in our Land, eſpecially the moſt principall of them. For other inferiour Orders I purpoſely omit (beſides the grand ones of Templers and Hoſpitallers, becauſe largely handled in my Holy Warre) As the Order of the Bleſſed Mary of reward which Mr. Lambert confoundes with the Crouched and Trinitarian Fryers, for which my e Author falls foul with his memory, affirming theſe to be three diſtinct Orders, Habitu, fine, & conſtitutionibus. (Diſtinctions enough of all conſcience to diverſifie them) and therefore greater the wonder that Mr. Lambert's pen ſhould leap over this treble ditch to confound them into one Order.

Why ſo various the number of Monks.

31. The aforeſaid f Author alſo chargeth him, as if he made his perambulation about Kent, as done meerly out of ſpightfull deſigne to diſgrace the Romiſh Religion, never mentioning any Convent without mocking at them, adding moreover, That his Book contains fabulas ineptas, & craſſa mendacia. Mean time he advances Iohn Stow to the skies (though confeſſing him farre inferiour to Mr. Lambert bert in learning) for his ſedulous diſtinguiſhing of thoſe Orders, and concludeth that Stow's Antiquities of London for the worth and truth thereof have often paſſed the Preſſe, whilſt the other his Deſcription of Kent underwent the hand of the Printer no more than once. Nor ſtops he here, but uſeth ſo ſlovenly an expreſſion (it is well it is in Latine) calling his Book Charta Cacata, which (ſaving reverence to the Reader) may be returned on the foul mouth of him who firſt uttered it.

32. Now I conceive, not onely Queen Elizabeths poor people at Greenwich (ſo are the Almes-men there termed in a fair Houſe, which this Mr. Lambert charitably founded for them) engaged to aſſert their good Patron, but alſo that all ingenious Engliſh men are obliged in his juſt vindication from this unjuſt aſperſion. Indeed, his Book is a rare piece of learning, and he in age and induſtry the true ſucceſſour to Leland in the ſtudies of Engliſh Antiquity, and the height thereof above common capacity, the ſole cauſe that his Book (as alſo his worthy work on the Saxon Laws) hath no oftner paſſed the Impreſſion. His labours are feaſts for ſcholars, not (like Stow's works) daily fare for common people. Thus the Draper may ſooner ſell forty ells of freeze and courſe cloath, than the Mercer four yards of cloath of gold, as onely for the wearing of perſons of prime quality. Nor doth the ſlow-ſelling of a book argue it to be a drugge, wanting reall worth in its ſelf, ſeeing this railing Reinerius his own Book (notwithſtanding the pompous Title thereof, Apoſtolatus Benedictinorum in Angliâ) though printed nine and twenty years ſince, viz: 1626, hath not (on my beſt enquiry) as yet been honour'd with a ſecond Edition.

33. Before we take our farewell of Fryers, know there was a deadly Antipathie betwixt them and Pariſh Prieſts: For the former ſlighted the later, as good alone to take Tythes, and like Hackney poſt-horſes onely to run the ſtage in the Maſſe-book, ſecundùm uſum Sarum, Ignorant and unable to preach. Wherefore the Fryers, when invading the Pulpit, would not ſay to the Parſon, By your leave Sir, but proudly preſuming on their Papall Priviledges, aſſumed it to themſelves, as forfeited to them, for the Parſon's want of skill or will to make uſe of it. But theſe Vultures had the quickeſt ſight and ſcent about Corps, flocking faſteſt to men of faſhion when lying on their Death-beds, whoſe laſt Confeſſions were more profitable to the Fryers, than half the Glebe land that year to the Prieſt of the Pariſh.

Antipathy betwixt Fryers and Pariſh-Prieſts.

34. This plainly appeareth out of Eraſmus in his Dialogues, who though perchance therein, he doth Lucian it too much, yet truth may be diſcovered under the varniſh of his ſcoffing wit. He, in his Dialogue entituled, FUNUS: tells us how Sir George the rich Knight being formerly confeſſed to the Fryers, the Parochiall Paſtour refuſed to bury him, becauſe he could not give an account to God of this his ſheep, as unacquainted with his finall eſtate, and this caſe commonly happened in England, the occaſion of much heart-burning betwixt them.

In Eraſmus his Jeaſt-earneſt Dialogue.

35. Monks alſo hated Fryers at their hearts, becauſe their activity and pragmaticalneſſe made Monks be held as idle and uſeleſſe; yea, as meer Cyphers, whilſt themſelves were the onely Figures of reckoning and account in the Church.

Monks why hating Fryers.

36. h Matthew Paris a Benedictine Monke of S. Albans, was a back-friend to Fryers, and on all occaſions hath a good word in ſtore for them, thus ſpeaking of the coming in of the Brethren of the Sack, as alſo of the Order of Bethlemites, he welcomes them with this Complement, That now there were ſo many Orders in England, that of them there was an inordinate confuſion.

h Hiſt. Angl. in Hen. 3. pag. 949.

37. Indeed, the Pope at laſt grew ſenſible that the world began to groan, as weary with the weight of Fryers. Who, if multiplying proportionably in after-Ages, would ſo increaſe, there would be more mouthes to beg almes, than hands to relieve them; and therefore they were ſtinted to the aforeſaid four Cardinal Orders, of Dominicans, Franciſcans, Carmelites, and Auguſtinian Eremites:

Fryers ſtinted to 4 Orders.

These boasted themselves to be like the [i] four Evangelists, though (the number alone excepted) no conformity betwixt them. And they more like unto God's four [k] sore Judgments, wherewith he useth to afflict a sinfull Nation.

The numerousnesse of Nuns.

37. Come we now to Nuns, almost as numerous in England as Monks and Fryers, as having (though not so many Orders) more of the same Order. The weaker sex hath ever equalled men in their devotion. Often exceeded them in superstition, as in the one instance of Gilbertines may appear. These were an Hermophrodite Order, as is aforesaid, admitting both men and women under the same roof, and during the life of Gilbert their first Founder for seven hundred Brethren, there were [l] eleven hundred Sisters entred into that Order. None can be so exact in reckoning up the Nuns as the Fryers, because that sex afforded no Writers to acquaint us with the Criticismes of their observances.

The antientest and poorest Nuns.

38. We will insist onely on three sorts: 1. The Antientest: 2. The Poorest: 3. The latest Nuns in England: Of the first sort we account the She-Benedictines, commonly called black Nuns, but I assure you, peny white, being most richly endowed. The Poorest follow, being the strict Order of S. Clare, a Lady living in the same time, and born in the same Town with S. Francis: and her Nuns did wear a like habit in colour with the Franciscans. I am charitably enclined to believe that these were the least bad amongst all the Professions of Virginity.

Brigetteans the last Order of Nuns.

39. The Brigettean Nuns were the latest in England, first setled here in the second year of King Henry the fifth, Anno Dom. 1415, dissolved with the rest of all Orders, Anno 1538, so that they continued here onely one hundred three and twenty years; an Order to be loved on this account, That it was the last in England. Bridget Queen of Sweden, gave them their name and institution. Men and Women living under the same roof: the Women above, the Men beneath, and one Church common to both. By their Order their House was to be endowed plentifully at the first, whereon they might live without wanting or begging, as well in dear as cheap years, and after their first foundation they were uncapable of any future benefactions, Si postea totus [m] mundus possessiones & praedia eis offerret, quicquam omninò recipere non liceret: If afterwards the whole world should proffer them farms and possessions, it was utterly unlawfull for them to accept any thing thereof: as indeed, additions to such who had plenty before, is rather a burden than a benefit.

[m] Tho. Walsingham in Hen. 5. in Anno 1413.

The mysticall number of Brigetteans.

40. The mysterious number of Brigetteans might not exceed the number of eighty five, which forsooth was the number of Christ's Apostles and Disciples put together, and thus they were precisely to be qualified:

1. Sisters, sixty.
2. Priests, thirteen.
3. Deacons, four.
4. Lay-brethren, eight.

} In all Eighty five.

Where, by the way, know we must reckon seventy two Disciples, (which the [n] Evangelist makes but just seventy, and also put in S. Paul for the thirteenth Apostle, or else it will not make up the summe aforesaid, but it is all even with discreet persons, be it over or above it. This Order constantly kept their Audit on All-Saints Eve, October 31, and the day after All-Souls being the third of November, they gave away to the poor all that was left of their annual Revenue, conceiving otherwise it would putrifie and corrupt if treasured up, and be as heinous an offence, as the Jews when preserving Manna longer than the continuance of one day. These Brigetteans had but one Convent in England, at Sion in Middlesex, built by King Henry the fifth, but so wealthy, that it was valued yearly worth at the dissolution, [o] One thousand nine hundred forty four pounds eleven shillings eight pence farthing.

I hope and believe the ſame may truly be affirmed of many other Numneries in England, which now have altered their property on the ſame conditions.

Exactneſſe in dates not to be expected.

43. So much for the ſeverall dates of Monks and Fryers: wherein if we have failed a few years in the exactneſſe thereof, the matter is not much. I was glad to finde ſo ingenuous a paſſage in Pitzeus, ſo zealous a Papiſt, with whom in this point I wholly concurre: He ſpeaking of the different Æraes of the coming in of the Auguſtinians into England, thus concludeth: In tantâ ſententiarum Varietate veritatem invenire nec facile eſt, nec multùm refert. The beſt is, though I cannot tell the exact time wherein every Counter was ſeverally laid down on the Table; I know certainly the year wherein they were all thrown together and put up in the bagge, I mean the accurate date of their generall diſſolution, viz: Anno One thouſand five hundred thirty and eight, on the ſame ſigne that Sanders obſerveth a grand providence therein, That Jeſuits began beyond the Seas at the very ſame time: we will not higgle with ſo frank a chapman for a few months under or over, but taking his Chronology herein de bene eſſe, one word of the name of that Order, firſt premiſing a pleaſant ſtory.

r Pitz. in Indice Illuſt. Angl. ſcript. p. 974.

A pleaſant ſtory.

44. A Countrey-man, who had lived many years in the Hercinian woods in Germany, at laſt came out into a populous City, demanding of the people therein, What God they did worſhip? It was anſwered him, They worſhipped Jeſu Chriſt. Whereupon, the wilde Wood man asked the names of the ſeverall Churches in the City; which were all called by the ſundry Saints to whom they were conſecrated. Its ſtrange, ſaid he, that you ſhould worſhip JESUS CHRIST, and he not have one Temple in all your City dedicated unto him. But it ſeems Ignatius Loyola, Founder of this new Order, finding all other Orders conſigned to ſome SAINT or other, whence they take their denomination, intended at laſt peculiarly to appropriate one to JESUS: That as at that holy name every knee ſhould bow: So all other Orders ſhould doe homage, and ſubmit to this his new one of Jeſuits.

Jeſuats different from Jeſuits.

45. Here, had not better eyes than mine own made the diſcovery (being beholden to M. Chemnitius therein) I had never noted the nice difference betwixt JESUATS and JESUITS ſo neer in name, though not in time; but it ſeems in nature diſtinguiſhed. The former began at Siena in Italy in the year 1366, of whom thus Sabellicus, Colligebantur ab initio domeſticatim ſimplici habitu amicti, multâ innocentiâ & pietate viri, victum ſibi labore & operâ quaritantes. Apoſtolici ab initio Clerici nuncupati. Hi neque ſacris initiantur, neque celebrant Miſſarum ſolemnia, tantùm orationi vacant, Jeſuati ab eo dicti, quòd Jeſu Regis ſummi frequens ſit nomen in illorum ore, &c. Men of much innocence and piety were gathered in the beginning from houſe to houſe, cloathed in poor habit, and ſeeking their own livelyhood with labour and pains, called from the beginning Apoſtolicall Clerks.

Clerks. These neither were entred into Orders, neither did celebrate the solemnity of Masses, but onely bestowed themselves in prayer, therefore called Jesuats, because the name of Jesus was so frequent in their mouthes. But it seems these Iesuats sunk down in silence, when the Iesuits appeared in the world, the former counting it ill manners in likeneß of name to sit so near to those, who were so farr their betters.

56. All Orders may be said eminently extant in the Iesuits, to and above the kinde, the degree thereof, and indeed they came seasonably to support the tottering Church of Rome: For, when the Protestants advantaged with Learning and Languages, brought in the Reformation; Monks & Fryers were either so ignorant as they could not, so idle as they would not, or so cowardly that they durst not make effectual opposition, as little skill'd in Fathers, lesse in Scripture, and not at all versed in Learned Languages. As for the Franciscans, I may say of them, they were the best and * worst schollars of all Fryers: The best, as most sublime in School-Divinity: worst, for if before their entrance into that Order they knew not learning, they were injoyned not to study it. Besides, Monks and Fryers were so clogg'd with the observances of their Orders, that it confined them to their Cells, and rendred them useleß in a practical way. Wherefore, to ballance the Protestants, the Iesuits were set on foot, obliged to these studies (out of fashion with Monks & Fryers) wherein they quickly attained a great eminency, as their very adversaries must confesse. And, as their heads were better furnished than other Orders, so their hands were left at more liberty, (not tied behinde their backs in a large posture of Canonical idleneße) whence they are become the most active and pragmatical Undertakers in all Christendome.

*See Cent. 14. pag. 240.

57. I cannot but commend one policy in the Iesuits, which conduceth much to their credit; namely, whereas other Orders of Monks and Fryers were after their first institution sifted (as I may say) thorough many other searches, still taking new names according to their Sub-De-Re-Reformations. The Iesuits since their first foundation have admitted of no new denomination, but continue constant to their primitive constitution; chiefly, because sensible that such after-refinings fix an asperſion of (at leastwise a comparative) impunity on their first institution, and render their first Founders cheaper in the worlds valuation, whilst the Iesuits still keep themselves to their foundation, as begun and perfected at once, and are ἰδιόμορφοι all of a lump, all of a piece, which unity amongst themselves maketh them the more considerable in their impreſſions on any other Adversaries.

Jesuits policy.

58. They had two most antient and flourishing Convents beyond the Seas, Nola in Italy, as I take it, where their House it seems gives a Bow for their Armes, and La-Fletcha in France, where they have an Arrow for their Device; whereupon, a Satyricall wit thus guirded at them: and I hope I shall not be condemned as accessary to his virulency, if onely plainly translating the same.

In England like Astrologers in Rome.

Arcum Nola dedit, dedit his La-Fletcha Sagittam
Illis, quis nervum, quem meruêre, dabit?

Nola to them did give a Bow,
La-Fletch an Arrow bring:
But who upon them will beſtow
(What they deſerve) a ſtring?

I have done with these Jesuits, who may well be compared unto the Astrologers in Rome, of whom the Historian doth complain, *Genus eſt hominum * quod in Civitate noſtrâ & vetabitur ſemper & retinebitur, There is a kinde of men in our City who will alwaies be forbidden, and yet alwaies be retained therein.* So, though many many severe Laws have been made against them, yet either such their boldness in adventuring, or our State-mildnesse in executing the Statutes against them, that alwaies they are driven hence, and alwaies they stay here, to the great disturbance of ours, and advancement of their own Religion.

* Tacit. Hist. lib. 1.

Leprous people not mentioned herein.

59. Here I purposely omit the Houses for Leprous people, though indeed they deserved more charity than all the rest; and I may say, this onely was an Order of Gods making, when he was pleased to lay his afflicting hand on poor people in that lothsome disease. I take Burton-Lazars in Leicester-shire to be the best endowed house for that purpose. But as that disease came into England by the Holy Warre, so (* as we have elsewhere observed) it ended with the end thereof. And God of his goodnesse hath taken away the Leprosie of Leprosie in England.

* In my Holy Warre.

SECTION

SECTION II.

To the Right VVorshipfull,
RALPH SADLEIR of STANDON, Esq.
AND
ANNE, his virtuous Consort.

IT was enacted by a Law made in the 27th year of the Reign of K. HENRY the eighth, That whosoever retained Abbey-lands, after the dissolution passed unto them from the Crown, should keep a standing-House, or else forfeit every moneth Twenty Nobles, recoverable from them in any Court of Record.

True it is, King JAMES was graciously pleased (in the 21 of His Reign) to repeal this Act and burn this Rod, for which many under the Lash (who will not pay) still owe thanks to his Memory. But suppose this penal-Statute still in force, you may defie all Informers for any advantage they may get against you for the same.

Indeed you are possessed of the fair Covent of WEST-BURY in Glouceſter-shire, and that on as Honourable Terms as any Lands in England of that nature are enjoyed, bestowed on your Grand-father Sir RALPH SADLEIR by King HENRY the Eighth, partly in reward of the good service he had done to Him the Father, partly in incouragement to what he might doe to His three Children, to all which he was Privie Counsellour.

Yet no danger of penalty to you, whose House is known to be the Center of Hospitality, whence even Abbots themselves (and they best skilled in that Lesson) might Learn to keep a bountifull Table, where all are welcomed; the Rich for Courteſie, when their occaſions bring them; the Poor for Charity, when they bring their occaſions to paſſe by your Habitation.

Indeed, the Inne-holders of London give for the Motto of the Armes of their Company, I WAS A STRANGER, AND YE TOOK ME IN. But ſeeing our Saviour chiefly intended ſuch, who did not ſell, but give entertainment to ſtrangers; more properly are the words appliable to your ſelf, and other-ſelf, whoſe Houſe is ſo the Inne-generall to all poor people, that the Neighbourhood of a great and good Common, is not ſo advantageous as their vicinity thereunto.

I doubt not but as you often have relieved CHRIST in his poor Members, he will in due time receive you both into his Houſe, wherein there be many Manſions of everlaſting Happineſſe.

Abbeys engroſſed trade, impoveriſhed Pariſh-Prieſts, encouraged Offenders.

Abbots Farmers, Tanners, Brewers.

THE ſpecious pretences of piety, and contempt of the world, Abbots and Monks, were notoriouſly covetous, even to the injury of others: Witneſſe their renting and ſtocking of Farms, keeping of Tan-houſes, and Brew-houſes in their own hands. For, though the Monks themſelves were too fine-noſed to dabble in Tan-fatts, yet they kept others (bred in that trade) to follow their work. Theſe Covents having barke of their own woods, hides of the cattle of their own breeding and killing: and (which, was the main) a large ſtock of money to buy at the beſt hand, and to allow ſuch Chapmen they ſold to, a long day of payment, eaſily eat out ſuch who were bred up in that vocation. Whereupon, in the one and twentieth of King Henry the eighth, a Statute was made, That no Prieſt, either Regular or Secular, ſhould on heavy penalties hereafter meddle with ſuch mechanick employments.

Abbots rob Pariſh Vicars by appropriations.

2. Secondly, they impoveriſhed Pariſh-Prieſts, by decrying their performances, and magnifying their own merits. Alas! what was the ſingle devotion of a ſilly Prieſt, in compariſon of a Corporation of Prayers (twiſted Cables to draw down bleſſings on their Patrons heads) from a whole Monaſtery? And, ſuppoſe (which was ſeldome done) the Parſon in the Pariſh preaching to his people, yet Sermons in a Church once conſtituted were needleſſe, as miniſtring matter of Schiſmes and diſputes, and at the beſt onely profiting the preſent: whileſt prayers benefitted as well the abſent, as the preſent, dead, as living. But eſpecially prayers of Monaſteries ſteries commanded Heaven, pleaſed with the holy violence of ſo many and mighty petitioners. By theſe and other artifices they undermined all Prieſts in the affections of their own people, and procured from Pope and Prince, that many Churches Preſentative, with their Glebes and Tithes, were appropriated to their Covents, leaving but a poor pittance to the Pariſh-Vicar: though the Pope (as ſtyling himſelf but a Vicar) ought to have been more ſenſible of their ſad condition.

And other Prieſts from exemption from Tithes.

3. Beſides appropriation of ſuch Churches, Abbeys alſo wronged Pariſh-Prieſts, by procuring from the Pope Paſchal the ſecond, Anno Dom. 1100, in the Councel of Mentz, that their Demeſnes, Farmes, and Granges (antiently paying Tithes like the Lands of other Lay-men) ſhould hereafter be free from the ſame. But this exemption was afterwards by Pope Adrian the fourth, about the year 1150, juſtly limited and reſtrained: Religious Orders being enjoyned the payment of Tithes of whatſoever increaſe they had in their own occupation (ſave of new improvements by culture of paſture of their cattle, [a] and of garden fruits. Onely three Orders, namely, the Ciſtertians, Templers, and Knights-Hoſpitallers (otherwiſe called of S. John's of Jeruſalem) were exempted from the generall payment of all Tithes whatſoever.

[a] Vid. Alex. 4. in 6. de dec. c. 2. Statuto & In. noc. 8. tom. 2. p. 4. 10. Edit. Colonienſ.

Freedom from Tithes goeth by favour.

4. And, why Ciſtertians rather than any other Order? Give me leave to conjecture three Reaſons thereof:

1. Adrian the fourth, our none Countrey-man, was at firſt a Benedictine-Monke of S. Albans, and theſe Ciſtertians were onely Benedictines refined.
2. They were the Benjamins, one of the youngeſt remarkable Orders of that Age, and therefore made Darlings (not to ſay Wantons) by the Holy Father the Pope.
3. It is ſuſpitious, that by bribery in the Court of Rome, they might obtain this priviledge, ſo beneficial unto them. For, I finde, that K. Richard the firſt diſpoſed his Daughter Avarice to be married to the Ciſtertian-Order, as the moſt graſping and griping of all others.

I leave it others to render Reaſons why Templers and Hoſpitallers, being meer Lay-men, and divers times of late, adjudged in the Court of Aides in [b] Paris, no part of the Clergie ſhould have this priviledge to be exempted from Tithes. But we remember they were Sword-men, and that aweth all into obedience.

[b] Le Bret. Advoc. ex la diſte cour. Playdoi. 27.

Confined to Lands given before the Lateran Councel.

5. However the Lateran-Councell, holden Anno 1215, Ordered, That this priviledge of Tithe-freedome to the aforeſaid three Orders, ſhould not extend to Poſtnates (as I may term them) to Covents erected ſince the Lateran Councell, nor to Lands ſince beſtowed on the aforeſaid Orders, though their Covents were erected before that Councell. Therefore when the covetous Ciſtertians (contrary to the Canons of that Councell) purchaſed Bulls from the Pope to diſcharge their Lands from Tithes: Henry the fourth, pitying the plea of the poor Pariſh Prieſt, by Statute nulled ſuch [c] Bulls, and reduced their Lands into that ſtate wherein they were before.

[c] Anno 2 Hen. the fourth, cap. 4.

Offend none in a captious Age.

6. Once it was in my minde to ſet down a Catalogue (eaſie to doe, and uſefull when done) of ſuch houſes of Ciſtertians, Templers, and Hoſpitallers, which were founded ſince the Lateran Councell, yet going under the generall notion of Tithe-free, to the great injury of the Church. But ſince on ſecond thoughts, I conceived it better to let it alone, as not ſure on ſuch diſcovery of any bleſſing from thoſe Miniſters which ſhould gain, but certain of many curſes from ſuch Lay-men who ſhould loſe thereby.

A price in the hand, but no heart.

7. Now, when King Henry the eighth diſſolved Monaſteries, there was put into His hand an opportunity and advantage to ingratiate Himſelf and His memory for ever; namely, by reſtoring Tithes appropriated to Abbeys, to their reſpective Pariſhes.

Parishes. But, whether He wanted minde; or minding, or both, God would not doe Him so much honour, that He should doe so much honour to God, and his Church; being now past like Lay-fees with the rest of the Abbey-land, to the great empairing of the just maintenance of Ministers.

Sanctuaries Sewers of sin.

8. Lastly, one grand mischief (to omit many others) done by Monasteries, was by the priviledges of Sanctuaries, whereby their houses became the sink and center of sinners, to the great dishonour of God, and obstruction of justice.

The conscientious Abbot of Crowland.

9. And here I commend the memory of Turketill, once Abbot of Crowland, being confident that the Reader will joyn with me in his commendation. Such vast immunities were bestowed on that Covent by Witlaffe, King [d] of Mercia, that if any Officer did follow an Offender, of what nature soever, to fetch him out of that Liberty, he was to have his right foot cut off. Strange exchange! when a legall Prosecutor is made a Malefactour, and the Malefactour an Innocent; such the converting power of a Monkish Asylum. But in processe of time, and depredation of the Danes, this priviledge was lost, and profered afterwards by some Saxon Kings to be restored; which Turketill would never consent unto: and take it in the [e] Authors own words, Antiquam verò loci impunitatem vel immunitatem nullo modo consensit acquirere, ne sceleratis & impiis refugium à publicis legibus videretur in aliquo præbere, & cum hujusmodi maleficiis compelleretur, vel in aliquo contra conscientiam suam cohabitare, seu consentire. This Priviledge other Churches of S. Albans, Beverly, Westminster, did accept. Such Sanctuaries were grievances constantly complained of in Parliaments, till Richard the second first began, Henry the fourth and seventh proceeded to regulate them as abused and usurping, and Henry the eighth utterly abolished them as useless and unlawfull.

Of the prime Officers and Officines of Abbeys.

The Abbot.

THe Officers in Abbeys were either supreme, as the Abbot; or (to use a Canonical term) [a] Obediential, as all others under him. The Abbot had Lodgings by himself, with all Offices thereunto belonging. The rest took precedencies according to the Topical Statutes of their Covents, but for the generality, they thus may be marshalled.

a In Vita viginti trium Abbatum S. Alban. pag. 170.

The Prior.

2. First the Prior, who, like the President (under the Master) in our Colledges in Cambridge, was next to the Abbot. Note by the way, that in some Covents, which had no Abbots, the Prior was Principal, as the President in some [b] Oxford-Foundations; and, being installed Priors, some voted as Barons in Parliament, whereof formerly, as the Prior of Canterbury, and Coventrie. But, when the Abbot was Superintendent, there the person termed Prior was his subordinate, who in his absence, in mitred Abbeys, by courtesie was saluted the Lord Prior.

b Magd. Corp. Christi. Trin. & S. Johns.

The Sub-Prior.

3. Secondly, the Sub-Prior, (as Hugo Balciam, Sub-Prior of Elie, Founder of Peter-House) quare whether any complement descended so low as to Lord the Sub-Prior in the absence of the Prior and Abbot. As for the third Prior, and fourth Prior (for such Diminutives [c] appear) they come not within the suspition of so much favour.

c In the subscri. of the Chron. of the August. of Gen. p. 2294.

The Secretary.

4. Thirdly, the Secretary, who was the Register, Auditour, and Chancellour of the Covent, it being proper to his place to write and return Letters, and manage the most learned employments in the Monastery.

The Chamberlain.

5. With him the Camerarius, or Chamberlain, may seem to contest for precedency, as keeping the keyes of the Treasury, issuing out and receiving in all considerable summes of money; in which notion the Chamberlaine of London holdeth his name.

The Celleret.

6. Fiftly, the Cellarius, or Celleravius, a Place of more power and profit, than the name may seem to import. He was the Burser who bought in all provisions, and appointed the pittances for the severall Monks, and in some Houses he was

Secundus

[d] Secundus Pater in Monasterio, as in the Abbey of Burie, where a large part of the Buildings was assigned for his Residence, and Lands for his Maintenance. These Celleres were brave blades, much affecting Secular gallantry. For, I finde it [e] complained of, that they used to swagger with their swords by their sides like lay-Gentlemen.

e Burchard, inde Index Caf. 3. Gal.

7. The remaining Officers are best reckoned up by the Canonical rooms (as I may term them) in an Abbey, each giving denomination to him who had the inspection thereof. I begin with the Gate-house, and its relative the Porter; an office, I assure you, of some trust in an Abbey, to know what guests, and when (especially at the postern) are to be admitted thereunto.

The Gate-house.

8. The next room is the Refectorium: and Refectorius the [f] Controller thereof. It was the Hall wherein the Monks dined together, and sometimes the Abbot on great solemnities graced them with his presence, when he had [g] Vastellum, that is, not common bread, but vastell bread, [h] or simnels for his diet.

The Refectory.

f Chron. August. Cant. p. 2294.

g In Vitis, p. 141.

h See Glossarie of Will. Somner.

9. Adjoyning to it was the Locutorium, or Parlour, because there leave was given for the Monks to discourse, who were enjoyned silence elsewhere. Thus we read how Paul the fourteenth Abbot of S. Albans, made it penal for any to talk in the Cloister, Church, Refectory, or Dormitory.

The Parlour.

10. Oriolium, [i] or the Oriol, was the next room. Why so called, some of the name-sake Colledge in Oxford are best able to satisfie. Sure I am, that small excursion out of Gentlemen's Halls in Dorcetshire (respect it East or West) is commonly called an Orial. The use hereof is known for Monks, who were in latitudine morbi, rather distempered than diseased to dine therein, it being cruelty to thrust such into the Infirmarie, where they might have died with the conceit of the sickness of others.

The Oriol.

i In Vitis p. 100.

11. Dormitorium, the Dormitorie, where they all slept together, it being ordered in the Councel [k] of Aquisgrane, Nisi in Dormitorio cum cæteris absque causa inevitabili, nemo dormire præsumpserit.

The Dormitorie.

k Sub Ludov. Imp. An. 816. cap. 134.

12. Lavatorium succeeds, generally called the Laundrey, where their clothes were washed. Haply it was also the place (such in the West-side of Westminster-cloysters) where all the Monks at the Conduit washed their hands, there being as much good fellowship in washing, as eating together.

The Laundry.

13. Scriptorium remains, a room where the Chartularius was busied in writing, especially employed in the transcribing of these Books:

Their
1. Ordinals, containing the Rubrick of their Missal, and Directorie of their Priests in Service.
2. Consuetudinals, presenting the antient customs of their Covents.
3. Troparies.
4. Collectaries, wherein the Ecclesiastical Collects were fairly written.

14. Next this the Librarie, which most great Abbeys had exactly furnished with variety of choice Manuscripts.

The Library.

15. All is marred if the Kitchin be omitted, so essential a requisite in an Abbey, with the Larder and Pantrey the necessary suburbs thereof.

The Kitchin.

16. Come we now to their Abbey-Church, where we first meet their

The severall parts in the Church.

1. Cloisters, consecrated ground, as appeares by their solemne Sepultures therein.
2. Navis Ecclesiæ, or Body of the Church.
3. Gradatorium, a distance containing the ascent out of the former into the Quire.
4. Presbyterium, or the Quire, on the right side whereof was the Stall of the Abbot, and his; on the left side the Prior, and his moiety of Monks, who alternately chaunted the Responsals in the Service.
5. Vestiarium, the Vestiarie, where their Copes and Clothes were deposited.

l In Vita, pag. 225.

6. A Vaulta, l a Vault, being an arched-room over part of the Church, which in ſome Abbeys (as S. Albans) was uſed to enlarge their Dormitorie, where the Monks had twelve beds for their repoſe.

m In Vita, pag. 521.
n Pſal. 26.6.

7. Concameratio, being an arched-room betwixt the Eaſt-end of the Church, and the m High Altar, ſo that in Proceſſion they might ſurround the ſame, founding their fancie on n David's expreſſion, — and ſo will I compaſs thine Altar, O Lord.

As for the other Rooms of the Church; Cerarium, where their wax candles were kept; Campanile, their Steeple; Polyandrium, the Church-yard, and ſometime the Charnel-houſe, let ſuch be conſulted with, who have written large Volumes on this ſubject, who will alſo inform them of the Dignities and Duties of the Præcentor, Sacriſt, Sub-ſacriſt, Capellane, Oſtiarie, Veſtiarie, Ceroferarie, &c. belonging thereunto. The remaining Rooms of an Abbey ſtood a diſtance from the main ſtructure thereof. To begin with the beſt firſt: Eleëmoſynaria, or the Almorie, being a building neer, or within the Abbey, wherein poor and impotent perſons did live maintained by their Charity.

The Centurie.

17. Secondly, Sanctuarium, or the Centurie, wherein Debtours taking refuge from their Creditours, Malefactours, from the Judge, lived (the more the pity) in all ſecurity.

The Firmorie.

18. Thirdly, Infirmarium, or the Firmorie (the Curatour whereof Infirmarius) wherein perſons down-right ſick (trouble to others, and troubled by others, if lodging in the Dormitorie) had the benefit of Phyſick, and attendance private to themſelves. No Lent, or Faſting-dayes came over the threſhold of this roome; Sickneſſe being a Diſpenſation for the eating of Fleſh. It was puniſhable for any to eate therein, except ſolemnly deſigned for the place.

The Stables.

o In Vita, &c. pag. 97.

19. At diſtance ſtood the Stables, where the Stallarius, or Maſter of the Horſe did command; and under him o the Provendarius, who, as his name imports, provided Provender for the Horſes. Theſe were divided into foure ranks, and it would puzzle all the Jockies in Smithfield to underſtand the meaning of their names.

p Wats in Gloſſar. at the end of Mat. Paris.

1. Manni, being Geldings for the Saddle of the larger ſize.
2. Runcini, Runts, p ſmall Pad-Nags: like thoſe of Galloway or Gennehely.
3. Summarii, Sumpter-horſes.
4. Averii, Cart, or Plough-horſes.

This was the quadripartite diviſion of the Horſes of William, the two and twentieth Abbot of S. Albans, on the token that he loſt an hundred Horſes in one yeer.

The Gaole.

q In Vita, pag. 52.

20. One roome remaines, laſt named, becauſe leaſt loved, even a Priſon for the puniſhment of incorrigible Monkes, who otherwiſe would not be ordered into obedience. It was a grand penance impoſed on the q Delinquents, to carry about the Lanthorn, (though light, an heavy burden) but ſuch contumacious Monks as would not be amended therewith, the Abbot had tetrum & fortem carcerem, a ſtrong and hideous Priſon, where their Obſtinacie was corrected into Reformation.

The Grange.

21. We omit other roomes, as Vacciſterium, the Cow-houſe; Porcarium, the Swine-ſtie; as having nothing peculiar therein, but concurrent with thoſe offices in other houſes. As for Granges, being Farms at diſtance, kept and ſtocked by the Abbey, and ſo called (as it ſeemeth) à grana gerendo (the Overſeer whereof was commonly called the Prior of the Grange) becauſe ſometimes many miles from the Monaſterie, they come not within the reach of our preſent diſcourſe. Onely I adde, in Female Foundations of Nunneries, there was a correſpondencie of all the ſame eſſential Officers, and Offices.

22. Expect

22. Expect not of me a List of those mean Officers in the Abbey, whose employment was not so base, as their names barbarous, and of English extraction. Such were,

1. Coltonarius, Cutler.
2. Cupparius.
3. Potagiarius.
4. Scutellarius Aulæ.
5. Salsarius.
6. Portarius.
7. Carectarius Cellerarii.
8. Pelliparius, Parchment-Provider.
9. Brasinarius, Maltster.

Barbarous names and Offices.

All these appeared at the Hali-mote, or Holy Court of the Cellarer, and it is the degrading the soul of a Scholar (best pleased in a progressive motion to attain elegancy) to stoop to the understanding of such base and unlearned Etymologies.

23. Note that the Offices aforesaid in the smaller Abbeys were but one fair intire room, which in greater Monasteries were a distinct structure, with all under-Offices attendant thereupon. Thus the Firmorie in the Priorie of Canterbury had a Refectorie thereto belonging, a Kitchin, a Dortour distributed into several Chambers that one might not disturb another; and a private Chappel for the devotions of the diseased. Their Almerie also was accommodated with all the aforesaid appurtenances, and had many distinct Manours consigned onely to their maintenance.

Rooms in small, houses in great Abbeys.

24. It were aliene from our present purpose to speak of Cells, which were aut pars, aut proles, of all great Abbeys, sometime so farre off, that the Mother-Abbey was in England, the Childe-Cell beyond the Seas, and so reciprocally. Some of these were richly endowed, as that of Windham in Norfolke, which, though but a Cell annexed to S. Albans, yet was able at the Dissolution to expend of its own Revenues, seventy two pounds per annum. These were Colonies into which the Abbeys discharged their superfluous numbers, and whither the rest retired when Infections were feared at home.

The use of Cells.

25. Thus have we run thorough the main Rooms in all great Abbeys, though besides the same, particular Abbeys had particular Houses known to those of their own Covent by peculiar denominations. It were endlesse for one to instance in all these, and impossible to render a reason of their names, except he were privie to the fancies of the Founders. Thus we meet with a pile of building in the Priorie of Canterbury, called, the Honours; but, why so termed, my good friend, and great [r] Antiquarie, is fain to confesse his own ignorance.

The Honours in Canterbury Priorie.

[r] Mr. William Somner in his Antiquit. of Canterbury, pag. 196.

Some generall Conformities observed in all Covents.

SUndry Orders were bound to observe severall Canonicall Constitutions. However the rule of the antient Benedictines, with some small variations according to time and place, hold true thorough most Monasteries. Some generall heads whereof (the under-branches being infinite) we will here insert, it being hard, if amongst much drosse, some gold be not found, to repair the pains of the Reader. We will contrive them into Canons, collected out of Authors, before, or in the daies of Dunston.

Rules calculated for the Benedictines, without any grand errour will serve all Orders.

1. Let Monks, (after the example of [a] David) praise God seven times a day. Seven times:] Some difference in reckoning them up, but the following computation is generally imbraced.

4. At the sixt hour, or twelve of the clock at high noon: When Christ was crucified and darknesse over all the earth.

5. At the ninth hour, or three of the clock in the afternoon: When Christ gave up the ghost, and, which was an hour of publick prayer in the [c] Temple, and privately in his closet with [d] Cornelius.

[c] Acts 3. 1.
[d] Acts 10, 30.

6. Vespers: At the twelfth hour, or six a clock in the afternoon: When the Evening-sacrifice was offered in the Temple, and when Christ is supposed taken down from the Crosse.

7. At seven of the clock at night, (or the first hour beginning the nocturnall twelve:) When Christ's agonie in the garden was conceived began.

The first [e] of these was performed at two of the clock in the morning: When the Monks (who went to bed at eight at night) had slept six hours, which were judged sufficient for nature. It was no fault for the greater haste to come without shooes, or with unwashen hands, (provided sprinkled at their entrance with holy-water) to this nights service. And I finde no expresse to the contrary, but that they might go to bed again. But a flat prohibition after Matutines, when to return to bed was accounted a petty apostacie.

[e] This whole Chapter is the abridgment of CONCORDIA REGULARUM, collected by S. Benet the Anian Abbot, but printed with a Comment, An. 1638. set forth by Frier Ward.

2. Let all at the sign given leave off their work, and repair presently to prayers.
Sign:] This in England (commonly called the ringing Island) was done with tolling a bell; but in other Countreys with loud stroaks, as Noblemens Cooks knock to the dresser, at which time none might continue their work. Yea, the Canon was so strict, that it provided scriptores literam non integrent: That writers (a great trade in Monasteries) having begun to frame and flourish a Text letter, were not to finish it, but to break off in the middle thereof.

3. Let those, who are absent in publick imployment, be reputed present in prayers.
Absent:] Hence it was, that antiently at the end of prayers, there was a particular commemoration made of them, and they by name recommended to Divine protection.

4. Let no Monk go alone, but alwaies two together.
Two:] That so they might mutually have, both testem honestatis, and monitorem pietatis. And this was done in some imitation of Christs sending his Disciples to preach [f] Two, and two before his face, that so they might alternately ease one another.

[f] Luke 10. 1.

5. From Easter, to Whitsunday, let them dine alwaies at twelve; and sup at six of the clock.
Dine:] The Prmitive Church forbade fasting for those fifty, daies that Christians might be cheerfull for the memory [g] of Christs resurrection. Immunitate jejunandi à die Paschæ Pentecosten usque gaudemus, and therefore more modern is the custome of fasting on Ascension Eve.

[g] Tertullian, Libro de corona militis.

6. Let them at other times fast on Wednesdaies, and Fridaies, till three a clock in the afternoon.
Three of the clock:] So making but one meal a day, but know that the twelve daies in Christmas were in this Canon excepted.

7. Let them fast every day in Lent till six of the clock at night.
Six a clock:] Stamping a character of more abstinence on that time. For though all a Monk's life ought to be a LENT, yet this, most especially, wherein they were to abate of their wonted sleep and diet, and adde to their daily devotion: Yet so, that they might not lessen their daily fare without leave from the Abbot, all things done without whose consent, will be accounted presumption, and not redound to reward; so that in such cases, obedience to their Superiours was better than the sacrifice of their own free abstinence.

8. Let

8. Let no Monk ſpeak a word in the Refectory, when they are at their meals.
Speak a word:] Whilſt their mouthes are open to eat, their lips muſt be lockt to ſpeak. For proof whereof they corruptly cite the Apoſtles words, to [b] eat their own bread with ſilence; whereas indeed it is, work with quietneſs, and therein a contented minde injoyned. Such might alſo remember Solomon's rule, Eat thy bread with joy.

[b] 2 Theſ. 3. 12.

9. Let them liſten to the Lecturer reading Scripture to them, whilſt they feed themſelves.
Liſten:] This was [i] S. Auſtine's rule, Ne ſola fauces ſumant cibum, ſed & aures percipiant Dei verbum.

[i] In regula Capite quinto.

10. Let the Septimarians dine by themſelves after the reſt.
Septimarians:] Theſe were weekly Officers, (not as the Abbot, Porter, &c. for term of life) as the Lecturer, Servitors at the table, Cook, who could not be preſent at the publick refection: as the Bible-Clerks in Queens-Coll: in Cambrige (waiting on the Fellows at dinner) have a Table by themſelves, their ſtomacks being ſet, to go an hour after all the reſt.

11. Let ſuch who are abſent about buſineſſe obſerve the ſame hours of prayer.
Abſent:] Be it by ſea, or land, on ſhip, in houſe, or field, they were to fall down on their knees, and though at diſtance, and very briefly, yet in ſome ſort to keep time, and tune with the Covent in their devotions.

12. Let none, being from home about buſineſſe, (and hoping to return at night) preſume foris mandicare, to eat abroad.
Eat abroad:] This Canon was afterwards ſo diſpenſed with by the Abbot on ſeverall occaſions, that it was fruſtrate in effect, when Monks became common gueſts at Lay-mens tables.

13. Let the COMPLETORIE be ſolemnly ſung about ſeven a clock at night.
COMPLETORIE:] Becauſe it compleated the duties of the day. This ſervice was concluded with that Verſicle of the Pſalmiſt, [k] Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, and keep the door of my lips.

[k] Pſal. 141. 3.

14. Let none ſpeak a word after the Completorie ended, but haſten to their beds.
Speak a word:] For, they might expreſſe themſelves by ſignes, and in ſome caſes whiſper, but ſo ſoftly that a third might not overhear it. This ſilence was ſo obſtinately obſerved by ſome, that they would not ſpeak though aſſaulted with thieves, to make diſcovery in their own defence.

15. Let the Monks ſleep in beds ſingly by themſelves, but all (if poſſible) in one room.
Singly by themſelves:] To prevent that ſin of Sodomie, whereof many were detected, and more ſuſpected in after-Ages. One room:] For the comfort of their mutuall ſociety.

16. Let them ſleep in their cloathes, girt with their girdles, but not having their knives by their ſides, for fear of hurting themſelves in their ſleeps.
In their clothes:] Is ſlovenneſs any advantage to ſanctity? This was the way, not to make the Monks to lie alone, but to carry much company about them.

17. Let not the youth lie by themſelves, but mingled with their ſeniours.
Seniours:] That their gravity may awe them into good behaviour. Thus husbandmen couple young colts with ſtaid horſes, that both together may draw the better.

18. Let not the candle in the Dormitory go out all the night.
Candle:] In caſe ſome ſhould fall ſoddainly ſick; and that this ſtanding candle might be a ſtock of light, to recruit the reſt, on occaſion.

19. Let Infants, incapable of excommunication, be corrected with rods.
Infants:] Such, all were accounted under the age of fifteen years (of whom many in Monaſteries) whoſe minorities were beneath the cenſures of the Church.

20. Let the offenders in ſmall faults (whereof the Abbot is ſole Judge) be onely ſequeſtred from the table.

Small faults :] As coming after grace to dinner, breaking (though casually) the earthen ewer wherein they wash their hands, being out of tune in setting the Psalm, taking any by the hand (as a preface forsooth to wantonnesse) receiving Letters from, or talking with a friend without leave from the Abbot, &c. From the table :] Such were to eat by themselves, and three hours after the rest, untill they had made satisfaction.

21. Let the offenders in greater faults be suspended from table, and prayers.
Greater faults :] viz: Theft, adultery, &c. And Prayers :] This in effect amounted to the greater Excommunication, and had all the penalties thereof.

22. Let none converse with any excommunicated, under the pain of excommunication.
None :] Yet herein his Keeper, (deputed by the Abbot) was excepted. Converse :] Either to eat, or speak with him. He might not so much as blesse him, or his meat if carried by him: Yet to avoid scandall, he might rise up, bow, or bare his head to him, in case the other did first with silent gesture salute him.

23. Let incorrigible offenders be expelled the Monastery.
Incorrigible :] Whom no correption with words, nor correction with blows, nor censures of excommunication would amend: Absciffion is the onely plaster for such an incurable Gangrene.

24. Let an expelled Brother, being re-admitted on promise of his amendment, be set last in order.
Last :] He was to lose his former seniority, and begin at the bottome. Know, that whosoever willingly quitted the Covent thrise, or was thrise cast out for his misdemeanours, might not any more be received.

25. Let every Monk have two Coats, and two Cowles, &c.
Two :] Not to wear at once, (except in Winter) but for exchange, whilst one was washed. And when new cloathes were delivered them, their old ones were given to the poor.

26. Let every Monk have his Table-book, Knife, Needle, and Hankerchief.
Needle :] To mend his own cloathes when torn. Hankerchief :] Which they wore on their left side, to wipe away rheum, or (as we may charitably believe) tears from their eyes.

27. Let the Bed of every Monk have a Mat, Blanket, [a] Rugge, and Pillow.
Mat :] In Latine Matta, the Liers whereon are termed by S. Austine [b] Mattarii. a Blanket :] Lana, in Latine, quasi de lana, saith Varro, [c] made of thick wooll. No down, feathers, nor flocks used by them, yea no linen worn on their bodies. The Abbot also every Saturday was to visit their beds, to see if they had not shuffled in some softer matter, or purloyned some progge for themselves.

28. Let the Abbot be chosen by the merits of his life and learning.
Merits :] Though he were the last in degree, and though he had the fewest voices, the better were to carry it from the greater number. But in after-Ages, to avoid schisme, upon a parity of deserts the Senior was generally chosen by plurality of votes.

29. Let him never dine alone, and when Guests are wanting, call some Brethren unto his table.
Alone :] Such as were relieved by his hospitality, are by Canonical Criticks, sorted into four ranks:

1. Convive, guests, living in or near the City, where the Covent stood.
2. Hospites, strangers, coming from distant places, yet still of the same Country.
3. Peregrini, pilgrims, of another Nation, and generally travailing for devotion.
} Invited, or inviting themselves into the Abbey.
4. Mendici, beggars, who received their Almes without at the Gate.

30. Let

[a] Sagum, properly the lower coat of a Souldier.
[b] Lib. 5. contra Faustum, cap. 5.
[c] De lingua Latina, lib. 4.

30. Let the CELLARER be a diſcreet man, to give all their meat in due ſeaſon.

Diſcreet:] He needed to be a good Mathematician in the gages of mens bellies, not allowing all food alike, but proportioning it to their ſeverall ages, labour, (for antient Monks did work) appetites, &c. For this they alledge the Primitive practiſe, when all goods kept in common were divided, though unequally, for the ſummes equally, as to their perſonall neceſſities, And [a] they parted them to all men, as every man had need.

a Acts 3.45.

31. Let none be excuſed from the Office of the COOK, but take his turn in his week.

None:] The Abbot is excepted, and the Cellarer in great Covents; But know, this was onely antiently uſed in primitive poor Monaſteries, our Engliſh Abbies having afterwards Cooks, and under-Cooks of Laypersons able to pleaſe the pallate of Apitius himſelf.

32. Let the Cook each Saturday when he goeth out of his Office, leave the linen and veſſels clean and ſound to his ſucceſſours.

Clean and ſound:] Severe one Canon which I read, that is, To receive [b] twenty five claps on the hand for every default on this kinde; And ſtill more harſh what another rule enjoyneth, That the Cook might [c] not taſte what he dreſſed for others, not permitted to lick his own fingers: Underſtand it thus, though he might eat his own pittance, or dimenſum, yet he muſt meddle with no more, leſt the taſting ſhould tempt him to gluttony and exceſſe.

b XXV palmarum percuſſionibus emendetur. Regula magis cap. 15. ſect. 10.

c Regula S. Pachomii, artic. 21.

33. Let the PORTER be a grave perſon, to diſcharge his truſt with diſcretion.

Grave:] Whoſe age might make him reſident in his place. Diſcharge:] In liſtening to no Secular news, and (if caſually hearing it) not to report it again; In carrying the keyes every night to the Abbot, and letting none in, or out, without his permiſſion.

We leave this Porter in the peaceable poßeßion of his Lodge; and by his leave, are let out of this tedious diſcourſe. Onely I will adde, as the Proverb ſaith, The Lion is not ſo fierce as he is painted. So Monaſticall diſcipline was not ſo terrible in the practice, as in the precepts thereof. And as it is generally obſerved in Families, that the eldeſt Children are moſt hardly uſed, who, (as yet being but few, and their Parents in full ſtrength) are taught, and tutoured, and nurtered, with much chiding, and correction; whilſt more liberty is allowed to the younger brood, age abating their Parents auſterity, and ſometimes turning their harſhneſſe into fondneſſe unto them. So thoſe fatherly rules fell moſt heavily on the Monks of the firſt foundation, their rigour being remitted to ſuch who ſucceeded them, inſomuch that in proceſſe of time, Monks turned very wantons, through lazineſſe and luxurie; as hereafter (God willing) ſhall appear.

Of such Abbots who attained to be Parliamentary Barons.

Numerous Abbots summoned to Parliament.

THE highest Civil honour the English Abbots arrived at, was, that some were selected to be Barons in Parliament, and called to be Assistants to the King in His Great Councell. To begin at the Reign of King Henry the third, (before whose time the footsteps of solemn summons to Parliament are almost worn out) in His time all Abbots and Priors of quality were summoned thither. Alas! this King lived a long time on Abbeys (the Patron fed by His Chaplains) the most of His maintenance issuing out of the purses of Priories. It was but fitting therefore they should be consulted with, who were so much concerned in all publick payments. In the forty ninth of His Reign, no lesse than sixty four Abbots, and thirty six Priors, (a jolly number) with the Master of the Temple, were voluntary summoniti, out of the King's free will and pleasure (no right that they could claim themselves) summoned to Parliament.

a Durf. Clause 49 Hen. 3. m. 11. in scedula

Who afterwards decline their troublesome service.

2. But in after-Parliaments the number of Abbots summoned thither, was fluctuating, and uncertain, sometimes forty, as the twenty seventh of Edward the first; sometimes seventy five, as the twenty eighth of the same King; fifty six in the first of Edward the second; and yet but fifteen in the second of His Reign. Indeed, when Parliaments proved frequent, some Priories farre from the place where they were summoned, the way long, the weather (especially in winter) tedious, travelling on the way costly, living at London chargeable: Some Priors were so poor they could not, more so covetous they would not put themselves to needlesse expences: All so lazie, and loving their ease, that they were loath to take long journeys, which made them afterwards desire to be eased of their Honourable but Troublesome attendance in Parliament.

Their number contracted to twenty six.

3. At last, King Edward the third resolved, to fix on a set number of Abbots, and Priors, not so many as with their numerousnesse might be burdensome to His Councell; yet not so few but that they should be a sufficient representation of all Orders therein concerned, which being twenty six in number are generally thus reckoned up:

1. St. Albans.
2. Glassenbury.
3. St. Austins Cant.
4. Westminster.
5. Edmunds-bury.
6. Peterborough.
7. Colchester.
8. Evesham.
9. Winchelcombe.
10. Crowland.
11. Battaile.
12. Reading.
13. Abington.
14. Waltham.
15. Shrewsbury.
16. Glocester.
17. Bardney.
18. Bennet in the Holme.
19. Thorney.
20. Ramsey.
21. Hide.
22. Malmsbury.
23. Cirencester.
24. St. Mary Yorke.
25. Selbye.
26. With the Prior of St. Johns of Jerusalem, first & chief Baron of England.

None of these held of mean Lords by franke almonage, but all of the King in capite per Baroniam, having an intire Baronie, to which thirteen Knights fees at least did belong.

4. Yet

4. Yet even after this fixation of Parliamentary Abbots in a set number the same was ofttsoons subject to variety. The Prior of Coventry played at in and out, and declined his appearance there. So did the Abbot of Lester, who may seem to have worn but half a Mitre on his head. So also the Abbot of St. James by Northampton may be said to sit but on one hip in Parliament, he appears so in the twilight betwixt a Baron, and no Baron, in the summons thereunto. But afterwards the first of these three was confirmed in his place, the two last on their earnest request obtained a discharge. Partly, because they were summoned onely interpolatis vicibus, and not constantly; Partly, because they made it to appear, that they held not of the King a whole Barony in chief.

Doubtfull Barons amongst the Abbots.

5. To these twenty six regular Barons, King Henry the eighth added one more for a casting voice; viz: the Abbot of Tavistocke in Devon-shire, on this token, that being created in the eighth of His Reigne he enjoyed not his Baronie full twenty years, and acted so short a part on the stage of Parliament, that with Cato he might seem onely ingredi ut exiret, to come in that he might go out. And, because some may be curious to know the manner of his creation, take here the form thereof:

A short-lived Barony made by K. Henry the eighth.

HENRICUS, &c. [b] Sciatis quod certis considerationibus nos specialiter moventibus & ob specialem devotionem, quam ad beatam Virginem Mariam matrem Christi, Sanctumque Rumonum in quorum Honore Abbatia de Tavistoke, quæ de fundatione nobilium progenitorum nostrorum, quondam Regum Angliæ & nostro patre natu dedicata existit, gerimus & habemus, hinc est quod de gratia nostra speciali ac ex certa scientia, & mero motu nostris, volumus eandem Abbatiam, sive Monasterium nostrum gaudere honore, privilegio, ac libertatibus spiritualium Dominorum Parliamenti nostri Haredem, & successorum nostrorum, ideo concessimus, & per præsentes concedimus pro nobis Haredibus, & successoribus nostris quantum in nobis est, dilecto nobis in Christi, Richardo Banham Abbati de Tavistocke prædicto & successoribus suis, ut eorum quilibet qui pro tempore ibidem fuerit Abbas, sit & erit unus de spiritualibus, & religiosis Dominis Parliamenti nostri Haredem, & successorum nostrorum, gaudendo honore, privilegio ac libertatibus ejusdem; Et insuper, de uberiori gratia nostra, affectando utilitatem, dicti nostri Monasterii, considerando ejus distantiam, ita quod si contingat aliquam Abbatem qui pro tempore fuerit, fore vel esse absentem propter prædicti Monasterii utilitatem in non veniendo ad Parliamentum prædictum Haredem, vel successorum nostrorum, quam quidem absentiam eidem Abbati perdonamus per præsentes; Ita tamen quod tunc solvet pro hujusmodi absentia cujuslibet Parliamenti integri in nostro Scaccario, suum per attornatum quinque Marcas nobis haredibus sive successoribus nostris, toties, quoties, hoc in futurum contigerit. In cujus, &c. Teste &c. Vicesimo tertio die Januarii, &c.

[b] Pat. 5. Hen. 8. part. 2. m. 22.

Whereas this Charter affirmeth Tavistocke founded by King Henry's noble Progenitors; Some will wonder thereat, and the rather, because [c] Ordulph, the son of Ordgare, Earl of Devon-shire is notoriously known for the Founder of this Monastery before the Conquest, and no English King appeareth eminently a Benefactour thereunto. Yet because the English Kings successively confirmed the Charters thereof, they were in a loyall complement, acknowledged as the interpretative Founders of that Abbey. And as little children, whose parents decease in their infancie, innocently own their Fathers and Mothers-in-laws, for their naturall parents: So many Monasteries, whose first Founders, were in a manner forgotten as time out of minde, applied themselves to the present Kings (though but the Favourers) as to the Founders of their Corporations.

[c] Cambden's Br. in Devon-shire.

6. Know that besides these Abbots, there were four Abbesses, viz: of Shaftsbury, Barking in Essex, St. Marys in Winchester, and Wilton, who held from the King an intire Baronry, yet never were summoned as Baronesses to Parliament; because that honour (frequent in Lay-persons) was never conferred on any Abbesses no Baronesses, though holding Baronies.

any Ecclesiastical Female. Yet were they (and almost all other Abbesses of any quality) saluted Ladies, as Earls Daughters are, by the courtesie of England, which custome hath made such a right, that they are beheld not onely as unmannerly, but unjust, who in common discourse deny the same. However the aforesaid four Abbesses, though not called to Parliament, were solemnly [d] summoned by special Writs ad habendum servitium suum, that is, to have their full number of Knights in time of warre, where the Ladies personal presence was not expected, but their effectual appearance by the proxies or their purses to supply the King's occasions.

d Pat. 5 Ed. 1. Dors. in 11. Rot. Scutagii ejusd. an. m. 7.

7. Of all these, the Prior of S. Johns in Jerusalem, took the precedencie, being generally of Noble extraction, and a Military person. Yea, not content to take place of all regular Barons, Primus Angliæ Baro haberi voluit, saith my [e] Authour: He would be counted [simply] and [absolutely] the first, and chief Baron in England; though the expression, speaks rather his affectation, than peaceable possession of such priority.

Prior of Jerusalem chief Baron.

e Cambd. Brit. pag. 123.

8. Next him, the Abbot of S. Albans took place above all of his Order, to the no small grief and grudge of Glassenbury, seeing Joseph of Arimathea was two hundred years senior to S. Albans. But, who shall deny the Patriarck [f] Jacob the priviledge of crossing his own hands, to preferre the younger before the elder? The same power (but on what pretence, let others enquire) the Pope assumeth to himself, whereby Adrian the fourth (once a Monk of S. Albans) gave that Covent the precedencie.

Next the Abbot of S. Albans.

f Gen. 48. 14.

9. As for the remaining Abbots, we may observe a kinde of a careless order observed in their summoning to (and consequently their sitting in) Parliament. Now seeing it will not enter into a rationall belief, that their methodizing was meerly managed by the will of the Clerk of the Writs, it must descend on the disposall of the King, calling them in what order He pleaseth.

The careless order of the rest.

10. Sure I am, these Abbots were not summoned according to their personall seniorities of their severall instalments, nor according to the antiquity of their respective foundations: For, Waltham Abbot being ante-penultimus, as but founded by King Herold, is commonly fourteenth or fifteenth in the summons. Battaile Abbey, which in this body of Abbeys, should be beneath the ancle, (as last of all save Selbye) is commonly about the breast, the eighth or ninth in number.

Seniority not observed in the summons.

11. Nor are they ranked according to the richnesse of their annuall Revenues; for then (according to their Valuations at the Dissolution) they should be martialled according to the method here insuing, when first I have premised a Note concerning the Abbey of Tewxbury in Glocester-shire.

Not ranked by their wealth.

12. This Abbot appeareth Parliamentary neither in any summons exhibited by [g] Master Selden, most curious in this point; nor yet in the Catalogue of them presented by [h] Master Cambden; and reverence to these worthy Authors hath prevailed with me so much that I durst not insert him. However, since I am convinced in my judgement, he must be entred in the list; Partly, moved by the greatnesse of Revenues; Partly, because I finde him registred by [i] Bishop Godwin, no lesse Criticall than the former in Historicall matters. Yet to please all parties, we will onely adde him in the Margine, and not enter him in the body of the Catalogue.

Tewxbury to be added to the Catalogue.

The valuations of Coventry & Colchester, I cannot finde; and in all these sums we have trusted Harps-field, and Speed, both subject to many mistakes, those standing on slippery ground, who in point of computation, tread onely on figures, and not on numbers at length. The Auditors in these accounts pretend to much exactnesse, descending to the fractions of half-pence and farthings, though much partiality was used therein, many of the Raters at the dissolution, being Ranters for the present, proved Purchasers for the future, of the lands. The Abbey of Ramsey, commonly called [l] the RICH, is here but the ninth in number, according to the wealth thereof, whereby it plainly appears, that much favour was used in the undervaluing of that foundation.

These had more Lands, at best were more highly valued, though not so Honourable a tenure, as holding of mean Landlords in frank almonage. And probably the Parliamentary Barons had more old rents, though these (as later foundations) greater incomes by improved demeans.

14. There

Shafts-bury the richeſt Nunnery.

14. There alſo were Nunneries corrivall in revenues with Parliamentary Abbeys, whereof Shafts-bury the chiefeſt, valued at—1329 li.—21 s.—3 d. So that the Countrey-people had a Proverb, That if the Abbot of Glaſſenbury might marry the Abbeſſe of Shafts-bury, their Heire would have more land than the King of England. Barkeing in Eſſex, and Sion in Middleſex, fell not much ſhort of Shafts-bury, being ſeverally endowed with above a 1000 li. per annum.

A prophane proverb.

15. Of all Counties in England, Gloceſter-ſhire was moſt peſtered with Monks, having four mitred Abbeys, beſide S. Auſtines in Briſtoll (who ſometimes paſſed for a Baron) within the compaſſe thereof, viz: Glocester, Teuxbury, Ciren-ceſter, and Wevelscome. Hence the topical wicked Proverb, deſerving to be baniſht out of that Countrey, being the prophane childe of ſuperſtitious parents: As ſure as God is in Gloceſter ſhire. As if ſo many Convents had certainly faſtned his gracious preſence to that place.

No Countrey free from Monks.

16. As Gloceſter-ſhire was the fulleſt of, ſo Weſtmereland the freeſt from Monaſteries. It ſeemeth the Monks did not much care for that cold Countrey, neſtling themſelves but in one place, called Sharp, which they found ſo anſwering the name, that they ſought warmer places elſwhere. As for the boaſting of the men of the Iſle of Wight, That they never had [m] hooded Monks therein, were it ſo (their ſoyl being ſo fruitfull, and pleaſant) it would merit more wonder, than that Ireland hath no Venemous creatures therein. But their brag hath more of Mirth than Truth in it, ſeeing the Priorie at Caris-brook, and Nunnery at Quarre evidence them ſufficiently ſtockt with ſuch Cattell.

[m] Cambd. Brit. in the Iſle of Wight. Quare what meant by four Abbots peculiarly exempt.

17. I have done with this ſubject of Mitred Abbeys when we have obſerved that they were called ABBOTS GENERALL, aliàs ABBOTS [n] SOVEREIGNE, as acknowledging in a ſort no Superiour, becauſe exempted from the Juriſdiction of any Diocezan, having Epiſcopall power in themſelves. And here I would be thankfull to any who would inform me, that ſeeing all theſe Abbots were thus priviledged, how it came to paſſe that Four of them were eſpecially termed ABBOTS [o] EXEMPTI, viz: Bury, Waltham, S. Albans, and Eveſham. I ſay ſeeing theſe were ſo called κατ' ἐξοχὴν, EXEMPT, as it were, out of the EXEMPTED, I would willingly be ſatisfied, what extraordinary Priviledges theſe enjoyed by themſelves above others of their own Order.

Of the Civill benefits, and Temporall conveniences, accruing to the State by the continuance of Abbies.

Give Abbies their due.

SO much of the greatneſſe, ſomewhat of the goodneſſe of Abbeys, if poſsibly it may be done without prejudice to truth. Surely ſome pretences (plauſible at leaſt) did ingratiate them with the Politicians of that Age, otherwiſe Prince, and people in thoſe daies (though blinded with ignorant zeal, yet worldly-wiſe) would never have been gulled into ſo long a toleration, yea veneration of them.

They convenient to diſpoſe youngeſt children in.

2. They were an eaſie and cheap outlet for the Nobility and Gentry of the land, therein to diſpoſe their younger children. That younger ſon who had not mettal enough to manage a ſword, might have meekneſſe to become a coule. Which coule in ſhort time might grow up to be a Mitre, when his merits preſented him to be Abbot of his Covent. Clap a vail on the head of a younger daughter (eſpecially if ſhe were ſuperannuated, not over-handſome, melancholy, &c.) and inſtantly ſhe was provided for in a Nunnery, where, without coſt or care of her parents, ſhe lived in all outward happineſſe, wanting nothing except (perhaps) it were an husband. This was a great cauſe of the long continuance of the Engliſh Nobility, in ſuch pomp, and power, as having then no temptation to torture their Tenants with racking of rents, to make proviſion for their younger children. Indeed, ſometimes Noblemen gave ſmall portions with their children to the Co-

vent

vent (not such as would preferre them in marriage to one of their own quality) but generally Abbeys were glad to accept them with nothing, thereby to engage the Parents, and Brothers of such young men and maidens, to be the constant friends to their Covent, on all occasion at Court, and chiefly in all Parliaments.

An eminent instance thereof.

3. One eminent instance hereof we have in Ralph Nevil, first Earl of Westmerland, of that Family whom I behold as the happiest Subject of England since the Conquest, if either we count the number of his Children, or measure the height of the Honour they attained:

He had by

Margaret, his first Wife,	Joan, his second Wife,
1. John, his eldest son, Lord Nevil, &c.	1. Richard, Earl of Sarisbury.
2. Ralph, in the right of Mary his wife, Lord Ferrars of Ously.	2. William, in the right of Joan his wife, Lord Faulconbridge.
3. Maud, married to Peter Lord Mauley.	3. George, Lord Latimer.
4. Alice, married to Sir Thomas Gray.	4. Edward, Lord Abergavennie.
5. Philip, married to Thomas Lord Dacres of Gilsland.	5. Robert, Bishop of Durham.
6. Margaret, married to the Lord Scroop of Bolton.	6. Thomas, in right of his wife, Lord [a] Seymour.
7. Anne, married to Sir Gilbert Umfrevil.	7. Katharine, married to Thomas Duke of Norfolke.
8. Margerie, Abbesse of Bearking.	8. Elianour, to Henry Earl of Northumberland.
9. Elizabeth, a Nun.	9. Anne, to Humphrey Duke of Buckingham.
	10. Jane, a Nun.
	11. Cicilie, to Richard Duke of York, and Mother to King Edward the fourth.

[a] Mills, p. 393.

See we here the policie of that age, in disposing of their numerous issue. More than the tithe of them was given to the Church, and I trow the Nuns (and Abbesse especially) were as good Madams as the rest, and conceived themselves to go in equipage with their other Lady-Sisters. And, no wonder, if an Earl preferred his daughters to be Nuns; seeing no King of England, since the Conquest, had four Daughters living to womans estate, but He disposed one of them to be a Votarie. And Bridget, the fourth Daughter to King Edward the fourth, a Nun at Dartford in Kent, was the last Princesse; who entered into a Religious Order.

Children taught therein.

4. They were tolerable Tutours for the education of youth (there being a great penurie of other Grammar-schools in that Age) and every Covent had one, or moe therein, who [generally gratis] taught the children thereabouts. Yea, they, who were loose enough in their own lives, were sufficiently severe in their discipline over others. Grammar was here taught, and Musick, which in some sort sung her own Dirige (as to the generall use thereof) at the dissolution of Abbies.

Conveniency of Shee-Colledges.

5. Nunneries also were good Shee-schools, wherein the Girles, and Maids of the Neighbourhood, were taught to read and work; and sometimes a little Latine was taught them therein. Yea, give me leave to say, if such Feminine Foundations had still continued, provided no vow were obtruded upon them (virginity is least kept where it is most constrained) haply the weaker sex (besides the avoiding modern inconveniences) might be heightned to an higher perfection than hitherto hath been attained. That sharpnesse of their wits, and suddennes of their conceits (which their enemies must allow unto them) might by education be improved into a judicious solidity, and that adorned with Arts, which now they want, not because they cannot learn, but are not taught them. I say, if such Feminine Foundations were extant now of dayes, haply ſome Virgins of higheſt birth, would be glad of ſuch places, and I am ſure their Fathers, and elder Brothers would not be ſorry for the ſame.

Monks the ſole Hiſtorians, and why.

6. They were the ſole Hiſtorians, in writing to preſerve the remarkable paſſages of Church, and Common-wealth. I confeſſe, I had rather any than Monks had written the Hiſtories of our Land; yet rather than the ſame ſhould be unwritten, I am heartily glad the Monks undertook the performance thereof. Indeed, in all their Chronicles one may feel a rag of a Monks coule; I mean, they are partial to their own intereſt. But in that Age there was a choiceleſſe choice, that Monks, or none at all, ſhould write our Engliſh Hiſtories. Sword-men lacked learning, States-men leaſure to doe it: it was therefore devolved to Monks and Friers, who had ſtore of time, and no want of intelligence, to take that task upon them. And ſurely that induſtrious [b] Bee hath in our Age merited much of poſterity, having lately, with great coſt and care, enlarged many Manuſcripts of Monks (formerly confined to private Libraries) that now they may take the free aire, and, being printed, publickly walk abroad. Mean time, whileſt Monks pens were thus employed, Nuns with their needles wrote hiſtories alſo; that of Chriſt his paſſion for their Altar-clothes, and other Scripture- (and moe Legend-) ſtories in hangings to adorn their houſes.

[b] An able Stationer in Little Britain, London.

Abbots excellent Land-lords.

7. They were moſt admirable good Land-lords; and well might they let, and ſet good peny-worths, who had good pounds-worths freely given unto them. Their yearly rent was ſo low, as an acknowledgment rather than a rent, onely to diſtinguiſh the Tenant from the Land-lord. Their fines alſo were eaſie; for, though every Convent, as a body politick, was immortal, yet becauſe the ſame conſiſted of mortal Monks for their members, and an old Abbot for the head thereof, they were glad to make uſe of the preſent time for their profit, taking little fines for long leaſes. As for rent-beeves, ſheep, pullein, &c. reſerved on their leaſes, Tenants both payed them the more eaſily, as growing on the ſame, and the more cheerfully, becauſe at any time they might freely eat their full ſhare thereof, when repairing to their Land-lords bountiful table. Inſomuch, that long Leaſes from Abbeys were preferred by many before ſome Tenures of freeholds, as leſſe ſubject to taxes, and troubleſome attendance.

And admirable Houſe-keepers.

8. Their hoſpitality was beyond compare, inſomuch that Ovid (if living in that Age) who feigned famine to dwell in Scythia, would have fancied feaſting an inhabitant of Engliſh Abbeys: Eſpecially in Chriſtmas-time, they kept moſt bountifull houſes. Whoſoever brought the face of a man, brought with him a Patent for his free welcome, till he pleaſed to depart. This was the method: where he brake his faſt, there he dined; where he dined, there he ſupped; where he ſupped, there he brake his faſt next morning: and ſo in a circle. Alwaies provided, that he provided lodging for himſelf at night; Abbeys having great halls, and refectories; but few chambers, and dormitories, ſave for ſuch of their own ſociety.

Objection againſt their hoſpitality.

9. Some will object, that this their hoſpitality was but charity miſtaken, promiſcuouſly entertaining ſome, who did not need, and moe, who did not deſerve it. Yea, theſe Abbeys did but maintain the poor which they made. For, ſome Vagrants, accounting the Abbey-almes their own inheritance, ſerved an apprentiſhip, and afterwards wrought journey-work to no other trade than begging; all whoſe children were, by their fathers copie, made free of the ſame company. Yea, we may obſerve, that generally ſuch places wherein the great Abbeys were ſeated (ſome few excepted, where cloathing began, when their Covent did end) ſwarm moſt with poor people at this day, as if beggary were entailed on them, and that lazineſſe not as yet got out of their fleſh, which ſo long ſince was bred in their bones.

The ſame anſwered.

10. All this is confeſſed; yet, by their hoſpitality, many an honeſt and hungry ſoul had his bowels refreſhed, which otherwiſe would have been ſtarved; and, better it is, two drones ſhould be fed, than one bee famiſhed. We ſee the heavens themſelves themselves, in dispensing their rain, often water many stinking bogs, and noisome lakes, which moisture is not needed by them (yea, they the worse for it) onely because much good ground lies inseparably intermingled with them; so that, either the bad with the good must be watered, or the good with the bad must be parched away.

11. Of all Abbeys in England, Elie bare away the bell for bountifull feast-making, the vicinity of the fenns affording them plenty of flesh, fish, and fowle, at low rates. Hereupon the Poët, Elie puts all Abbeys down for feasting.

Prævisis aliis, Elienſia festa videre,
Est, quasi prævisa nocte, videre diem.

When other Feasts before have been,
If those of ELIE last be seen,
'Tis like to one who hath seen night,
And then beholds the day so bright.

But, with the leave of the Poëts Hyperbole, other Abbeys, as Glassenbury, S. Albans, Reading, spurred up close to Elie, which, though exceeding them in feasts (the evidence oft of a miser) yet they equalled Elie in the constant tenour of house-keeping. The mention of Reading mindes me of a pleasant and true story; which, to refresh my wearied self, and Reader, after long pains, I here intend to relate.

12. King Henry the eighth, as He was hunting in Windesor Forrest, either casually lost, or (more probable) wilfully losing Himself, struck down about dinner-time to the Abbey of Reading. Where, disguising Himself, (much for delight, more for discoverie to see unseen) He was invited to the Abbots table, and passed for one of the Kings guard, a place to which the proportion of His person might properly intitle Him. A Sir loyne of beef was set before Him (so Knighted, saith tradition, by this King Henry) on which the King laid on lustily, not disgracing one of that place, for whom He was mistaken. Well fare thy heart, (quoth the Abbot) and here in a cup of sack I remember the health of His Grace your Master. I would give an hundred pounds on the condition I could feed so heartily on beef as you doe. Alas! my weak and squeazie stomack will hardly digest the wing of a small rabbet or chicken. The King pleasantly pledged him, and heartily thanking him for His good cheer, after dinner departed, as undiscovered as He came thither.

A pleasant Story of K. Henry the eighth.

13. Some weeks after, the Abbot was sent for by a Pursevant, brought up to London, clapped in the Tower, kept close-prisoner, fed for a short time with bread and water. Yet not so empty his body of food, as his minde was filled with fears, creating many suspitions to himself, when, and how he had incurred the King's displeasure. At last a sir-loyne of beef was set before him, on which the Abbot fed as the Farmer of his Grange, and verified the Proverb, That two hungry meals makes the third a glutton. In springs King Henry out of a private lobbie, where He had placed Himself the invisible spectatour of the Abbots behaviour, My Lord, (quoth the King) presently deposit your hundred pounds in gold, or else no going hence all the daies of your life. I have been your Physician to cure you of your squeazie stomack, and here, as I deserve, I demand my fee for the same. The Abbot down with his dust, and glad he had escaped so, returned to Reading; as somewhat lighter in purse, so much more merrier in heart than when he came thence.

He proves a good Physician.

Presages of the approaching ruine of Abbeys.

Oldham's prophesie of the Friers fall.

THE wisest, and most religious amongst the Romanists, presaged, and suspected a downfall of these Covents, some years before it came to passe. For, when it was in the intention, and designe of Richard Fox, Bishop of Wincheſter, to have built a Monasterie; Hugh Oldham, Bishop of Exeter, disswaded him, affirming, That such Covents possessed more already than they would long [a] enjoy. He advised him rather to bestow his bounty, on founding some Colledge in the Universitie, as which was likely to last longer, and certain to doe more good, promising also his own utmost assistance in so pious an undertaking. This was done accordingly, Fox being the first Founder of, and Oldham a liberall Benefactour to CORPUS CHRISTI Colledge in Oxford.

Seconded by Abbot Whitgift.

2. Adde to this, a Speech of Robert [b] Whitgift, Abbot of Wellow (nigh Grimsbey) in Lincoln shire (Uncle to Archbishop Whitgift) who was wont to say, That they, and their religion (chiefly in relation to Monasteries) could not long continue, because (said he) I have read the whole Scripture over, and over, and could never finde therein that our religion was founded by God. And, for proof of his opinion, the Abbot would alledge that saying of our Saviour, Every planting, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. And, that he proved a true Prophet herein, the next Book will sufficiently evidence.

Ominous burning of Abbeys, [often] by lightning.

3. We will conclude with their observation (as an ominous presage of Abbies ruine) that there was scarce a great Abbey in England, which (once at the least) was not burnt down with lightning from heaven.

1. The Monastery of Canterbury burnt Anno 1145. And afterward again burnt Anno [c] 1174.
2. The Abbey of Croyland twice [d] burnt.
3. The Abbey of Peterborow twice set on [e] fire.
4. The Abbey of S. Maryes in Yorke burnt.
5. The Abbey of Norwich burnt.
6. The Abbey of S. Edmonds-bury [f] burnt, and destroyed.
7. The Abbey of Worceſter burnt.
8. The Abbey of Gloceſter was also burnt.
9. The Abbey of Chicheſter burnt.
10. The Abbey of Glaſtenbury burnt.
11. The Abbey of S. Mary in Southwarke burnt.
12. The Church of the Abbey of Beverley burnt.
13. The Steeple of the Abbey of Eveſham burnt.

[c] Ex Hiſt. Gervaſii.
[d] Ex Hiſtor. Ingulphi.
[e] Ex Chron. Peterb. Walteri Weeks. Hovedeni Gualteri. Coventr. Fabiani.
[f] Ex Chron. S. Edmond. Guil. Malmesb.

I will not, with Master Fox, inferre from such casualties, that God was more offended with Abbeys, than other buildings, a naturall cause presenting it selfe of such accidents; namely, because the higheſt structures (whatever they are) are the faireſt marks for lightning, and thunder. As if those active Meteors took the usurpation of such aspiring buildings in distaste, for entring their territory, and for offering, without leave, to invade the marches of the middle region of the aire. And, if mountains of Gods own advancing thither, and placing there, pay dear for their honour, and frequently feel the weight of thunder-bolts falling upon them, feriunt ſummos fulmina montes; no wonder if artificiall buildings of mens making (whatsoever they be, Palaces, or Castles, or Churches, or Covents) have their ambition often humbled with thunder, and lightning, which casually melt and consume them.

Bells no effectuall charm against lightning.

4. Onely we will adde, that such frequent firing of Abbey-Churches by lightning, confuteth the proud Motto, commonly written on the Bells in their Steeples, wherein each Bell intituled it self to a sixfold efficacie;

1. Funera plango, { Men's deaths I tell / By dolefull knell.

2. Fulgura / Fulmina } frango, { Lightning and thunder, / I break asunder.

3. Sabbata pango; { On Sabbath, all / To Church I call.

4. Excito lentos, { The sleepy head, / I raise from bed.

5. Dissipo ventos, { The winds so fierce / I doe disperse.

6. Paco cruentos, { Men's cruell rage, / I doe asswage.

Whereas it plainly appears, that these Abbey-steeples, though quilted with Bells almost cap a pee, were not of proof against the sword of God's lightning. Yea generally, when the heavens in tempests did strike fire, the Steeples of Abbeys proved often their tynder, whose frequent burning portended their finall destruction; which now, God willing, we come to relate.

Of the Essaies and Offers to overthrow Abbeys before they took effect.

GReat buildings commonly crack before they fall, to give the dwellers therein warning to depart; so was it here in Abbeys. But may we here, first premise, as an Introduction, that it was placed in the power and pleasure of Princes and great persons, their Founders, to displace & exchange particular Orders, as sometimes Monks for Nuns, and reciprocally Nuns for Monks; white for gray Friers, and gray for white, as their fancie directed them: whereof we have plenty of instances. But all this made nothing to the losse of Monkery in generall, though sexes or colours of Friers were altered, the same Bells did hang still in the steeple, though rung in changes to content severall people.

Orders of Friers alterable according to the pleasures of their Founders.

2. Secondly, particular Covents might be wholly dissolved upon their misdemeanour, as in Berklie Nunnery: Here a young man (left out of designe by Earl Godwine) dissembled himself to be sick, who, in short space, so acquirted himself amongst the Votaries there, that all of them, with their Abbesse, (whose age might have been presumed a protection for her honesty) were got with [a] childe: upon complaint and proof whereof unto King Edward the Confessour, they were all driven out; and their Nunnery, with large revenues, bestowed upon Earl Godwine, by the aforesaid King, who was then accounted Patron of all Abbeys, which now fallen into His hands, by this foule lapse, He bestowed, as a Lay fee, upon this new Owner, wholly altering the property thereof.

Particular Covents on misdemeanour dissolvable.

[a] De honestis comestas, de agnis lupus, Cambdens Brit. in Glocester-shire, out of Walterus Mapæus.

3. Thirdly, whole religious Orders might by order from the Pope be totally and finally extirpated. Here I passe by the Fratres Flagelliferi, or scourging Friers, Whole Orders routed out by the Pope for their faults.

Friers, religious Bedlams, who uſed publickly to whip themſelves in the Market-place, making velame of their own skins, thereon to write their follies in legible characters. I ſay I omit them; afterwards put down by the Pope himſelf: the rather becauſe I finde them not in England, or elſwhere, endowed with conſiderable revenues. I will inſiſt on the Templers, whoſe numerous and wealthy fraternity was for their vitiouſneſs, by the Pope, in the Councell of Vienna, diſſolved all over Europe, and in England all or moſt of their land was given to the Knights [b] Hoſpitallers. This was a great ſhaking of all religious Orders, the plucking out of theſe chief threads, made a in the whole cloth; men conceiving that in proceſſe of time the whole ſheafe may be broken as well as the ſingle Arrows, ſeeing, perchance, other Societies led lives not more religious, but leſſe examined.

[b] See Supplement of the Holy Warre, chap. 1, 2, 3.

The firſt ſtroke at the root of Abbeys.

4. But the firſt terrible blow in England given generally to all Orders, was in the Lay-Parliament, as it is called, which did wholly Wiccliſize, kept in the twelfth year of King Henry the fourth, wherein the [c] Nobles and Commons aſſembled, ſignified to the King, that the temporal poſſeſſions of Abbots, Priors, &c. lewdly ſpent within the Realm, would ſuffice to finde and ſuſtain 150 Earls, 1500 Knights, 6200 Eſquires, 100 Hoſpitals, more than there were. But this motion was maul'd with the King's own hand, who daſhed it, perſonally interpoſing Himſelf contrary to that character, which the jealous Clergie had conceived of Him, that coming to the Crown He would be a great [d] enemy to the Church. But though Henry Plantagenet Duke of Lancaſter was no friend to the Clergie, perchance to ingratiate himſelf with the people, yet the ſame Henry King of England His intereſt being altered, to ſtrengthen Him with the conſiderable power of the Clergy, proved a Patron, yea, a Champion to defend them. However, we may ſay, that now the Axe is laid to the root of the tree of Abbeys, and this ſtroke for the preſent, though it was ſo farre from hurting the body, that it ſcarce pierced the bark thereof, yet bare attempts in ſuch matters are important, as putting into peoples heads a feaſibility of the project, formerly conceived altogether impoſſible.

The objection of covetouſneſs againſt Abbeys (though not anſwered) evaded by Archb. Chicheſly.

5. Few yeares after, namely, in the ſecond year of King Henry the fift, another ſhreud thruſt was made at Engliſh Abbeys, but it was finely and cleverly put aſide by that skilfull State-Fencer Henry Chicheſly Archbiſhop of Canterbury. For the former Bill againſt Abbeys, in full Parliament was revived, when the Archbiſhop minded King Henry of His undoubted Title to the fair and flouriſhing Kingdome of France. Hereat, that King who was a ſpark in Himſelf, was enflamed to that deſigne by this Prelates perſwaſion: and His native courage ran fiercely on the project, eſpecially when clapt on with conſcience and encouragement from a Church-man in the lawfulneſſe thereof. An undertaking of thoſe vaſt dimenſions, that the greateſt covetouſneſſe might ſpread, and higheſt ambition reach it ſelf within the bounds thereof: If to promote this project, the Abbeys advanced not onely large and liberall, but vaſt and incredible ſummes of money, it is no wonder if they were contented to have their nails pared cloſe to the quick, thereby to ſave their fingers. Over goes K. Henry into France, with many martiall ſpirits attending him, ſo that putting the King upon the ſeeking of a new Crown, kept the Abbots old Mitres upon their heads, and Monaſteries tottering at this time, were (thank a politick Archbiſhop) refixed on the firm foundations, though this proved rather a reprieve than a pardon unto them, as will afterwards appear.

Of the ſuppreſsion of alien Priories.

NExt followed the diſſolving of alien Priories, of whoſe firſt founding and ſeverall ſorts ſomething muſt be obſerved. When the Kings of England by Conqueſt or Inheritance were poſſeſſed of many and great Territories in France (Normandy, Aquitaine, Picardy, &c.) many French Monaſteries were endowed with lands in England. For an Engliſh kitchin or larder doth excellently well with a French hall. And whilſt forreigners tongues ſlighted our Iſland (as barren in compariſon of their own Countrey) at the ſame time, they would lick their lips after the full-fare which our Kingdome afforded.

The originall of Priories aliens.

2. Very numerous were theſe Cells in England relating to forreign Abbeys ſcattered all over the Kingdome. One John Norbury erected two for his part, the one at Greenwich, the other at Leweſham in Kent. Yea, [e] Roger de Poictiers, founded on in the remoteſt corner of the Land, in the Town of Lancaſter; the richeſt of them all for annuall income was that which [f] Two Talbois built at Spalding in Lincoln ſhire, giving it to the Monks of Angiers in France, & valued at no leſſe than 878 lib. 18 s. 3 d. of yearly revenue. And it is remarkable, that as one of theſe Priories was granted before the Kings of England were inveſted with any Dominion in France (namely, Deerhirſt in Glocester ſhire, [h] aſſigned by the Teſtament of Edward the Confeſſour to the Monaſtery of S. Denis neer Paris) ſo ſome were beſtowed on thoſe places in forreign parts, where our Engliſh Kings never had finger of power, or foot of poſſeſſion. Thus we read how Henry the third annexed a Cell in Threadneedle-ſtreet in [i] London to S. Anthony in Vienna, and neer Charing-Croſſe there was another annext to the Lady Runciavall in Navarre. Belike men's devotion, in that Age, look'd on the world as it lay in common, taking no notice how it was ſub-divided into private Principalities, but proceeded on that rule, [k] The earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſſe thereof, and Charity, though wandring in forreign parts, counted it ſelf ſtill at home, becauſe dwelling on its proper pious uſes.

3. Theſe alien Priories were of two natures, ſome had Monks with a Prior reſident in them, yet not Conventuall, but dative and removable ad nutum of the forreign Abbey, to which they were ſubſervient; Others were abſolute in themſelves, who though having an honorary dependance on, and bearing a ſubordination of reſpect unto French Abbeys, yet had a Prior of their own, being an intire body of themſelves to all purpoſes and intents. The former not unlike Stewards managing profits for the behoof of their Maſter, to whom they were reſponſible. The later reſembling retainers at large, acknowledging a generall reference, but not accomptable unto them, for the revenues they received. Now both theſe kindes of Priories peaceably enjoyed their poſſeſſions here, even after the revolt of thoſe Principalities from the Crown of England: yet ſo, that during open hoſtility and actuall warre betwixt England and France, their revenues were ſeiſed and taken by the King, and reſtored again when amity was ſetled.

Alien Priories of two natures.

4. But King Richard the ſecond, and King Henry the fourth, not ſo fair as their predeceſſours herein, not onely detained thoſe revenues in time of peace, but alſo diverted them from their proper uſe, and beſtowed them on ſome of their Lay-ſervants. So that the Crown was little enriched therewith: eſpecially if it be true what Arundell Archbiſhop of Canterbury averred in the houſe of Commons to the face of the Speaker, That theſe Kings [l] were not half a mark the wealthier for thoſe rents thus aſſumed into their hands. And a Synod of the Clergie in the laſt of Henry the fourth petitioned the King, That Lay men might not invade the poſſeſſions of alien Priories, [*] but thoſe Foundations might be furniſhed, Native Engliſh ſubſtituted in their rooms; whoſe requeſt, by reaſon of the King's death enſuing took no effect. But this doth intimate, (though I had rather learn than teach in ſo dark a point) that thoſe alien Priories ſtill ſtood undiſſolved by Act of State, with a poſſibility to revert to their former uſe, and though the King had faſtned faſtned upon their profits by his abſolute power, yet as yet they were not ſetled and eſtabliſhed in the Crown by Act of Parliament.

Their diſſolution.

5. But in the fourth year of King Henry the fift, in the heat and height of His Warres with France, all ſuch Priories alien, as were not Conventuall, were by Act of [m] Parliament diſſolved, and beſtowed on the King. It being conceived unſafe, that men, moving according to a forreign intereſt, having their affections leading them beyond the ſeas, and their actions following, (when befriended with ſecreſie) ſhould be maintained in this Kingdome. Beſides it tended to the manifeſt detriment of the State, that ſuch ſhould tranſport our coyn and commodities into an enemies Countrey, without returning a proportionable profit to the Common-wealth. Other alien Priories, which were Conventuall, ſurvived untill the general mortality of Engliſh Monaſteries. Theſe alien Priories were not conceived to have ſuch a temptation to diſloyalty, as the others, having their abſolute ſubſiſtence here; and though the Monks therein were ſtrangers in reſpect of their birth, they were counted Naturalized in a manner in regard of their education and livelyhood.

[m] Parliament Rolls Raſtall. titul. Monaſteries.

The dangerous influence of this precedent.

6. The diſſolving of theſe Priories, made a dangerous impreſſion on all the reſt. Say not that Engliſh Abbeys were unconcerned, becauſe theſe ſtrangers being rather ſuckers than branches of their tree, their growing was a burthen, and their pruning off a benefit thereunto; for, though Aliens in their Countrey, they were Allies in their Cauſe, there being an affinity betwixt all religious Foundations. And now here was an Act of State for precedent, That without ſin of Sacriledge ſuch Donations might be diſſolved. Uſe was made hereof, beyond the Kings intention, who, in this act not covetous, but politick, aiming rather to ſecure than enrich Himſelf: whereas now ſome Courtiers by His bounty taſting on the ſweet of Abbey-lands, made their break-faſts thereon in the time of Henry the fift, which increaſed their appetites to dine on the ſame in the daies of King Henry the eighth, not ſo glutted, but they could ſup on the reverſions left in the Reign of K. Edward the ſixt.

SECTION III.

To the Honourable, the Lady MARY FOUNTAINE.

MADAM,

THough none can expect Courtship, many will require Congruity from me. Such will charge me with a great Impropriety, for dedicating a discourse of Monks and Friers to your Ladiship, where some passages of their wantonnesse, may occasion your blushing for them, who never blushed for themselves. But, know it done by design, that you may plainly perceive how far Marriage-chastity transcended forced and pretended virginity: or, if you please, how much a springing Fountain, is better than a standing-Pool soon subject to putrefaction.

Your Family, though not a Nunnery, may be a Religious house, seeing God hath multiplied you into a whole Convent, I mean, the fourteen Children which you have at this present; I say have; for this reason is rendred, why the Children of Job (after his restitution) were not doubled unto him as his Cattle were, because they were utterly foregone, his Children onely gone before; on which account those six removed from you, into a better world, still remain yours. God in due time translate you, and your worthy Husband, in a good old age, into the same Place of Happiness.

of Cardinal Wolsey's ominous suppressing of forty lesser Monasteries, therewith to build two Colledges.

VAst were the revenues of Cardinal Wolsey, if we account both his Wives, and Concubines, I mean, the place whereon he resided, and Churches he held in Commendam; being at the same time, the Pope's Legate à latere, Archbishop of Yorke, Chancellor of England, Bishop of Winchester, Abbot of S. Albans, besides other meaner preferments. Yet he found [a] Solomon's observation true, When goods encrease, they are encreased that eat them: Insomuch, that his magnificent mind was poor in his plenty; & in the midst of his wealth, wanted means to compass his vast designs. Wherefore, intending to erect two fair Colledges, one, where he was born, in Ipswich; the other, where he was bred, in Oxford; and finding himself unable to endow them at his own charges, he obtained license of Pope Clement 7th. An. 1525, to suppress forty smaller Monasteries in England, and to lay their old land to his new foundations, which was done accordingly. For the Cardinal thought, thought, that these petty Houses, like little sparks of diamonds, were inconsiderable in themselves, whereas they would make a fair show, if all were put together into two jewels only, (his two Colledges) and he carry away all the credit thereof.

[a] Eccles. 5. 11.

Wolsey his act justly censured.

2. An action condemned by the conscientious in that Age, accounting it essentiall to charity, that the thing given be the proper goods of the Donour. Cast thy bread (saith [b] Solomon) upon the water. It must be thy bread, otherwise, though [c] stollen bread may be pleasant to men, it is nauseous and distastfull to the God of heaven; who, in such cases will not be the receiver, though man be the thief; solemnly disavowing the acceptance of such donations, witnesse his own words, [d] I hate robbery for burnt-offering.

[b] Eccles. 11,1.
[c] Prov. 9.17.
[d] Isa. 61.8.

Fig-leaves to cover it, in vain.

3. Plead not in the Cardinal's excuse, that the houses by him suppressed were of small value, it being as great, yea, greater sacriledge to invade the widows mite, than the large gifts, which the rich Priests cast into Corban: because their bounties were but superfluous wenns, whilst hers was an essentiall limb; yea, as our Saviour [e] observes, the whole body of her estate. As probably, some of those poor Foundations were erected by Founders, like those of [f] Macedonia, to their power, and beyond their power willing of themselves. As for the poor people, formerly living in these then-dissolved houses, they may be presumed more religious than others that were richer; poverty being a protection for their piety, and they unable to go to the cost of luxurious extravagancies. I finde not what provision was afterward made for these helplesse souls, thrust out of house and home; so that it is suspitious, that the Cardinal, notwithstanding his prodigious hospitality, made moe beggars than ever he relieved.

[e] Luke 21. 4.
[f] 2 Cor. 8. 3.

The miserable ends of the Cardinals instruments herein.

4. Others alledge, that these houses were still continued to the generall end of pious uses: however, it was not fair to alienate them from the primitive intention of the Founders; yea, God himself seemed not well-pleased therewith. I know, that [g] no man knoweth either love, or hatred, by all that is before them. All things come alike to all, there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked, &c. However, Gods exemplary hand ought to be heeded in the signall fatality of such, as by the Cardinall were employed in this service: Five they were in number, two whereof challenging the field of each other, one was [h] slain, and the other hanged for it. A third, throwing himself headlong into a well, perished wilfully. A fourth, formerly wealthy, grew so poor, that he begged his bread. The fifth Dr. Allen, one of especiall note, afterward Archbishop of Dublin, was slain in Ireland. What became of the Cardinal himself, is notoriously known: and, as for his two Colledges, that in Ipswich (the embleme of its Builder, soon up, soon down) presently vanished into private houses; whilst the other, Christ-Church in Oxford, was fain to disclaim its Founder, and (being adopted the issue of the bounty of King Henry the eighth) at this day owns not him for Father, who first gave it life, but who afterwards kept it from dying. In a word, this dissolution of fourty small Houses caused by the Cardinall, made all the Forest of religious Foundations in England to shake, justly fearing the King would finish to fell the oaks, seeing the Cardinal began to cut the underwood.

Of the first Priory which was solemnly suppressed by King Henry the eighth.

Christ-Church Priorie neer Allgate first, and solely dissolved.

SOme six years after, whilst as yet all other Abbeys flourished in their height and happinesse, as safe and secure as ever before; King Henry the eighth, for reasons best known to Himself, singled out the Priory of Christ-Church nigh Allgate in London, and dissolved the same. This He bestowed as a boon on Thomas [a] Audley Speaker in the Parliament; and indeed, it was an excellent receit to clear his voice, to make him speak shrill, and loud for his Master. This shrewdly shook the freehold of all Abbeys, seeing now, two such great men, Wolsey and Audley, both in their times Lord-Chancellours of England, (and therefore presumed well versed in cases of conscience) the one a Divine first took, the other a Common-Lawyer first received such lands into their possession.

[a] Hall's Chronicle, An 1525.

2. A word of the antiquity, wealth and dignity of this Covent, because in each respect it was remarkable. It was founded Anno 1108. by Queen [b] Matilda, Wife to King Henry the first, dedicated to the holy Trinity, for Black Canons, or Canons-Regular, and one Norman (by name and nation) was first Prior thereof. In processe of time it became rich in land and ornaments, and passed all the Priories in London or Middlesex, especially in this particular, that the Prior thereof was alwaies an [c] Alderman of London, namely, of Portsoken Ward (though otherwise their Covent standeth in Ealgate Ward) and used to ride amongst the Aldermen in a livery like the rest, save that his habit was in the shape of a spiritual person. In the year 1264, [d] Eustathius the eighth Prior of this Covent, because he himself was loth to deale in temporall matters, instituted Theobald Fitz-Ivo, Alderman in his place. They were most bountifull house-keepers, relieving all comers and goers, and got themselves much reputation for their hospitality.

d Idem ibidem.

3. Some conjecture this was King Henry's designe in dissolving this Priorie, thereby to make a discovery in peoples affections, how they resented the same. He dispatched this Covent first, as the forelorn hope is sent out before the body of the Army, which, if meeting with unsuspected dangers, may give timely notice to the rest, to advance no farther. And, if He had found the people much startled thereat, He could quickly knock off, retrench His resolutions, and (dexterous to decline envy for Himselfe) handsomely cast the same on His instruments employed therein. Others think, the King as yet had no such project in intention, but did it meerly to gratifie Sir Thomas Audley, whom He loved the better for hating Cardinal Wolsey, now beginning to fall, against whom he had bitterly inveighed in the Parliament.

A guesse at King Henry's design.

4. As for the manner of the dissolving thereof, whereas all other Abbeys afterwards were stormed by violence (whatsoever is plausibly pretended to the contrary) this onely was fairly taken by composition. For the Prior thereof was sent for by the King, commended for his hospitality, promised preferment as a man worthy greater dignity, which promise surely He performed, though the particulars of the agreement are not to be known. Whereupon, Anno 1531, the twenty third year of the King's reign, in the moneth of July, he surrendred the same to the King's use. As for the Canons, they were sent to other houses of the same Order; who now, being severally disposed in other Covents, they might serve them as Monitours to warn all the rest, seasonably to prepare for the time of their dissolution.

The Priory taken by composition.

5. The rooting out of this Priory wrought a middle effect in people, for they were neither dumb, nor clamorous thereat, but grumbled out their discontentment for a time, and then returned to their former temper. However at first they were so abstemious, that, whereas the Priory, Church and Steeple was [e] profered to whomsoever would take it down, no man would undertake the offer. Whereupon, Sir Thomas Audley was fain to be at more charges than he could make of the materials; the workmen with great labour beginning at the top, loosed stone from stone, and throwing them down, most part of them were broken in the fall, and remained useless.

The effect thereof upon the people.

e Idem, ut prius.

6. What might move the King to single this Priory out of all the rest, to lead this sad dance, is variously conjectured. Indeed, this was the antienteſt of all England of that Order since the Conquest, I mean, of Canon-Regulars, as our [f] Authour telleth us. And therefore it was but reasonable, the oldest should go first, the first-born should be first buried. But surely, no such consideration moved King Henry to this choice, who was not so methodical in His deeds of undoing.

This the antienteſt of all Priories. f Stow, ut prius.

7. As for the Lord Audley, on whom this Priory was bestowed, Margaret his sole Daughter & Heir was married to Tho: Howard, Duke of Norfolk, who dwelt therein, and which from him was called the Dukes-Place. No ingenuous soul will envy so Honourable a person the accommodation of so handsome an habitation; onely some, perchance, will bemoan that the Lords-Place (for so in their, and [g] Jacob's language, they called the Church) whither alone the numerous neighbour-

At this day called the Dukes-Place.

bour-inhabitants repaired for publick service, should be so destroyed, that the people were for many years left Church-lesse, till their wants [b] very lately were supplied by the re-edifying thereof out of the ruines, by the charity of others; I am sure, none of the Heirs of Him, who demolished the same.

[b] viz. An. Dom. 1621.

Of the suppression of the Order of Observant Friers, and a preparatory for the dissolution of all the rest.

Observant Friers why first falling under King Henry's displeasure.

IT is the practise of advised Physicians, in purging of long corrupted bodies (where the ill humours may prescribe peaceable possession for many years) to proceed not violently, all at once; but gently, by degrees. The same course was embraced by King Henry in dissolving of Abbeys, gradually (and therefore the lesse visibly) to work their subversion, so to avoid the danger of a sudden and extreme alteration. And first He began with the Minorites, or Franciscan-Observant Friers, whose chief seats were Greenwich, and Canterbury. Two motives mainly incensed Him against this Order; One, because two of their most eminent Fathers, Hugh Rich (Prior of a Covent in Canterbury) and Richard Ruby, had tampered with Elizabeth Barton (alias the holy maid of Kent) and were convicted, and executed with her for high Treason. A second, because this Order generally manifested most contumacie and contempt against the King, in the matter of Queen Katharine's divorce, inveighing both in their sermons, [a] and disputations against the unlawfulnes thereof, especially Elston and Payton, two famous Friers in London. A great [b] Papist beholds it as ominous, and a prognostick of sad successe, that the Lady (afterward Queen) Elizabeth, just eleven moneths before, had been Christened in these Friers Church in Greenwich, as if Her baptizing therein portended, That those Friers should soon after be washed away from this their Covent.

[a] Sanders de Schis. Anglic. lib. 1. pag. 81.
[b] Idem, pag. 80.

Totally and finally dissolved.

2. Hereupon, in the year of our Lord 1534, the aforesaid whole Order of Friers-Observant were suppressed, and Augustine-Friers substituted in their places. Nor were these Observants (like the Canon-Regulars in the last Chapter) disposed of in other Foundations, but totally and finally banished out of all Religious Societies. For, King Henry his smiles complemented the former out of their Houses, by their own willing condescension; whilst His frowns outed these as Delinquents, by a violent expulsion. Yea, probably, some of them had been expelled their lives, as well as their livings (two hundred of them being at once imprisoned) had not Sir Tho: [c] Wriothesly, their great friend and favourer, seasonably interceded for them to the King, on hopes of some of their future conformity to His Majesties desires.

[c] Sanders, p. 89.

The Supplication of Beggars, with the Sense thereof.

3. Immediately after, a famous Petition, called the Supplication of Beggars, came into publick view. It was made some years before by one Mr. Simon [d] Fish a Gentleman of Grays-Inne, and solemnly presented by George Eliot an English-Merchant, and entertained by King Henry for a great rarity: Though indeed the same long since had been tendred Him by Queen [e] Anna Bollen, and the King acquainted with the passages therein. So that possibly, this Supplication might first come from some neer His Majesty, as contrivers thereof. And, as Moses [f] was sent to be nursed unto her, who (though generally unknown) was indeed his own Mother which bare him: so Petitions may sometimes be recommended back to the same power that first framed them. Great ones delighting, not onely for the greater solemnity, but also for their better security to transferre their intentions to be others intreaties; their private designes finding more acceptance, when passing under the notion of a publick desire. The effect thereof was to complain, how a crew of strong, puissant, counterfeit-holy, idle beggars, and vagabonds, by their luxurie starved a number of needy, impotent, blinde, lame, and sick people, which otherwise might comfortably be maintained. As also to discover the foul enormities enormities and filthy converſation uſed amongſt thoſe pretended pious Fraternities, as the ſame is ſet forth at large in the Book of Martyrs, whither we remit the Reader.

[e] Idem ibidem.
[f] Exod. 2. 8.

4. Onely a word of the Geometry, Arithmetick, and Chronologie, uſed by the Author of this Supplication. For his Geometry, I conceive he faileth not much in proportion, when, in meaſuring the content of this Kingdome, he affirmeth, That they had got into their hands more than the third part of all the Realm. But, whereas he auditeth the Revenues of the Friers in England (beſides their lands) to amount yearly to Four hundred thirty thouſand three hundred thirty and three pounds, allowing their quarteridge to ariſe out of Fifty two thouſand Pariſhes, he highly over-reacheth their number, not compleating a Ten thouſand. Indeed, the Papiſts tell us of Ten thouſand Churches in England deſtroyed all in one year,

The Geometry, Arithmetick, and Chronology of the Author thereof.

a See Cambd. Brit. in his diviſion of Brit. pag. 162.

Millia dena unus Templorum deſtruit annus.

Yet, theſe being Conventual, not Parochial Churches, adde nothing to the former computation. Yea, ſhould all the Chappels of Eaſe in this Land be admitted to take a new degree, and to commence Churches in this catalogue, it would not make up the number. But, it is given to Beggars, ſometimes to hyperbolize, to make their caſe the more pitifull: and indeed, if we defalk a third part of that ſumme, yet ſtill vaſt was the remainder of ſuch Friers revenues. But, whereas the ſaid Authour of this Supplication, ſaith, That four hundred years paſt theſe Friers had not one peny of this money, Quare, whether he be not miſtaken in his Chronologie? and, whether ſome of the ſame profits accrued not to the Benedictines before the Conqueſt.

5. In anſwer to this, an Anti-ſupplication was made, and ſet forth by Sir Thomas More (extant amongſt his other works) called, The Supplication of the ſouls in Purgatory. The ſcope whereof is, to preſſe the continuation of thoſe lands, given to pious uſes, for the good of the deceaſed, and that they might not be aliened without danger of Sacriledge. In this Supplication, pleaſant dallying and ſcoffing are ſo intermixt with complaints, that the Authour thereof diſcovereth himſelf more Satyriſt than Saint in his expreſſions. So hard it is for an Actor ſo to deveſt himſelf of himſelf, as not to vent ſome of his own humours, with the property of that perſon whom he is to repreſent. And, ſeeing Sir Thomas More would have his own jeſts when dying, no wonder if he makes others to jeer when dead.

The Anti-ſupplication of the ſouls in Purgatorie.

6. Theſe two Supplications preſſing both together for audience and reception, that of the Beggars on earth found the beſt entertainment. Whether becauſe it came firſt, which we know is great advantage in Beggars, firſt come, firſt ſerved: Or, becauſe theſe Terreſtrial beggars were neerer at hand (and ſo beſt able to manage their own ſuit) whilſt thoſe in Purgatory were conceived at a greater diſtance: Or, chiefly, becauſe their Supplication ſuggeſted matter of profit to the King and His Courtiers; and ſuch whiſpers ſound loud, and commonly meet with attentive ears. And, as an introduction to the diſſolution of all Abbeys, ſpies were ſent forth to make ſtrict diſcovery of mens behaviours therein. Indeed, the Lord Cromwell, Scout-Maſter-Generall in this deſigne, ſtayed at the Court, whilſt his ſubordinate Emiſſaries (men of as prying eyes, as afterwards they proved of gripple hands) ſent unto him all their intelligence, in manner and form as in due time ſhall enſue.

The firſt Supplication beſt received.

The lesser Monasteries bestowed on the King.

A gainfull motion made for the King.

NOW because some moneths were imployed in that service before a perfect account was returned to the Lord Cromwell: The suppressing of the smaller Monasteries may here seasonably be inserted: For in the twenty seventh of the Kings Reign Anno 1539, a motion was made in Parliament, That to support the Kings States, and supply His wants, all Religious Houses might be conferred on the Crown, which were not able clearly to expend above Two hundred pounds a year.

Reported by mistake opposed by Bishop Fisher.

2. Some may report, that John Fisher Bishop of Rochester earnestly (though pleasantly) opposed the motion, by alledging an Apologue out of Æsope, That the Helve of the Axe craved a Handle of the wood of Oaks onely to cut off the Serebowes of the Tree, but when it was a complete Instrumentall Axe, it felled down all the wood. Applying it, That the grant of these smaller Houses would in fine prove destructive to all the rest. But Fisher, being now in his grave, this could not be spoken in this Parliament; which, with more probability was formerly urged by him against Cardinal Wolsey in dissolving the forty Houses, whereof before.

Easily passed in Parliament.

3. This Proposition found little opposition in either Houses. Henry the eighth was a King, and His necessities were Tyrants, and both suing together for the same thing, must not be denied: besides the larger thongs they cut out of other mens leather, the more intire they preserved their own hide, which made the Parliament to ease their own purses by laying the load on those lesser Houses, which they accordingly passed to the Crown.

A Preamble of importance restored out of the Records to the Printed Statute.
a Of Henry 8. pag. 376.

4. The Lord Herbert in his [a] Historie complaineth, and that justly, That this Statute for dissolution of the lesser Monasteries doth begin very bluntly, without any formall Preamble in the Printed Books they are Published. It seemeth that herein he never searched the Record it self (otherwise industrious in that kinde) to which a solemn Preface is prefixed, shewing some Reasons of the dissolution, and pious uses, to which they were attained: In form as followeth:

The Preamble is this:

FOrasmuch as manifest sin, vitious, carnall and abominable living, is daily used and committed commonly in such little and small Abbeys, Priories, and other religious houses of Monks, Canons, and Nuns, where the Congregation of such religious persons, is under the number of twelve persons, whereby the Governours of such religious Houses and their Covent, spoile, destroy, consume, and utterly waste, as well the Churches, Monasteries, Priories, principall Houses, Farms, Granges, Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, as the ornaments of the Churches, and their goods and Chattels, to the high displeasure of Almighty God, slander of good Religion, and to the great infamy of the King's Higness and the Realm, if redresse should not be had thereof. And albeit that many continuall Visitations hath been heretofore had by the space of two hundred years and more, for an honest and charitable reformation of such unthrifty, carnall, and abominable living, yet nevertheless little or no amendment is hitherto had, but their vitious living shamefully increaseth and augmenteth, and by a cursed custome so grown and infested, that a great multitude of the religious persons in such small Houses, do rather choose to rove abroad in Apostasie, than to conform themselves to the observation of good Religion; so that without such small Houses be utterly suppressed, and the Religion therein committed to the great and honourable Monasteries of Religion in this Realm, where they may be compelled to live religiously for reformation of their lives, there can else be no redresse nor reformation in that behalf. In consideration whereof, the King's most royall Majesty, being Supreme head in earth under God, of the Church of England, daily daily ſtudying and deviſing the increaſe, advancement, and exaltation of true doctrine and virtue in the ſaid Church, to the onely glory and honour of God, and the totall extirping and deſtruction of vice and ſin, having knowledge that the premiſes be true, as well by the compts of his late viſitations, as by ſundry credible informations; conſidering alſo that divers and great ſolemn Monaſteries of this Realm, wherein, thanks be to God, Religion is right well kept and obſerved, be deſtitute of ſuch full numbers of religious perſons as they ought and may keep, have thought good that a plain Declaration ſhould be made of the premiſes, as well to the Lords Spirituall and Temporall, as to other His loving Subjects, the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled.

WHEREUPON the ſaid Lords and Commons by a great deliberation finally be reſolved, That it is, and ſhall be much more to the pleaſure of Almighty God, and for the honour of this His Realm, that the poſſeſſions of ſuch ſmall religious Houſes, not being ſpent, ſpoiled and waſted for increaſe of maintenance of ſin, ſhould be uſed and converted to better uſes; and the unthrifty religious perſons ſo ſpending the ſame, to be compelled to reform their lives. And hereupon moſt humbly deſire the King's Highneſſe, that it may be enacted by authority of this preſent Parliament, That His Majeſty ſhall have to Him and to His Heirs for ever, all and ſingular ſuch Monaſteries.

His Majeſty ſhall have and enjoy, &c. As it foloweth in the printed Statute.[b] b Cap. 28.

In this Preamble two principles are laid down of infallible truth, and poſterity muſt not be ſo preſumptuous as to queſtion them.

Two principles which muſt not be queſtioned.

1. The ſmalleſt Convents were the greateſt ſinners, and they who had the leaſt lands led the leudeſt lives.
2. It was harder to reform little Covents than thoſe that were greater.

It ſeems ſuch ſmall Houſes, like little fiſhes, could not be caught with the net of Reformation, as ſlipping through the holes thereof, and therefore no way to repreſſe their faults except by ſuppreſſing their foundation. All I will adde is, God firſt puniſhed great Sodome, and ſpared little Zoar, (though probably alſo in fault) here Zoar was firſt puniſhed, let great Sodome beware, and the larger Monaſteries look to themſelves.

5. And now adieu all religious Houſes in England that could not cleerly ſpend above Two hundred pounds per annum, and we muſt not believe any ſiniſter dealing was uſed by favour to wrack the revenues of ſome above, and out of diſlike to ſhrink the rents of others, beneath the ſtandard of diſſolution, when Twenty ſhillings a year, under or over the aforeſaid ſumme, might ſave or deſtroy a ſmall Monaſtery. As for ſuch (if any in that poſture) who had juſt Two hundred pounds, and no more, they were obnoxious to the Statute, whilſt Five ſhillings more ſaved all, as that is a fair ball in the Tennis-Court, which toucheth the line, yet goeth over it.

Exact meaſuring to the ſtandard of diſſolution.

6. Ten thouſand perſons were by this diſſolution ſent to ſeek their fortunes in the wide world, ſome indeed had Fathers or Friends to receive them, others none at all; ſome had Twenty ſhillings given them at their Ejection, and a new Gown, which needed to be of ſtrong cloath to laſt ſo long till they got another. Moſt were expoſed to want. I ſee no ſuch certainty for a comfortable livelihood as a lawfull calling, for Monkiſh profeſſion was no poſſeſſion, and many a young Nun proved an old Beggar. I pity not thoſe who had hands and health to work, but ſurely the gray hairs of ſome impotent perſons deſerved compaſſion, and I am confident ſuch, had they come to the doors of the charitable Reader hereof, ſhould have had a meals meat and a nights lodging given unto them.

Many aged perſons at a loſſe for livelihood.

Abbey-lands politickly scattered among many purchasers.

7. A clear Revenue of Thirty thousand pounds per annum, was here advanced to the Crown, (besides Ten thousand pounds in plate and moveables) though the King enjoyed it but a short time, as passing it away by grant, sale, and exchange to His Subjects. This was done by the politick counsell of the wise Lord Cromwell, not hoping that these small morsels to so many mouthes should satisfie their hunger, but onely intending to give them a taste of the sweetnesse of Abbey-lands. And here Papists plentifully rail upon him in scattering these Lands all abroad, that if any should be so scrupulous as to finde fault with the fact, a general guiltinesse should amount unto innocence: Thus say they, there is no fear that a man shall be condemned for felony, who hath so many receivers in the County; that scarcely a Judge can sit, and surely no Jury can be impanelled upon him, saving such who had been parties with him.

The number of the lesser Monasteries.

[e] See Speed his Catalogue of Valuations.

8. No fewer than Three hundred seventy five Covents (as Sanders doth account them) were dissolved at this time: sure I am, none was left standing in the whole Diocesse of Bangor, where no Foundation was valued[e] at full seventy pounds per annum.

Why the King cajoleth the great Monasteries.

9. We must not forget how in the foresaid Preamble, the King fairly claweth the great Monasteries; wherein, saith He, Religion thanks be to God is right well kept and observed; though He clawed them soon after in another acceptation. The truth is, King Henry could not suppresse the lesser Abbeys but by the consent of the greater Abbots, whereof twenty six (as Barons) voted in the Parliament, who mollified them by this Commendation into a Concurrence with His desire.

Specious uses pretended on heavy penalties.

10. However, most specious uses were pretended (though few perchance had faith firm enough to believe their full performance) That all should be done to the pleasure of Almighty God, and for the honour of the Realm. And particular care is taken in the Statute, as it is printed, for the reservation of many Rents and Services, Corrodice, and Pensions to Founders, Donours, and Benefactors. Order also was taken, that those to whom Abbey-lands were passed, should keep, or cause to be kept a continual House and Household in the same Site or Precinct. They were also to occupy yearly as much of the demeans in Tilledge as the Abbots did, or their Farmers under them, within the time of twenty years next before this Act, otherwise forfeiting to the King's Highnesse for every Moneth so offending 6 lib. 13 s. 4 d. to be recovered to His use in any of His Courts of Record. The arrears whereof, if rigorously exacted, would amount to a vast summe from such Offenders, whose hospitality was contracted to a Shepheard and his Dog, neither relieving those that would work by industry, nor such who could not work by their charity.

Such penalties graciously repealed by King James.

11. These penalties stood in full force above eighty years, viz. untill the 21 of King James, when by Act of Parliament they were repealed. Indeed, such who are obnoxious to penall Statutes are onely innocent by courtesie, and may be made guilty at their Princes pleasure. And though such Statutes may be dormant as disused, they are never dead till revoked, seeing commonly Princes call on such Statutes when themselves are called on by their necessities. Many of the English Gentry knew themselves subject to such penalties, when instead of maintaining Tillage had converted the Granges of Abbeys into inclosures: And therefore provided for their own safety, when they * wrought the King to a revocation of those Statutes.

* See the Statutes the 21 of K. James, c. 28.

Some grudge at so great a grant.

12. But the Courtiers grudged at this Grant and great Indulgence given by the King without any valuable compensation, some sticking not to say, That hereby the King at once gave His Subjects more than ever they gave Him in Subsidies, Benevolences, Contributions, or any other way whatsoever all the time of His Reign. Which, if so, Let no mans eye be evil, because the King's was so good to His Subjects.

The

The Northern Rebellion occasioned by this dissolution.

Northern Rebellion,

WHen all in the School are equally guilty, and the Master beginneth at the bottome to correct the least boyes first, no wonder if those in the highest form begin to shake; as here no doubt the bigger Abbeys did, except some few, who (to follow the Metaphor) like sturdy striplings (counting themselves above correction) began to prepare themselves to make resistance; hence presently arose the Northern Rebellion, wherein all the open Undertakers were North of Trent, though, no doubt, many secret Compliers South of Thames were ingaged.

begun suppressed, punished,

2. This Commotion began first in Lincoln shire, where the Rebels presented six Articles to the King, in the last whereof they complained, That divers Bishops of England of His Graces late promotion, had Subverted the Faith of CHRIST, (as they thought) which is, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of Rochester, Salisbury, S. Davids, and Dublin.

3. This Lincoln shire Commotion being quickly suppressed, and a right understanding begotten betwixt the King and His Subjects, the Rebellious humour removed into York shire, where no fewer than fifty thousand, saith Sanders, were assembled in a body under Robert Aske (a mean Gentleman) their Captain, and one Diamond (though a knave of another suit) who termed himself the Earl of Poverty: yet this distemper also was seasonably cured by the King's pardon, and their submission, till soon after a great part of them fell into a relapse of Rebellion, carrying in their Ensignes the five wounds of our Saviour, the Chalice, with the Hoste, and the Name of JESUS betwixt them; who being vanquished by the King's forces, under the command of the Earle of Shrewesbury, were condignely executed for the same.

Excused by Sanders unjustly.

4. Indeed Sanders, (to whom it is as naturall to defame, as for a stone to descend) complaineth, That the King executed those whom formerly He had pardoned for the same offence, contrary to Gods proceedings, with whom peccata remissa non recurrunt: yea, contrary to equity, and all common justice; but our Chronicles make it plain, that they ran on the score of a new Rebellion (their faults specifically not numerically the same) and justly suffered for their offences therein.

5. Thomas Lord Darcy, and the Lord Hussey (first and last Baron of his Family) were beheaded on this account: The first of these being much bemoaned both for what he had been (a marshall man of merit by sea and land) and for what he was, (decaied, being almost eighty, with old age) insomuch that there goeth a Tradition, that he had the King's Pardon in his pocket, and slept the while the sentence of condemnation was passed on him, and then produced it too late: such (it seems) were the rigorous proceedings against him.

Persons executed,

6. Ask and Diamond were executed in this Rebellion, and so also were six Abbots, namely, of Sanley, Barling, Gerviaux, Whaley, Rivers, with the Prior of Berlington, besides many Gentlemen of prime account, whereof these the chief: Robert Constable, Thomas Piercy, Francis Bigot, Nicholas Musgrave, Nicholas Temple, Stephen Hamilton, Thomas Gilby, William Lomley, John Bulmar and his Wife. However, some pity may seem proper to these persons, as ignorantly zealous, and grieved to behold the destruction of the old Religion before they had received any competent instruction for a new. And thus was there a rout of the most antient of the Northern Gentlemen of the Romish perswasion, who in the next Generation had scarcely rallied themselves again but they were routed the second time in the Rebellion of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmerland.

The return of the Visitors of Abbeys.

The return of the L. Cromwells agents.

BY this time, the Instruments imployed by the Lord Cromwell, to make discovery of the vitious lives of Monks, and Fryers, were all returned in their persons, or in their intelligence sent unto him. They were men, who well understood the Message they went on, and would not come back without a satisfactory answer to him that sent them, knowing themselves were likely to be no losers thereby. And now they had found out water enough to drive the mill, (besides what ran by) a sufficient detection to effect the businesse. Of these, some were put in Commission to visit Abbeys, others moving in a lower, (but no lesse needfull) sphere of activity.

The principall Commissioners.

2. Of these Commissioners the principal were Rich: Layton, Tho: Legh, William Peters, Doctors of the Law; [a] Doctor John London Dean of Wallingford. Of the three former I can say nothing, but finde the later (though imployed to correct others) no great Saint himself. For afterwards he was publickly [b] convicted of perjury, and adjudged to ride with his face to the Horse-tale at Windsor and Ockingham with papers about his head, which was done accordingly.

a L. Herbert in the Life of Hen. 8. p. 398.
b Fox Acts & Mon. p. 1221. where is a picture thereof.

Their two-edged sword.

3. Their power was partly Inquisitive, to search into the former lives of religious persons; partly Impositive, to enjoyn them stricter rules for their future observation. It is hard to say, whether their eyes were more prying for what was past, or hands more heavy for the time to come; and, most true it is, that betwixt both, many Monks formerly lazie in, were now weary of their present profession.

Monks weary of their lives.

4. Some counted their Convents, their Prisons, being thus confined; for, once out of the house, (without lawful cause and leave obtained) and never in again. It was a fine thing when they might, but sad case, when they must, live in their Monasteries; the Eighty six Articles of the Visitors, (looking with Janus partly backward, partly forward) did so vex them, that many who had hopes of others subsistence, cast off the Couls and Vails, and quitted their Convents.

The second sort of insinuating Emissaries.

Others undone by their own dissensions.

THese Visitors were succeeded with a second sort of publick Agents, but working in a more private way, encouraging the members in Monasteries to impeach one another: for seeing there was seldome such general agreement in any great Convent, but that factions were found, and parties did appear therein, these Emissaries made an advantageous use thereof. No Abbey could have been so soon destroyed, but by cunning setting it against it self, and secret fomenting of their own divisions. Whereupon, many being accused, did recriminate their Accusers, and hopelesse to recover their own innocency, pleased themselves by plunging others in the like guiltinesse. Others being conscious to themselves, prevented accusing, by confessing their faults, and those very foul ones. Insomuch that some have so much charity as to conceive, that they made themselves worse than they were, though it was a needlesse work for a Black-Moore to besoot his own face.

A charitable censure.

2. Yea, some hold that as Witches long-tortured with watching and fasting, and pinched when but ready to nod, are contented causlesly to accuse themselves to be eased of the present pain; so some of these poor souls frighted with menaces, and fearing what might be the successe, acknowledged all, and more than all against themselves, the truth whereof none on earth can decide.

Soliciting

Soliciting and tempting Emissaries complained of by the Papists.

THe Papists doe heavily complain (how justly, God alone knoweth) that a third sort of Agents were imployed, to practise on the chastity of the Nuns, so to surprize them into wantonness. Some young Gallants were on designe sent to some Covents, with fair faces, flattering tongues, store of gold, and good cloathes, youth, wit, wantonness, and what else might work on the weaker sex. These having with much craft, screwed themselves into the affections of Nuns, and brought them to their lure, accused them afterwards to the Kings Commissioners for their incontinence. A damnable act, if true, and which mindeth me of the ensuing story, here not impertinently inserted. A devilish design, if true.

2. Some sixty years since, an English Gentleman had the chastity of his Wife in suspition, jealous of a particular person, who kept her company. To put it to triall, this her Husband so contrived the matter, a private place was appointed, with all accommodations for such a deed of darkness, whither the Woman with her suspected Paramore, were by set designe, (but wearing to them the visage of a seeming casualty) brought, and left together. Mean time her Husband made himself Master of a secret inspection out of the next room, where, with some of his friends, he was the witnesse of his Wives dishonesty, and his own disgrace. Soon after he entred his action, sues for a divorce, and the Court seemed generally inclined to the granting thereof. A memorable story.

3. But a Reverend Judge there present, refused to consent thereunto, alledging it the duty of every Husband by his prayers, counsel, and all other lawful means to save and secure the chastity of his Wife; and not to tempt temptations to tempt her: who otherwise might charitably be presumed honest, if such a fore-plotted occasion had not debauched her, and this not the detecting, but first causing of her disloyalty. Seeing therefore in some sort he had been a Pander to his Wife, let him satisfie himself in the assurance of what was doubtfull before, and bear the burthen of his own betraying her. Sin plot, sin pay for.

4. How just this Judges sentence was (all circumstances considered) I will not interpose. Onely in application to the present purpose, though I confesse the relation betwixt Husband and Wife the neerest, (and therefore most obliging to their mutual preservation) the general Principles of Religion, and the Communion of Saints, tieth all Christians, as they tender the honour and glory of God, to preserve the consciences of others undefiled. It was therefore a meer Satanical trick, who is commonly called the [c] Tempter in Scripture, first to sollicite souls to sin, and after the committing thereof to be an [d] Accuser of the brethren. And seeing the Tempter is deeper guilty than the tempted, (as more active and voluntary) no reason that he should escape, and the other be punished. But all this discourse sinketh, the foundation failing, namely, if the premisses cannot be (which as yet are not) proved, that such indirect dealing was used in surprizing of any Votaries into uncleanness. Application as far as concerns the matter in hand.

[c] Mat. 4. 3. & 1 Thes. 3. 5.
[d] Rev. 12. 10.

5. But still the Papists go further, complaining of false returns, that many of these Enveiglers of Nuns met with impregnable pieces of chastity, (neither to be battered by force, nor undermined by fraud) who despairing to lie with their bodies, did lie on their reputations, making their fames to suffer in those false reports, which they returned to the Kings Commissioners. And the following story is, I assure you, traditioned with very much credit amongst our English Catholicks. A complaint of the Papists.

6. Two young Gentlemen (whose names for just cause I forbear) went to a Nunnery within twelve miles of Cambridge, in the nature of Travellers on the high way, who being handsomly habited, and late at night, were admitted into some out-Lodgings of that Nunnery: next day their civil addresses to the Abbesse were returned with such entertainment as became the laws of hospitality. Afterwards (producing or pretending a Commission to visit their Covent) they abode there A sad story, if true.

certain daies, and how bad soever they were, met with no counterpart to embrace their wanton profers. However, at the return they gave it out, that nothing but their wearinesse bounded their wantonnesse, and that they enjoyed those Nuns at their own command.

The Pedigree of this tradition.

7. One of the afore said Gentlemen, with great grief and remorse of heart did in private confesse the same to Sir William Standly Knight, (afterwards imployed in the Low Countreys) avowing that nothing in all his life lay more heavy on his conscience than this false accusation of those Innocents: and the said Sir William told this passage to a noble Catholick still alive. All I will say to this story is this, that if this Sir Will: Standly was he, who contrary to his solemn Oath to the Earl of Leicester and the united States, betrayd the strong City of [e] Daventer to the Spaniards, (and lived many years after in a [f] neglected, forlorn condition) one so faithlesse in his deeds, may be presumed false in his words, and the whole credit of the relation may justly at least be suspected.

Some Covents on examination appearing very vertuous.

Some Covents retaining their primitive piety.
g Lord Herbert in Henry 8. page 399.

IT is confessed by unpartial people, that some Monasteries of both sexes, being put to the test, appeared very commendable in their behaviour, so that the least aspersion could not justly be cast upon them. I read in one [g] Author, that some Societies behaved themselves so well, that their lives were not only exempt from notorious faults, but their spare times bestowed in writing books, painting, carvil, engraving; so that their Visiters became Intercessours for them. Amongst these, the Nunnery of Godstow neer Oxford must not be forgotten, which as it hath a good name, (being a Bethel, that is, Gods house or habitation) well answered thereunto, in the conditions of the people living therein.

But too few to preserve the rest.
b Gen. 18.

2. But there were few such black swans, and these innocent Covents being inconsiderable in number, could not preserve the rest from ruine. Eight, and one, pious persons, are insufficient to save Sodome from destruction, [b] if ten be the lowest number to which Divine Mercy will descend.

3. One Sir Henry Colt of Neither-Hall in Eſſex, much in favour with K. Henry the eighth for his merry conceits, ſuddenly took his leave of Him late at night, promiſing to wait on His Grace early the next morning. Hence he haſtned to Waltham-Abbey, being informed by his ſetters, that the Monks thereof would return in the night from Cheſhunt-Nunnery, where they had ſecretly quartered themſelves: Sir Henry pitcht a Buckſtall (wherewith he uſed to take Deer in the Foreſt) in the narroweſt place of the Marſh where they were to paſſe over, leaving ſome of his Confederates to manage the ſame.

A coltiſh trick ſerved upon the Monks of Waltham.

4. The Monks, coming out of the Nunnery, hearing a great noiſe made behind them, and ſuſpecting to be diſcovered, put out the light they had with them, whoſe feet without eyes could finde the way home in ſo uſed a pathe. Making more haſt than good ſpeed, they ran themſelves all into the Net. The next morning Sir H. Colt brought, and preſented them to King Henry, who had often ſeen ſweeter, but never fatter Veniſon.

5. Here I cannot believe what is commonly told of under-ground Vaults leading from Fryeries to Nunneries, confuted by the ſcituation of the place, through Rocks improbably, and under Rivers impoſſible to be conveyed. Surely had Waltham Monks had any ſuch ſubterraneau contrivances, they would never have made uſe of ſo open a paſſage; and ſuch Vaults extant at this day in many Abbeys extend but a few paces, generally uſed for the conveyance of water, or ſewers to carry away the filth of the Covent.

More talk than truth of under-ground Vaults.

It was never my hap to behold any Instrument with such a lustfull clause, or wanton reservation therein, and shall hardly be induced to believe it: First, because such turpis conditio was null in the very making thereof. Secondly, because it was contrary to the Charta magna, as I may call it, of Monasticall practise, Si non caste, tamen caute; wherefore what private compact soever was by word of mouth made betwixt them upon their Leases parole, sure all Abbots were, (if not so honest) so discreet, that no act in scriptis should remain, which on occasion might publickly be produced against them.

To the Right Honourable, Master Thomas Cromwell, chief Secretary to the Kings Highnesse.

IT maye pleasse your goodnesse to understand that ? Bushope this day preched, and declared the Kynges tytelle very well, and hade a grete Audyense, the Chorche full of people, one of the * Focaces in his said declaration, only called him false knave, with other fooliſh words; it was the fooliſh fellow, with the corled head that kneeled in your waye when you came forth of the Confessores Chamber. I can no lesse doe, but set him in prisone, ut pœna ejus sit metus aliorum: yesterday I learned many enormous thinges against Bushope, in the examination of the lay Brederen, first that Bushope perswaded towe of the Brederene to have gone theire wayes by night, and he himselfe with them, and to the accomplishment of that, they lacked but money to buy them seculere apparell. Further, that Bushope would have perswaded one of his lay-Brederen a Smithe, to have made a keay for the doare, to have in the night time received in Wenches for him and his fellowes, and especially a Wiffe of Uxebridge, now dwelling not farre from the old Lady Derby, nigh Uxebridge: which Wiffe his old customer hath byne many times here at the grates communing with the said, and he was desirous to have her convoyed in to him. The said Bushope also perswaded a Nunne, to whom he was Confessour, ad libidinem corporis perimplendam. And thus he perswaded her in Confession, making her believe, that whensoever, and as ofte as they shold medle together, if she were, immediately after, confessed by him, and tooke of him absolution, she shold be cleere forgeven of God, and it shold be none offence unto her before God. And she writte diveres and sundrye Lettores unto him of such their fooliſhnesse and unthriftynesse, and wold have had his Broden the Smithe to have polled out a barre of iron of the window, whereas the examyned the Ladye Abbas, that he might have gone in to her by night. q And that same window was their commoning place by night. He perswaded the Sextene that he would be in his contemplacion in the Chorche by night, and by that meanes was many nightes in the Chorche talking with her at the saide gate of the Nunnes Quire, and there was their meeting place by night besides their day communications, as in confession: It were too long to declare all thinges of him that I have heard, which I suppos it true. This afternoone I intend to make forder serche, both of some of the Brederen, and some also of the Sisters of such like matteres; if I synde any thing apparent to be true, I shall God willing thereof sertefy your Maistorshipe to morow, by vij in the mornyng. And after this daye I suppos there will be no other thinges to be knowne as yet here; for I have already already examined all the Brederen, and many of them wold gladly departe hense, and be ryghte weary of their habbyte; such Religion, and fained sanctetye, God save me frot. If Master Bedle had byne here a Frior, and of Bushopes counsell, he wold right welle have helped him to have breghte his mattores to passe, without brekyng uppe of any grate, or yet counterfetting of keayes, such capassetye God hath sent him.

From Syone this Sondaye xij. Decembere. By the speedy hand of your assured poor Priest, Richard Layton.*

* This was one of the prime Visitors afore-mentioned.

We will conclude this discourse with one observation, how through ignorance the true meaning of that word [Recluse] was in that Age abused: For, in pure Latine it signifieth, one set open, or let loose to their own liberty;

* Quid non ebrietas designat, operta recludit?

* Hor. lib. 1. Epist. 5.

whereas Recluse was taken in that Age for one close shut up: so that many Monks and Fryers were Recluses indeed, not in the common acception, but true notation of that name.

Abbots willingly unwilling resigned their Monasteries to the King.

Sanders saith, that King Henry sent a large Instrument to every Monastery, fairly ingrossed in Parchment, enjoyning them all to subscribe, signe, and seal the same, with their seale conventual, upon the pain of His displeasure. It is not probable that such a formal Writing was sent unto them, drawn up before-hand by the Kings Officers; but most certain it is (which amounts almost to as much in effect) a generall intimation was given to all Houses, how acceptable such an act would be to the King. It was also pressed upon the said Monks, Fryers, and Nuns, that they (through their vitiousnesse) being obnoxious to the Kings anger, this might, and would be done without their consent; so that it was better for them, rebus sic stantibus, to make a vertue of necessity; the rather, because this complement conduced nothing to the Kings right, (on whom the Parliament had already bestowed those Abbey lands) but might adde much to their own advantage, as being the way whereby their Pensions might the more easily be procured, largely allotted, and surely satisfied unto them.

Monks perswaded into a resignation.

2. The premisses made such impression on the parties concerned therein, that fearing the Lagge would be looked on with bad eyes, they ran, as it were, a race, in their resignations, who should be first and foremost therein. However they used severall forms therein, some onely condemning their lives for superstitious, but not confessing themselves personally vitious, as by the following Instrument may appear.

Strive who should be the foremost.

The ‡ surrender of the Warden and Fryers of S. Francis in Stanford.

‡ Out of the Records of the Court of Augmentation.

For as moche as we, the Warden, and Freers, of the Howse of Sayne Frances in Stanforde, comenly callyd the gray Freers in Stanforde, in the Countey of Lincolne, doo profoundly consider that the perfeccion of Christian lyving dothe not conciste in the dome ceremonies, weryng of the grey coote, disgeasing our selffe after straunge fashions, dokyng, and beckyng, in gurding owr selffes wyth a gurdle full of knots, and other like rapisticall ceremonies, wherein we have byn moost principally practlysed, and misselyd in tymes past; but the very tru waye to please God, and to live a tru Christian man, wythe owte all ypocrasie, and fayned dissimulation, is sinceerly declaryd unto us by owr Master Christe, his Evangelists, and Apostles. Being mindyd hereafter to folowe the same, conformyng owr selffe unto the will and pleasure of owr supreme hedde undre God in erthe the Kinges Majestye; and not to follow hensforth the superstitious tradicions of ony forincycall potentate, or poore, withe mutuall assent, *aſſent, and conſent, doo ſubmyt owr ſelffes unto the mercye of owr ſaid ſoverayngne Lorde. And withe like mutuall aſſent, and conſent, doo ſurrender, and yelde upe unto, the hands of the ſame, all owr ſaide howſe of Sayn*t Frances in Stanforde, comenly callyd the grey Freers in Stanforde, withe all Landꝭ, tenementꝭ, gardenꝭ, medowes, waters, pondyards, feedings, paſtures, comens, rentes, reverſions, and all other our intereſt, ryghtes, or tytles, aperteying unto the ſame; mooſte humbly beſeechyng His mooſte Noble grace, to diſſpoſe of us, and of the ſame as beſt ſchall ſtonde withe His mooſte gracious pleaſure. And farther, freely to graunt unto every one of us His licens undre wretyng and ſeall, to change our abites into ſeculer faſhion, and to receive ſuch maner of livyngs, as other ſeculer Prieſtes comenly be preferryd unto. And we all faythfully ſchall pray unto Almighty God long to preſerve His mooſt noble grace, wyth encreaſe of moche felicitie and honor.

And in witnes of all and ſinguler the premiſſes, we the ſaide Warden, and Covent of the grey Freers in Stanforde, to theſe preſents have put owr Covent Sceall the yeght day of Octobre, in the thyrtythe yere of the Raygne of owr mooſt Soverayne King Henry the yeght.

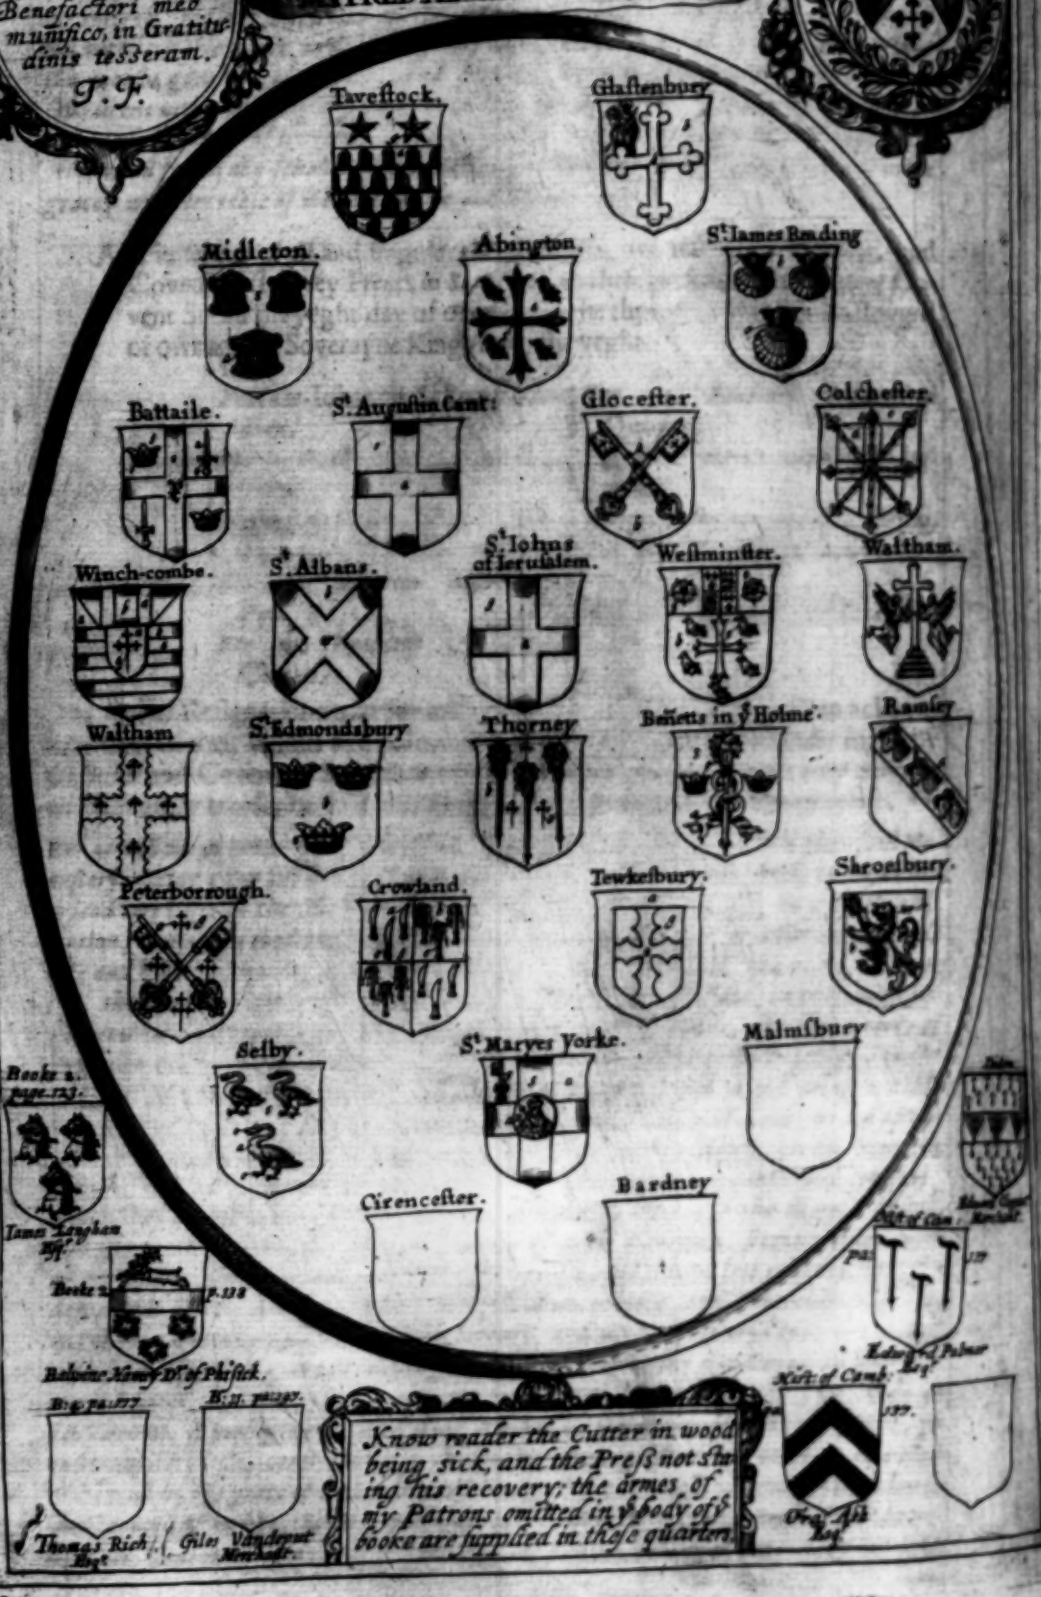
3. Other Reſignations were far more humble and ſubmiſſive, with an acknowledgment of their vitious and voluptuous lives; ſuch was the ſurrender made by the Prior and Covent of S. Andrews in Northampton, which becauſe very tedious, we ſhall onely tranſcribe ſo much thereof as concerneth our preſent purpoſe.



But as well we as others our predeceſſors, called religiouſe perſons within yowr ſaid Monaſtery, taking on us the habite of owtward veſture of the ſaid rule, onely to the intent to lead owr liffes in the ydle quyetneſſe, and not in vertuoſe exercyſe, in a ſtately eſtimation, and not in obedient humylyte, have undre the ſhadowe, or color of the ſaide rule and habite, vaynely, deteſtably, and alſo ungodly, employed, yea rather devowred, the yerely revennes yſſuing and comyng of the ſaide poſſeſſions, in continuall ingurgitations and farcyngs of owr carayne bodyes, and of others, the ſupportares of owr voluptuoſe and carnal appetyte, with other vayne and ungodly expenſys; to the manyfeſt ſubvertion of devocion, and clennes of lyvyng; and to the mooſt notable ſlaunder of Chriſts holy Evangely, which in the forme of owr profeſſyon, we did oſtentate, and openly devaunt to kepe mooſt exactly: withdrawyng thereby from the ſymple, and pure myndys of yowr graces ſubjectes, the onely truth and comfort, which they oughte to have by the true faith of Chriſte. Other Reſignations varying in their words met (for the maine) in the matter, and were with all ſpeed preſented to the Kings Viſitors: As School-boyes hope to eſcape with the fewer ſtripes for being the firſt in untying their points, thoſe Convents promiſed to themſelves the kindeſt uſage, which were forwardeſt in their Reſignations, though all (on the matter) fared alike.

4. Yea, John de Warboiſe ſo called from the place of his nativity in Huntingdan ſhire (where my worthy friend Mr. William Johnſon is well beneficed) though the firſt, with his ſixty Benedicti Monks, who with ſolemn ſubſcription renounced the Popes Supremacy, and now as officious as any in ſurrendring his Convent to the Kings Viſitors, met with no peculiar and extraordinary civility above others of his Ordir. Betwixt firſt and laſt no great difference. a Spted in his deſcription of Huntingdon-ſhire.

5. Such Reſignations ſeal'd and deliver'd, the Viſitors called for the Seales themſelves (which now had ſurvived their own uſe, having paſſed the laſt effectual Act) and theſe generally made of ſilver, were by the Kings Officers preſently broken in pieces. Such material Stamps being now aboliſhed, it will be charity to preſerve their Impreſſions, and exhibit them to poſterity, which here we ſhall endeavour, rendring ſome probable reaſon how moſt of them referre to the Founders, or ſcituation, or ſome remarkable action therein.

The Seale of Armes of the Mitred Abbeys in England.

IN preſenting of them, I will not be confined to the ſtrict termes of Blazonry, the rather, becauſe ſome of their Armes may be preſumed ſo antient, as fitter to give Rules to, than take them from our moderne Heraldry: And what my pen cannot ſufficiently deſcribe, therein the Reader may ſatisfie himſelfe by his own eye: To which theſe Cotes are preſented in the laſt ſheet of this Volume after the Hiſtory of Waltham Abbey. The deſigne of the work.

1. I will make a method of my own beginning (where the Sun ends) in the Weſt: Taveſtock in Devon ſhire gave Varrey Or and Azure, on a Chiefe Or, two Mullets, Gules. The Armes of Taveſtocke.

2. Glaſſenbury gave Vert (as I conjecture the Colour) a Croſſe Bottone Argent. In the firſt Quarter the Woman with a Glory holding a Babe (radiated about his head) in her Armes, becauſe [forſooth] by the direction of the Angel * Gabriel their Church was firſt dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Of Glaſſenbury.

* See the firſt Cent. Parag. 11.

Of Middleton.

3. Middleton in Glouceſter-ſhire gave Sable, three Baskets Argent repleniſhed with Loaves of Bread, Gules. Had the number of the Baskets been either Seven or Twelve, ſome would interpret therein a reference to the Reverſions preſerved by Chriſt his command of the Loaves miraculouſly multiplied: whereas now they denote the Bounty of that Abbey in relieving the poor.

Of Malmsbury

4. What Malmesbury in Wiltſhire gave I cannot yet attain.

Of Abingdon.

5. Abingdon gave a Croſſe flurt betwixt Martelletts Sable, much alluding to the Armes of our Engliſh Kings before the Conqueſt, who, it ſeems were great Benefactors thereunto.

Of Reading.

6. The Abbey of S. James in Reading, gave Azure three Scallop Shells Or. Here I know not what ſecret ſympathy there is between S. James and Shells, but ſure I am that all Pilgrims that viſit St. James of Compos-Stella in Spaine (the Paramount Shrine of that Saint) returned thence obſiti conchis*, all beſhell'd about on their clothes, as a religious Donative there beſtowed upon them.

* Erasmus in his Dialogue, called Peregrinatio Religionis ergo.

Of Hide.

7. The Abbey of Hide, juxta Winton. gave Argent a Lyon rampant Sable, on a cheiff of the ſecond, four Keyes Argent.

Of Battaile.

8. Battaile-Abbey in Suſſex gave Gules a Croſſe betwixt a Crown Or, in the firſt and third Quarter. A Sword (bladed Argent, hilted Or) in the ſecond and fourth Quarter thereof. Here the Armes relate to the Name, and both Armes and Name to the fierce Fight hard by, whereby Duke William gained the Engliſh-Crown by Conqueſt, and founded this Abbey. Nor muſt it be forgotten, that a Text ℣ pierced through with a daſh, is fixed in the navill of the Croſſe. Now, though I have read, * Letters to be little honourable in Armes, this cannot be diſgracefull, partly becauſe Church-Heraldrie moveth in a ſphere by it ſelf, partly becauſe this was the Letter of Letters, as the received character to ſignifie Chriſtus.

* Accidence of Armes.

Of S. Auguſtine.

9. S. Auguſtines in Canterbury gave Sable a Croſs-Argent.

Of Glouceſter.

10. Croſſe we now the Thames, where Weſtward we firſt fall on S. Peters in Glouceſter, whoſe Dedication to that Apoſtle ſufficiently rendreth a reaſon for the Armes thereof, viz: Azure two Croſſe Keyes (or two Keyes Saltire) Or.

Of Tewxbury.

11. Tewxbury gave Gules, a Croſs of an antick form Or, a border Argent.

Of Winchcomb.

12. I will not adventure on the blazoning of the Armes of Winchcombe (having much conformity therein with Mortimers Coat) but leave the Reader to ſatisfie his own eyes in the inſpection thereof.

Of Cirencester.

13. I ſhould be thankfull to him who would inform me of the Armes of Ciranceſter, which hitherto I cannot procure.

Of S. Albans.

14. * St. Albans gave Azure a Croſs Saltire Or.

* S. Mary's in Coventry had no Armes in their Seale, as my good friend Mr. Dugdale informed me.

15. Weſtminſter-Abbey gave Azure a Croſs flurt betwixt five Martelletts Or, and this I humbly conceive were antiently the entire Armes of that Abbey being in effect the ſame with thoſe of King Edward the Confeſſour the firſt Founder thereof: But afterwards their Conventuall Seale was augmented with the Armes of France and England on a Chiefe Or betwixt two Roſes Gules, plainly relating to King Henry the ſeventh, enlarging their Church with his Chappell.

Of S. John of Jeruſalem.

16. The Prior of St. John of Jeruſalem gave Gules a Croſs Argent, which the Lord Prior ſometimes [a] impayled with (but before) his own Coate, and [b] ſometimes bare it in a Chiefe about it.

[a] Thus Sir Tho. Treſſam.

[b] Thus Sir Tho. Duckwray.

Of Waltham.

17. The Armes of Waltham-Abbey in Eſſex, appear at this day neither in glaſs, wood, nor ſtone, in, or about the Town or Church thereof. At laſt we have recovered them (Unus homo nobis) out of a faire Deed of Robert Fullers, the laſt Abbot, though not certain of the mettall and colours, viz: Gules, (as I conjecture) two Angels (can they be leſſe than Or?) with their hands (ſuch we finde of them in [c] Scripture) holding betwixt them a Croſs Argent, brought hither (ſaith our [d] Antiquary) by miracle out of the Weſt, whence Waltham hath the addition of Holy-Croſs.

[c] Mat. 4. 6.

[d] Camd. Brit in Eſſex.

Of Colcheſter.

18. The Arms of S. Johns in Colcheſter, I leave to the eye of the Reader.

Of Bury.

19. Burie gave Azure three Crowns Or, The Armes of the Kings of the Eaſt-Angles, aſſumed in the memory of King Edmund (to whom this Abbey was dedicated) dicated) martyred by the Danes, when his Crown of Gold, thorough a Crown of Thorns (or Arrows rather) was turned into a Crown of Glory.

Of S. Benets.

20. St. Benet's in the Holme, in Norfolke, gave Sable, a Pastorall-Staffe Argent, picked below, and reflexed above, (intimating the Abbots Episcopal Jurisdiction in his own precincts) betwixt two Crowns-Or, pointing at England and Norway, the two Kingdomes of Canutus, the Founder thereof. The aforesaid Staffe was insulated, that is, adorned with an holy Lace or Label, carelesly hanging down, or cast a crosse, such with which their Mitres used formerly to be fastned.

Of Thorny.

21. Thorney-Abbey in Cambridge shire gave Azure three Crosses crossed fitchee, betwixt three Pastoral Staves Or.

Of Ramsey.

22. Ramsey in Huntingdon-shire gave Or three Rams Heads couped Argent, on a Bend Azure: The rest of the Rams must be supposed in the blue Sea, the Fennes, appearing such when overflown. Besides, such changes were common here, whereof Melibaus complaineth in the Marishes * of Mantua.

* Virgil. Ecl. 9.

Non bene ripæ
Creditur, ipse Aries etiam nunc vellera siccat.
There is no trusting to the foundring bank.
The Ramme still dries his fleece so lately dank.

But, since the draining of the Fennes hath (I hope) secured their Cattell from casualties.

Of Peterborough.

23. The very name of Peterborough unlocks the reason why that Abbey gave Gules, two crosse Keyes betwixt four Crosses crossed fitchee, Or.

Of Crowland.

24. Crowland Abbey gave quarterly three (call them long Knives, or short) Swords bladed Argent hafted or pomelled Or, Azure three Whips stringed and knotted Or, the second like the third, the fourth like the first. Instruments of cruelty relating to their Monks massacred by the Danes, Anno 870. whereof their Historian gives us this account, That first they were examinati, tortured, see there the Whips; and then exanimati, killed, see there the Swords. But if any will have those Whips to relate to the Whip of S. Bartholomew, the most remarkable Relique of that Monastery, I will not appose.

Ingulphus, pag. 866.

Of Evesham.

25. The Armes of Evesham-Abbey in Worcester-shire, I cannot recover, but possibly may before the conclusion of this Work.

Of Shrewsbury.

26. Shrewsbury gave Azure, a Lyon Rampant over a Pastorall-staffe Bendwayes, so that both the ends thereof are plainly discovered.

Of Selby.

27. Crosse we now North of Trent, where onely two remain: Selby (founded by William the Conquerour) which gave Sable, three Swans Argent, membred Or, alluding, as I believe, to the depressed scituation of the place, where the neighbouring River of Ouse affordeth such Birds in abundance.

Of Yorke.

28. St. Maryes in Yorke gave Argent a Crosse, Gules, and a Key, in the first Quarter of the same. In the midst of the Crosse a King in a circle in his Robes of state, with his Scepter and Mound: Yet hath he onely a ducall Cap (and no Crown) on his head. I humbly conceive (under favour of better judgments) this King-Dukes picture to relate partly to King William Rufus, partly to Alan Duke of Britain and Richmond, the principall Co-Founders of that Monastery.

The Lord Darcy his Extraction justly vindicated.

A causelesse aspersion grounded on passion.

AMongst the principal persons who suffred for their zeale in defending of Abbeys was the lately mentioned Thomas Lord [a] Darcy, whose extraction I finde foully aspersed by the pen of that passionate Prince, K. Henry the eighth: for when the Rebels boasted of the many Noblemen who sided with them, in confutation thereof, King Henry returned a Letter to them, interlined with His own hand, wherein this passage, [b Others, as the Lord Marney and Darcy are but mean, scarce well-born Gentlemen, and yet of no great Lands till they were promoted by Us, and so made Knights.] It cannot be denied but that K. Henry

[a] ide supra, pag. 313. parag. 1.

[b] Speeds Ch. 6. in his 1 Edit. pag. 776.

too much consulted His choller (now swelling high, because opposed by the Rebels) more than His judgment in this His expression; and seeing an Historian should, suum cuique tribuere, give me leave a little to enlarge in this subject.

What the Lord Marney was.

2. Of the Lord Marney, I can say but little, finding him whilst as yet but a Knight, Sir Henry, Servant, and one of the Executors to the Lady Margaret, Countesse of Darby: at which time, he was Chancellour of the Dutchie of Lancaster. It seemeth he rose by the Law, being the first and last Baron of his name, whose sole Daughter was married to Thomas Howard Vicount Bindon.

Three noble Branches of the Darcyes in the North.

3. Longer must we insist on the Parentage, performances, and posterity of Thomas Lord Darcy, finding in the North three distinct branches thereof, whereof the first was

6. Thomas Darcy here named is the perſon, the ſubject of this diſcourſe, of whom four things are memorable:

1. He was Knighted by K. Henry the ſeventh, who made him Captain of the Town and Caſtle of Barwick, * and Commander of the Eaſt and Middle Marches.

* primus Miles de anno 14 Henrici 7.

2. K. Henry the eighth, in the firſt year of his Reign, made him Juſtice in Eyre of the Foreſts beyond Trent, ſummoned him the ſame yeare as a Baron to Parliament, imployed him with a Navie, An. 1511. to aſſiſt Ferdinand King of Arragon againſt the Moores, and made him Knight of the Garter.

3. Though the Anceſtours of this Thomas Darcy (ſince the ſecond Branch was expired) were ſtyled Lords in ſome Deeds (whether by the courteſie of the Countrey, or becauſe the right of a Barony lay in them) yet this Thomas was the firſt ſummoned Baron to Parliament, in the firſt of King Henry the eighth, and his Succeſſours took their place accordingly.

4. Though the Revenue of this Thomas Lord Darcy was not great at the beginning of King Henry the eighth, (becauſe the Heires Generall of the Lord Darcyes of Knaith carried away the maine of the Inheritance) yet he had a conſiderable Eſtate, augmented by his Match with Donſabella the Daughter and Heire of Sir Richard Tempeſt.

The reſult of all is this, This Lord was moſt Honourably deſcended, and his Nobility augmented; not firſt founded by K. Henry the eighth, as his words did intimate. Let therefore paſſionate Princes ſpeak what they pleaſe, their patient Subjects will believe but their juſt proportion. And although the Foxes eares muſt be reputed horns whilſt the Lyon in preſence is pleaſed ſo to term them; yet they never alter their nature, and quickly recover the name after the Lyons departure. This I thought fit to write in vindication of the Lord Darcy, who though he owed his life to the Law, it is cruelty he ſhould loſe both it and the juſt honour of his Extraction.

7. As for the preſent Coigniers Lord Darcy, he is not onely deſcended from the foreſaid Lord Thomas, but alſo from the Heire Generall of the ſecond Stem of the Lord Darcyes of Knaith, and was by King Charles accordingly reſtored to take his place in Parliament.

The antient Engliſh Nobility great Loſers by the Diſſolution of Abbeys.

Antient Nobility loſers.

ALthough many Modern Families have been great Gainers by the deſtruction of Monaſteries, yet the Antient Nobility (when caſting up their Audits) found themſelves much impaired thereby both in power and profit, commodity and command: I mean ſuch, whoſe Anceſtours had been Founders of Abbeys, or great Benefactours unto them. Theſe reſerved to themſelves and their Heirs many Annual Rents and Services, Reliefs, Eſcuage, as alſo that ſuch Abbots and their Succeſſours ſhould doe Fealty and Homage to their Heirs for ſuch Lands as they held of them in Knights Service.

Good rents ill paid.

2. Now although order was taken at the diſſolution to preſerve ſuch Rents to the Founders Heires (payable unto them by the Kings Officers out of the Exchequer) yet ſuch ſummes after long attendance were recovered with ſo much difficulty that they were loſt in effect. Thus, when the few ſheaves of the Subject are promiſcuouſly made up in the Kings mowe, it is hard to finde them there, and harder to fetch them thence.

Services wholly loſt.

3. As for the foreſaid Services reſerved (either at money, or money-worth) to them them and their Heires, they were totally and finally extinguished: for formerly such Abbeys used

1. To send men on their own Charges in Voyages to Warre to aid and attend such of their Founders and Benefactors Heires, of whom they held Land in Knights service.
2. They bountifully contributed a Portion to the Marriage of their eldest Daughters.
3. They bear the Costs and charges to accoutre their eldest Sonnes in a gentile military equipage when Knighted by the King.

But now the Tree being pluckt up by the roots, no such fruit could afterwards be expected.

With the commodity of Corrodies.

4. Not must we forget the benefit of Corrodies, so called à conradendo, from eating together: for, the Heires of the foresaid Founders (not by courtesie, but composition for their former favours) had a priviledge to send a set number of their poor Servants to Abbeys to diet therein: Thus many aged Servants past working not feeding (costly to keep, and cruell to cast off) were sent by their Masters to such Abbeys where they had plentifull food during their lives. Now though some of those Corrodies (where the property was altered into a set summe of money) was solvable out of the Exchequer after the dissolution of Abbeys; yet such which continued in kinde was totally extinct, and no such Diet hereafter given where both Table and House were overturned.

The Premisses proved by instance in the Family of the Berkeleys.

THe Noble Family of the Berkeleys may well give an Abbots Mitre for the Crest of their Armes, because so loving their Nation, and building them so many Synagogues. Hence it was, that partly in right of their Auncestors, partly by their Matches with the Co-heirs of the Lord Mowbray and Seagrave, in the Vacancies they had a right of Nomination of an Abbot, in following Foundations.

Place.	Founder.	Order.	Value. L. s. d. ob. q.
1. S. Augustines in Bristoll.	1. Robert Fitz-Harding, whose posterity assumed the name of Berkeley.	1. Black Canons of the Order of S. Victor.	—767-15-3-00
2. Burton Lane in Leicester shire.	2. The Lord Mowbray in the Reign of K. Henry the first.	2. Leprous people professing the Order of S. Augustine.
3. Byland, or Bella-Launda, in York sh.	3. Robert de Mowbray, & Gunnora his Mother.
4. Chancomb in Northampton shire.	4. Hugh de Anaf. Knt, in the time of the Conq. whose Son Robert took the name of Chancomb, & Annabilia his daughter was married to Gilbert Lord Seagrave.
5. Combe in Warwick shire.
6. Croxton in Leicester shire.		6. Premonstratentian Monks.	—458-19-11-1-1
7. Ebworth in the Isle of Axholme in Lincoln shire.	7. Tho: Mowbray Earl of Notingham in the Reign of K. Rich. the 2. to which the Mowbrays were grand Benefactors.	7. Carthusians.	—290-14—

10. Newburge in York-shire.

What shall I speak of the small Houses of Longbridge and Tintern in Glocestershire, not (mentioned in Speed) the Hospitals of S. Katharine and Mary Maudlins neer Bristol, the well endowed Schoole of Wotton Underhedge in Glocester shire, besides forty Chanteries founded by the Berkeleys: yea, I have read in a Manuscript belonging unto them, no lesse judiciously than industriously composed by Mr. John Smith (who did, and received many good offices to, and from that Family, as is mutually confessed) that the forenamed Abbeys and others, held of the Lord Berkeley at the dissolution, no fewer than eighty Knights fees, and payed services unto them accordingly, all which are now lost to the value of ten thousand pounds within the compasse of few years.

2. Nor will it be amisse to insert, that Robert Derby the last Abbot of Croxton, was presented thereunto, April 22. the 26 of King Henry the eighth, by Thomas (the sixt of that name) Lord Berkeley, (the place being void by the death of one Atter cliffe) belonging to his possession by inheritance. And in the Record, he commandeth the Prior and Convent to receive and obey him as Abbot. Rob. Derby last Abbot of Croxton.

Ingratitude to their Founders, a grand fault in many Abbeys.

INgratitude is the abridgement of all baseneſſe, a fault never found unattended with other vitiousness. This is justly charged on the account of many Abbeys, whose stately structures grew so proud as to forget the Rock whence they were Hewen, and the Hole of the Pit whence they were digged: unthankfull to such Founders who under God had bestowed their maintenance upon them. If unthankfull all bad.

2. One instance of many. Vast was the liberality of the Lord Berkeleys to S. Austins in Bristoll, leaving themselves in that their large Estate not one Rectory to which they might present a Chaplaine: all the Benefices in their numerous Manours being appropriated to this and other Monasteries: Now see the Requitall. Great bounty.

3. Maurice, the first of that name, Lord Berkeley, having occasion to make the ditch about his Castle the broader (for the better fortifying thereof) took in some few feet of ground out of Berkeley Church-yard, which Church with the Tithes thereof, his Ancestors had conferred on the aforesaid Monastery. The Abbot beholding this as a great trespasse, or rather, as a little sacriledge, so prosecuted the aforesaid Lord with Church censures, that he made him in a manner cast the dirt of the ditch in his own face, inforcing him to a publick confession of his fault, and to give Five shillings rent for ever, with some Tithes and Pasture for as many Oxen as would till a Plow-land, by the words of his Will, Pro emendatione culpæ meæ de fossato quod feci de Cœmiterio de Berkeley circa castellum meum. Ill requited.

4. I know it will be pleaded for the Abbot that there is as much right in an inch as in an ell, that he was a Fiduciary intrusted to defend the rights of his Covent, that Founders Heirs are not priviledged to doe injuries; yea, they of all persons most improper to take back what their Ancestors have given. However, the Lords incroachment on the Church-yard being in a manner done in his own defence, the thing in it self so small, and the merit of his Ancestors so great to that Abbey, might have met with that meekneſſe which should be in the brests of all Spirituall persons to abate his rigorous prosecution againſt him. Summum jus.

5. Thomas the first Lord Berkeley of that name, found little better usage from the Abbot of S. Austines, though he had formerly (besides confirmation of many Lands) conferred on that Convent pasture for Twenty four Oxen; discharging also their Lands (lying within certain of his Manours) from all Services and Earthly demands, onely to remember him and his in their prayers; yet did that Abbot and Convent implead him before the Popes Delegates for Tythes of Paunage of his Woods, for Tythes of his Fishing and of his Mills. The Lord removed the Suit to Common Law, (as challenging the sole power to regulate Modum Dicimandi:) And now when all was ready for a Tryall before the Judge itinerant Another instance of ingratitude.

itinerant at Glouceſter, it was compounded by Friends on ſuch Terms as the Abbot in effect gained his deſire.

A cauſe of their ruine. * For the diſſolution of Chanteries & Colledges, 37 of Hen. 8. cap. 4.

6. Indeed, ſo odious and obvious was the unthankfulneſſe of ſome Convents, that it is reputed by ſome, the moſt meritorious Cauſe of their Diſſolution, and their doing things without and againſt the Will of their Founders is inſtanced in the * Statute as a main Motive to take them away.

An overwiſe conceit

7. Some who pretend to a Prometheus wit, fondly conceive that the Founders of Abbeys might politickly have prevented their diſſolution had they inſerted a proviſion in their Foundations, That in caſe Abbey Lands ſhould be alienated to other uſes againſt or beſides the Owners intents, then ſuch Lands ſhould revert to the true Heirs of the ſaid Founders, if then in beeing.

Eaſily confuted.

8. But ſuch conſider not that ſuch a Reſervation would have ſavoured more of wildneſſe than wiſdome in that Age: as well might one have ſought to ſecure himſelf with a ſhelter againſt tha falling of the skies as equally probable as the diverting of Abbey-Lands to other intentions. Beſides, ſuch a jealous clauſe might be interpreted hereticall to put into peoples fancies a ſeizability of ſuch alterations: Yea, I have heard it queſtioned by the Learned in the Law, whether ſuch a conditionall ſettlement with ſuch a clauſe were Legall or no, many maintaining that ſuch Donations muſt be abſolute. But ſuppoſe ſuch a Clauſe in their Foundations, it had not much befriended them at this time, ſeeing Cables are as eaſily cut off as Twine-threads by power of Parliament, when diſpoſed to make ſuch a diſſolution.

Strong faith to believe ſo much of King Henry's charity

9. Now ſome conceived it juſt Abbey-Lands ſhould have been reſtored to the Heirs of their Founders; but ſeeing the moſt and greateſt Abbeys were built and endowed before the Conqueſt, it was hard to finde out their Heirs, if extant. Beſides this would miniſter matter of much litigiouſneſſe equally to ſhare them amongſt their many Benefactors. Wherefore the King the Founder Generall of them all, mediately or immediatly in himſelf or in His Subjects, as who in His perſon or Anceſtors confirmed, conſented, or at leaſt connived at their Foundations, may charitably be preſumed to ſeize them all into His own hands; ſo to cut off the occaſion of dangerous diviſion amongſt His ſubjects about the partition of thoſe Eſtates.

SECT.

SECTION V.

To the Right Honourable,

The Lady ELIZABETH POWLET of St. George-Hinton.

MADAM,

THere be three degrees of gratitude according to mens ſeverall abilities: The firſt is to requite, the ſecond to deſerve, the third to confeſſe a benefit received. He is a happy man, that can doe the firſt, no honeſt man that would not doe the ſecond, a diſhoneſt man who doth not the third.

I muſt be content (in reference to your favours on me) to ſit down in the laſt Form of thankfulneſſe, it being better to be a Lagge, in that Schoöl, than a Trewant, not at all appearing therein. Yea, according to our Saviours counſell and comfort, the loweſt place is no hindrance to a * higher, when the Maſter of the houſhold ſhall be pleaſed to call him up. When this is done, and God ſhall ever enable me with more might, my gratitude ſhall wait on your Lady-ſhip in a greater proportion.

Mean time, this Preſent (having otherwiſe little of worth) may plead ſomthing of properneſſe therein, ſeeing Somerſet-ſhire is the chief ſubject of this Section, the ſame County, which receiveth honour from You by Your Birth, and returneth it to You by Your Baronry therein. God bleſſe You in all Your relations, and make Your afflictions, which are briers and thiſtles in themſelves, become ſweet-brier, and holy-thiſtle by ſanctifying them unto You.

* Luke 14.10.

Of Miracles in generall, to which Monaſteries did much pretend.

RIGHT is the Rule of what is So, and what is otherwiſe. We will therefore premiſe the deſcription of a true Miracle. A Miracle is a work of God, paſſing the power of nature done for the confirmation of Faith on the Miſſion generally of a new Miniſtry.

A true Miracle deſcribed.

1. Worke of God] [a] who onely doth wondrous things. For though He ſometimes uſeth men as Morall inſtruments whereby, yet never as Naturall cauſes to effect Miracles.

[a] Pſalm 72.18.

2. Paſſing the power of Nature.] Hence it is, that it is not done by leiſure, but preſently; not by degrees, but perfectly. God's Cures are never ſubject to Relapſe, once healed and ever healed, except the party run on the ſcore of a new guilt, Thou art [b] made whole, ſinne no more, leſt a worſe thing befall thee.

[b] John 5. 14.

3. Done for the confirmation of faith.] God will not make his works cheap by prostituting them meerly for the satisfaction of mans curiosity.

4. On the Mission generally of a new Ministery.] For, although some sprinkling of Miracles on other occasions; yet their main body was done by Moses, a new Law-giver to the Jewes; by Elias, and Elisha, two grand Restorers (adequate almost to a Giver) of the Law, in a generall-visible defection to Idolatry, by Christ and his Apostles, as the first Preachers of the Gospel.

In this our description, no mention of the rarity of Miracles, because the same resulteth from the premises, frequencie abating from the due wonder thereof.

Miracles long since ceased.

2. Now that such Miracles long since are ceased, appears by the confession of antient Fathers, and most ingenious Romanists: S. Chrysost: 23 Hom: on S. John, thus expresseth himselfe, Καὶ γὰρ νῦν εἰσὶ οἱ ζητοῦντες καὶ λέγοντες, διὰ τί μὴ καὶ νῦν σημεῖα γίνονται; Εἰ γὰρ πιστὸς εἶ, ὡς εἶναι χρή, καὶ φίλος ὡς χρεὼν, ὡς φιλῶν δῆ, οὐ χρείαν ἔχεις σημείων. Ταῦτα γὰρ τοῖς ἀπίστοις δίδοται. For even now there be Seekers and Sayers, wherefore also now are not Miracles done? for if thou beest a Believer, as thou oughtest to be, and dost love Christ as thou oughtest to love him, thou hast no need of Miracles. For Miracles are given to unbelievers.

By Saint Augustine's confession.
c De Unitate Ecclesiæ, cap. 16.

3. S. Augustine passing his Censure on the Miracles of his Age, had so low an opinion of their truth, that he ranked them under two [c] heads:

1. Figmenta mendacium hominum, Forgeries of lying men.
2. Portenta fallacium spirituum, Prodigies of deceitfull Devils.

d De Captivitate Babylonica, cap. 11.

4. Bishop Fisher himself writing against [d] Luther, and occasionally treating of the power of Miracles, Cujus effectum nunc nullum cernimus, of which (saith he) we now see no effect; which addeth to the wonder, that so wise a man should engage in the foolish wonder of the holy Maid of Kent.

Why Miracles ceased.

5. The true cause of the ceasing of Miracles is not any want of Divine power to effect them, as if that infinitencsse could ever, like Naomi, be superannuated and effæte to have no more true wonders in the womb thereof, but because Miracles are the swadling cloathes of infant-Churches. And when Doctrines are once established and received in a Church, Miracles are impertinent: yea, it is no better than a tempting of God, after such assurance given long since to the Truth, still to expect a miraculous confirmation thereof.

The Magazine of Protestant Miracles.

6. Wherefore when the importunity of Papists presseth us to produce Miracles to attest our Religion, we return unto them, That ours is an old Faith founded long since on the Scriptures, and we may justly lay claim to all the Miracles in the New Testament to be ours, because done in demonstration of that Doctrine, which we at this day doe defend, and are the Seals of that Instrument, the writing wherein we desire and endeavour to maintain and practice.

Counterfeiting Miracles, a heinous offence.
e Statute 33 of Henry 8.
f Statute 1 Mar.

7. Such forgery must needs be an high and heinous offence. If the counterfeiting of the Mark, Tokens, and Letters of others, so as to gain any money into their hands thereby, be punishable by Pillory, [e] Imprisonment, or any other corporall penalty under death, at the discretion of the Judge; yea, if it be Treason for any to forge the King's Signe Manual, Privy Signet, [f] or Privy Seale, How great a guilt doe they contract, who falsifie the Signature of the high God of Heaven? Miracles being of that nature whereby he immediately impresseth his own Power and Presence on that, which is so supernaturally brought to passe.

The forgers Plea.

8. I know what such Forgers plead for themselves, viz: That they have a good intent therein to beget, continue, or increase a reverence to Religion, and veneration to the Saints and Servants of God, so to raise up vulgar fancies to the highest pitch of piety. Wherefore, as Lycurgus made a Law, not that Theft should be death, but death to be caught in their Thieving; so these conclude, counterfeiting Miracles no fault, but when done so bunglingly, that it is detected, conceiving otherwise the glory accreweth to God by their hypocrisie.

Confuted.
* Job 13. 7.

9. But, what saith the Holy Spirit? * Will you speak wickedly For God, and talk talk deceitfully For Him? will you accept his Person, will you yet contend for God? Doe you so mock him, shall not his Excellency make you affraid? Yea, so farre is such fraud from adding repute to Religion, that being found out, it disposeth men to Atheisme, and to a suspition of the truth, even of the reall Miracles in Scripture.

10. The pretended causes of which Miracles are generally reduceable to these two heads:

1. Saints Relicts.
2. Saints Images.

The forgery in Relicts, and the Cross especially.

How much forgery there is in the first of these is generally known; So many pieces being pretended of Christ's Crosse as would load a great Ship, but amongst all of them, commend me to the Crosse at the Priory of Benedictines at Bromeholme in Northfolke, the Legend whereof deserveth to be inserted: Queen Hellen, they say, finding the CROSSE of Christ at Jerusalem, divided it into nine parts, according to the nine Orders of Angels, of one of these (most besprinkled with Christ's blood) she made a little Crosse, and putting it into a box, adorned with pretious stones, bestowed it on Constantine her Son. This Relict was kept by his Successours untill Baldwin Emperour of Greece, (fortunate so long as he carried it about him, but) slain in fight when forgetting the same; after whose death, Hugh his Chaplain, (born in Northfolke, and who constantly said Prayers before the Crosse) stole it away, Box and all, brought it into England and bestowed it on Brome-holme in Northfolke. It seems there is no felony in such wares, but catch who catch may; yea, such sacriledge is supererogation. By this Crosse thirty nine dead men are said to be raised to life, and nineteen blinde men restored to their sight. It seems such Merchants trade much in odde numbers which best fastneth the fancies of folk, whilst the smoothnesse of even numbers makes them slip the sooner out of mens memories.

11. Chemnitius[b] affirmeth from the mouth of a grave Author, That the teeth of Saint Apollonia being conceived effectuall to cure the Tooth-ach, in the Reign of King Edward the sixt, (when many ignorant people in England relied on that receit to carry one of her teeth about them) the King gave command in extirpation of superstition, That all her teeth should be brought in to a publick Officer deputed for that purpose, and they filled a Tun therewith. Were her stomack proportionable to her teeth, a County would scarce afford her a meals meat.

12. The English Nuns[i] at Lisbon doe pretend, That they have both the Arms of Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, and yet Pope Paul the third in a publick Bull, set down by Sanders,[k] doth pitifully complain of the cruelty of King Henry the eighth, for causing the bones of Becket to be burnt, and the ashes scattered in the winde: the solemnity whereof is recorded in our Chronicles, and how his Armes should escape that Bonfire is to me incredible.

13. The late mentioning of Apollonia curing the Tooth-ach, mindeth me of the Popish designing of Saints, some to be Physicians of diseases, and others Patrons of occupations.

S. Roch, the Coblers.	S. Hubert, the Hunters.
S. Wendelin, the Shepherds.	S. Ive, the Lawyers.

Not to speak of S. Anne, proper to help people to lost goods: S. Leonard said to open the doors of Goales, and make Prisoners fetters fall off; and pity it is, that he he should shew a cast of his office to any save to honest Persons in durance. Expect not from me a reason why such Saints are Patrons to such Professions, superstitious fancy being all the Authour thereof. Otherwise were Judgment consulted with, Luke should be Tutelar to Physicians as his proper calling, though perchance he entertained Painting also as a quality for delight and accomplishment.

Miracles why most in Covents.

14. Now most Miracles may be called Conventual, Monks being more dexterous thereat than Secular Priests, because their Covents afforded greatest conveniency of contrivance, with more heads and hands to plot and practice therein. And this may be conceived one main cause, which justly incensed Divine jealousie against them, and in due time advanced the destruction of Monasteries, because fathering the issue of earth or Hell to be the off-spring of Heaven, intituling their monstrous delusions to be miraculous operations.

Of false Miracles, many broods whereof were hatched in Monasteries.

A Dichotomy of Miracles.

SUch false Miracles are reducible to two Ranks:

1. Reported, but never done.
2. Done, but not true Miracles, as either the Product of Nature, Art, or Satanicall Machination.

Reported not done.

2. Of the former, whose being is onely in report, were many thousands, whose Scene, for the better countenancing thereof, is commonly laid at distance both of Time and Place. These, like the stuffe called Stand farre-off, must not have the beholder too near, lest the coursnesse thereof doth appeare. Thus any reddish liquor (especially if neer the eyes of the Image of a Saint) is reported blood, any whitish moisture, (especially if neat the breast of the Image of a she-Saint) is related to be milk. Though both of them neither more nor lesse true, than what William of Naborough writes of the place neer Battail-Abbey in Sussex, where the fight was fought between the Normans and English, that on every showre fresh blood springeth out of the earth, as crying to God for vengeance; being nothing else than a naturall tincture of the earth, which doth dye the rain red, as in Rutland, and in other places.

a Cambd. Brit. in Sussex.

Done by Nature.

3. Of pretended Miracles which are really done, let precedency be allowed to those which proceed from Naturall causes, and here we will instance in one out of many thousands. St. Nuns Pool in Cornwell, was formerly famous for curing Mad folk, and this the manner thereof:

5. Nuns cure of mad men.

b Carew in his Survey of Cornwall, p. 123.

4. The Water running from St. Nuns Well, b fell into a square and close walled Plot, which might be filled to what depth they listed. Upon the Wall was the Frantick person set, his back being towards the Pool, and from thence with a suddain blow on the breast tumbled head-long into the Pond: where a strong fellow (provided for the nonce) took him and tossed him up and down along and athwart the water, untill the Patient forgoing his strength had somewhat forgot his fury. Then was he conveyed to the Church, and certain Masses said over him, and St. Nun had the thanks of his recovery. Amidst all this Water there was not one drop of Miracle, but meer naturall causes artificially managed, and that not curing the frensie, but abating the Fit for the present.

Occult qualities no miracles.

5. But other seeming Miracles, done by Nature and the concurrence of Art, were spun with a finer thread, especially when they made advantage of occult qualities, the certain reason whereof no Philosopher can render. Such casualties happen in some times and places, which properly are not Miracles, though they puzzell all men to assign the cause whereby they are effected. One of which kinde I here transmit to posterity, invested with all the circumstances thereof, which I have carefully (not to say curiously) inquired into.

6. In

6. In the year of our Lord 1646, on the 16 of February, this hapned in the Parish Church S. Leonard's Eastcheap, whilst Mr. Henry Roughborough was Minister, and Mr. John Taylor upper Church Warden thereof. Thomas Hill the Sexton of that Parish, making a Grave in the Night-time for George Streaton in the South-side in the passage into the Chancell, and under the first Stone opened a Grave wherein he found two Skulls, and (as he conceived) the proportionable Bones of Bodies belonging unto them; under all these, he light on a Corps, whose Coffin above was consumed, but the Body, which he brought out of the Grave, compleat and intire, save that the Nose thereof flatted with his Spade, as the Sexton believed: The Flesh thereof, both for Colour and Hardnesse like Scalded Bacon dried: His Hair and Nails compleat with his Eyes, (but sunk into his Head) and all his Entrails entire (for a young Chirurgeon did open him) save that shrunk very much within his Body. A wonder akin to a miracle in London.

7. Some said it was the Corps of Mr. Pountney in Soper-lane, a Merchant, buried Thirty four years before; others, of one Paul, a wealthy Butcher in Eastcheap, (which was averred both by his principal Apprentice, as also by William Haile the old surviving Sexton) interred Four and twenty years agoe. I read a Memoriall hereof entred in their Parish Register, and thousands of people are alive to attest the truth thereof. Had this hapned in the time of Popery, what a Stock had here been to graft a Miracle on, the branches of the fame whereof would have spread all over Christendome. A Corps unconsumed.

8. Such false Miracles succeed which are effected by Art alone, whereof several kindes, first such as are done by confederacy, wherein if but five complete together, they may easily deceive five thousand. Thus the holy Maid of Kent was admired for telling mens secret sins, by keeping correspondency with the Friers that formerly had heard their confessions: others, done by Leger-de-maine. Thus there was a Rode at Roxly in Kent made with devices to move the eyes and lips, (but not to see and speak) which in the year 1538, c was publickly shewed at S. Paul's by the Preacher (then Bishop of Rochester) and there broken in pieces, the people laughing at that which they adored but an hour before. Such imposture was also used at Hailes-Abbey in Glocester shire, where the blood of a Duck (for such it appeared at the dissolving of the House) was so cunningly conveyed, that it strangely spirted or sprang up, to the great amazement of common people, accounting it the blood of our Saviour. Seeming miracles done by Art. c Stowes Chron. in that year.

9. Thirdly, strange things are done by Ventriloqui, which is a mysterious manner of uttering words, not out of the porch of the mouth & entry of the throat (the common places of speech) but out of the inward-room or rather arched-cellar of the belly, yet so that the hollownes thereof seemingly fixeth the sound at a distance, which (no doubt) hath been mistook for the voice of Images. Mysterious Ventriloqui.

10. Lastly, such as are done by the power of Satan, who hath a high Title and large Territory, as termed Prince of the power of the aire. Now the aire being Satan's shop, he hath therein many tools to work with, and much matter to work on. It is the Magazine of Meteors, Lightning, Thunder, Snow, Hail, Winde, Rain, Comets, &c. wherewith many wonders may be archieved, and it is observable that Aire is required to those two Senses, sight and hearing, which usher in most outward objects into the soul. False lights are of great advantage to such as vent bad wares: Satan's power must needs be great in presenting shewes and sounds, who can order the aire, and make it dark or light, or thick or thin, at pleasure. d Ephes. 2. 2.

11. We will conclude with one particular kinde of Miracles, wherein Monks by the Devil's help did drive a great trade: namely, Predictions, or pretended Prophecies. Of these some were Post-nate cunningly made after the thing came to passe, and that made the invention of Prometheus, which was the act of Epemetheus. Others were languaged in such doubtfull Expressions, that they bare a double sense, and commonly came to passe contrary to the ordinary acceptance of them. However, hereby Satan saved his credit (who loves to tell lies, but loaths Plenty of false prophecies.

to be taken in them) and we will onely instance in two or three, which we may write and hear with the more patience, because the last in this kinde, which at the dissolution of Abbeys, brought up the rest of Monasticall Prophecies.

A Forrest-burning Image.

12. There was in Wales a great and Loobily Image, called DARVELL GATHERNE, of which an old Prophecie went, That it should burn a Forrest, and on that account was beheld by the Ignorant with much Veneration. Now at the dissolution of Abbeys it was brought up to London, and burnt at the Gallows in Smithfield, with Fryer Forrest, executed for a Traytor.

Hart Delphin in nimis.

13. A Prophecie was current in the Abbey of Glassenborough, That a Whiting should swim on the top of the Torr thereof, (which is a steep hill hard by, and the credulous Countrey-people understood it of an eruption of the Sea, which they suspected accordingly. It happened that Abbot Whiting (the last of Glassenbury) was hanged thereon for his Recusancy to Surrender the Abbey, and denying the King's Supremacy, so swimming in aire and not water, and waved with the winde in the place.

Propheticall Mottoes inscribed in Gloucester Church.

14. We will close all with the Propheticall Mottoes (at leastwise as men since have expounded them) of the three last successive Abbots of Gloucester, because much of modesty, and something of piety contained therein.

1. Abbot Boulers, Memento, memento, that is, (as some will have it) Remember, remember this Abbey must be dissolved.
2. Abbot Sebruck, Fiat voluntas Domini, that is, if it must be dissolved, the will of the Lord be done.
3. Abbot Manborn, Mersos reatu suscita, Raise up those which are drowned in guiltiness.

Which some say was accomplished, when this Abbey found that favour from King Henry the eighth, to be raised into a Bishoprick. But, I like the Text better than the Coment, and there is more humility in their Mottoes, than solidity in the Interpretations.

That many precious Books were embezeled at the dissolution of Abbeys, to the irreparable losse of learning.

English Libraries excellently furnished.

THe English Monks were bookish of themselves, and much inclined to hoord up monuments of learning. Britain, (we know) is styled Another world, and in this contradistinction (though incomparably lesse in quantity) acquits it self well in proportion of famous Writers, producing almost as many Classical School-men for her Natives, as all Europe besides. Other excellent Books of forraign Authors were brought hither, purchased at dear rates; if we consider that the Presse (which now runs so incredibly fast) was in that Age in her infancie, newly able to goe alone, there being then few Printed Books, in comparison of the many Manuscripts. These, if carefully collected and methodically compiled, would have amounted to a Librarie, exceeding that of Ptolomie's, for plenty; or many Vaticans, for choiceness, and rarity. Yea, had they been transported beyond the seas, sent over, and sold entire to such who knew their value, and would preserve them, England's losse had been Europe's gain, and the detriment the lesse to Learning in generall. Yea, many years after the English might have repurchased for pounds, what their Grand-fathers sold for fewer pence into forraign parts.

The miserable martyrdome of innocent Books.

2. But alas! those Abbeys were now sold to such Chap-men, in whom it was questionable, whether their ignorance, or avarice were greater, and they made havock, and destruction of all. As Broakers in Long-lane, when they buy an old suit, buy the lineings together with the out-side: so it was conceived meet, that such as purchased the buildings of Monasteries, should in the same grant have have the Libraries (the ſtuffing thereof) conveyed unto them. And now theſe ignorant owners, ſo long as they might keep a Lieger-book, or Terrier, by direction thereof to finde ſuch ſtragling acres as belonged unto them, they cared not to preſerve any other Monuments. The covers of books, with curious braſſe boſſes, and claſpes, intended to protect, proved to betray them, being the baits of covetouſneſs. And ſo, many excellent Authors, ſtripp'd out of their caſes, were left naked, to be burnt, or thrown away. Thus Eſop's cock, caſually lighting on a pearl, preferr'd a grain before it; yet he left it as he found it; and, as he reaped no profit by the pearl, it received no damage by him. Whereas theſe cruell Cormorants, with their barbarous beaks, and greedy claws, rent, tore, and tatter'd theſe ineſtimable pieces of Antiquity. Who would think, that the Fathers ſhould be condemn'd to ſuch ſervile employment, as to be Scavengers, to make clean the fouleſt ſink in mens bodies? Yea, which is worſe, many an antient manuſcript Bible cut in pieces, to cover filthy Pamphlets: ſo that a caſe of Diamond hath been made to keep dirt within it; yea, the Wiſemen of Gotham, bound up in the Wiſdome of Solomon.

3. But hear how John Bale, a man ſufficiently averſe from the leaſt ſhadow of Popery, hating all Monkery with a perfect hatred, complained hereof to King Edward the ſixt. [a] Covetouſneſſe was at that time ſo buſie about private commodity, that publick Wealth in that moſt neceſſary, and of reſpect, was not any where regarded. A number of them, which purchaſed thoſe ſuperſtitious manſions, reſerved of thoſe Library-books, ſome to ſerve their jakes, ſome to ſcour their candleſticks, and ſome to rub their boots; ſome they ſold to the Grocers, and Sope-ſellers, and ſome they ſent over ſea to the Book binders, not in ſmall number, but at times whole ſhips full. Yea, the Univerſities of this Realme are not all clear in this deteſtable fact. But curſed is that belly, which ſeeketh to be fed with ſo ungodly gains, and ſo deeply ſhameth his naturall Country. I know a Merchant-man (which ſhall at this time be nameleſſe) that bought the contents of two noble Libraries for fourty ſhillings price, a ſhame it is to be ſpoken. This ſtuffe hath he occupied inſtead of gray paper, by the ſpace of more than theſe ten years, and yet he hath ſtore enough for as many years to come. A prodigious example is this, and to be abhorred of all men, which love their Nations, as they ſhould doe. Yea what may bring our Realm to more ſhame, and rebuke, than to have it noiſed abroad, that we are deſpiſers of learning? I judge this to be true, and utter it with heavineſſe, that neither the Britains, under the Romans, and Saxons; nor yet the Engliſh people under the Danes, and Normans, had ever ſuch damage of their learned monuments, as we have ſeen in our time. Our poſterity may well curſe thu wicked fact of our Age, this unreaſonable ſpoil of Englands moſt noble antiquities.

John Bale lamentably bemoaneth this maſſacre.
